"Then, my dear," I say, "you must watch his little ways, and when he gives his fob that queer little loose shake, and searches the ground wildly, be it saying something good."

"I will catch it if I can," mutters Jack, resignedly, and then proceeds to air his opinion about the waits between the acts, which are indeed unnecessarily long. The author has dexterously divided one of them into two tableaux, which are in effect acts; but a dramatist rarely dares to go further than the Roman V. An Act VI., however thrilling, is always an unwelcome innovation. People will not have their pleasure spun out. One of the curious things in an audience is to hear a lot of them who have been looking forward to the evening with keenest pleasure, congratulating themselves that it has been so short. One drawback to the present long waits between the acts, is that awful drone of music with which they have seen fit to afflict us, and yet the man who nightly plays "Oh, Willie—tink-a-link—is it you dear—tink-a-link—safe—tink—at home—a-link tink-a-link, a-link-a-link-a-link," responds nightly to a not spontaneous encore. However, there are gnats stings everywhere.

"Daniel Rochat" is announced for Monday night, and its bringing-out should certainly be the event of the season. Sardou, who is about to lay his pen down in disgust at the changed tastes of the times, looks upon it as his best play; and, although an author, like a mother, does not always love that of his creations best which is his best, he will find many to agree with him this time. There are others which are greater triumphs of constructive skill, but in no other has he so impaired the strength and weakness of human nature upon his pen point, and held it up for a world to see.

It was in "Daniel Rochat" that Charles Thorne came across a five-barred gate he could not take, for Daniel Rochat, the atheist and promulgator of his own belief, could not clasp hands and cry "My God" to a God whom he did not acknowledge. Yet the New Yorkers look upon him as a peerless Daniel Rochat, and assure us that while Sarab Jewett is the loveliest and tenderest of Leah Hendersons, she will be shorn of half her strength without him. Such things will only have the good effect to put De Belleville upon his mettle, while he will give a certain realism to the character from the mere fact that Daniel Rochat is a Frenchman. Leah Henderson is a mixture of English and American—an unusual and unfamiliar combination; an unnecessary one indeed, since it does not bear upon the story—a story which only exacts that she be not a French girl.

How terribly and ruthlessly the play was mangled when we had it here last. Perhaps it only serves to make expectation run higher now. At all events, this play stands far beyond any of the others in point of interest, and surpasses even "Odette," for "Odette" is but the old story over again as we have had it so often since the French drama crossed the water. A long drain upon the sympathies becomes very exhausting. All the more that these French cyprians of the play are as distinctly of one pattern as if they had stepped out from the leaves of a flashy French almanac. Indeed, high-minded, honorable people are coming in, and virtue is almost fashionable. A playwright must now torture his mind to involve thoroughly good people in a sinuosity of plot, without their deliberately breaking any of the commandments or the laws of the land. It is a delicate problem. Sardou solves it with a conscientious scruple. Bronson Howard merely skirts the difficulty by bringing his heroine out all right in the end. Yet he is obliged to avail himself of the orthodox villain, but he patriotically makes a Frenchman of him. He is not neatly introduced, but he is very useful at last in ridding the play of the superfluous lover, who, poor fellow, must be put out of the way altogether to make the moral atmosphere of the play clear. As in the books, Bronson Howard crosses the sea to give zest to the story, but cleverly manages to preserve its American flavor by keeping his characters always in the shadow of the American flag. It is not a vital play; but if a play be written to draw tears, and it succeeds in doing so, it may be called a success.

Last upon the list of plays of the Union Square Company is billed the "Lights of London," which would incline to the idea that it is regarded as the piece de resistance, as doubtless it will be with the masses. Clever players in London did not scruple to bring their art down to the slums, but how strangely will these essentially drawing-room people look in the new atmosphere.

BETSY B.

Communicated.

The Society of California Pioneers will celebrate the anniversary of the admission of California into the Union, September 9th, by appropriate exercises in the grove at San Rafael. Alfred Wheeler, Esq., will deliver the address, and Miss Grace A. Welch will recite a poem. Admission Day is not one of the legal holidays designated by the Code. It ought to have been. The Governor is authorized by the Political Code to appoint any day as a holiday. The birth-day of the State is an appropriate occasion for the exercise of his prerogative.

Much is expected from the new society play, "Intercepted," which is to be produced at the Baldwin Theatre on next Monday evening, August 21st. Its authors, Messrs. H. E. Johnson and Edward Ambrose, have been working on it for several months, and it is said to give great promise of popularity.

Mr. Charles Schutz, well and favorably known in connection with many concerts and operatic troupes in this city, has been appointed to the position of Treasurer of Haver's California Theatre under the Bert régime.

ENCOURAGING NATIVE TALENT.

SCENE—Sanctum of a New York Manager.

CHARACTERS:

MANAGER.
HIS LITERARY HACK.
OFFICE BOY.

[MANAGER and HACK discovered]

HACK—What do you want me to do this morning?

MAN.—It's nearly time for some of the newspaper men to come and pump me about my plans for next season. Just write up one or two interviews with me.

HACK—But we don't know what we're going to do.

MAN.—All the better; then we can't commit ourselves. Say that I have two very strong Parisian attractions, and am in treaty for the latest London success. Be sure you pitch it strong about my desire to foster native talent. Say that I am desirous of encouraging American dramatists.

ENTER OFFICE BOY—(log.) Mr. Morton wants to know if you've read his play, and if he can see you.

MAN.—No; I'm too busy. You'll find his play in the cupboard. Say that I regret it's not quite suited to my wants. [Exit Boy.]

HACK—Did you look at the play?

MAN.—No. What's the use? I'm not going to risk my season on an untried work.

HACK—I thought you wanted to encourage native talent?

MAN.—Bah! That's the popular racket. You ought to know me better.

HACK—I thought perhaps you sometimes meant what you said. Well, what else?

MAN.—Say that I shall have several valuable additions to my company—a juvenile man from Australia, and a leading lady from London.

HACK—But Miss Dash has never played in London.

MAN.—Who'll know that here? She was quite a favorite in Bath and Exeter, and in fact all the western counties. You don't fancy I can afford to engage a good London actress? Why, I might as well have an American one, at once. Say I am sorry that I can not find exactly the people I want for these positions among my own countrymen; explain that for foreign plays we want foreign actors.

ENTER BOY (log.)—Mr. Horn would like to see you.

MAN. (low to Hack)—He wants to settle about next season. How much does he ask?

HACK—Ten dollars a week more than this. He says he is married and has three children, and that he can not possibly live and dress well for thirty dollars a week.

MAN.—I won't give it to him. What business has he to have children? It's not my lookout; he can stop at the old salary, or I'll get a single man in his place; I can get a man from England for twenty or twenty-five dollars. Say I can't see him now.

BOY—Yes, sir. [Exit.]

HACK—Horn has done some very good work this season.

MAN.—So he ought. What do I pay him a salary for?

HACK—He's played better parts than you engaged him for.

MAN.—Then he ought to be grateful to me for giving him a chance to show what's in him.

HACK—He "doubled" at short notice, and got us out of one or two scrapes.

MAN.—Well, see him in the afternoon, and try to get him for the old salary; say my expenses are awful; if he won't take it you can give him five dollars increase; that's the most I'll do, but try to beat him down.

HACK—Don't forget before you go you have to sign that check for your new team.

MAN.—All right; thirty-two hundred and fifty, isn't it? But about this interview; who else has sent in plays?

HACK—There are about a hundred in the cupboard.

MAN.—A hundred! Three hundred hours' work! I want a holiday. Send 'em all back with polite letters. Stay; are there any from men we may want to use?

HACK—Yes; there is one from Moore of the Moon.

MAN.—Is there anything in it?

HACK—I glanced over it, and should say it's the worst of the lot.

MAN.—No matter—keep it. Say I'm giving it my most careful attention. 'Twont do to offend Moore. You haven't heard of a good play in the market?

HACK—That one of Raven's would, I believe, go with a little fixing up. It's bold and unconventional. MAN.—I'm afraid to go out of the beaten track. By the way, run into the interview that the American drama should be breezy and redolent of the soil, full of new types of character—not a weak imitation of European forms.

HACK—Is that all?

MAN.—I guess so. When you get through with that you must go over your stock of old French plays, and see what kind of a novelty we can rub up. What does Henry ask for that French melodrama?

HACK—Twelve per cent. of the gross.

MAN.—It's a swindle! These fellows are getting unconscionable. I won't give it.

HACK—You'll have to, if you want it. But I believe Raven's play is better suited to our audiences, and would draw more money. You can get that for twenty-five dollars a night.

MAN.—I tell you I'm afraid to risk it. See Henry, and offer him ten per cent.

[CURTAIN.]

—JULIAN MAENUS.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 16, 1882.

DRAMATIC GOSSIP.

The singing of a burlesque hymn in a London theatre, intended to ridicule the Salvation Army, was furiously hissed by the audience.

An actor who resembles the late Artemus Ward, and can mimic his manner, is to exhibit the panorama of "Among the Mormons" in London, and deliver the original lecture.

Alexander Salvini, the second son of the great Italian tragedian, will appear in Chicago this month in the character of Romeo. He has already done a little acting, but in trivial parts.

They have been performing at Potsdam a play called "The Marriage of Olympe." This was forbidden at Berlin, where the theatres have, on account of the socialistic tendencies of the people, been under the dictation of the police, who choose to forbid all plays which they deem incendiary. Thus Ristori was not permitted to play Marie Antoinette.

The Italian opera season just closed in London had only two new operas—"Mefistofele" and "Velleda," the latter an unqualified failure. Masscoda's "Herodiade" was promised, but not produced. There were new singers, the principal ones being Mile. Stahl, a contralto; Sestellier, a tenor, and Bonby, a baritone. Patti carried the season.

Mr. Henry Irving has relinquished the idea of visiting America this summer in advance of his engagement to act here next year. He was to have been the guest of Mr. Vanderbilt, but finding that the privacy of such a trip would have been interfered with, he has wisely determined not to come to America until he starts to act with Miss Ellen Terry and his company.

Now that Mr. Abbey has arranged for Mrs. Langtry's tour in the United States, it is held above all things necessary that she should leave England with eclat, says a London correspondent of the New York Tribune. She either has a very wise head on her own handsome shoulders—which, by the way, changed the fashion from "sloping" to "square"—or she has wise heads to think for her. In this she has that good fortune which seems to attend her in most things. Until the "Jersey Lily" became the Professional Beauty of the day, it was thought that "P. Bs" should have sloping shoulders, like the Venus de Medici; but she has changed all that. Good, square shoulders, "like a man," and, if possible, a small head on a bull neck, are what is looked for in womankind at this moment. The swan-like beauties have their noses out of joint. Mrs. Langtry plays now very differently from the style of that winter evening when she first appeared at Twickenham. There is every probability that she will become an excellent actress of a certain class of parts extremely difficult to fill. Among the many enterprising damsels who aspire to the stage, there are very few who, by any flight of fancy, could be imagined to be ladies. They have pretty little snub noses, and fluffy heads, and good figures, but are no more like ladies than a pug or a poodle is like a greyhound. Mrs. Langtry has not only the enormous advantage of appearance and manner, but that of voice and accent. The voice is full, rich, and round, the enunciation clear and distinct, and the accent free, of course, from any trace of vulgarity. It is the voice and accent of the higher, as distinguished from the slovenly gibberish of the lower class of English people. In her acting she has so much improved that she is now studying the somewhat difficult part of Rosalind. Shakspeare's "As You Like It" will, as at present decided, divide Mrs. Langtry's time in the States with Blanche Hays in "Ours." This is cleverly imagined, for all who go to see her in "Ours" in modern evening dress will naturally wish to see more of her in Rosalind. Mrs. Langtry is keenly aware that the slow advance and patient toil of an ordinary stage career are not for her, and that her fortune must be made quickly or not at all. She is, however, very hard-working, and hopeful of becoming a good sound artist by the time that the momentary vogue of curiosity shall have passed away. "As You Like It" will be handsomely mounted, and Mrs. Langtry will be supported by a very powerful cast. Her appearance here is already looked forward to very eagerly. It is confidently predicted that in her first year on the stage she will make more than double the amount estimated by Mr. Hollingshead. The lowest estimate, now that it is known she is studying Rosalind, is twenty thousand pounds, more than double as much as any actor or actress or singer ever made in the first year. Why should not she buy a theatre and go on, if not "forever" for many successful years to come? In the Rosalind dress the appearance of Mrs. Langtry is quite "too-too" exquisitely graceful and statuesque. What a chance for a sculptor to model a terra-cotta statuette! As Colonel Raymond Sellers observes, "There's millions in it."

OBSCURE INTIMATIONS.

"Human Eyes,"—G. H. D.—declined.
"Love or Money,"—W. N. W.—declined.
"To My Love,"—P. de V.—declined.
"La Morgue,"—P. F. B.—declined.
"Tahoe,"—C.—declined.
"A Mad-Man's Invention,"—declined.

DUNCAN'S MILLS PRESERVES ITS VERDURE and green foliage when all other portions of the State are dried up. For hotel accommodations apply to Quenee & Goode, Duncan's Mills, N. P. C. R. R., Sonoma County.

CCXLII.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons.—Sunday, August 20.

Cream of Celery Soup.

Melon.

Devilled Crabs.

Sweetbreads. Green Peas.

Spinach. Baked Potatoes.

Roast Lamb. Currant Jelly.

Egg Salad.

Omelette Soufflee.

Fruit-bowl of Peaches, Grapes, Pears, Figs, Nectarines, Apricots, Gages, Plums, and Apples.

EGG SALAD.—Slice hard-boiled eggs, and dress them with chopped parsley, salt, pepper, vinegar, and oil. They must, of course, be very cold before they are sliced.

OMELETTE SOUFFLEE.—Mix well six yolks of eggs with four ounces of powdered sugar; beat to a stiff froth the six whites, and mix with yolks and sugar. Grate the yellow rind of a lemon. Put four ounces of butter in a crockery pudding-dish, set on a moderate fire and when the butter is melted pour the eggs in; stir with a fork, and as soon as you see some of the mixture becoming hard, place the dish in a hot oven for about five minutes; take out, dust with fine sugar, and serve.

"MR. NASBY IN EXILE."

The last sensation in the literary world. The book has been published but one month, and has already reached a sale of ten thousand copies. Seven hundred pages and two hundred illustrations. Price.—In cloth, $4; library binding, 55. Sold by subscription only. For circulars, terms to agents, etc., address SAMUEL CARSON, publisher and wholesale bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Agents wanted.

—THE SEVENTEENTH INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION of the Mechanics' Institute opened in the new Pavilion on Tuesday afternoon, with the usual exercises, consisting of addresses and music. The oration was delivered by Chancellor Hartson, who chose for his subject "The Mechanic Arts." In the evening the main portion of the building was thrown open to the public. There was a larger attendance than there has been in previous years on the opening evening. The exhibitors have been exceedingly prompt in getting their articles into place, and this, together with the fact that space in the steam department was only granted to exhibitors who would have their machinery in order for the first night, all conducted to an unexampled promptness. Every night during the past week crowds have visited the pavilion. In the art department this year our principal local artists are well represented. This, together with the large and greatly improved floral and horticultural department, furnishes very superior accommodations to promenaders and pleasure-seekers.

—THE NORTH PACIFIC COAST RAILROAD Company has inaugurated a series of excursions to the Great Redwoods and Russian River. Parties may now buy a round ticket, at greatly reduced rates, which will be good Saturday, Sunday, and for return on Monday. The most beautiful and varied scenery is to be seen on this route, and at the different stations are the finest facilities for camping and hunting.

—THE OREGON IMPROVEMENT COMPANY is importing great quantities of Cumberland Coal, Lehigh Lump and Egg Coal, and Seattle Coal, for both domestic and steam use. This company is one of the few in this city that may be absolutely relied upon to furnish an article which will give perfect satisfaction in both quality and weight. Main Office, 210 Battery Street.

—PIANO FOR SALE CHEAP.—ONE HENRY Miller second-hand square piano, in good order, price, $200, in payments of ten dollars per month. Or will rent for five dollars per month. Also, one Fisher upright piano, ebonized case, nearly new, for rent at a low price. Inquire of SAMUEL CARSON, publisher and wholesale bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

—AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, AS ITS NAME IMPLIES, invigorates and strengthens the hair. It not only restores the original color to gray or faded hair, but by its stimulating action at the roots, produces a vigorous growth, and gives it that beautiful lustre which results only from a strong, healthy growth of the hair.

—REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE IS UNEQUALLED for chilblains, chapped hands, frost bites, etc. Try it.

—MR. GEORGE J. GEE, ORGANIST OF TRINITY Church, will resume lessons on piano, organ, etc., September 1st. Address, care of M. Gray, 117 Post Street.

—HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

—EVENING DRESS SUITS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS can be had at J. COOPER'S Tailoring Establishment, No. 24 New Montgomery Street, Palace Hotel block. Also black frock-coat suits for funerals, etc.

—DR. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET, cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

—MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

—LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL REMEMBER that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, hushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

—MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

—Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

REMOVAL.

FRANK C. EDWARDS

WILL REMOVE TO PHELAN'S BLOCK
ON OR ABOUT SEPTEMBER 1ST.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 310 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

BALDWIN THEATRE.

Monday Evening.....August 21st

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON!

FIRST PRODUCTION

.....OF THE.....

NEW AMERICAN SOCIETY COMEDY,

.....ENTITLED.....

INTERCEPTED.

Box-Office now open.

FILIPPE'S
ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
235 KEARNY ST.

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF BUSH.

PROF. DE FILIPPE continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by his easy, practical method, saving months of study. Classes and private lessons. Apply from 3 to 5 or 7 to 8 P. M.

FINE

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$25. $30.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$40. $50.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$60. $70.

Merchant Tailor and Clothier,
J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,

Dress and Cloak Maker.

428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

PERRIN'S QUAKER DAIRY

114 SUTTER STREET,

Between Kearny & Montgomery, San Francisco

CHAS. L. BIRD and E. R. PERRIN, Prop's.

RUPTURE

Cared. Greatest Invention of the age. PIERCE & SON
704 Sac St., San Fran. Cal.

PEBBLE SPECTACLES!

MULLER'S OPTICAL DEPOT

135 Montgomery St., nr. Bush,

Opposite Occidental Hotel.

Specialty Thirty-two Years.

COMPOUND ASTIGMATIC LENSES

Mounted to Order. 25 Two Hours Notice.

The most complicated cases of defective vision thoroughly diagnosed, free of charge.

C. P. SHEFFIELD, N. W. SPAULDING, J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANOS, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,

As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with

J. H. MOTT & CO.,

647 Market St.,

Nucleus Block, Second Floor.
Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OF

the office of the Thunder Powder Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Alameda County, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 1) of Forty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room No. 5, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. M. OAKLEY, Secretary.
Office Thunder Powder Company, 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

A REMARKABLE NEW BOOK!

KALANI OF OAHU,
An Historical Romance of the Hawaiian Islands.

BY DR. C. M. NEWELL, OF BOSTON.

ONE VOLUME, 12 MO, 415 PAGES. PRICE, $1.50

This beautiful story illustrates life in the Sandwich Islands before immigration brought the vices and disorders of European life among them, and so altered the character, habits, and tone of one of the most remarkable races of the age. The book has been read by King Kalakaua, who recently visited our city, and has received his approval. For sale by all Booksellers.

SAMUEL CARSON,

Publisher and Wholesale Bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A copy will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns—Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.

AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

Imperial Fire Insurance Co., of London. Instituted 1803.

LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION of London.

Established 1720.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE COMPANY of London and Aberdeen. Established 1836.

QUEEN INSURANCE COMPANY of Liverpool. Established 1857.

A Joint Policy of the Four Companies issued on the Pacific Coast.

W. LANE BOOKER,

ROBT. DICKSON, Manager. Agent and Attorney.

Pacific Branch Office, S. E. Corner California and Montgomery Streets, (Safe Deposit Building,) San Francisco.

KNABE PIANOS!

A LARGE INVOICE JUST RECEIVED. CALL and see these magnificent instruments before purchasing elsewhere.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO.,

721 Market Street.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE FAIR,
at the PAVILION, LARKIN ST.,
near MARKET, opens TUESDAY,
AUGUST 15th.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALA-

tion, for Consumption, Asthma,

Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh,

Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic

and Nervous Disorders. Prepared by

DRS. STARKY & PALEN, Philadelphia,

Pa. Package contains all directions, and is freely sent by express, ready for USE AT

HOME. H. E. MATHEWS, Forwarding

Agent, 806 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlets.

J. R. COWEN.

J. W. PORTER.

COWEN & PORTER,

FUNERAL DIRECTORS,

118 Geary Street, San Francisco.

OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC

BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-

Medical Belts always have exceeded all other electrical applicances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs.

This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States.

Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF
FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jew-made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET

A VOICE FROM THE NILE.

By James Thompson.

[Many very worthy people never read verse. They are frequently right in avoiding it—but then, again, they are frequently wrong. If any one of these very worthy people should pass this poem by, simply because its sides are jagged instead of being straight, he will miss reading a very fine thing. It is the Nile that speaks—the ancient Nile. The poem is one of exceeding beauty. Its rhythmic rush and swing remind one of the resistless flow of the mighty river whose long life it voices. Its author, James Thompson, who wrote "The City of Dreadful Night," was a poet of no mean ability, although little known in this country. He died prematurely, and lamentably enough, in University College Hospital, England, some weeks ago, shortly after correcting the proofs of the poem.—EDS. ARGONAUT.]

I come from mountains under stars
Than those reflected in my waters here;
Athwart broad realms, beneath large skies, I flow,
Between the Lybian and Arabian hills,
And merge at last into the great Nile sea,
And make this land of Egypt. All is mine—
The palm-trees and the doves among the palms,
The corn-fields and the flowers among the corn,
The patient oxen and the crocodiles,
The ibis, and the heron, and the hawk,
The lous, and the thorn, the papyrus reed,
The slant-sailed boats that fit before the wind
Or up my rapids ropes lead heavily;
Yea, even all the massive temple-fronts,
With all their columns and huge effigies,
The Pyramids, and Memnon, and the Sphinx,
This Cairo, and the City of the Dead,
As Memphis and the hundred-gated Thebes,
Sais and Denderah of Isis queen
Have grown because I fed them with full life,
And flourish only while I feed them still.
For if I stint my fertilizing flood,
Giant famine reaps among the sons of men
Who have not corn to reap for all they sow,
And blight and languishment are everywhere.
And when I have withdrawn, or turned aside
To other realms my overflowing streams,
The old realms wither from their old renown,
The sands come over them—the desert sands,
Incessantly encroaching, numberless,
Beyond my water-drops, and buried them,
And all is silence, solitude, and death—
Examine silence, while the waste winds bowl
Over the sad, immeasurable waste.

Dusk memories haunt me of an infinite past;
Ages and cycles brood above my springs,
Though I remember not my primal birth,
So ancient is my being and august.
I know not anything more venerable,
Unless perchance the vaulting skies that hold
The sun, and moon, and stars that shine on me;
The air that breathes upon me with delight;
And Earth, All-Mother, all-beneficent,
Who held her mountains forth like opulent breasts,
To cradle me and feed me with their snows;
And hollowed out the great sea to receive
My overflow of flowing energy:
Blessed forever be our Mother Earth.

Only the mountains that must feed my springs
Year after year and every year with snows,
As they have fed innumerable years,
These mountains they are evermore the same,
Rooted and motionless; the solemn heavens
Are evermore the same in stable rest;
The sun, and moon, and stars that shine on me
Are evermore the same, although they move;
I, solely, moving ever without pause,
And evermore the same, and not the same;
Pouring myself away into the sea,
And self-renewing from the furthest heights;
Ever-fresh waters streaming down and down,
The one old Nile constant through their change.

Thé creatures also whom I breed and feed
Perpetually perish and dissolve,
And other creatures like them take their place,
To perish in their turn and be no more;
My profuse waters never stop from life,
Absorbed into the ever-living sea,
Whose life is in their full replenishment.

Of all these creatures whom I breed and feed
One only with his works is strange to me,
Is strange, and admirable, and pitiable,
As homeless where all others are at home.
My crocodiles are happy in my slime,
And bask and seize their prey, each for itself,
And leave their eggs to hatch in the hot sun,
And die, their lives fulfilled, and are no more,
And others bask and prey and leave their eggs.
My doves, they build their nests, each pair its own,
And feed their callow young, each pair its own,
None serves another, each one serves itself;
All clean alike about my fields of grain,
And all the nests they build them are alike,
And are the selfsame nests they built of old
Before the rearing of the pyramids,
Before great Hekatompylos was reared;
Their cooing is the cooing soft and sweet
That murmured plaintively at evening-tide
In pillared Karnak as its pillars rose;
And they are happy floating through my palms.

But Man, the admirable, the pitiable,
These sad-eyed peoples of the sons of men,
Are as the children of an alien race
Planted among my children, not at home,
Changelings aloof from all my family,
The one is servant and the other lord,
And many myriads serve the single lord;
So was it when the pyramids were reared,
And sphinxes and huge columns and wrought stones
Were haled long lengthening leagues down my banks
By hundreds groaning with the stress of toil,
And groaning under the taskmaster's scourge,
With many falling foredone by the way,
Half-starved on lentils, onions, and scant bread;
So it is now with these poor fellahen
To whom my annual bounty brings fierce toil
With scarce enough of food to keep in life,
They build mud huts and spacious palaces;
And in the huts the moulting millers dwell,
And in the palaces their sumptuous lords
Pampered with all the choicest things I yield;
Most admirable, most pitiable Man!

Also their peoples ever are at war,
Slaying and slain, burning and ravaging,
And one yields to another and they pass,
While I flow evermore the same great Nile,
The ever-young and ever-ancient Nile;
The swarthy is succeeded by the dusky,
The dusky by the pale, the pale by the gray;
By sunburned turbaned tribes long-limbed and robed;
And with these changes all things change and pass,
All things but Me and this old land of mine,
Their dwellings, habits, and garbs, and tongues;
I hear strange voices; never more the voice
Austere priests chanting to the boat of death
Gliding across the Acheronian lake,
Or satraps parleyed in the Pharaoh's halls;
Never the voice of mad Cambyse's hosts,
Never the voice of Alexander's Greece,
Never the voice of Caesar's haughty Rome;
And with the peoples and the languages,
With the great Empires still the great creeds change;
They shift, they change, they vanish like thin dreams,
As unsubstantial as the mists that rise
After my overflow from out my fields,
In silver fleeces, golden volumes, rise,
And melt away before the moulting sun;

While I flow onward slowly, permanent
Amidst their swiftly-passing pageantry.

Poor men, most admirable most pitiable;
With all their changes all their great creeds change
For Man, this alien in my family,
Is alien most in this, to cherish dreams
And brood on visions of eternity,
And build religions in his brooding brain
And in the dark depths awe-full of his soul.
My other children live their lives in life,
Are born and reach their prime, and slowly fail,
And all their little lives are self-fulfilled;
They die and are no more, content with age
And weary with infirmity. But man
Has fear and hope, and fantasy and awe,
And wishful yearnings, and unsated loves,
That strain beyond the limits of his life,
And therefore Gods and Demons, Heaven and Hell—
This Man, the admirable, the pitiable.

Lo, I look backward some few thousand years,
And see men hewing temples in my rocks
With seated forms gigantic fronting them,
And solemn labyrinthine atacoms,
With tombs all pictured with fair scenes of life,
And scenes and symbols of mysterious death;
And planting avenues of sphinxes forth,
Sphinxes couched calm, whose passionless regard
Sets timeless riddles to bewildered time
Forth from my sacred banks to other fates
Islanded in the boundless sea of air,
Upon whose walls and colonnades are carved
Tremendous hieroglyphs of secret things.
I see embalming of the bodies dead;
And judging of the disembodied souls;
I see the sacred animals alive,
And statues of the various-headed gods,
Among them throned a woman and a babe,
The goddess crescent-horned, the babe divine.
Then I flow forward some few thousand years,
And see new temples shining with all grace,
Where sculptured gods are beautiful human forms.
Then I flow forward not a thousand years,
And see again a woman and her babe,
The woman haloed and the babe divine;
And everywhere that symbol of the cross
I knew aforetime in the ancient days,
The emblem then of life, but now of death.
Then I flow forward some few hundred years,
And see again the crescent, now supreme,
On lofty cupolas and minarets,
Whence voices sweet and solemn call to prayer.
So the men change along my changeless stream,
And change their faiths; but I yield all alike
Sweet water for their drinking, sweet as wine,
And pure, sweet water for their lustal rites:
For thirty generations of my corn
Outlast a generation of my men,
And thirty generations of my men
Outlast a generation of their gods.
Oh, admirable, pitiable Man!
My child, yet alien in my family.

And I through all these generations flow,
Of corn, and men, and gods, all bountiful,
Perennial through their transience, still fed
By earth with waters in abundance;
And as I flow here long before they were,
So may I flow when they no longer are,
Most like the serpent of eternity:
Blessed for ever be our Mother Earth!
—Fortnightly Review for July.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either quire or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG AND MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,
OR W. H. PARKER, M. D.,
4 BULFINCH STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

NATHANIEL GRAY. C. S. WRIGHT. J. A. CAMPBELL.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS

641 Sacramento Street.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

dealers in Old London Dock Brandy, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple Jack, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liqueurs, etc. 320 MONTGOMERY, and 511 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

$72 A WEEK. $2 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR.

For Restoring Gray Hair to Its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth; and always surely restores its color when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brassy, weak, or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable, and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and established; thin hair thickens, and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean, and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the tenth day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 18) of Thirty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 16th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 14th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

A. W. HAVENS, Secretary, Office—Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

OPHIR SILVER MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 21st day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 42) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 14th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. L. MCCOY, Secretary, Office—Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

BEST AND BELCHER SILVER

Mining Company—Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 24) of Fifty (50) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 20, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 12th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

WILLIAM WILLIS, Secretary, Office—Room No. 20, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 9) of Twenty-five Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twenty-second day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the 12th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary, Office—Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—OFFICE OF

the Silver King Mining Company, San Francisco, August 2, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above-named Company held this day, a Dividend (No. 22) of Twenty-five Cents (25¢) per share was declared, payable on Tuesday, August 15, 1882, at the office of the Company, Room 10, 328 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California. Transfer books will close August 9, 1882, at 3 P. M.

JOSEPH NASH, Sec.

SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, AUCTIONEER.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

Stock, Real Estate, and General

AUCTIONEERS.

116 Montgomery Street, Occidental Hotel Block, SAN FRANCISCO

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

CATHARINE TOEDTER, for and by CATHARINE ROBINET, and PETER TOEDTER, her husband, Plaintiff, vs. DAVID FOGARTY, Defendant.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 1, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Catharine Toedter, formerly Catharine Robinet, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against David Fogarty, defendant, on the 14th day of August, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book Two of said Court, at page 187, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Larkin Street, distant seventy-three feet southerly from the southerly line of Ellis Street, running thence southerly along said line of Larkin Street forty-seven feet to the southerly line of Willow Avenue, thence at right angles westerly along said line of Willow Avenue eighty-seven feet and six inches; thence at right angles northerly forty-seven feet, and thence at right angles easterly eighty-seven feet and six inches, to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Eight, as by the map of said City and County.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 13th day of September, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder, for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, August 19, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.

LOUGHBOROUGH & NEWHALL, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

August 19, 26, September 2, 9.

(Department No. 7.)

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT,

City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRBAIN, Plaintiff, vs. NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIN, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIN, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within ten days—on judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 23rd day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

(Seal.) DAVID WILDER, Clerk.

By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

(Department No. 7.)

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff, vs. JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

Superior Court. (Late 4th District Court.) No. 22,467. EXECUTION.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested, on the 21st day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a Judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,327 97-100 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 1st day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 165 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, running thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27 6-12 feet; thence at right-angles northerly 120 feet; thence at right-angles easterly 27 6-12 feet; and thence at right-angles southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement, together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the first day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.

J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.

August 5, 12, 19, 26.

CURTIS, DIXON & CO.,

CIGAR MANUFACTURERS,

FACTORY, 309 to 313 CLAY STREET.

Office, No. 309 Clay Street, between Front and Battery, SAN FRANCISCO.

P. O. Box 998.

TRAINS LEAVE, AND ARE DUE TO ARRIVE AT SAN FRANCISCO AS FOLLOWS:

* fishing, hunting, boating. QUEEN & C.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.
We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 53
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,958,672 86
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO

Price $25.

Weight 170 lbs.

Has 3/4-inch
Steel Teeth.

Made to rotate either
way. Very thorough
in its work and don't injure the vines or trees. Used by R.E.
Blowers, G.G. Briggs
and all leading vine-
yardists.

THE JACKSON VINEYARD HARROW.
The Best Harrow made for Vineyards and Orchards.
Made by JACKSON & TRUMAN, - San Francisco, Cal.

WILLIAMS, DIMOND & CO.

SHIPPING AND

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Union Building, Junction Market and Pine Streets, San Francisco.

AGENTS FOR PACIFIC MAIL S. S.

Co.; Pacific Steam Navigation Co.; The Cunard
Royal Mail S. S. Co.; The Hawaiian Line; The China
Traders' Insurance Co., Limited; The Marine Insurance
Co. of London; The Baldwin Locomotive Works; The
Glasgow Iron Co.; Nich. Ashton & Son's Salt

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES,
DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVER-
WARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"Pure, Wholesome, Pleasant, and Effervescent."

Prof. T. L. Brunton, M.D., F.R.S., London, Eng.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS.

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

P
I
A N
O
S

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,

HENME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,

GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,

TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.

WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,

Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.

PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL,	$750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881,	$1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President.

ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President.

WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.

E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

E. DETRICK & CO.

Importers, Manufacturers, and Dealers in BAGS AND BURLAPS, all kinds, BAG-TWINES, HYDRAULIC HOSE. Sole Agents for MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK, all widths, Russell Manf'g Co.'s COTTON BELT-
ING, Russell Manf'g Co.'s SEAMLESS LINEN HOSE. Tower's Celebrated OILED CLOTHING.

TENTS, HAMMOCKS, CAMP COTS, CHAIRS,
STOOLS, AND CAMPERS' OUTFITS.

Tents let by the Week or Month. AMERICAN FLAGS, BUNTING.

5, 7 AND 9 CALIFORNIA, AND 108, 110 AND 112 MARKET STS.

Hunyadi Janos

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NATURAL APERIENT WATER.

"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER LAXATIVES."

"SPEEDY, SURE, AND GENTLE."—Prof. Roberts, F.R.C.P. London.

The most certain and comfortable cathartic in cases of sluggish liver or piles.

ORDINARY DOSE, A WINEGLASSFUL BEFORE BREAKFAST. OF ALL DRUGGISTS AND MINERAL WATER DEALERS.

NONE GENUINE BUT WITH A BLUE LABEL.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, Cal.

ICHI BAN,

22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that
ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION,
and that all are welcome to visit it
every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,

LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,

AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,

At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:

210 BATTERY STREET,

San Francisco.

DEPOTS:

Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.

Foster's Wharf - Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

When ordering wine, don't call for "California Champagne" merely, but state the brand, "EXTRA DRY, or the brand's name. We are the only producers of NATURAL SPARKLING WINES on this coast."

J. M. LITCHFIELD & CO.

MERCHANT TAILORS,

And Dealers in Gents' Furnishing Goods,

415 MONTGOMERY STREET,

bet. California and Sacramento San Francisco

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN AND GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 9.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 26, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE WRAITH OF STEPHEN ARNOLD.

A Story of the War.

III.

After a rapid ride of a few miles, he stopped before a large and comfortable double log-house, dismounted, hitched the horse, and walked from the gate up to the door. His knock was answered by a venerable dame who, as soon as the door was opened, held out her hand, exclaiming:

"Why, bless me, Doctor Arnold, how do you do? When did you get back? We had not heard of your arrival."

"I am well, thank you," replied he, "and am glad to see you looking so bright and cheerful. I am just getting back—I have not been home, but could not pass such old friends without stopping long enough to shake hands with you and Father Mitchell. Is he at home?"

The old lady placed a chair for Arnold, and then bustled out to call in the gray-haired preacher from the other room. He came in with grave, sedate face and manner, as befitting his age and calling. No sooner had he seen Stephen Arnold than he gave him cordial greeting. After the usual salutations, Arnold said:

"How are my father and the family?"

"They were all well when I was there last Sabbath," said Mr. Mitchell; "but I don't think they are expecting you home; at least they said nothing about it, and we talked much of you."

Arnold inquired about several other neighbors, and at last, in an easy way, said:

"And the Ramsay family, Father Mitchell, are all well over there?"

The old gentleman gave him a stern, inquiring glance, and answered, coldly:

"I believe they are as well as usual."

Arnold paused, as if expecting the other to say something more, but Mr. Mitchell continued silent.

"You say nothing," he then remarked, "of little Amy. How is she? I am extremely anxious to hear of her? Is the dear girl well and happy?"

The old man's furrowed face flushed, and he gazed at Stephen Arnold with a look of intense pain, but his countenance gradually assumed a stern and implacable expression, and he spoke in tones of solemn reproof:

"Young man, you are either very much to be pitied, or else you are a most desperate and hardened sinner."

"Why so?" asked the reprovèd one, placidly.

"Amy Ramsay," said the preacher, sorrowfully, "is about to become a mother, and she has no husband."

"Have you seen her recently?"

"Yes."

"Tell me of her, Mr. Mitchell; speak freely; you are talking to a man who has come back for her sake only; who loves her better than his life, and who will stand fast by her to the end. Tell me of her, I pray you."

"She suffers much," said Mr. Mitchell, "yet seems sustained by some inscrutable confidence that yields her strange content. It is a hard and cruel position for her. She will say nothing except that she loves and trusts you; that it will come out well in the end, and those who condemn you severely never knew you as she does." The old man's eyes filled, and his voice was husky with emotion as he continued: "I loved her as if she had been my own, and this trouble is killing her, Stephen; for God's sake, tell me that you married Amy when you were at home last, and let me proclaim it from my pulpit to-morrow."

"I have no objection to your making such a proclamation," said Arnold, "but I hardly think it is necessary. You know that marriage is held by the church and by society to be both a civil contract and a religious rite. I am not a communicant, but under the seal of professional secrecy, which closes the lips of the physician of the mind as well as of the body, I have come here, even before I have been home, to consult with you about these very matters. I wish to go to Squire Ramsay's to-morrow, and publicly claim Amy as my wife. She and I entered into the civil contract of marriage, and are truly husband and wife; but owing to peculiar circumstances without having the opportunity to have you perform for us the usual religious ceremony. I implore you to aid me by doing so now. I wish to silence all gossip about Amy and our child. Here is a certificate of marriage filled with our names, but blank as to the date. I wish you to marry us to-night secretly, to sign this certificate of the fact, and hereafter to say nothing about it, except that you did marry the young folks secretly some time ago; don't know exactly when; and you won't know exactly if you leave your watch at home. This is the right thing to do; and if you really love Amy you will not hesitate to do it. Remember what heart-aches it will cure, and remember that the dear girl is not yet seventeen."

The old preacher thought for a while in silence, and apparently with some conflict of feeling. Arnold sat quietly awaiting the result of his deliberations.

"As a general rule," said the old man at last, "I have regarded all things that require secrecy as wrong, but in this case I believe that what you request is right, and I will do it." And keep it, of course, as a secret entrusted to you only by virtue of your sacred calling?"

"Of course," said Mr. Mitchell; "it would be of no avail otherwise."

"I must now go," said Arnold, "and communicate with Amy in order to inform her fully of our plans."

"Wait a moment," said Mr. Mitchell. After some deliberation he continued: "I could drive over in my buggy, and bring her here, and marry you."

"And that fact," replied the other, "would furnish the tongue of gossip a clew from which to argue out the very hour at which you did so."

"True, true!" answered Mr. Mitchell. "Then you remain here, and I will ride over, and prepare Amy myself. I have never ceased my visits there, and my going now will excite no comment. You can remain here until after supper. You can then go to the woods next to Squire Ramsay's orchard, and you can afterward meet us at the spring-house, and no one need know anything except us three. It is not at all unusual for me to sup at Squire Ramsay's, and ride home afterward, especially since the family have been laboring under so much sorrow on Amy's account."

This arrangement having been fully canvassed and agreed upon, the old gentleman went away. As he was in the act of leaving, however, his venerable wife called out to know where he was going so late in the evening, and when he would return. And then, before Mr. Mitchell could frame an answer, Arnold blandly interposed, saying:

"He is going to Squire Ramsay's for me. I wish to go there to-morrow after my wife, dear little Amy, and the squire is such a stubborn old saint, that I wish to have the way opened for me, so as to avoid trouble."

The old man rode off without saying anything, and his venerable wife hastened toward the young man, seized his hand, and actually kissed him, saying:

"That's the best news I have heard for many a day."

Arnold remained until after an early supper, and then, mounting his horse, rode rapidly to the rear of Ramsay's orchard. Vaulting over the fence, he walked to the spring-house, which stood upon the banks of the brook a few yards from the residence, and seated himself upon a rustic bench beneath the apple-trees that shaded the spring. In a few minutes the aged minister came slowly down the pathway leading from the house, a young girl leaning on his arm, both plainly visible in the brilliant light of the already new moon. When they had come near us, Arnold stepped forward, and caught the sobbing girl in his arms.

"Stephen!"

"Amy!"

That was all they said, but there was unutterable love in their passionate embrace, and an infinite trust and confidence in the soft brown eyes that gazed up into Arnold's face that were far more eloquent than words.

I say "their," for from the very time when Arnold first made his strange proposal to me, I had looked forward to this meeting with interest, and had wondered what my part in it would be. Their meeting had come, and it was emphatically theirs. I was a mere spectator; I looked upon the stage, saw the actors, understood the drama, and intellectually sympathized with the principal characters; and although my body, under Arnold's control, took part in the proceedings, I had nothing to do with it except as an unseen spectator of what occurred. And yet I was distinctly conscious that this abnegation of self was voluntary, and that I could have asserted myself, and could have become an actor in what I saw going on between them if I would.

"Join your right hands," said Mr. Mitchell. And then the good old man pronounced the marriage service, and closed with an earnest prayer. Arnold placed on Amy's finger a plain gold ring which I had bought for him in Memphis, and Mitchell handed her the certificate of marriage, which he had signed at home. Then followed a long and tender embrace, and with the words, "Until to-morrow morning, my sweet wife," and a murmured answer, "Yes, Stephen, till to-morrow," Arnold turned away and went back to my horse, while Mr. Mitchell and Amy slowly returned to Ramsay's.

Arnold leaped into the saddle, and saying "Now for home," rode off rapidly in the direction of his father's residence, five miles away.

Having reached home, the old doctor, his father, his mother, a gray-haired but still beautiful woman, a young and lovely sister, and all of the servants about the place, received him with great surprise but with exuberant cordiality, and without the faintest suspicion that Stephen Arnold's body lay rotting on the battle-field of Jonesboro, and that he was using my body while receiving these salutations and embraces. I was only a spectator; but when Arnold kissed his young and beautiful sister, and she clung to him lovingly, and pressed her sweet mouth to his again and again, I began to feel a very lively interest in her delicious caresses. Then I felt a sort of shock pass through me, and I perceived that he was saying in that mysterious way in which all of our communications had been made, and the manner seemed somehow to be angry and threatening:

"It would be dishonorable in you to approach my sweet sister under the circumstances, and you must not forget our compact. You agreed to be passive while we remain here."

In the same mysterious way I answered:

"You are right. I will be more cautious; but the situation is novel, and I have not yet become accustomed to it. I will be passive, and was hardly conscious that I was ceasing to be so."

And from that moment I was so; yet I was distinctly conscious I could have shared with him in every thought and feeling to the manifestation of which body or brain is necessary.

All things went on precisely as if the veritable Stephen Arnold had returned home from the army in his own proper person. In the morning it had become generally understood that the young man had secured a furlough for thirty days, would remain at home for ten days, and would then depart to rejoin his regiment. About nine o'clock, sitting in the family-room chatting with sister Lillian and the old folks, Stephen asked:

"Father, is my old buggy in running order yet? and is Brown Bess still in the stable?"

"Yes," the old doctor answered; "but surely you are not going to leave home when you have so short a time to stay with us?"

"Yes," said he, "and I would like to have sister Lillian accompany me."

"But where?" asked Lillian.

"To Squire Ramsay's," he answered. A look of blank astonishment swept over every face, and he quietly continued as if he were rather intending to puzzle them, "Yes, to Squire Ramsay's. The fact is, I was married to Amy some time ago secretly, and I want to go over this morning, and claim my dear little wife."

Then Lillian clasped him around the neck, and burst into tears, crying out: "Oh, brother! brother! I am so glad to hear you say that!—so glad!"

Then his old mother bent over him, her radiant face shining out from her silvery hair, and kissed him on the forehead.

The venerable doctor grasped his hand, and in a voice husky with emotion, said: "I knew my boy would always be a man, no matter how wild he may have been; but it was hard to bear all that was whispered about, without knowing exactly how the facts were. But why did you keep your marriage secret?"

Stephen quietly answered:

"The old squire was very bitter against me; I had no idea of being gone so long when I left home. I made Amy promise to say nothing about it until I should come over and claim her for my own."

"Let us go at once," cried Lillian; and she hastened from the room to give orders that the mare and buggy be brought.

"Go," said the old folks, "and bring Amy home with you, if she can come."

Then Stephen and his sister Lillian drove rapidly over to Squire Ramsay's. They knocked at the door, and in answer to their summons the stern figure of the grim old Puritan stood before them. His hard, strong face seemed to betray a mighty emotion as he gazed upon Arnold, with set lips and hard, relentless eyes, standing erect, gloomy, and silent. Lillian was abashed and frightened, and could say nothing. Quietly and gravely Arnold spoke:

"Mr. Ramsay, you have perhaps just cause to be offended with me for marrying Amy against your will, and secretly; but she is my wife. I have come for her, and there is no law of God or man that can justify you in refusing to let her go with me. I would greatly prefer to enjoy your favor, for I respect you highly. If my presence is unwelcome to you, let me take my wife with me, and I will depart; but I will not go without my wife."

"Your wife!" said Squire Ramsay, in low, smothered tones, in which conflicting passions struggled for utterance.

Lillian darted forward, with tears in her beautiful eyes, and laying her little hands caressingly on the stern old man's arm, exclaimed: "Yes, Squire Ramsay, my brother's wife, dear, sweet little Amy—my sister Amy. Oh, don't be so hard and unforgiving! Let us be friends. I want to see sister so much."

The old man's stern face relaxed. He put out his hand, and grasped that of Stephen. Half stifling his emotion, he said: "Amy is in her mother's room," and turned away to hide the strong feelings, so unusual to a man of his character that he was both unable to control and ashamed to reveal them.

Stephen and Lillian went together to where they knew "mother's room" was. There, reclining upon a lounge, was Amy, her mother seated by her side. Arnold knelt beside her, and taking her in his arms covered her face with passionate kisses.

"My wife—my own," he murmured, "after so many months once more to hold you in my arms."

The tears sprang to Amy's eyes as she returned his passionate caresses, but she spoke no word. There is love as well as grief which is too strong for speech.

Old Mrs. Ramsay looked on in silent astonishment, as if she hardly knew whether to cry or laugh. Then Arnold said:

"Dear madam, Amy promised me to keep our marriage secret until I could come back and claim her as my wife, and she has done so. Forgive me for baving persuaded her against your wishes, but her father was very bitter against me, and I loved Amy so much"—and the winning way in which he uttered the last few words would have stirred a heart of stone.

The old lady's eyes filled with tears, as she answered: "I never was bitter against you, Stephen, but the squire is master, and he is a stern man when he thinks he is right," and she fairly broke down as she added: "I could have rejoiced at your marriage if you had not made it a secret so long."

It would not be right to repeat all that I witnessed of the tender interviews between this husband and wife, while she supposed they were alone, and he seemed to have forgotten that I could hardly avoid knowing what they said. It is sufficient to say that from the very first he impressed upon her mind that he could not remain longer than ten days without violating the conditions of his furlough, and strove to reconcile her to his departure at the end of that period.

Mrs. Ramsay determined that Amy could not prudently leave the house that day. Arnold drove Lillian home in the evening, and came back with a message from the old folks that they would both come over the next day, to see their daughter-in-law, but the old gentleman was summoned before bed-time to attend upon Amy professionally, and her troubles ended at midnight with the birth of a son. During the ten days which followed Arnold's unwearied attention and loving kindness to his invalid young wife, his pride and tenderness for the new-born son, and his manly and respectful intercourse with Amy's parents won all hearts. The whole of the generous Southern community in which they lived rejoiced to believe that there was nothing wrong about Arnold and his fair young wife.

On the morning of the tenth day after our arrival the old doctor handed the keys to his son, and told him to help himself to what money he wanted. My mysterious friend carefully computed all that I had paid out upon our journey, and the sum necessary to pay our way back, and put it into my pocket. He took, in addition thereto, about one hundred dollars in gold, and handed the keys back to his father.

It was arranged that as soon as Amy could be moved, she was to go over to the old doctor's, and make her home there, an arrangement brought about, I think, by sister Lillian's persistent exertions. On that morning, after tender leave-takings, Stephen Arnold rode off in the direction of Memphis, as they said, "to rejoin his company," little dreaming that his company had already crossed the river of death, and that his parting with them was for all time. There was something inconceivably sad in the quiet melancholy with which he received the last embrace of mother, sister, and wife; so touching, indeed, that the old squire himself had no fear of the young man's future, but secretly and gladly added the name of Stephen Arnold to that mental roll-call of "God's elect" which he was accustomed to keep for his own private use.

I experienced no peculiar sensation until we had seen and parted with Mr. Mitchell; but we had hardly got out of sight of his farm before I became conscious that the control of my person, which I had abdicated in favor of Arnold, was vividly returning to me.

"How is this?" I said, in our usual way—that is, I willed the words without speaking them. Then came the answer: "You have carried out your contract like a true and honorable man, and my gratitude for your kindness is beyond expression. If you will look back upon the happiness we have left behind us, upon the good we have accomplished, you must certainly believe that you have acted well. I am restoring to you the autonomy over your own body, although I can not entirely go out of you until we return to Jonesboro."

Then I said: "But how is it with you? Do you regret to leave this happiness that is behind us? It has been in my mind for some days to say to you that I am alone in the world. I have no sister, wife, nor child. If you regret this separation from all these earthly ties, as a living man would do, keep my body. Let me find some way of escape from it, and you return, and take your place permanently among those who love you, those whom you must love."

"Thank you, friend," said Arnold; "but that can not be, even if we desired it. Your absence from this tabernacle of flesh would be the death of it. Besides, I do not feel this parting as a living man would, for death itself is a mere change to us who have once passed through it. And then the mighty hope of being invested with that 'spiritual body,' which constitutes the Resurrection, burns in my spirit brighter and clearer than ever before."

After we had reached Memphis, and had dined at the Gayoso, I was walking back and forth upon the broad, level space which at that time stretched out to the verge of the bluff. After a time I went around to the park on Main Street, and strolled there a while. The gas-lights gleamed at every corner, the star-light pulsed down from heaven as from an infinite heart filled with unfathomable peace, and both natural and artificial lustres glinted over the dark, velvety leaves of the magnificent magnolias and the lighter foliage of the other trees, floated about the luxuriant grasses of the diminutive park, and illuminated the stern, grand face of Jackson, carved in white marble, at the central stand, where the Yankee band was playing. Federal officers and soldiers, and citizens of other communities, sauntered about the pleasant walks or lounged upon the iron benches fixed here and there under the trees, while everywhere, promenading, standing, sitting, lounging, alone or with male companions, were throngs of women, gathered like birds of prey from every quarter, some of them brilliantly clad, some of them young and beautiful, but all sold unto sin—the companions of profligates, the haunts of lust, the fair-skinned panderers to death and hell, seeking to entice their human victims. It was a strange sight—stranger when I thought of the contrast between it and the hideous scene of loneliness and desolation we should see on the morrow.

The journey to the battle-field of Jonesboro was accomplished without further incident. At nightfall we reached the Golgotha where our separation was to be effected. Again I took the skeleton's withered hand in mine, and I felt that my strange guest was departing from me quietly, peacefully, without a shock or sorrow. In a few seconds I was alone upon the silent place of death, under the calm starlight.

I was alone on the fetid battle-field—Stephen Arnold was gone.

Many years have passed since the strange experiences which I have put on paper. For years Lillian Arnold has been my wedded wife. Yet although she knows of her brother's death in battle; although Amy has long since rejoined him in the Shadowy Land; although we are the only ones left of all concerned in this strange history—despite all this I have never dared to look into my wife's sweet brown eyes, and tell her what I now tell you. NATHAN C. KOUNS.
August, 1882.

OLD FAVORITES.

Marie Hamilton.

There lived a lord into the west,
And he had daughters three,
And the youngest has gone to Holyrood,
To be the Queen's Marie.
She hadna been in the King's Court
A twelvemonth and a day,
Till she could neither sit nor gang
Wi' the gaining o' some play.
The King has gane to the Abbey garden,
And pu'd the savin tree,
To scale the babe frae Marie's heart,
But the thing it wadna be.
Then in and cam' the Queen hersel,
Wi' the gowd strings in her hair:
Says, "Marie Hamilton, where is the babe,
That I heard greet sae sair?"
"I rowed it in my handkerchief,
And threw it in the sea;
I bade it sink, I bade it swim,
It wad get nae mair o' me."
"O wae be to thee, Marie Hamilton!
An ill deid may ye dee!
For if ye had saved the babe's life,
It might have honored thee.
But rise, rise up, Marie Hamilton,
Rise up, and follow me,
For I am going to Edinburgh town,
A gay wedding to see."
O slowly, slowly raise she up,
And slowly put she on,
And slowly rode she out the way,
Wi' mony a weary groan.
"Ride hooley, ride hooley now, gentlemen;
Ride hooley now wi' me,
For never, I'm sure, a wearier burd
Rade in your company!
And she gaed up the Parliament Close,
A riding on her horse,
There she saw mony a burgess's lady
Sit weeping at the Cross."
"O what means a' this greeting?
I'm sure it's no for me:
For I am come to Edinburgh town,
A gay wedding to see."
As she gaed up the Tolbooth stairs,
She laughed loud laughter three;
But o'er ever she cam' down again,
She was condemned to dee.
"O dinna weep for me, ladies!
Ye needna weep for me;
Had I not killed my ain dear bairn,
This death I wadna dee.
Cast off, cast off my gown," she said,
"But let my petticoat be;
And tie a napkin o'er my face,
That the gallow's I may na see.
Vestreen the Queen had four Maries,
The day she'll hae but three;
There was Marie Beaton, and Mary Seaton,
And Mary Carmichael, and me.
O aft, aft hae I dressed the Queen,
And put gowd in her hair;
But now I've gotten for my doom
The gallow's-tree to share!
O happy, happy is the maid
That's born o' beauty free!
It was my dimpling rosy cheeks
That's been the dule o' me.
I charge ye all, ye mariners,
When ye sail o'er the faem,
That ye let na my father or mither ken
But that I'm coming hame!
Ye mariners, ye mariners,
When ye sail over the sea,
O let na my father or mither ken,
I hung on the gallow's-tree.
O little did my mither think,
That day she cradled me,
What lands I was to travel ower,
What death I was to dee!
O little did my father think,
That day he held up me,
That I, his last and dearest hope,
Should hang upon a tree!"—Anon.

Song of Mary Beaton

Between the sunset and the sea
My love laid hands and lips on me;
Of sweet came sour, of day came night,
Of long desire came brief delight.
Ah! love, and what thing came of thee
Between the sea-downs and the sea?

Between the sea-mark and the sea,
Joy grew to grief, grief grew to me;
Love turned to tears, and tears to fire,
And dead delight to new desire;
Love's talk, love's touch there seemed to be Between the sea-sand and the sea.

Between the sundown and the sea,
Love watched one hour of love with me;
Then down the all-golden water ways
His feet flew after yesterday;
I saw them come and saw them flee,
Between the sea-foam and the sea.

Between the sea-strand and the sea,
Love fell on sleep, sleep fell on me;
The first star saw twain turn to one,
Between the moonrise and the sun;
The next, that saw not love, saw me
Between the sea-banks and the sea.

—Algernon Swinburne.

Adieux à Marie.

Queen, for whose house my fathers fought,
With hopes that rose and fell,
Red star of boyhood's fiery thought,
Farewell.

They gave their lives, and I, my queen,
Have given you of my life,
Seeing your brave star burn high between Men's strife.

The strife that lightened round their spears
Long since fell still: so long
Hardly may hope to last in years
My song.

But still, through strife of time and thought
Your light on me too fell:
Queen, in whose name we sang or fought,
Farewell.

—Algernon Swinburne.

CHICAGO NOVELETTES.

"Will you kiss me before I go away—go to leave you perhaps forever, Myrtle?"

The speaker was a rugged, athletic-looking young fellow, just in the full flush of manly strength and beauty. His muscles stood out like whip-cords. But in strong contrast to the splendid developments that first attracted the attention of all who saw Percy Montravers was the high forehead, with skin soft and white as a woman's, over which clustered a mass of curly golden hair, which betokened the Saxon blood that came to him through a long line of the fierce old Norsemen who sailed the Northern seas in dead and gone centuries, while the blue eyes that looked so lovingly at the fair young face pressed close to his heart beamed with an inexpressible tenderness.

Wiping away the tears that would come from the gentle hazel eyes in spite of all her efforts, Myrtle Maginnis twined her soft arms around Percy's neck, and rained kisses on his lips in a mad, passionate ecstasy of love that seemed to know no ending. "Will I kiss you again, my own, my sweet?" she cried, sobbing as if her heart would break. "God knows that if my love, my kisses, could avail aught in beating off the cruel destiny that seems fated to separate us, I would hold you in these arms forever, and let my kisses fall like the dew of heaven that leaves never a spot untouched by its revivifying presence. Oh! my sweetheart, my only love, let us forget, if we can, the unhappy moment when you must go and make me desolate, the hour whose first moment shall begin for me a ceaseless, weary vigil, relieved only by your letters, the days between which will seem to me as the blanks between the stars. My sweet, my own, my precious darling, let us think only of love." And with these words she clasped him almost fiercely to her pulsing bosom, as if to ward off the dark spirits of doubt and despair that rose before her in all their horrid reality. Just then a carriage drove up to the door. With one last, lingering kiss, the lovers separated; the man went out into the starry night, and the girl threw herself upon the sofa in an agony of grief.

Percy Montravers had started for Kokomo.

Midnight on the Pan-Handle Road.

With a never-ceasing rumble and roar, and now and then a wild shriek from the brazen-throated monster that with blazing eye dashed like some maddened Cyclops with fearful speed over hill and through dale, past wild ravines whose rocky fastnesses reechoed the dreadful clangor of the rushing mass, the train sped on and on. Finally the motion was slightly checked. The telegraph poles that had been flitting past the car windows like weird, gaunt phantoms of the night, became more distinct. Slower and slower went the train, until with a Titan-like pant and sob the engine came to a stand-still.

Percy was in Kokomo.

In the parlor of an elegant cut-stone residence stood a lovely girl. Over her beautifully molded shoulders fell a wealth of nut-brown hair, while on the snowy bosom that rose and fell with the regularity of the Chicago wheat market sparkled a necklace of diamonds. The door-bell rang, and presently a servant came into the parlor, and handed the girl a card. She grasped it eagerly, and a blush o'erspread her beautiful face as she read the name. "Show the gentleman in, Thomas," she said.

In another moment Percy Montravers stood before her. With a quick, passionate movement the girl sought to throw herself into his arms, but Percy prevented her. "Back, woman!" he cried. "You do not know what you are doing. I have lost my love for you. Back, I say!"

A deathly pallor spread over the face that but an instant before was suffused with the rosy flush of love.

She could not back. Her polonaise was too tight.

September in Peoria.

Up the shady street that leads to the house where Myrtle, the pride of his heart lived, Percy walked with elastic step. He would soon be with her; soon see her face, and feel her right earring scrunch into his shoulder after an absence of three months; soon feel her warm kisses on his lips, and her soft arms about his neck. A man—a simple, honest fellow whom he had known since a boy—was coming toward him, whittling a lunch from a plug of tobacco. Percy grasped him by the hand. They talked of various matters for a moment, and then the man said:

"Come up for the wedding, Perce?"

"What wedding?"

"Why, Maginnis's daughter, of course. She's goin' to marry that there biggest boy of Deacon Elderberry's this evenin'! Thought likely you might be a groomsman." And the good-natured soul laughed heartily.

Percy did not reply. There was a dead, cold feeling in his heart, and he turned slowly back to the hotel. The next morning he did not appear at the usual time. An hour passed, and still he did not come. Then the landlord rapped violently on the door of his room. There was no response. Becoming frightened, the man summoned assistance, the room was broken into. Percy lay on the bed, his clothes not having been removed. On the table stood a bottle. They shook him, but he did not respond.

"Great heavens!" said the landlord, "he has killed himself. Some one go for the doctor at once."

Presently the doctor came. He placed his hand over Percy's heart, and then looked into the bottle on the table.

"Is he dead?" queried the landlord.

"Yes," replied the doctor in a solemn tone, "he is dead—drunk."—From "Myrtle's Marriage," by Joseph Medill, the Tribune Novelist.

They err who tell us politeness has fled, as witness the following postscript to a letter recently received by the Duke of X—from the steward of one of his estates: "I beg that your grace will excuse me for having taken the liberty of writing this in my shirt-sleeves, but the excessive heat has compelled me to be guilty of this apparent disrespect."

THE GOTHAMITES IN SUMMER.

The Men and Women Who Frequent

The rush to seaside and mountain-side has left the town almost empty. I went down to Coney Island the other day; but not with the expectation of seeing many fine-feathered people there, for fashionable society cuts Coney Island dead. The English lady of quality delights in showing her fine plumage and graces to vulgar eyes, and "milor" can find no sweeter morsel to roll under his tongue than the deference of his inferiors. But our aristocracy cares nothing for the admiration of the vulgar, and in consequence they go to watering places where they can be seen of each other, and enjoy seclusion from the outside world. There is no cottage life at Coney Island. There are no balls, dances, dinners, private theatricals, polo, or lawn-tennis. Nor is there a drive even in which a devotee of fashion may roll in her carriage, and show how many fine dresses she has. What wonder, then, that the place is cut dead?

At Manhattan Beach I found the hotel piazza and the space in front thronged with visitors, who apparently contented themselves with sitting quietly in chairs and benches, listening to the music projected from the cockle-shell bandstand on the beach. They were well-dressed and well-mannered. Many of these visitors may be seen here twice or thrice a week the whole season through. Why they do not tire of it is a mystery. The ocean can only be contemplated from the top of a wooden bulkhead, against which are dashed sea-weeds and slime, and the fizz and sputter of fireworks on certain evenings furnish the only variation of the daily life. Those who seemed to be enjoying themselves most I found seated at the tables in the dining-room. A good proportion of the guests at the hotel are from the interior, whose curiosity has been aroused by the fame of the island, and who find much novelty around them and much to admire in the number and dimensions of the hotels. They have left quietude and seclusion behind them. What they seek is noise, confusion, a crowd, excitement. There are usually a few promenaders on the piazza, who make their way by a sinuous course among the chairs. Meanwhile, "young bucks" who are faultlessly attired, lounge against the rail, puff cigarettes, and stare at the young women, who are seemingly devoted to their escorts, but at the same time do not entirely neglect the "young bucks."

One young lady created a sensation soon after my arrival. She was an English girl, with a fresh face and fine figure. Pretty faces and plump figures are not so rare, to be sure, but the English young lady wore a Jersey. It fitted her as closely as an eel-skin, and showed every curve of her body to advantage. Her waist was so small in proportion to her shoulders and hips (she evidently disregards the advice of the aesthetic London writer on waists) that it is a wonder how such an innocent looking girl as she could do such a thing. Moreover her dress—or skirt, as the ladies would say—was so small that it looked like a trousers leg. It was becoming enough, because she was straight limbed and knew how to walk, but—but, if she had been knock-kneed! Whether her escort was an Englishman or one of our Hotel Brunswick young men I could not make out. He had on English clothes, however, and mumbled his words. The pair, I suppose, are down for a bird's-eye view of the beach and the crowd.

Manhattan Beach boasts of its exclusiveness, and it must be admitted that one can breathe the atmosphere there better than at Hotel Brighton. But for this very reason objectionable women are to be found here in no small numbers. They are more elegantly dressed than their chaste sisters who shun them, and if they did not accompany men whose appearance bespeaks questionable occupations, and if they did not show an inordinate fondness for champagne, they would not attract much attention. I came upon a little party suddenly in a retired nook at one end of the piazza. The women—one a pronounced brunette, the other as pronounced a blonde with her hair dyed a straw yellow—were resplendent in silks and diamonds, and the men wore light-colored flannel suits and white Derby hats. There was a row of empty champagne bottles standing on the table, and the waiter was handing on more. There was much suppressed hilarity on the part of the blonde and the brunette. Under proper conditions it wouldn't have been long until there would have been somebody dancing on that table.

The crusade against the Jews three years ago at this part of the beach has not lost its effect, and one does not see many Jewish faces. But there are some who, despite the edict against them, go there with their wives and families, eat wine suppers, and stay as long as they like.

At Brighton Beach it is different. At times it is overrun by the sons of Israel and their wives and daughters. It was so this time. Hundreds of them (this is no cat story) were there, singly, in pairs, and in groups. They were not of the traditional type who take down their own luncheon and talk loudly over it, and eat piggishly, but they were well-dressed, and lavish enough in spending money—at least they were at the tables. The number of hooked noses, bright and shiny, (for the Jew proverbially gives a gloss on his bald head and his face, if he is a clean, nice Jew, that is,) was simply astounding. They were less circumspect in their deportment than at Manhattan. For the rest the crowd was of that expansive nature that admits all classes. Madame Oilsticker and her over-dressed daughters, happy in the possession of a two-hundred-barrel wheel each, are in their glory at Brighton. The crash of the band, the elbowing of the throng, the noise and dust, and the hackmen's cries keep them in high spirits. The ward politician likes the place, too—it is so democratic, he says. The bar is handy, and he is sure to find political acquaintances. Another common type here is the Brooklyn swell, who may or may not have his sweetheart on his arm, and whether he has or has not, he is a comical creature to study. Usually there are bathers in the surf in front of the bathing pavilion. Women reach the water by walking down an elevated passage-way that describes the segment of a circle. This is well. A more hideous-looking object than a woman in a Brighton bathing dress, with a tattered straw hat tied under her chin, is certainly rare. If she is fat, she looks as shapeless as a tub and as awkward as a sea lion; if slight, her suit bangles around her in great ugly folds, like a bag on a stick. At Narragansett Pier, the bathing-suits are neat, and the girls look trim, although some scrupulous persons inveigh against their brevity. Brighton needs to take a lesson in tailoring from Narragansett Pier. No changes have taken place of late at West Brighton, except that the small hotels, stalls, and catch-penny shows have multiplied. After the late trains have gone, the beach becomes deserted, but if the next day is not foul, the scene is repeated, and so on to the end of the season. A person does not need to be cynical, I think, to be quite content with making visits to Coney Island at very long intervals.

The appointment of William Waldorf Astor as minister to Italy recalls some very interesting incidents in the history of that young man's political career. He has aspired for political honors for some time, and about a year ago was nominated for Congress, an event that delighted him beyond measure. All the Astors indeed were happy at the thought of getting the family name on the congressional records. Who could say that William Waldorf might not some day become a great statesman? The family pride was so tickled in fact that the head was knocked out of the family barrel—a proceeding most remarkable, when it is known that the head in the Astor barrel is usually hooped down tight. Mr. Astor looks like a young man who would prefer the amusements of fashionable life to political honors, in which respect he differs from Perry Belmont, who is grave and dignified. Well, when the campaign opened he went personally into the canvass with the enthusiasm and industry of a ward politician. He cut a ludicrous figure—your gentleman politician always does. Attired scrupulously from his hat to his boots, he haunted rum-shops on the east side, and tossed off glasses of brandy-and-water with cart-drivers, longshoremen, and dustmen. Of course the rum in these grogeries was vile stuff to go down a delicate gullet, but our political fledgling displayed a heroism of which his friends never dreamed him capable. Whenever the Mulhooly Association of the St. Patrick's Brotherhood would give a ball, our friend went. He made friends of the young bucks who had left their carts, hack-stands, and stables to have a night of dissipation, and paid bills at the bar with astonishing liberality. The country candidate tries to win his way to popular favor by kissing the babies, and bestowing sweetmeats on the children. Our friend, actuated by a similar motive, sought introductions to the plump Irish girls, and whirled them through the intricacies of the waltz. The poor fellow was not accustomed to such coarse clay (for Mary, the housemaid, or Bridget, the cook, does not usually have a sweet breath), but he went through it all, defiantly holding his nose aloft. All the young women so honored were delighted, and pronounced Mr. Astor a "foine gentleman." But I think the young men could not have been won over by his condescension, for our friend was ignominiously routed at the polls. Wherefore all this discomfort at the balls and of the vile brandy went for nothing. After the election Mr. William Waldorf Astor sank into obscurity, piqued and humiliated, and might have remained in this condition for years to come had not President Arthur (for good reasons known to himself) lifted him out of it.

Jay Gould has bought a new steam-yacht, and is, I hear, to sail back and forth between the city and his summer home at Irvington. He already sails in a steam launch a good deal, and has become quite brown. The devotion of this money king to business is phenomenal. He leaves his country-house at an early hour in the morning, and rushes to his office down town, as if possessed of a nervous dread of some one stealing his millions away from him. His new yacht was purchased with a view to speed, so that his business hours may not be cut down too much by his daily trip. In these midsummer days other millionaires are off seeking rest and recreation. Cyrus W. Field retires to his country-seat at Yonkers, and entertains any members of the English nobility who have strayed over to this side, (for it must be admitted that C. W. F. is a toady, more or less,) and Vanderbilt drives Maud S and Lysander at Saratoga, or goes for an ocean sail. But Gould apparently cares nothing for such vanities. He is by nature a solitary man. He never goes into society; neither does Vanderbilt—in the best, that is. But there is this difference, that Vanderbilt would if he could, while Gould has no desire to. Gould's only friends are those bound to him by business ties. He has a magnificent place at Irvington, but whom do we hear of being entertained there? When he goes out sailing he is captain and pilot, and has some servant for his sail companion. The great house is empty. If Bob Ingersoll and his rosy-cheeked daughters, who are now at Long Branch, were only turned loose in it, what life they would put into its gloomy halls! Young George has also bought a new yacht, the Favorita, and as he is by no means solitary in his habits, but quite the contrary, he will have a roistering time of it. A good many actresses of the lower order will enjoy a ride in the Favorita before the summer is ended. FLANEUR.

NEW YORK, August 18, 1882.

Miss Laty, of Brooklyn, and Mr. Mills, of New York, went down to Long Beach on a recent Saturday afternoon. They stayed so late on Saturday evening that they missed the last train. They went to the hotel, and were persuaded by Mr. Bruce Price that the only thing which could be done was to get married. Fortunately they were engaged. They took Mr. Price's strange advice. A clergyman was hunted out of bed, and the couple were united. It is simply inexplicable, comments the American Queen, why this unusual method out of the difficulty was taken. The lady was invited by ex-Mayor Wickham to come to his cottage and put herself under the protection of his wife. But this kind and sensible advice was refused, and the pair determined to be made man and wife at once. The couple's friends are now busy finding excuses for the course they took. We hope they will find them. It is not very long ago that a lady and gentleman were lost in the Swiss mountains over night. Gossip was busy at once. They did not regard it. They concluded very sensibly that they would not marry because of an accident. And they did not.

Remarkable quickness of repartee was displayed by an actor at a French theatre, when some one threw the head of a goose on the stage. Advancing to the front, the player said: "Gentlemen, if any one among you has lost his head, do not be uneasy, for I will restore it at the conclusion of the performance."

ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN.

Although Written by a Jester, it is by no Means Foolish Folly.

Get married, my boy. Telemachus, come up close, and look me right in the eye, and listen to me with both ears. Get married. If you never do another thing in the world, marry. You can't afford it? Your father married on a smaller salary than you are getting now, my boy, and he has eight children, doesn't have to work very hard, and every year he pays a great pile of your little bills that your salary won't cover. And your father was just as good a man at your age as you are now. Certainly you can afford to marry. You can't afford not to. No, I'm not going to quote that tiresome old saying, that what will keep one person will keep two, because it won't. A thousand-dollar salary won't keep two one-thousand-dollar people, but it will keep two five-hundred-dollar people nicely, and that's all you are, just now, my boy. You need not wince or get angry. Let me tell you, a young man who rates in the world as a five-hundred-dollar man, all the year round, Monday as well as Saturday, the day after Christmas just as well as the day before; the fifth of July as well as the third, he is going to rate higher every year, until he is a partner almost before he hoped to be a bookkeeper. Good, reliable five-hundred-dollar young men are not such a drug in the market as you suppose. You marry, and your wife will bring tact, and love, and skill, and domestic genius, and womanly economy that will early double your salary. But you would have to deny yourself many little luxuries and liberties? Certainly you would; or rather you'd willingly give them up for greater luxuries. And you don't want to shoulder the burdens and cares of married life? I see you do not. And I see what you do not realize perhaps, that all your objections to marriage are mean and selfish. You haven't given one manly reason for not marrying. If you do marry, you are going into a world of new cares, new troubles, new embarrassments. You are going to be careful, and worried about many things. You are going to be tormented with household cares and perplexities, all new and untried to you. You are going to be pestered, and bothered, and troubled. You will have to stay at home in the evening, when you used to go to the club. Your wife will have so much to do looking after the comfort of her husband and children that she won't be able to sing and play for you every evening, as your sweetheart did. Your time will not be your own, and you will have less leisure and freedom for fishing and shooting excursions, camps in the mountains, and yachting trips along the coast, than your bachelor friends of your own age. I admit all this. But then you will be learning self-denial; you will be living for some one else; you will be loving some one better than you love yourself, and more than a thousand fold that compensates for all that you give up.

Why you want to remain single now, my boy, is just because you are selfish. And the longer you stay single the more this selfishness will grow upon you. There are some noble exceptions among bachelors, I know, and some mean ones among married men; and a selfish married man needs killing more than any other man I know; but as a rule, just look around your own friends, and see who are the unselfish men. Who is it that gives up his seat in a street car to a woman, not a pretty young girl, but a homely, wrinkled woman in a shabby dress; who is it that heads the charity subscriptions; who the largest pew rent; who feeds the beggars; who finds work for the tramps; who are the men foremost in unselfish work? I know, your young bachelor friends are not stingy. Oh, no. I know Jack Fastboy paid $70 last week for a new buggy—it is as light as a match-box, and has such a narrow seat that he can never ask a friend to ride with him; and at the same time, Dick Slocum, who married your sister Alice five years ago, gave $250 for the cyclone sufferers. I think the angels laughed all that afternoon, my boy, but I don't think it was because Jack paid $70 for his new buggy. If you want to shirk the responsibilities of life, my dear boy, you may; if you want to live forty or fifty years longer with no one under the heavens to think about, or care for, or plan for, but yourself, go ahead and do it; you will be the only loser; the world won't miss you nearly so much as you will miss the world; you will have a mean, lonely, selfish, easy time, and unless you are a rare exception to your class, little children will hate you, and the gods never yet loved any man whom the children disliked.

But you can't find the right sort of girl, you say. Oh, yes, I understand all that, my son. I have heard much of that before. You mourn and grieve over the lack of true womanhood among the girls of your acquaintance. Mere butterflies of fashion, you say, who can rattle the keys of a grand piano, dance like fairies, chatter nonsense and society nothings by the hour, and for their lives can not bake a loaf of bread, roast a turkey, do a day's washing, or make a shirt. You say you demand the noblest type of useful womanhood in your wife, and you want to know where you can find the wife you want? Well, I will tell you, my dear boy. If that is the sort of woman you want, marry Nora Mulligan, your laundress's daughter. She wears cowhide shoes, is guiltless of corsets, never had a sick day in her life, takes in washing, goes out house-cleaning, and cooks for a family of seven children, her mother, and three section men who board with her. I don't think she would marry you, because Con Regan, the track-walker, is her style of a man. She is the useful sort of woman you appear to want, but I don't think she'd look at you twice. You won't work, and Con would. My dear boy, Nora Mulligan will have none of you; she wants a higher type of true manhood. You expect to hire men to do all the man's work about the house, but you want your wife to do everything that any woman can do. Believe me, my dear son, nine-tenths of the girls who play the piano and sing so charmingly, whom you in your limited knowledge set down as "mere butterflies of fashion," are better fitted for wives than you are for a husband. The girls know more about these things than you do. If you want to marry a first-rate cook and experienced housekeeper, do your courting in the intelligence office. But if you want a wife, marry the girl you love, with dimpled hands, and a face like a peach, light, and her love will teach her all these things. You have learned one-half of your own lesson.

Hawkeye.

AN OPEN LETTER

FROM

Ex-Governor Leland Stanford, President of the Central Pacific R. R. Co.

OFFICE OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD,
PRESIDENT'S DEPARTMENT,
SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 22, 1882.

HON. FRANK M. PINKLEY, Editor Argonaut—Dear Sir: I desire to thank you for your open letter of the 14th inst.; and I embrace the opportunity which an answer will afford, to correct certain erroneous impressions concerning railroad matters in this State which exist in the minds of many people, and also by a brief statement of fact to remove possible prejudice. The spirit of candid inquiry which your letter evinces leads me to hope that my response will meet with candid, fair, and just consideration.

The first allegation:

That the railroad transportation facilities of the State of California constitute an oppressive monopoly.

Has no foundation in fact. It so happens that the principal volume of the railroad business of California is subject to competition by water transportation, which a glance at the map will show to be true. Further, the only real monopoly that the railroads can have is to the extent that they are able to do business cheaper and better for their patrons than can otherwise be done, and to that extent the monopoly, if monopoly it is, is beneficial in character. In this connection I desire to state that, aside from our Patent and Tariff laws, the only monopolies possible in the United States are to the extent that they are beneficial. Before the formation of our General Corporation Laws, the only corporations possible were those created by special Act, and they were from that fact necessarily monopolies, enjoying privileges which others could not possess. But our corporation laws are antagonistic to such privileges, and provide for the prosecution of every character of legitimate business through the principle of coöperation of capital and numbers. Under these laws no enterprise, however great, but can find the requisite numbers and the requisite capital to be associated in its prosecution, if it offers sufficient inducement and reward, and this insures all needful regulative competition. Excessive profit arising upon any enterprise is the strongest attractive force to capital to engage in competitive undertakings. The aggregate capital of the many is thus made to balance the advantages of large accumulations in the hands of the few. Our corporation laws offer no special privileges, the State grants nothing through them, and acts only for the purpose of aiding the natural right of association. It is upon this natural right of association that society itself is organized, and the legal association of capital and numbers is only the exercise of the same natural right that a man has to call in his neighbor to assist him in rolling a log or raising his barn. It is the foundation and security of our republican institutions, for so long as the people can associate themselves together with the right to express their ideas, and organize to give them force, it can not be otherwise than that the majority must rule. The assumption, therefore, that large corporations may be dangerous, is to assume that the people are incapable of self-government, and that the majority will make laws to oppress themselves for the benefit of a minority. The establishment of a government founded in the doctrine that the rights to life and liberty, the pursuit of happiness, and the acquisition and enjoyment of property are inalienable, is the grandest achievement of modern civilization. The great underlying principle of our government is the protection of the rights of each individual; and in securing the rights of the individual the rights of the many can not be otherwise than secured.

The second allegation:

That the rates of transportation charged by the railroads of California are exorbitant and excessive to such a degree as to arrest the growth of the commonwealth, and to discourage and stifle production;

And the third:

That the principle of regulating freight tariffs upon the basis of what the article transported will bear rather than by the standard of the cost to the carrier of the service rendered, by means of freight classification, is erroneous, unjustifiable, and discriminating. Will be considered together.

In answer to the first, I might content myself by pointing to the history of the State since the period when railroad transportation began. The law under which most of the railroad corporations of this State were organized, fixed the maximum rate for freight at fifteen cents per ton per mile, for all classes. Therefore, under the law, a possible average of fifteen cents per ton per mile, might have been charged, but the actual average rate obtained by the Central Pacific Railroad during the year 1881 was less than 2.2 cents per ton per mile, or a little less than one-seventh of the possible average obtainable under the law, and this without compulsion other than that demanded or suggested by the laws of business. These laws are the only certain, just, and legitimate regulators, and under them the greater part of the products of the country are moved at rates below the average cost of movement. Wheat will probably be moved from San Francisco to New Orleans at the rate of about one-half cent per ton per mile, or at one-fifth of the average charge for the movement of freight on the Central Pacific Railroad during 1881; and this because of three controlling principles of business law coming in to affect it, viz: Competition, the cost of the commodity at the place of its destination, and its own actual value in this market. The natural principles of business, which have been found sufficient to regulate all other interests without special regulative enactment, are equally inherent in the business of transportation, and this self-regulating process is clearly illustrated by the facts I have above cited. The railroad finds its reward for the minimum rates of freight in the general development of the country and the stimulus given to production, and after paying the direct expenses consequent upon the movement of these minimum freights, there may be a small balance still to go toward paying the fixed expenses and the general expenses of maintenance. And to that extent, these low-priced freights contribute a share of support toward a means of transportation that is of general benefit to every commodity.

This naturally brings me to a consideration of the third question, and explains one of the great reasons for classification, which is to make the burdens of transportation proportioned to values; thus each article, as nearly as possible, pays an equal percentage on its own value. To fully illustrate the value to staple articles of production of this principle of classification, suppose four persons desiring to construct a means of transportation from a common point to a common point, to be possessed of commodities related to each other in value as iron, copper, silver, and gold. Now let it be distinctly understood that the means of transportation is common, and that the value of these articles is to reside in their destination. The transportation of iron could not confer as much value upon that commodity as the transportation of copper. Again, the transportation of copper could not confer as much value upon the article transported as the transportation of silver, and this again as the transportation of gold. It follows, therefore, that the value of the service rendered by the transportation of gold, the most costly article used in this illustration, will be as much greater than the transportation of iron, as the difference in the value of the two articles brought into comparison at their market point. To charge the iron with a rate of transportation equal to that charged the gold, when the value of the service in transporting the gold is many thousand times greater than that rendered in transporting the iron, would be an unjust discrimination against the iron and in favor of the gold. The principle, then, carried into practical commerce, is that a high rate is placed upon costly articles, and a low rate upon cheap articles, for mutual benefit and a just distribution of burdens. Of course, other considerations, almost as various as the character of the goods transported, enter into this question of classification, such as bulk and volume, liability to damage, convenience of handling, quantity shipped, etc.

As to the fourth allegation:

That, in practice, the railroads of California discriminate arbitrarily and unjustly between individual shippers and between shipping points, showing favoritism to individuals and localities, to the obvious injury of the persons and places discriminated against.

I first deny that this is the practice, and further state that no rule of the company has ever existed which permitted or tolerated such a practice. Every difference in rate which the rules of the company permits arises out of the necessities of business, and is generally caused by competition. And this brings me directly to the seventh allegation:

That freights are carried for longer distances—as, for instance, to terminal points—for less, or at the same rates charged for shorter distances.

Which we admit and justify by a single illustration. Take the wheat of the country, with San Francisco, Sacramento, Stockton, Red Bluffs, Bakersfield, and Los Angeles as shipping points, and New Orleans as the objective point. And here come in the three factors which limit and fix the price that the railroad company shall charge for transportation. The first is development, which applies most strongly in the case of the most remote place, Red Bluffs; second, the value of the commodity at New Orleans or its ultimate point of destination, say Liverpool; and last, competition. San Francisco is the chief competitive point, with four hundred and eighty-one miles of transportation more than from Los Angeles. Sacramento, fifty miles further from the point of destination than Stockton, has as good facilities for reaching San Francisco, the great competitive point, as Stockton has, and will not pay to the carrier any greater price than the latter pays, for the reason that the competing advantages are about equal. At Red Bluffs the question of development appears more strongly than at either of the other points, and yet feels the influence of both of the other factors. The converse of this proposition is also true as relates to the import commerce to be carried by the Southern Pacific Railroad. The export commerce which will find its outlet at the Gulf ports will be supplemented by an import commerce, and this must necessarily, by the same law of competition, be carried to San Francisco at as low rates as will be charged for like carriage to Los Angeles. Now, the railroad practically has but little voice in the matter, outside of those considerations which fix the price that it shall receive. And here let me say that whenever the railroad accepts less than the maximum allowed by law, it is because of considerations or circumstances that it can not control, but which in themselves fix the price which becomes an established rate. This fact should receive due consideration. Now, it will be seen that, controlled by these circumstances, an equal mileage theory would not apply at all, and nothing can regulate it excepting business laws, unless you deny to the shipper the right of competition, and regulate him in his routes and prices. An attempt to regulate the carrier without regulating the shipper will always be a failure; and again I may say that the only regulation possible is such as business principles or the laws of business permit. When the railroad accepts less for the longer than for the shorter distance, it is because circumstances compel it, and not from choice. Railroads are no more desirous of working for nothing than other enterprises or interests; and it would be as reasonable to suppose that they would voluntarily carry for the longer distance at the same or less rate than for the shorter, when they could obtain more, as to suppose that the laborer would work a day and a half for the same price that he would for one day. The people are not charged more for the shorter distance, but the railroads are compelled to take less for the longer distance, for certain causes over which they have no control, viz., competition, or the relative values of the commodities moved.

Fifth—That merchants and manufacturers are, by force of existing conditions, coerced to enter into contracts to ship all goods imported by them by rail, to their disadvantage, and to serious loss and injury to their business.

This allegation would seem to be suggested by individuals who fail to have an advantage over their neighbors, which perhaps they think themselves justly entitled to. There is an open or general tariff rate which all shippers may avail themselves of, without any discrimination. All may also avail themselves of the contract rate, the smallest as well as the largest shipper. Whether they enter into this contract or not, is a matter of individual interest and opinion entirely, and, therefore, is not properly a matter of public concern. The shipper avails himself of the open or contract rate as to him seems best, and this contract system is available to the smallest as well as the largest shipper. No one enters into this contract unless he deems it to his individual advantage as against the general tariff rates.

In answer to the sixth allegation:

That the coercion alleged to be practiced by the railroads, as set forth in the above count, prevents competition by the ocean, raises the aggregate cost of transportation, entails additional cost upon all articles imported, and forces entire reliance upon overland railroad lines, to the injury of the commerce of this State.

I can only say that before the construction of the overland railroads, the lowest freight by the Isthmus was about one hundred dollars per ton; now it is about twenty dollars. During the past year, freights on wheat by Cape Horn ruled a little over seventeen dollars per ton. The opening of the Southern Pacific brought that price down immediately to about ten dollars, and had that rate prevailed during the past year alone, it would have saved to the farmers of this State about seven million dollars on the cost of transporting that single article, and I predict here that the former rates around Cape Horn will never be restored. And this because the railroad has come in as a competitor for the business. Thus it appears the allegation that the contract freight system, as practiced by the railroads, prevents competition by the ocean, or raises the aggregate cost of transportation, or entails additional cost to the consumer on articles imported, or forces sole reliance upon overland railroad lines, has no foundation in fact.

Allegation seven has already been answered.

Eighth—That hostility to the railroad as a basis for political action is justified by reason of the facts, to wit: That the construction of the railroad system of the State was encouraged and aided by county, state, and national subsidies, and that in the processes of their construction the right of eminent domain was exercised in the condemnation of the right of way, and other important matters. That all these concessions and privileges placed you and your associates in the attitude of trustees for the public, and that it is unreasonable and unconscionable that you should be able to earn profits amounting, by your own exhibits, to something like nine millions a year, and which are necessarily drawn from the industries and commerce of this State.

This allegation embraces much of error that is widespread throughout this State, and the entire United States as well, and it seems to me that a brief recital of the facts will remove the impression that exists. The aid received in the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad was, in round numbers, a loan of twenty-five millions of dollars in the bonds of the United States. This was not a gift, and therefore not a subsidy, and for it the Government has taken ample security; and all it is out in money is only the difference between the interest paid on these bonds and the value of the services rendered by the railroad company. The Government gave, also, some of its land, of but little value at the time, and, I am sorry to say, of much less value now than is generally supposed. By this the Government secured the construction of the road, and it has never been disappointed in a single expectation connected with it. As appears by a report of a United States Senate Committee, taking the average expenses west of the Missouri River from 1840 up to the completion of the roads, as against what has been paid since for much better service, the Government has saved over three million dollars per annum, assuming that the interest it has paid on the bonds loaned to the companies should turn out an entire loss. Other advantages might be enumerated; but the public mind will readily appreciate them without a detailed statement here. The only aid extended by the State of California to the construction of the road was by virtue of a contract between the company and the State, in which the State promised to pay the interest on one million five hundred thousand dollars bonds of the company, the latter to pay the principal of those bonds at maturity. The value of the service which has been rendered under this contract, added to the revenue derived from taxation due to the increase of taxable property created by the construction of the road, produces a sum greatly in excess of the amount of interest paid on the bonds already mentioned. The county of San Francisco, in the way of compromise, gave four hundred bonds of one thousand dollars each, at that time of a value of about seven hundred and fifty dollars each, instead of subscribing for six hundred thousand dollars stock of the company, and giving for it an equal amount of the bonds of the county, as it was entitled. The compromise was made at its own solicitation; and if it was a bad bargain, it was its own fault. The county of Sacramento subscribed for three hundred thousand dollars of the company's stock, and gave its bonds for an equal amount. The county of Placer subscribed for two hundred thousand dollars stock of the company, and gave its bonds for an equal amount. Both of these counties afterward sold their stock for more than their bonds were worth at the time of their subscription. This embraces the entire amount of aid—national, state, and county—which was contributed toward the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad; and when the increase of taxable property, affording additional revenue to State and county treasuries, and the development of the resources of the State consequent upon the construction of these railroad lines, come to be considered, it seems to me that neither the State nor counties have reason to regret their contributions. If the National Government, the State, or counties desired other benefits than those naturally derived from the construction of the road, they ought to have so stated in their contracts; and they are not now entitled to anything beyond the specific performance of the contracts. To base the right of regulation upon the claim that, in the construction of the road, national, state, and county aid was extended, would be to claim the right to neutralize such aid, and to inflict a penalty of continued and indefinite loss for having accepted such aid.

Legally and equitably we sustain the same relation to the public as all other railroads, subject to equal laws, and to the fulfillment of every contract. I have before stated that our corporate laws are merely in aid of the natural right of association. The right of eminent domain is not exercised by the railroad company, and in fact can only be exercised by the State and for the benefit of the public, and it is only because the State deems railroad construction as of such eminently beneficial character to the public that it is exercised, and in order that the railroad may have the right of way to build its road. The right of eminent domain is not vested in the railroad company. The State can not divest itself of it, and it can not exercise it for the benefit of the railroad company. It can only be exercised on behalf of the public, and for the public benefit. The manner of its exercise proves this. The State, exercising the right of eminent domain, condemns the property to be taken; but since the instrumentality of transportation is a private interest, the full value of the property taken must be paid for by it to the owner from whom it is taken, before it can be used. What is, therefore, termed the exercise of the right of eminent domain, does not form a basis of right to regulate the business of railroads, any more than it would confer the right to regulate the earnings of property belonging to any other kind of corporation. Railroad corporations are not created by the State any more than any other corporations; any more than partnerships are created. It simply points out how they may be created, and it is then the work of individuals to create the corporation or the partnership, and the property of this corporation or partnership is to be contributed primarily by individuals, and the ownership of the property is in individual citizens, and it should be held for their or their successors' benefit. An injury to the property of the association of these individuals, under the name of a corporation, is as serious to them as though they held the property in an ordinary partnership, or as tenants in common. The corporation is one thing, the property of the corporation is another, the labor of the corporators is still another, and it is upon the false theory that the State created the first, that it has parted with something of value, that the assumption is based of the right to regulate the labor and the property of the individual incorporators and stockholders, for these two latter are the main things that an attempt is made to regulate. And to take away from these their value, is to confiscate the labor of individuals; to confiscate property; to blot out individual rights and the great associate principle upon which rests our political, social, and business prosperity and security. But I am sorry to say that the supposition that our net profits are nine million dollars per annum is a great mistake. A more careful scrutiny of our annual reports would reveal the facts. From the apparent net earnings there needs to be deducted the various amounts set aside for sinking fund under the law, legal expenses, taxes, interest, etc., in order to obtain the actual net available for dividends, so that, in fact, since the completion of the road we have been able to pay in dividends an amount averaging only four per cent. per annum. The greatest net earned in any one year was in 1875, when it reached nearly eight per cent. upon the capital stock issued, or, in exact figures, four million three hundred and three thousand fifty dollars and ninety-three cents. The next largest year was 1881, when the total was four million two hundred and eighty-one thousand one hundred dollars and seventy-three cents. Contrast this showing with that made for the Pennsylvania Railroad, for the same year, (see Poor's Manual, page 272). The Central Pacific's available revenue from two thousand seven hundred and seven miles was four million two hundred and eighty-one thousand one hundred dollars and seventy-three cents. That of the Pennsylvania's from one thousand one hundred seventy-two and a half miles was nine million eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars and forty-eight cents.

In answer to the ninth allegation:

That an irreconcilable conflict exists between transportation and production,

Permit me to say that it is entirely without foundation in reason or in fact. The two are to a large degree mutually dependent, and especially is transportation dependent upon production.

Without production the carrier would have nothing to transport, and, on the other hand, production is dependent upon transportation, because without transportation the surplus could not reach its market, and the inter-dependence of the relation between these two interests is proven when it is remembered that the greater volume of the staple products of the country is moved to its destination and market at rates below the average cost of transportation. The relative rights and interests of transportation and production are compromised and adjusted to each other by means of classification of freights, already discussed in another part of this answer. It is clear, however, that the higher the maximum, the lower the possible minimum. For instance, the average cost of movement being two cents per ton per mile, a ton of silk or other luxuries moved at the maximum rate of fifteen cents per ton per mile would enable the company to move thirteen tons of wheat at one cent per ton per mile and yet maintain the necessary average. There is scarcely anything that the farmer buys at the store that would be sold to him any cheaper if a reduction of twenty-five per cent. were made. For instance, suppose that the freight from San Francisco to some other point is four dollars per ton; a reduction of twenty-five per cent. would be equal to only one-half mill per pound, a reduction so inconsiderable that it would not be taken into account by the vendor or the vendee. But the increase of twenty-five per cent., especially for long distances, on the products of the farmer, might determine the question of production.

In answer to the tenth allegation:

That material reductions in the rates of freight and fare are demanded by consideration of the interests of both labor and capital, I assert that the rates in this State, every fair circumstance considered, are as low as the rates upon railroads in any part of the world; and to illustrate this, on selecting for comparison the rates of twenty of the principal roads in the State of New York, it was found that there was an average rate of 2.64 cents per mile for passengers, while that prevailing on the Central Pacific Railroad, including the higher rates charged in Nevada and the territories of Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico, is only an average of 2.47 cents per mile.

Eleventh—That the opening of the railroad route of transportation to Gulf ports, by which the wheat, wool, wine, and other staple productions of this State will be transported to ships on the Atlantic seaboard, will drive from the Pacific Ocean and the port of San Francisco the import commerce now carried thereon, and place the producers of California at the mercy of monopolized lines of transportation for the carrying of their products.

It seems to me that the above is fully answered by the fact that the ocean must always remain an open route, by Cape Horn and by the Isthmus. There will be additional overland railroad lines through our own country, through the British possessions, and through Mexico, and these will be regulators that will keep the rates on the Central and Southern Pacific railroads always within bounds.

I think I have shown conclusively that the opening of the Southern transcontinental route will encourage development, and confer prosperity upon the people who support the commercial mart of San Francisco. In that prosperity San Francisco must necessarily share. The saving to the people of seven million dollars per annum on the cost of transportation on a single staple product of the supporting territory of San Francisco, alone affords ample illustration of the extent of the prosperity which the Southern transcontinental route must necessarily confer upon the people of this State. The experience of the past affords ample guarantee to the great metropolis of the Pacific Coast against injury by reason of the construction of transcontinental railroad lines which have that metropolis for their Pacific Ocean terminus. The vast increase in the volume of commerce passing through the Golden Gate by reason of the development consequent upon construction of the railroad system of the State and the transcontinental lines now reaching here, points to the inevitable conclusion that neither the import nor the export commerce of the port of San Francisco will be diminished, but on the contrary will be greatly enhanced and augmented.

Steam transportation by land is confined to fixed lines, involving the construction of railways, requiring large investments of capital; but by way of the ocean San Francisco sustains cheap commercial relations with every part of the world. But this fact would not make her a great commercial emporium without lines of communication with the interior. The existence of a harbor is nothing in itself, but if that harbor has lines of transportation by rail and river converging into it, then converging lines of commerce by ocean converts it into a focal centre of exchange and distribution. The harbor of San Diego is sufficiently safe and commodious to meet the demands of the commerce of Liverpool, but the reason why a great commercial city exists on the harbor of San Francisco and not on the harbor of San Diego, is because the former has enjoyed the advantages of communication by river and rail with the interior. San Francisco is connected by ocean with every port on the globe that is visited for commercial purposes. Her commercial lines radiate from the Golden Gate like the rays of a sun. A corresponding radiation of lines of communication connecting her harbor with the interior, however great their number, can only augment her commercial greatness, and make her harbor one of the most important ports of the world, both for import and export commerce.

In conclusion, permit me to say every candid, unprejudiced, and argumentative consideration of these important questions only brings into stronger relief the inter-dependence of transportation with every other material interest of the commonwealth. It is so interwoven with every element of progress and prosperity, that to inflict upon it an injury is to strike a blow equally at every other material and commercial interest. You say your questions are formulated from speeches and documents of a political campaign. If party methods take the direction of promising reductions in the rates of transportation, and parties are to challenge each other to a rivalry in bids of this character, then the party that anticipates the ultimate logic of such a contest, and promises that transportation under its administration shall cost nothing, will at once surpass its competitors in the breadth of its conceptions and the splendor of its appeal to the spirit of confiscation.

I entertain, however, no apprehension of such a result. The enlightened sense of justice inseparable from the civilization of the age in which our people live may be depended upon to promote enterprise, encourage development, and maintain unimpaired the rights of all citizens.

Very respectfully yours, LELAND STANFORD.

Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills have sent out cards for a hall, to take place at Milbrae on the fifth of September. Mr. and Mrs. Huntington and Miss Huntington are at the Palace. They intend returning East early in September. General Houghton arrives from New York in two or three weeks. He will join his wife and daughter, who are now in Europe, about the beginning of next year. On the afternoon of the sixteenth instant Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Crocker entertained Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills Jr. (nee Livingston) at luncheon. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are now at Milbrae. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Hopkins and family have left Newport, and are now at Saratoga. From there they will proceed to the White Mountains, at which place they remain during the heated term. Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Hutcheson have returned from the East. Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Hovey, of the Palace, went down to Monterey on Saturday last to spend a few days. Mr. Goald has returned to the Palace from Monterey. Sir Thomas Hesketh and wife, accompanied by Mr. Sharon, are at Tahoe, where they will spend a week or more. Mrs. W. H. L. Barnes will accompany her son East next week, whither he goes to enter Harvard. Mr. and Mrs. Shorb, of San Gabriel, have been to the Occidental most of the week. Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Springs and their daughter, Miss Katie Staples, are at Summit Soda Springs. Mrs. C. P. Evans and daughter, of Sacramento, are at Santa Cruz. Mrs. Col. Caded Haymond has been visiting Sacramento, her former home. J. A. Fillmore, General Superintendent of the Central Pacific Railroad, and George Crocker are in Washington Territory. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Keyes, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Simonton, Colonel Charles F. Crocker and Mrs. Crocker, and Hon. William M. Gwin and Mrs. Gwin have been spending a few days at Monterey. Captain and Mrs. Irwin, Captain and Mrs. Cooke, and Mrs. Commander Boyd, of Mare Island, who went down to Monterey a few days ago, have returned. Mr. and Mrs. A. K. P. Harmon, of Oakland, returned from the East on Monday last. Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Laton, of the Palace, have been spending a portion of the week at Monterey. Mrs. D. G. Wells, arrived here from Camp Bidwell a few days ago, and is the guest of Mrs. Wm. Collier, on Van Ness Avenue. Mrs. John Corning, Judge Field and Mrs. Field, A. L. Tubbs and family, and Eugene Dewey returned from Monterey on Monday last. Whitelaw Reid and wife, after spending a few days at Monterey, returned to Milbrae on Tuesday last. Mrs. Leland Stanford entertained a number of friends at Palo Alto on Saturday last, among whom were a number of Washington and Philadelphia people, after which the guests went to Monterey and stayed until Tuesday morning last.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A. Vogeler, of Baltimore, proprietor of St. Jacob's Oil, is dead. His large clientele of advertisers will deeply regret that he did not apply his own remedy in time to save his, to them, most precious life. The Argonaut is not among the mourners.

Mr. Charles E. Sherman, of Kern County, will be a candidate for the office of Secretary of State before the Republican convention. He is a good man for the place, and in all respects qualified to perform its duties. This is in every way a fitting nomination to be made.

The anti-Sunday law resolution of the Democratic platform is now the subject of explanation by Democratic party writers and orators. It was placed there by the League of Freedom. This act was accomplished by the saloon delegates from San Francisco and the lesser cities of the State. It satisfies the beer and liquor interest. It has caught the beer and liquor voters. If it can be so explained that it will lose no Democratic temperance voters, and catch some Republican whisky voters, it will have accomplished the object proposed by the League of Freedom. We shall see.

Another flunkey gone to Paris. Mr. Morton, an American banker, having become rich, was sent as minister to France. He has no other qualification for the place than his coin. With his coin he has hired the proscenium box at the Grand Opera House, directly opposite that of the president of the Republic of France. Another wealthy nob. Mr. Astor, of New York, goes as minister to Rome. We hope he will take a palace opposite the Vatican, and set up opposition to the Pope, or camp near the Quirinal, and reflect the shine of his American eagle over upon Humbert and Marguerite. This shoddy is growing rank, and begins to smell.

For some years past we have been threatened with the formation of an anti-monopoly party. A prominent grocer in New York and leading dealer in bull-butter flooded this continent with his anti-monopoly literature. The Democratic party then seized hold of the idea, and endeavored to appropriate it, and allow the whisky traffic to monopolize Sunday. Now comes a gentleman by the name of Robert J. Harrison, engaged in this traffic of alcohol, and the thing is done. The railroad company charges Mr. Harrison fifty dollars a car-load for hauling his rum more than he thinks it ought. Mr. Harrison, of the whisky trafficking firm of Richards & Harrison, demands of the railroad company, as common carriers, the transportation of his alcoholic compounds at such rates as the merchants shall deem reasonable. If we could apply this rule to Messrs. R. & H. in their trade, and could fix the selling price of their poisonous compound at what we think it is worth, or what we think it costs them, it would be cheap enough for hogs to wallow in. If we could fix the price at the cost of the ruin we think it would produce, it would be so dear that no prohibitory law would be required to suppress the nefarious business. We welcome this new candidate for political distinction, and hope room may be found for the manufacturers and traffickers in alcoholic drinks to have an entire monopoly of all the anti-monopoly capital they can make out of a refusal of railroads to haul alcoholic poison over the country at reduced rates.

When the machine politicians shall have secured the nomination of Mr. Estee, then comes the appeal to all good Republicans to harmonize in a united effort for his election. There was a time in the earlier history of the party when all good Republicans would have responded to the appeal. There was a time ere the smoke of the Rebellion had passed; when the embers of the civil war were still smouldering; when there were national matters unadjusted; when the party appeal came with overwhelming force to party men; when, in the interest of their country, and at the call of patriotism, they were willing to bury personal resentments, and forget and forgive the blows received in party conflicts. And yet there is a noticeable event in the history of the Republican party that demonstrates the feebleness of party discipline to coerce its members to the support of an unfit nomination, and one that, by every honorable rule of party organization, ought not to have been made. Mr. George Gorham secured the nomination of his party when it was twenty thousand in majority by the same appliances, by the use of the same means, and by the aid of the same men who are now working in the interest of Mr. Estee. He was nominated against General Bidwell by one or two votes in convention. He was beaten by H. H. Haight nearly ten thousand votes. The party is not as strong now as then. Party discipline has weakened since then. The temperance and Sunday folk did not then form as active an element as now. The débris question was not then at issue. The political character of Mr. Gorham was as good as that of Mr. Estee. His record was as good, and as a party servant he had been more consistent and faithful. He was beaten by the defection of his own party. All over the State good Republicans abstained from voting. They believed that H. H. Haight was an honest, capable man, and a gentleman, and that under his administration public affairs would not come to grief. They were not mistaken, and he made a good governor. History sometimes repeats itself, not capriciously or without cause. Like acts produce like consequences. Like causes produce similar events. The Republican party stands to-day on a narrow and slippery peninsula, with deep water on either side. It is not strong enough to be insolent. The ice is thin, and the current runs deep and swift beneath it. Desirous that it should take no dangerous chances of defeat, we hope it will nominate a strong and honorable man as its candidate for governor.

Mrs. Barbara Sanger, of Louisville, disappeared on Wednesday, and on Friday evening, her husband, growing a little uneasy on account of her absence, began making inquiries concerning her. There is no doubt about the Sanger's being anxious that Barbara should have a good comments the Chicago Tribune.

VANITY FAIR.

"Many of the remarkable episodes in summer resort life are enacted down by the beach," writes the Cincinnati Commercial's Cape May correspondent. "Yesterday I saw several couples meet for the first time this season in garbs totally unknown to most people in the West. The bathing suits worn here are more modest than those to be seen at most summer resorts. Styles in these garments in late years have changed considerably. Formerly a lady's suit comprised two pieces, one including the skirt and waist, and the other the drawers, while now the waist and drawers form one piece, the same as those worn by the males, and the skirt is the separate garment. The suits are worn shorter than ever, and George W. Hughes, of Philadelphia, who owns the leading bath-suit rendezvous here, tells me he is unable to supply the demand for short drawers and high sleeves that are made upon him by the ladies. 'The fact is,' he says, 'they can't get them too short.' Blue is the rage, and they are usually trimmed with white. At Coney Island the most shocking bathing suits in the world are worn. They consist of a knit material, very similar to gauze, being, as my informant expressed himself, 'next to nothing, and when they are wet it is simply a matter of gaze.'"

At a brilliant entertainment given in London last week by Lady Esmé Gordon, the hand failed to arrive, and the noble hostess was at her wits' ends to know how to obtain music for the waiting dancers. The difficulty was, however, overcome by the Dowager Marchioness of Huntley, Countess of Lindsay, and Lady Harlech, each taking turns at the piano, and playing waltzes and polkas ad libitum.

One of the dullest seasons ever known in London came to a close on August 12th, when all the world flocked to Scotland for the first day of grouse shooting. In spite of one or two very notable weddings, a grand ball at the Russian Embassy, and some few other state entertainments, the season has been strikingly and depressingly dull. And in Paris the short period of summer gaiety has been utterly without vim or go. Mrs. Morton's last grand reception, which was given just before her departure for the baths, was a most curious assemblage of American tourists, and excited not a little astonishment among the few Parisians present. There were ladies in every conceivable variety of costume; some in walking-dress, and some in ball-dress; some in high-necked gowns and long sleeves, others extremely décolletées, and with no sleeves at all. One woman, in a costume resembling a tiger-skin, made a great effect, but was outdone by a friend whose skirt was covered with embroidered animals, with a green-and-gold lizard for a necklace.

The "traveling-dress," so called, is abolished, and so are linen dusters, by women of taste. The experienced traveler who comprehends human nature on the road, knows that to be quietly and fashionably dressed in fabrics of the finest is the way to command respect and attention. A usual and elegant costume is made of silver-gray or drab pongee, that sheds the dust, and is not injured by water. The traveling-ulster, dust-cloak, or pelisse is made from the same material. These should reach the edge of the dress. Jewelry, fringes, or lace ruin the harmony that must exist, and are an offense to the eye.

"A great stir has been caused in London 'clubland,'" writes the New York Tribune's occasional correspondent, "by the news that Mr. Horace, more familiarly known as 'Ghillie' Farquhar, is going on the stage. Mr. Farquhar has long been one of the most popular young 'men of wit and pleasure' about town. Perhaps 'wit' is too strong a word for 'Ghillie's' witticisms, which partake largely of that quality of 'cheek,' as it is called at Eton, which was employed to perfection by Brummell. It is, however, very differently used. Brummell, as my grandfather told me, affected the bel esprit and a tone of elegant raillery, largely mingled with superciliousness, not to say disdain. Mr. Farquhar's fun is of such fair complexion altogether that innocent youths retail his sayings as if they were spoken in good faith. 'Awfully good thing that of Ghillie's, you know,' and then comes something which, as Charles Matthews said of the jokes of his father's time, does not seem quite so good when 'taken cold.' The fact is that Mr. Farquhar's fun is like delicate Burgundy. It will not 'carry,' as wine-merchants have it; but his jokes are good when uttered in his careless, apparently innocent way, just leaving room for doubt whether his humor is unconsciousness or not. To illustrate my exact meaning, I will give a recent instance of Ghillie's style. He went one day into one of his many clubs—that more especially frequented by the not-very-thickily-gilded youths of the day. Ghillie was sumptuously arrayed in evening garments of the latest fashion. His shirt-front was a thing of beauty, spacious as his frame would permit, his jewelry rich and curious, and the orchid in his buttonhole rivaled one of Lord Crewe's. 'Bai Jove, Ghillie!' said one of his 'pals,' with a look of admiration, 'you've got 'em on to-night, old man, and no mistake.' Ghillie gazed innocently, and perhaps a little vacantly upon him, and said: 'I don't see why I should not have a new suit of clothes as well as you other fellows. I'm sure I'm nearly as hard-up as the rest of you.'"

Richard Whiteing, in a letter to the New York World, thus describes a fashionable Parisienne's bath-room: The bath-room is round, and the walls and ceiling are quilted everywhere with black satin, relieved by yellow buttons; there is no window either in the walls or ceiling. The light comes from pink lusters born by nymphs in white marble. The sofa, low and broad, is in quilted satin. The pier-glass is framed with flying cupids. The bath, in black marble shaped like a Roman car, is half buried in flowers. The gilt linen basket hangs over a brazier, burning perfumes. The carpet is a black bear-skin. The bath-mixture is compounded (after the recipe of a learned chemist) of almond-juice, benjoin, Constantinople rose-water, coconut milk and palm leaves. It should be as hot as possible, warm water having, like cold, the effect of closing the pores of the skin. The bath may last an hour, though most people would be glad to get out of this mixture as soon as possible, and after that another hour may probably be employed in polishing the feet and hands. But the whole time is not necessarily lost to the mind, for ladies may "meditate on combinations in toilets" while they are on the simmer.

"The youngsters are, as a rule, most strikingly costumed at Saratoga," writes Clara Belle to the Cincinnati Enquirer. "Some of the dear little creatures are perfect pictures of striking and elegant garb. I am moved to say, in this connection, that fashion is not always so changeable as she is accused of being. It is eight years since the princess form of dress for little girls came in, and now it is as popular as ever. Even the Mother Hubbard draperies are most frequently shirred on to a princess sacque, and the variety of superimposed draperies on this model are unnumbered. Some of these miniature helles are comically flirty. A miss of twelve at my hotel is a perfect little heart-smasher. She appears in as many as six costumes in a single day, including a bathing dress which would be shocking if she were a year or two older, and is slightly questionable now, since it exposes her bare legs to considerably above the knees. A combination of plain and plaided gingham seems to be the popular unpretentious costume for children at this place. Dressier ones are made of two kinds of satine in combination. Still more elaborate toilets are of white and tinted veiling with lace-like embroidery for trimming, satin ribbon for loops and cascades, and sometimes a surah sash bow in the back. The most expensive dresses for little girls, those of silk and damasse, are also made in the princess style, no matter what effect the superimposed draperies and trimmings may give. Checked taffetas and Louisines, as well as small figured damasses and silk foulards in chene striped and checked effects, are also used for full dress toilets. A feature of this summer's dress is embroidery and lace in designs that show the purpose of the artist to be that of creating juvenile patterns for juvenile wearers. For garden parties and evenings little girls sometimes wear costumes quite similar to those of their seniors. This is feasible, owing to the almost entire absence of trails."

"We note," says the American Queen, "that straw-rides have become popular at Long Branch. It may be explained for the information of people who fortunately know nothing of such things from experience, that the dozen or more young people going on this description of excursion, tumble indiscriminately into a large cart, where the straw is scattered over the bottom of the cart, and start out about eight o'clock for some more or less distant point, where a dance or supper has been arranged. The party returns early in the morning—about one or two o'clock. We are sorry to hear that straw-rides are countenanced at Long Branch, and wonder that such parties can find chaperones." Straw-rides have for some time been known on the Pacific Coast—frequently without any chaperones at all.

There is a pleasant variety about the bathing-costumes, observes the Philadelphia Progress. A young lady at Cape May, one of Baltimore's fair daughters, sports among the breakers in a suit combining three colors—red, white, and blue. With her pointed tri-color cap, and the minor accessories to correspond, she is a very charming representative of Dame Columbia. Then, too, there is a "Josephine." Her dress of white flannel is striped with navy-blue, the blouse waist has deep cuffs and a sailor collar, and she wears a broad-brimmed sailor hat lined with cardinal. "The lass that loved a sailor" wins many admiring glances. Cape May has also a damsel of the purely æsthetic type. She promenaded the board-walk the other afternoon clad in a gown of fawn-color, embroidered in pale-blue flowers. There was much soft, lacy drapery, the whole partly enveloped in an embroidered crepe shawl, with deep fringe, and all hung delightfully "limp." The maiden's hair was quite in keeping—light and frowsy, waving over a pale, delicate face. She walked, or rather glided, with a swaying motion, and everybody realized that they were looking upon a true disciple of the new faith.

The other day a lady was seen driving in the New York Central Park with a hat that was nothing more nor less than a great bronze spider and its web, the latter of course forming the brim. Although peculiar, the effect was not bad.—The Prince of Wales is about the only married man of his age in London society who habitually goes to balls and dances. Few Englishmen are regular ball-goers after thirty-five.—A young woman bathed at one of the Eastern seaside resorts the other day in a suit of blue silk trimmed with swan's-down. Spectators were unable to decide whether she belonged to a circus or a lunatic asylum.—Boston fashionables at Swampscott have organized a series of intellectual teas which are held at the cottages of the different members. They have cultured teas, Emerson muffins, Oliver Wendell Holmes waffles, Pilgrim crackers, and real old-fashioned gossip and scandal tarts.—Queen Victoria weighs two hundred pounds.—At a recent "Mother Goose" entertainment, given at Seabridge, Massachusetts, the garden of Mistress Mary Quite Contrary was represented by maidens all in a row arranged as eleven large flowers, such as the lily, narcissus, aster, sunflower, and others; in the centre of each a lovely girlish face looked up, and all bending slightly as if the wind swayed them to and fro.—When the German Empress travels in summer the roof of her railroad carriage is covered with a layer of turf, which is watered frequently during the day as a device to keep her cool.—There is to be a freak in cravats this fall. At least an attempt is to be made to introduce the costly lace-trimmed style worn two hundred years ago.—Whist-players are so fine at certain Eastern watering-places as to use satin-backed, hand-painted playing cards. Nobody understands the special advantages of such cards, as they do not "feel" pleasantly in the hands.—Little "niggers" are coming into fashion as pages in Paris; their complexions throw out the whiteness of their mistress's skin.—Flowers are the chief decoration of the table at Newport dinner-parties this season, and nothing could be prettier. At Mrs. Astor's, on a recent evening, the centre of the table was banked up with white roses three feet high.—Live kittens and fluffy chickens are a staple commodity at fashionable English fairs. Cats are favorites in London society, and much attention is paid to their cultivation in the best circles.

LITERARY NOTES.

We have received from J. E. Hilgard, Superintendent U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, the "Tide Tables for the Pacific Coast of the United States for the year 1883." This volume is published by the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey Office at Washington, D. C.; for sale by Billings, Harbourn & Co.; price, 25 cents.

"The Annals of a Baby" was published about four years ago anonymously, and at that time attracted attention. It is now republished with the author's name attached, Sarah B. Stebbins. It is a pleasant, frothy little volume, written in the gushing style of an exuberant mother. Published by T. B. Peterson & Bro., Philadelphia; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

The author of "The Honorable Miss Ferrard" has just written a collection of short stories and sketches which bear the title of the initial story, "Flitters, Tatters, and the Counsellor." This writer possesses a rare faculty for sketching the habits and characters of English and Irish peasantry, and her stories never fail in their attraction. Published by Macmillan & Co., London and New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

Lately published are two valuable works on photography: "Modern Dry Plates," by Dr. J. M. Elder, of the Imperial Vienna Academy, edited by H. Baden Pritchard, of the British Photographic Society, and "The Art and Practice of Silver Printing." The volumes enter into every particular of the subject of which they treat, and are profusely illustrated. Published and for sale by E. & T. Anthony & Co., 597 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Dudley C. Stone, Deputy Superintendent of Schools in this city, having come to the conclusion that the schoolmaster puzzles with which the average arithmetics are padded out are entirely needless for the scholar's knowledge of the main subject, has for this reason collected a thousand graded examples, embodying the foremost and most useful principles of arithmetic, and publishes them in a neat little volume entitled "The Essentials of Arithmetic." Published and for sale by Bancroft.

Tom Hood's punning verse and prose has greatly fallen into the background during the last decade, and although his writings are always delightfully funny, yet the present generation is unfamiliar with much of his wittest work. An Eastern firm has, therefore, begun the publication of some of his comicities, and published as an initial volume, "Hood's Own," with its original engravings, and bound in paper. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, 25 cents.

The latest number in the series of "Leaflets from Standard Authors" is "Passages from the Works of W. H. Prescott," compiled by Josephine E. Hodgdon. Like the former numbers it consists of two parts, a bound pamphlet for the teacher's use, consisting of important extracts from the author's works, and the same extracts printed on separate leaves for the pupils' use. This series is well prepared, and will do much toward familiarizing scholars with standard works. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia; for sale by J. A. Hofmann, 206 Montgomery Street; price, 50 cents.

The stories of noted criminals and law-trials have always possessed much fascination for the average reader. In no other country has there been such a field for clever impostures and robberies as in France. The criminals of that country are more successful, and are gifted with far greater audacity than English, German, Italian, or Spanish rogues. They are the same gifts that render the French detective police superior to those of any other land. Mr. H. W. Fuller, of Massachusetts, has just written a volume on this subject, entitled "Noted French Trials: Imposters, and Adventurers." Eight celebrated trials are discussed, comprising the narratives of as many noted individuals who have in the course of the last three hundred years agitated the French nation. The stories are all highly romantic, and the fact that the clever swindler was always brought to earth in the end renders them none the less interesting. The stories of Collet and Cartouche surpass in interest a great many novels. Published by Soule & Bugbee, Boston; for sale by Sumner Whitney & Co., 613 Clay Street.

"Linguistic Essays," by Carl Abel, Ph. D., is the thirtieth volume of the "English and Foreign Philosophical Library." It consists of ten essays or investigations upon the significance of words in regard to their original meaning or psychological inference. The first essay is devoted to "Language as the National Modes of Thought," and is a general preface to what follows. The second essay, upon "The Conception of Love in Some Ancient and Modern Languages," is the most important and likewise the most interesting of the series. The author enters into an analysis of all the various meanings and shades of meaning of the word "love," and its kindred synonyms in other tongues. The third essay deals with the "English Verbs of Command," and in its preparation the method of copious quotation, from standard English works has been employed in the same way as was the plan followed in preparing the large philological dictionary which is shortly to be published in London. The succeeding essays relate to different branches of philology, and possess great interest. This volume is written in a simple and easy style, and may be readily comprehended and appreciated by even the veriest novice. Published and for sale by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Announcements: An unfinished work of Kant, never before printed, is to appear in the Old Prussian Monthly.—The California Publishing Company announces that it will shortly issue a volume of verse by R. E. White: "The Cross of Monterey."—Lieutenant F. V. Greene, the historian of the late Turco-Russian war, and author of "Army Life in Russia," writes the leading article in The Critic of August 12, his text being the official records of the Franco-Prussian and the American Civil War.—That clever novel of Rice and Besant's—"The Chaplain of the Fleet"—has lately been dramatized by Mr. D. G. Boudicault and is to be produced in London.—The private correspondence of Carlyle and Emerson, extending from 1834 to 1872, and edited by Charles Eliot Norton, will be published by J. R. Osgood & Co. in December.—The next volume in the American Actor Series is to be Miss Kate Field's "Charles Albert Fechter." Miss Field's personal reminiscences of the actor, as well as her careful study of his powers, promise to make this the most interesting volume.—The poems of Albrecht von Haller, the most prominent perhaps of Swiss poets of the last century, have just been edited and published under the supervision of Professor Hirtzel, of Berne.

Miscellany: The Judæo-Persian manuscripts acquired lately by Dr. Neubauer have been bought by the British Museum.—M. Renan's recent Treatise on the "Ecclesiastes" has been placed by the authorities of the Roman Church on the "Index Librorum Prohibitorum," the list of books which no good Catholic is permitted to open.—The last number of the Sagranitschky Vistnik, the leading literary magazine of Russia, has an article by Mr. John Swinton, on "The Philosophy of American Literature." This is believed to be the first contribution ever made by an American writer to the Russian literary press.—The Saturday Review says that the better American writers of fiction work with a careful consciousness which is all but unknown at present to British romance.—The London Standard thinks that, assuming the statement in "Authors and Authorship," published by the Putnams, that Mark Twain received $300,000 for his "Innocents Abroad" is correct, the price is the best ever fetched by a book, the intrinsic value being considered.—W. D. Howells and his wife while in Rome will be the guests of Elihu Vedder, the artist.—Dr. Franz Hoffman, whose story-books delighted two generations of German children, has just died in Dresden. Several of his books were translated into English. The University of Leipzig conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

THE MATRIMONIAL CLUB.

Being the Varied Adventures of Six Bachelors at Bolinas Bay.

The vacation season this year promised to be serenely stupid for the gallant gentlemen of the Matrimonial Club. Vague and fleeting hopes of a "little house in Surrey" being at their disposal had waxed and waned irregularly for weeks, and the last Thursday had arrived, and nothing had been done. Each had expected suggestions from the other; each had made suggestions of his own; and each and every suggestion had been scornfully sneered down as unworthy of the suggestor. Thursday noon a solemn conclave was held over lunch at Peter's, and what was the result?

The Thing says: "Oh, I say, Jay, can't you suggest some place? Some place, you know, where a fellow can wear his old clothes, and smoke his pipe, without being thought a cad?" This from the punctilious Briton, who probably drew his evening sustenance from his mother's breast arrayed in swallow-tail and white tie.

Jay thinks that Santa Cruz would be about the thing; loads of nice girls, not too prudish, nice beach, pleasant town, drives, scenery, and all that sort of thing. The suspicious silence with which Santa Cruz was promptly vetoed seemed to indicate that the last platoon of girls who had jilted the club must be summering there.

Then the Thing's gentle bazoo murmured the praises of Monterey, where moneyed maidens most do congregate, and gilded chains await the possessor of puissant cheek. This argument was treated with deserved contempt, for was not the Thing convicted out of his own mouth? Would not the sporters of pipes and shooting-coats be set outside the gates of El Monte, and bade depart into the wilderness?

The Courier's prolific mind evolved San Rafael, but when the Thing objected because "a fellow meets so many blasted English fellows there, you know," his insular prejudice was respected, and San Rafael's head went into the basket.

Lunch was mournfully ended, and the club walked sadly up the street, contemplating the melancholy prospect of the abandonment of their organized campaign, and of desultory individual skirmishing weakly replacing an assault in force, but as they were separating Silentius quietly said: "You will all be on the 1:35 San Rafael boat Saturday, prepared to be away till Wednesday, with flannel shirts, spurs, and bath towels in your grip-sacks. I will instruct the Courier about the necessary outfit."

Saturday noon beheld the club scattered about the San Rafael boat, trustful in their future at the hands of Silentius, and gracefully posing under the gaze of possible bridal candidates with more cold shoulder than is becoming to girls. Silentius alone, big with responsibility, stood in the bow, serene as Columbus under the mutinous mutterings of his crew. At Point San Quentin so many girls departed that no single car would hold two of the club, yet no two cars held a single female who would so much as notice the whole club put together. However, at San Rafael Silentius held up the signal, and the rest obediently followed him to the edge of the platform and grouped themselves beside a young hillock of luggage, while the train pulled out, undoubtedly much to the regret of the gentler passengers.

Then arose a howl:

"I say, Silentius," was the chorus, "where are you going to take us?"

"Don't mind me; just have an eye out for the Courier;" and sure enough, while the club murmured, the astute Courier had disappeared, and presently hove in sight, steering a rockaway with a pair of scampering greys, while two saddled broncos towed behind.

Satchels, overcoats, baskets, and mysterious packages were stowed into the back seat of the vehicle, on top of a brown-paper parcel, that is, a parcel three sides brown paper and one side French bread. Silentius mounted the box-seat and took the reins, with the Courier beside him, the Thing bestrode the bay, Jay the roan likewise, and the procession moved.

San Rafael is a dainty little place. Resting in a little round valley by the bay side, cool in its aristocratic seclusion, careful in its social exclusion, the very air has a patrician flavor, and the landscape looks like it had come out of a toy-shop. Never a plebeian can gain a foothold there; never a visitor can enjoy its hospitality without producing a pedigree which would pass the heraldic college. But Zopf—Zopf has cool, sharp beer, Zopf has mountain wine, Zopf has stone vaults where the weary traveler may refresh himself, and pursue his journey with renewed vigor.

Outside of San Rafael the wagon is called to a halt by the cavaliers, and a knowledge of their destination is insisted on by the club.

"Don't mind me," said Silentius, "we will just see how Bolinas looks;" and away they go, up a narrow wagon-road, with blue sky overhead, green trees springing a graceful arch around them, and dust everywhere. Everything goes well but Jay; his horse seems to be all right, but he—he bounces in the saddle till his spine sticks through the top of his head; while the horse trots he seems in imminent danger of pitching over the ears of the animal; at a canter he settles back and pounds the pigskin till he loosens the rivets of the frame-work; then, as the beast flies ahead at an easy gallop, he wabbles from side to side, breathes like the exhaust of a locomotive, his feet project farther and farther forward, he loses one stirrup, then the other, his spurs goad the brute to the verge of distraction, the stirrups fly like flails, the horse gets restive, Jay saws at the bit, and the whole machine stops suddenly. Jay gets off quickly but not collectedly, and says:

"Oh, Courier, perhaps you would prefer to ride? I am perfectly willing to go in the wagon to oblige you."

The change is effected, and they quietly go on up the grade, the road winding around the hillside, with gleams of valley and meadow-land through the fresh, green trees, then glimpses of dark cañons curving off through the hills, manzanita and madroño gradually giving way to fir and redwood, till they rise into a grim, gray fog, which drips from the trees like rain. The road is one of the best in the country, splendidly in repair, as California mountain roads usually are, surmounting both sides of the steep ridge by easy grades, with no sharp pitches. The wood-cutter near the summit comes from his hut, and his withered old heart is gladdened by the Courier with a dose out of the medicine flask, and some San Francisco weekly papers.

The monotony of the journey is broken by occasional changes from riding to driving by all of the club except the Thing, who absolutely will not drive, though he is content to go in the vehicle as passenger part of the way. Over the grade Jay tries his hand at driving, on which he prides himself; but after a bare escape from pitching the outfit over the cliff, he is compelled, sorely against his will, to resign the lines to the Courier. This same Courier is guide, philosopher, and friend to an alarming degree. He points at the fog over the high wheel, and says: "There is Bolinas over there, and here," pointing over the back seat, "are the Farallones." It might have been all right, but they had only his word for it. He stowed the luggage, cinched the horses, always knew the road, put every one to bed at night, and roused him in the morning, and sang so ravishingly that the very cattle on a thousand hills lowed responsive to his strain.

The long grade was accomplished, the dreary circuit of the lagoon also, the sleepy town lulled to rest by the dulcet strains of the Courier as the club passed through, and Burge's Hotel was electrified by the evening advent of the hungry Matrimonial Club, demanding food and beds when the place was already stowing five times its capacity, and the town overrun with strangers. 'Twas then that the club took it out of Silentius:

"Fine manager you are!"

"Brought us to a nice place!"

"Johnny Know-all!"

But their triumph was brief; the persuasive eloquence of the Courier overcame all difficulties; two rooms were at once given them, and dinner was served in half an hour in nothing less than a private dining-room.

Out on the back porch, after dinner, the club leaned over the rail, and watched the swirling tide as it swept up into the lagoon, or mused about the myriad stars which spangled the black sky. In front was the white sand-bar; back of them, the hotel squatting between two leafy hills; to the left the broad lagoon spread its expanse back to the mountain range, while off to the right sounded the boom of the breakers of the broad Pacific. Now Silentius meekly interviews the cooks, enlisting them on his side to a woman with his seductive tacturnity, while the rest of the club warmly speculate upon their several chances in Bolinas of being retrieved from the discomforts of blessed singleness. Presently they take a boat, and go down into the wash of the breakers; the Courier tries to row, nearly capsize the craft, is resolutely put in the bottom of the boat as a foot-warmer, the Thing and Silentius stalwartly man the oars, and the perils of the vasty deep are safely passed.

The aborigines have possession of the billiard-table, and the Thing constitutes himself an agent of civilization. He goes among them, fraternizes, criticises, eulogizes, and marches them in a body to the bar, where he nearly swamps himself in beer in the effort to set them a good example of temperate drinking. He brings forth decrepit old jokes, which they boisterously applaud, while the club weeps tears of pity; he instructs them in billiards, to the detriment of the paraphernalia; but when he sings to them they scorn him.

Now Jay is a Yankee, and the absence of his cherished bivalve is deeply regretted by him; he loudly bewails his fate, and upbraids the Courier for neglecting to send some from the city, when the Thing triumphantly marches in, escorting an amphibious native, staggering under a great bucket of clams, which he proceeds to open. Jay does wonders; the others eat perhaps a few dozen; but Jay's capacity is untellable; it wouldn't be believed. He undertakes to show the native the proper way to open clams, the way they used to do it in New England countless years ago, breaks the point of the knife, spatters the whole room, slits the palm of his hand open, and gives it up, without having alarmed the clam with even a fear of its nakedness being exposed.

They finish the evening under a little weed-clad trellis, with the swish of the tide beneath them, and the summer moon silvering the sand-reach beyond. The Courier produces a sumptuous supper of truffled chicken. They gorge themselves, and go off to bed with howls of demoniac laughter, which alarm the township. Many an honest granger dreamed that night of invasion and rapine, or turned uneasily in his bed in patriotic dismay.

Silentius brought upon his head the invectives of the morning by rising while it was yet night, like that uncomfortable woman in the Bible, and dragging the sluggards off fishing.

"Fishing! Oh hang fishing. I never caught a fish in my life."

"By Jove, you know, I hate the slime of the beastly things. A little stroll over the hills, now—"

"Don't mind me. Just get into that wagon;" and off they go, three miles to the beach beyond the headland, where, by dint of perseverance, wet feet, and bruised shins, crabs, rocks, long, brown seaweeds, and plump, silver perch were jerked from their briny homes with brutal amateur awkwardness. Back again, a halt at a milk-ranch produced great glasses of rich buttermilk, refreshing as nectar, laying the foundation for a huge breakfast. Then a quiet, digestive pipe while lying in the sun on the white sand, watching the rollers rearing their crested heads in all the insolence of freedom. But the plunge in those same rollers—ah, that was glorious! Untrammelled by the conventional bathing suit, marching out on the smooth, firm bottom, and diving through great fellows that towered like a wall in front, no undertow, no rocks, nothing but hard sand and clean, crisp water that sparkled with an effervescence like champagne.

In the afternoon a long drive around the lagoon and down the coast landed them at such a place for lunch as never was occupied before. Picture a low, flat point with a luxurious thicket of thistles screening it from the road, the wind blowing to them across a marshy inlet, and underfoot—well, generations of cattle had occupied the ground. However, tomato salad with green peppers, cold tongue, sun-warmed claret, and sharp appetites are not easily overcome.

That night the arrival of Hercules on his trained steed surprised these grave companions into a glad shout of welcome. Being housed, fed, and locally informed, he proceeded to read the club a lecture on their neglected opportunities.

"Why," he said, "you men will remain bachelors forever if you keep on like this. Why did we form this club? What have you done toward fascinating these damsels who grace this town with their presence?"

"But they decline to have anything to do with us."

"Pshaw! Just watch me," and he hunted up the landlady, and after a short colloquy was presented by her to a fascinating being who had awed the club by her mere appearance.

The others gave breathless attention. The hero bowed deferentially, carefully seated himself, spoke for a moment in a low voice, the lady looked at him disdainfully, and walked off into the house. Hercules marched moodily off into the darkness, and the others hadn't the heart to chaff him, poor fellow. Didn't they know how it was themselves? After all, flannel shirts and tattered trousers aren't prepossessing.

Another day opened with the usual morning ablutions on the back porch of the hotel. The Courier's head was swelled or something, and he incautiously asked Hercules to put some water on the top of it. "Certainly," said Hercules, and straightway the few early risers were electrified by seeing the Courier stood on his head in a wash bowl placed on the ground, in which his vigorous protestations half drowned him. On his release he merely remarked, with a reproachful glance at Hercules, "I was unprepared for this," and walked off.

After breakfast all the horses were brought into requisition, and the club wandered ten miles up the coast, by a wild road over the cliffs, the view ranging from rolling pasture land to canon, cove, and ocean in pleasant succession. A halt was made for lunch, the horses tied on a bosky plateau, and the provender packed painfully down into a deep ravine to the shore of a bustling brook. There, on a narrow shelf beneath a towering bluff, they spread fern fronds for table cloth, on which were arranged cold chicken, tongue, paté de foie gras, bread and butter, and salad, while bottles of claret cooled in the icy water of the stream. Everything being ready, the club stretched themselves out, and Hercules exclaimed: "Now this suits me. I shall never leave here. I want my food and my salary sent up," when a big boulder came crashing down from the cliff, embedding the lunch table in its debris of pebbles, dirt, and sticks, and narrowly escaping Jay's lank legs, which were stretched away toward the opposite bank. But what did it matter? Silentius remarked, "Now, that's not right," they assured themselves that the claret was safe, sat down, and laughed at the mishap, and then ate the reclaimed viands as though dirt was a sauce properly accompanying hunger.

The day and evening were busily occupied; a dip in the ocean, a race over the shingle, a row on the lagoon, dinner, and a stroll along the road, sending them to bed greatly tired.

Next morning Silentius again roused them with: "Come, pack up your traps; we're going to move."

"But where are we going? We are very comfortable here."

"Yes, and we have another day yet."

"Don't mind me. We are off for Saucelito after breakfast."

As the procession was about to move, and the landlord's daughters were ranged on the stoop to bid them a smiling good-bye, and give them earnest urgings to come again, Jay was observed wistfully talking to a tall, blue-eyed one, whose downcast eyes and bashful attention spoke volumes.

"Now, Minnie, you will surely wait for me," he was heard to say. The horses started, and Bolinas sank back into the crowd of vacation memories which mark the long perspective of the past.

Ah, sly Jay! While the club was wasting its magnificence on the unappreciative summer visitor he had wooed the blue-eyed country maiden, and who can tell what a prize he may have won?

The road from Bolinas to Saucelito would be famous were it near to an Atlantic city. Around the lagoon, and a few miles down the coast, it runs level with the shore, then swings sharply inland, and climbs straight for the back-bone of the ridge; another turn just before reaching the top of the world, and the traveler is confronted with the ubiquitous Throckmorton placard just at the head of a descent into a sylvan dell, in whose leafy depths one instinctively watches for a glimpse of Pan and his crew. Nowhere is there such profusion of dainty wild-flowers, dark ferns, and varying shades of bright green on laurel, manzanita, madroño, and various other trees, all shadowing themselves in the mirror of the brook, across whose dimpling surface flecks of sunlight chase each other in wanton joy. Out from this lovely place, a hundred yards' straight pull lands you at the brow of the cliff from whence the road swings in and out for miles, following the contour of the cliff, with God's blue sky above and around, while far beneath the ocean stretches its tossing plain out to a horizon removed to an utterly indefinite distance. It is like riding along the verge of the universe.

At the Throckmorton lagoon the club halted for rest and refreshment, and of course they must take another dip in the sea, which would have been glorious had it not suffered by contrast with the incomparable Bolinas bathing. On then into Saucelito this invading force moved in good order, and as they rode decorously through the town, after the inevitable halt at Victor's, the rank and file were lazily speculating about their billets for the night, when a wild dash up the hill brought them to the pleasant cottage on the globe, and Silentius lifted his hat, and said: "Gentlemen, the little house in Surrey is at your disposal."

Sure enough, shower-bath, servants, dinner, pipes, and a broad veranda standing straight over the bay, made these busy wayfarers forget for a time their life-long pursuit of the illusive hymeneal sylph, and the night was passed in wild hilarity.

O kind friend, generous husband, and sweet, little wife, the gratitude and regard of the Matrimonial Club is yours forever and a day for your prodigal hospitality and liberal friendship, so many times manifested in your own graceful way. May you live a thousand years.

As the morning ferry-boat carried the wanderers home to the prosaic cares of drawing salaries and calculating profits, the Thing complimented Silentius in stately phrase, winding up with, "and then, you know, we haven't been entirely bowled out."

"No," said Silentius; "Minnie is nine years old, and has promised to wait till Jay grows up." St. LAW

SAN FRANCISCO, August, 1882.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.

Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.

News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 417 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.

Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.

The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.

No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.

Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.

Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."

A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY - - - - - Editor.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 1882.

CONTENTS:

Page.	Page.
EDITORIALS:	EDITORIAL NOTES:
The Cowardly and the Brave in Our Political Arena—The Control over us which the Foreign Element Possesses—The Past and Present of the Democratic Party—Why the Republican Party Should always Dare to do Right—Let Every Man and Woman Work to Save our National Sunday.....	The Loss the State has Sustained in the Death of B. B. Redding—The Page Reception in Oakland—General Thomas's Tribute to General Rosecrans—The Board of Education and the Color Line—Mr. Pickering's Able Decision in the Laundry Ordinance Matter—American Flunkies in Foreign Missions—Will History Repeat itself in the Case of M. M. Estee?—The Royal Incumbrances to the British Army.....
THE WRAITH OF STEPHEN ARNOLD.....	ENGLAND'S QUEEN.....
OLD FAVORITES.....	THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.....
CHICAGO NOVELTIES.....	THE TUNEFUL LIAR.....
THE GOYAWHITES IN SUMMER.....	DRAMA:
ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN.....	Betsy B.'s Letter—Daniel Rochat.....
AN OPEN LETTER FROM LELAND STANFORD.....	Dramatic Gossip.....
VANITY FAIR.....	STORYETTES.....
LITERARY NOTES.....
THE MATRIMONIAL CLUB.....

In a government like this it is the duty of every intelligent man to interest himself in practical politics. It is the privilege of every vagabond and idler, every worthless tramp and adventurer, who, as native-born and twenty-one years of age, or who, foreign-born, has been five years upon the soil, to go to the ballot-box and cast his vote for those who make, interpret, and execute our laws. It is the duty of every intelligent, patriotic, and honest man to perform all the duties incident to citizenship, to the end that only good laws may be enacted, only learned and honorable men may reach judicial position, where they can interpret the law, and that only honest, fearless, and sensible men may reach executive position to administer the law. It is a cowardly and scandalous thing for the press, the pulpit, or the individual to endeavor to make it appear that politics is anything other than a duty demanded of the highest patriotism, and alike honorable to the most pious, the most learned, and the most ambitious of citizens. There are only two kinds of politics: honest and dishonest; honorable and dishonorable; patriotic and selfish; politics for one's country, and politics for one's self. There should be no other standard for political than for personal conduct. The man in professional, commercial, or agricultural employment should have no higher or purer code than the man who engages in politics. It is just as cowardly and wrong to lie in the pulpit, to betray professional confidence, or to steal in business, as it is to lie or steal in politics, or to steal in office, and no more so. The man who will misrepresent, overreach, defraud, and lie in the lowest of ward politics will defraud, intrigue, lie, and cheat in the highest position to which he may attain, and betray the most sacred trust that may be imposed upon him. It is to the honest politician that the country is indebted for its progress. Of this class were our early fathers, who formed for us our constitution, who moulded our organic laws, and who shaped the institutions of our country. Of this class were the men who conducted our national affairs with success down to a period verging upon the civil war. Of this class were the statesmen and soldiers who carried us successfully through that war, with Abraham Lincoln at their head. There are no more in politics. There is no place in political life for a man of dull intellect. So, instead of classifying ing politicians as honest men, knaves, and fools, we will write them as honest and honorable men, knavish and selfish men, and cowards. And curiously enough, the most numerous and the most successful are the cowards. Shakespeare has said that "Conscience makes cowards of us all." We will paraphrase the quotation. It is politics that makes cowards of us all. It would seem almost paradoxical to declare that while conscience is charged with making cowards, the politician has no conscience. The class we criticise is that large body of men who make of politics a bread-getting industry, who belong to parties not for the purpose of doing battle for great principles, or who fight under party banners for the advancement of human rights; camp-followers who accompany the army, and when the battle rages, watch the conflict at a safe distance, but who, when it is over, and the danger is passed, are soon upon the field, like the camp-followers at Bannockburn, to loot the dead, and gather the spoils of a victory they did not aid to win. For the double-faced, disreputable, and prudent politician; the conservative, noncommittal, cowardly man, who follows, but never leads; who does party duty in obedience to party discipline, and never thinks; who, thinking, never speaks; or who, speaking, never acts; who has no opinions, no convictions that make him dare assert his manhood, we have no respect. For the plausible, oily, popular man, who has no enemies, and who is always available as a candidate for office because he has aroused no resentments, we have an unqualified contempt. The man who has no enemies deserves no friends. The man who has never made a mistake, or done wrong, is the man who never had the courage to attempt to assert the right. The man who has never slopped over is like the empty bucket that has no contents to spill, and the man who can truly say that he has changed no opinion, and has been ever consistent, makes the broad admission that he is an idiot who has had no opinions to change. It is better to be right to-day than consistent with yesterday. The broad-minded man of brains who has the courage to think is necessarily progressive. He keeps pace with events. He keeps abreast with the time. He changes with conditions. He rises to the level of his surroundings. He has the courage to breast the popular wave and to stem the popular current. When the Augean stables were cleansed of their accumulated filth by the labor of Hercules, the dung of oxen floated with the current of the stream. It is the empty bottles and the rotten apples that, drifting with the tide, proudly exclaim: "See how we swim."

Is it not an admitted and universally recognized fact that our laws governing immigration and naturalization, made under circumstances and conditions altogether dissimilar to those now in force, demand modification and change? Does not every intelligent American and every intelligent foreigner know that there is now being poured out upon our Eastern shores a most undesirable population; that ignorance, pauperism, and crime are being systematically deported from foreign countries, because it is cheaper for those communities to pay the emigrating expenses of criminals and paupers than to maintain them at home? And yet, because these vagabonds can vote, no party has yet been found bold enough to declare, and few politicians have had the courage to assert, that the immigration laws of the country should be changed. Do not all intelligent Americans and all intelligent foreigners know that under our present naturalization laws we are turning over the control of our political affairs—surrendering in many localities the American birthright of making, interpreting, and executing our laws—to men of alien birth? And does not everybody know that under this free and easy mode of making citizens out of Europeans we are periling institutions that are as vital to generations yet unborn as to those who today are citizens by birth and by adoption? And yet, because these foreigners can vote, no party is bold enough, and but few politicians have had the courage to declare that the naturalization laws ought to be so changed that none but those who are born upon the soil, who are free from crime, who are intelligent, and those exceptional men of foreign birth who from exceptional causes are entitled to citizenship, should be given the electoral privilege. Does not every intelligent man, of whatever land he may be a native, or of whatever church he may acknowledge himself a member, know that there is growing up and strengthening in our midst the branch of an ecclesiasticism that acknowledges a foreign hierarchy to be clothed with civil as well as spiritual authority, who demands and receives unquestioned obedience from an ignorant and bigoted multitude of our foreign-born citizens? Do we not know that as this element grows in wealth, and power, and membership, its priests grow in audacity and strengthen in insolence? Do we not know that these worshippers of the Roman Catholic Church and followers of his Holiness the Pope of Rome are almost uniformly members of one political party? that in party measures they act as a unit, thereby indicating the source of the directing power—the church—and the hands that guide them—the priests? Do we not experience now, and here at this time in San Francisco, the active interference of the Roman Catholic clergy in our political affairs? Are not all of us who know anything of the local management of the Democratic party in San Francisco aware that our present representative in Congress owes his election and his nomination for reelection to the direct interference of the Roman Catholic clergy, brought to bear directly upon the voters at the last congressional election, and directly upon the delegates at the last Democratic State Convention at San José? And yet, there is no party that openly dares, and few individuals who are fearless and imprudent enough in party conventions, in the press, or in public debate, to discuss facts that are palpable to every man with eyes, ears, and brains.

Is there any doubt that both parties in San Francisco are run by the same machine, and that the men who compose the machine are aliens of doubtful character, whose only avocation is the manipulation of party affairs? These men follow no other pursuit, engage in no other industry, make a good living, and grow rich on the gains that come from indirect plunder of the tax-payer, and direct legislation and municipal blackmail of corporations. Both parties fear them; both parties use them; gubernatorial candidates and senatorial aspirants purchase them; and the community endures them simply because candidates have not the honest courage to antagonize them, and because the public is too cowardly to kick them. It is their political influence that saves them from the penitentiary. These are notable illustrations of the cowardice of both the Republican and Democratic organizations. The most marvelous exhibition of party cowardice that ever occurred in any country in the world happened in our midst. A gang of alien malcontents, idlers, criminals, and adventurers from all foreign lands, with a sprinkling of native-born miscreants, in defiance of popular opinion, in defiance of the earnest and honest counsel of Archbishop Alemany and his non-political clergy, assembled upon the Sand-lot, and without cause, with nothing of which to complain that was not the consequence of their own idleness, and the result of their own bad conduct, organized an armed conspiracy against the law, disturbed social order, set the law at defiance, depreciated the value of property, threatened its confiscation, and put the city in riotous commotion, while one vile English adventurer, who was not even a citizen, paraded the streets of San José on election day threatening with hemp the American-born citizens who would not follow his leadership, and consort with the criminal mob. The Democratic party struck hands with this vile gang of ignorant and unprincipled foreign miscreants, went into convention with them, swapped candidates with them, and divided with them the plunder of office. Whenever and wherever there has been in this State or elsewhere in America an organized conspiracy against the law on the part of alien citizens, the Democratic party has exhibited the same noticeable pusillanimity. We speak of the later period, for there was a time when the Democratic party embraced the courage of our national politics. The name of Andrew Jackson was the synonym of all that was brave in politics, and then the Democratic party was in the ascendancy. When the owners of black men claimed the right to run the politics of the United States in the interest of human slavery, the cowardly Northern Democracy fell down in abject terror of the Southern slave-owner. The result was the defeat of the Democratic party and the triumph of the Republican party, because it had the courage to do right. We need not recapitulate the throbbing incidents of these later years: riots against the draft in New York; riots against negroes; the riots in Pennsylvania; the Molly Maguires in the coal districts; the Pittsburgh riot against railroads; the Mussel Slough resistance to the law in California; the Sand-lot insurrection in San Francisco—we need not review all these uprisings to demonstrate how utterly wanting is the Democratic party in the elements of self-respect and courage. The reason of this cowardice is obvious to all. These criminal, alien, and ignorant classes have votes they can use to secure the political ascendancy of the party that secures their adhesion, and hence it is that both political organizations, in greater or less degree, are bidding for their support.

It is one of the evils attendant upon a government Republican in form that independence and manly moral courage are not rewarded in public life, but their possession and display on the part of a talented and ambitious young man are almost certain to retire him from the public service. Two young men start together upon a career. It is the cringing, fawning, sycophantic, and politic rascal who succeeds; while the bold, outspoken, talented, and honest thinker falls by the wayside, and is overrun and trampled down or thrust aside because he had the ability to think for himself and the courage to express his opinions. The whole ocean-shore of party is full of wrecks from the National Congress and State Legislatures, while there rides, triumphant and prosperous, the cowardly and politic trimmer who heeds to every breeze of popular opinion; who, lacking the ability and the courage to lead, has the cowardly instinct to follow every moving straw that indicates from whence is coming the breath of popular opinion. Even worse than the effect upon law-makers is the cowardly subservience of those whose duty it is to interpret or execute the law. There is no greater danger that threatens this government than the growing cowardice of the elective judiciary. It demands a courage that oftentimes requires self-immolation for a judge to interpret the law in the face of a strong and clamorous popular opinion. Courage and daring is often exhibited, but it is seldom rewarded. A late instance is that of Judge Jackson Temple. The legal learning and moral courage displayed by him in a recent decision rendered him ineligible for nomination, and the candidacy was given to an orator of the Sand-lot, that he might secure that vote. This cowardice has its secondary results. It extends to the party press and the cowardly commercial daily journal. Thus it is that politics makes cowards of us all.

There are three things which challenge especial admiration and approval: brains, courage, and conscience. A knave with brains is better than a fool without, though he have courage and conscience. Courage without brains leads fools where angels dare not tread. Conscience with scant brains makes a goody-goody sort of useless man, for without courage he is useless, if not dangerous. Conscience alone preserves no man's integrity, and guards but poorly female virtue. Brains, courage, and conscience make the perfect man and the model woman. From such men and women the grandest communities and the proudest commonwealths may grow. With brains, courage, and conscience a political party would become an organization of patriotism that would intelligently and fearlessly lead our country forward to the very front rank of national greatness. Under the administration of such a party the best talent and the highest virtues of the land would be advanced. Under the leadership of men possessing these qualities, with fitness for their respective offices, how superb would our country be! How honored abroad, how prosperous at home, how beautiful in all its proportions! It is to such a party we should all desire to belong. We would have the Republican organization, which possesses the requisite intelligence, come up to that standard of conscience and courage that it will dare to do right at all times and under all circumstances, and let the consequences take care of themselves. In pursuit of this policy of right, we would have the Republican party become the TEMPERANCE PARTY of the nation. It should be the champion of the Sunday law. It should confront the mob of foreign paupers and criminals at the threshold of their invasion from west or east, from Asia or Europe, and before permitting them to land, demand of all immigrants their credentials of character. It should say to the foreign-born of good character, who arrive after the age of twenty-one years: "We welcome you to the hospitalities of our country. We throw over you the protection of our laws. We will guard your persons and your property. But we will not clothe you with the garments of citizenship." It should say to the Irish adopted citizen: "Leave your hatred of England, your Land-league, Home-rule, Fenian politics at home. Obey the laws, and do not riot. Acquire property for yourselves, and respect the rights of property in others." It should say to all the churches, heathen and Christian, to the priests of the temple of Josh, and to the hierarchy of Rome: "Keep your altars consecrated to the worship of your gods. Enjoy liberty within the law to perform such religious rites and ceremonies of worship as you please. America is the Pantheon of all the gods from Jupiter to Jesus, and of all the prophets from Jeremiah to Joe Smith. But keep your ecclesiasticism out of our politics, your paws out of our treasury, your clerical noses out of our public schools." It should say to the Germans: "While we recognize the social customs of your father-land, you must not forget that we Americans have customs and traditions equally cherished, which we have inherited from our fathers, and which are dear and sacred to us. So long as we accord to you an equal voice in making the laws of the country to which you have been invited, and whose hospitality you enjoy, it is in awful had taste, a sign of bad morals, and a proof of bad citizenship, for you to come to the country and form 'Leagues of Freedom' to resist the execution of laws fairly enacted and finally decided, in order that you may drink beer in saloons on Sunday. It is an exhibition of lawlessness unbecoming so intelligent and respectable a class of citizens as the Germans are admitted to be." It should say to the rebels at Mussel Slough: "The same laws govern the tenure of real property in Tulare County as in San Francisco. The same courts decide the laws, and the same Marshal of the United States enforces them. If you do not obey the laws willingly, you will be compelled to do so by the use of the bayonets of the government whose authority you defy." It should say to the gravel-miners of the Sierra: "It is your duty to respect the rights of property and obey the laws, and it is not for you to measure the value of all the gold and silver wealth of the Sierra against the poorest acre of the poorest valley farmer, as an excuse that you may evade the law." It should say to all citizens that their allegiance is due first to the law, and that in a republican government, where any male citizen of the age of twenty-one years is entrusted with the power to enact or repeal laws, and to interpret or enforce them; where every citizen clothed with the elective privilege may reach to the legislative, judicial, or executive branches of government—there is rare excuse for any one to break the law. It should say to individuals and classes that the Republican party has no policy in opposition to the law, and asks for the membership of no one who does not recognize his allegiance to the law. The Republican party should always dare to do right.

When we assert that we would have the Republican party become the Temperance party, we do not mean to be understood as having arrived at any very definite conclusion in reference to the treatment of this great temperance problem as a political question. We are not prepared to state to what extent we would favor prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and trade in alcoholic drinks. This is a vine-growing and wine-producing State, and we are not prepared to answer for ourselves how far the production of pure and unadulterated wine should be encouraged as a step in the direction of temperance reform. Honest and intelligent men will differ as to the details of a law for the remedy of any evil or the enforcement of any right. What we mean to state for ourselves, and what we hope the Republican party will have the courage to say for itself, is, that the production, traffic in, and use of alcoholic drinks are problems that challenge the most earnest consideration of the men of the highest intelligence, because they involve questions of the highest political and social importance. We recognize the intemperate use of alcoholic drink as one of the most incorrigible evils of the age. To this cause may be traced the larger part of the crime, the pauperism, the suffering, the disease, and the burden of taxation that now afflicts civilization. We would have the Republican party of the United States of America display the same courage, and put forth the same heroic effort, to rid the country of this curse of alcohol as it did to rid the country of the curse of slavery. We would have the party to so brace its nerves that it shall dare to look the evil squarely in the face; admit that it is a national evil, a shame, a disgrace, a burden that can only be restrained or corrected by legislation; admit that moral suasion and moral force are not strong enough to cope with it; and understand that all this pretense that the temperance question is a question of conscience, which should be left for moral forces alone to contend with, is a device of the whisky fiend to keep the enemy forever disarmed. The consequences of intemperance are crime, poverty, disease, death, domestic suffering, and insupportable municipal burdens. Ignorance is its offspring, and all these things demand legislation. The industry that promotes them ought to be inquired into. The men who profit by the manufacture of ignorance, vice, and poverty ought to be summarily dealt with. It is the province of legislation to consider and remedy all otherwise irremediable evils, and of the law to correct and punish all persons who, with criminal purpose, are engaged in criminal acts. We would have the Republican party take the lead in this direction, and say to all the beer and whisky interests; to the grower of corn and barley, to the distiller of alcohol, and the brewer of beer; to the jobbing merchant, the saloon peddler, and to the victim of an uncontrollable appetite: "We are going to consider this question, and when we have concluded what is the right thing to do, we are going to do it, although every farmer, manufacturer, merchant, gin-mill-keeper, saloon-keeper, whisky-drinker, and beer-guzzler in the whole country shall abandon the party and go over to the Democracy." It should dare to say this thing, although no Irishman or German were left to vote its ticket. It should say: "The annual cost of alcoholic drink in the United States of America is seven hundred million dollars," and demand of the whisky industry what it has to show for such an expenditure. It should marshal in grand procession all the crime, poverty, ignorance, disease, death, domestic infelicity, and demand that the whisky industry make its exhibit of corresponding benefits, or allow itself to be retired from an existence the result of which is so evil and so monstrous. It should be the mission of the Republican party to lift this question up from the church, Sunday-school, prayer-meeting, and temperance society to the plane of national politics; to lift it from the moral to the political plane; to consider it, not alone as a personal and social problem, but as a great problem of political economy. All honor to the churches, Sunday-schools, prayer-meetings, and temperance societies, that they have agitated this question till they have educated a generation of thinkers. We would have the Republican party have enough to take up this anti-Sunday law challenge thrown to it by the Democracy, and upon the wager of battle risk its chances of success. Let us see and know whether in the interest of labor we may not rescue one day in the week, one day out of seven, from the interest of gin; one day in seven from the worship of the devil, on which Christians may be permitted in their own way and undisturbed to worship God. This is not alone a temperance question, and it is not a religious question. It is a moral, scientific, sanitary, and labor question; above all, it is an American question—a question as to whether an American observance that has grown into and become a part of our national life and national organization shall be uprooted and destroyed in the interest of foreign-born and alien citizens, who desire to drink whisky and lager beer at saloons on Sunday. It is a fight against the saloon and its secret gambling room, against the corner grocery with its hidden bar, its round table with dirty cards, where "pitch seven-up" is played for rum, where workmen are inveigled into spending their evenings and robbing their families, and where children acquire their first taste for intoxicating drink. The Republican party should demonstrate that it is the party of moral ideas. It should have the courage at all times to take the side of right on all questions; it should be brave to resist the wrong on all occasions; it should have the manliness to nominate only good men for office, and reject all others, no matter how popular or available they may be.

In this direction every man, woman, and child has a duty to perform. There is no man, self-respecting and honorable, who pays taxes, and loves his family and his country, who ought not to join in the effort to restrict the use of alcoholic drink, and secure the Sabbath from the desecration of unnecessary labor. There is no wife who should not endeavor to influence her husband's vote at the polls. There is no mother who loves her son, and prays that he may be rescued from temptation, who should not feel that this is a question involving her happiness and imperiling her fireside. There is no man or boy who would have the law aid in protecting him against the indulgence of his own appetite who should not coöperate with those Republicans who are honest and brave enough to become the advocates of just, reasonable, and proper temperance legislation, and to uphold and enforce the law on all occasions. To uphold the Sunday law is the duty of every man. It is not necessary for him to believe in God, the Christian religion, or the sacred character of the Sabbath. Every man who toils with brain or muscle, and every man who works for himself or for another, owes it to himself and his physical organization to see that he has the legal right to a holiday once every week. Every laborer should demand it for himself, and every employer of man or beast should concede it in the interest of humanity. Every poor man should defend this law, because it is for him and his children one of the barriers that the law raises for defense and protection against the greed and tyranny of capital. Take from the laboring man the day of rest which the law gives him, and capital will steal the day for itself. Whenever now the necessity of a peculiar employment demands seven days of service, it is compelled to pay seven days of wages. Break down the law, and seven days will become the rule of service and payment, and the day of rest will be deducted and charged to the man who for conscience or physical health demands it. The Sunday law is being assaulted by the liquor interest, and it alone. This institution, old as humanity, older than Christianity, written by Moses, under the inspiration of God, upon the tablet of stone; renewed by Christ, accepted by civilization, adopted and inwrought into the web and woof of our lives as an American institution, sanctioned by custom, protected by law, and guarded by the divine instinct of self-preservation, is to be broken down and destroyed by aliens and criminals, that sots may swill lager and drunkards drink whisky in saloons on Sunday. Was ever such impudence? Did insolence ever tower to so daring a height? While national, state, and city legislators may not enact laws on Sunday; while courts may not enforce them or issue their writs on that day; while finance closes its ledgers, the merchant closes his warehouse, the mechanic his shop, and the tradesman, farmer, and professional man may not pursue their vocations, the saloon and corner-grocery demand the right to sell poison, and the Democratic party, in order to secure the gin and lager vote, assents to the insolent demand. If politics does not make cowards of us all, we may confidently assert that it has made cowards of all Democrats who are base enough to favor a repeal of the Sunday law.

On the fourth and fifth pages of this week's issue will be found a letter from ex-Governor Stanford in reply to the allegations of complaint against his railroads and their management, formulated in last week's Argonaut. The manuscript came too late for us to give the matters therein discussed any serious consideration, nor have we space in this issue of our journal to discuss them. The questions are fairly met and elaborately answered. We may assume that Governor Stanford has made the best argument that could be made in the premises, as there is no man among the railroad magnates—perhaps no man in America—who has a broader or more comprehensive knowledge of the subject matter treated of than he, or who has had a wider experience in all the details of railroad-building and management. The more thorough the discussion of these and kindred questions, the better they will be understood by intelligent and interested citizens. The sooner they are understood, the better it will be for all parties concerned. Nothing is so harmonious as the harmonious working of the railroad system with its productive, manufacturing, and com-

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In our judgement no better or more useful citizen ever lived in California than B. B. Redding. No one ever died in this State whose death was a greater loss. No one is left to die who can in all particulars supply his place. To write a history of his life would make but a short chapter of unimportant incidents; to give an intelligent account of his intellectual and moral qualities, his social characteristics, his scientific acquirements, and his tastes and mental habits, would fill a book. He was a teacher among learned men in the Academy of Sciences; he was a leader among scholars in the Board of Regents. As a salaried employee in the management of a vast and complicated land bureau for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, he was practical and able. He was genial, attractive, and welcome to all in social circles. With wife and children, he was a perfect domestic life. In the country, with gun and rod, he was the most companionable, instructive, and interesting of men. There seemed to be no path of scientific investigation that he had not intelligently followed. There was no shrub, or flower, or plant; no stone, or shell, or ledge of rocks; no animal or fish; no study of land or tide; no problem of geological formation, or suggestion of astronomy; no practical, common question of life that he seemed not to have studied and mastered. He was in everything practical. He could make the fly with which he fished, and he could learnedly describe and classify the fish he caught. The charm of his manner and conversation was in the simplicity and clearness of his discussion of questions involving deep scientific learning. He held two offices of which he was proud—Fish Commissioner and Regent of the University of California—and in both of which he was most useful. We write of him as we knew him. There were other charming sides to an almost perfect character which those who knew him more intimately will appreciate. We think California has lost its best and most useful citizen in the sudden death of B. B. Redding.

The Democracy have established a club at Los Baños, in Merced County. This is a good sign. When the Democracy gets to taking baths, and the unwashed begin to clean themselves, it is calculated to alarm Republicans as a new departure.

After this note is written, and before it is printed, the Hon. Frank Page, member of Congress, will have been welcomed by his constituents at Oakland with a formal "reception." Such things are well enough, and are intended for political purposes. In this instance the reception is designed to promote the renomination and secure the reelection of Mr. Page, and this is well enough. The member of the Second Congressional District has had now three years of service. He has had ability, genius, and sense enough to make his experience serviceable to his constituency and to himself. He has achieved a position in the House which no other California member has achieved. He has influence in political circles, which he selfishly directs to reward his personal friends, and as a rule they are not the most deserving or respectable of citizens. He has a local following that embraces some awfully mean men, but he secures appropriations, he passes bills, and he does things. Page is no fool, and on the Chinese bill he rendered magnificent service. Our consent for his reception was not asked, but if it had been, we should have said certainly, for Mr. Page possesses two of the qualities we admire: brains and courage. If he lacks conscience, we are not responsible for it. It is his own fault, because he is a self-made man.

We presume there is no respectable attorney of average ability in America who would interpret the Chinese law as denying a Chinese sailor the privilege of being discharged after a foreign voyage in the port whence he sailed and where he shipped, yet the San Francisco press, with almost entire unanimity, is denouncing the United States Court for holding this view of the law. The person who edits the Post is wagging his little tongue, hoping to swell the clamor.

We have regarded General Thomas as one of the best men and best generals that the civil war developed on either side. He was generous, honorable, truthful, brave, and modest. If, upon the occasion of the dinner at the first reunion of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, and in the presence of five hundred veterans of that army, he said: "A battle—Chickamauga—for which I have received a great deal of credit which belongs to another and a better soldier, Major-General W. S. Rosecrans"—if he said this, and in the presence of the soldiers who fought that battle, it ought to be accepted as conclusive of General Rosecrans's conduct in that engagement. General Rosecrans was unfortunate enough to incur the hostility of Grant. He was harshly and unkindly dealt with during Grant's administration; he has been pursued and persecuted by a hostile and jealous army clique ever since. We have criticised General Rosecrans's political conduct; but his military career entitles him to the gratitude of every one who admires gallantry and loves his country.

Mr. Pickering's hired man on the Call has reviewed and overruled the decision of the United States Court on the laundry ordinance. We are getting very much out of patience with Judges Field, Sawyer, and Hoffman. They are continually rendering erroneous decisions, and writing unpopular opinions, when it is apparent they might avoid all these blunders in law and mistakes, if, whenever they have an important case to decide, they would stop at the Call office on their way to the court-house, and get the opinion of Mr. Pickering himself.

We are afraid our friend, Captain Mullan, of Washington, has been making an Irishman of himself. He has filed with the State Department a protest, intervention, demurrer, or something, in reference to the arrest of Harry George by the English Government. If Harry George, Esq., had remained out of Ireland, minded his own business, and not interfered with English politics, he would not have been arrested. What troubles us more than the arrest of George is the reference of our friend Mullan; for Captain Mullan is a gentleman, a graduate of West Point, and he ought to know better than to meddle with a matter that not only does not concern him, but which is unbecoming to an Irish-American citizen who owes his education to this country. Politics seems to be bred in the bones of all Irishmen. They are all spoiling for a fight, and Captain Mullan seems to be no exception.

We attended the funeral services of B. B. Redding, and after listening to one of the most tedious discourses of one of the reverend Bentons, we irreverently whispered to a friend our utter inability to reconcile the goodness of an intelligent Creator that could take to himself our friend and leave the preacher, especially as there were two Bentons. Our friend whispered back: "What would an intelligent Creator want with either Benton?"

Mrs. Mary Jane Steele, a colored American woman, has vainly endeavored for three years to become janitress in a public school. If, instead of being Mrs. Mary Jane Steele, she had been Mrs. Bridget O'Flannigan; if, instead of being dark in color, she had a face of flame and red as the comb of a laying hen; and if she had not been a Methodist-born and a Methodist-bred; if she had not the misfortune of an American nativity—then her chances to find employment in an American school-house would have been much improved. We commend her to apply to a parochial school, where there is no prejudice against a woman for her color, her nationality, or her religion.

The railroad company, Wells & Fargo's Express Company, and the stage line are all interested that the machine politicians find employment in San Francisco politics, lest they shall become train-robbers and road-agents in the country.

Some malicious and evil-disposed person has been engaged in circulating a false report concerning one of our most prominent citizens, one of the leaders of the sand-lot or workingmen's party, Mr. Barney Dougherty, Esq., formerly of Ireland, now a leading member of the greenback party, an advanced curb-stone orator in opposition to national banks, and in favor of taxing national bonds. It was falsely rumored that Dougherty, in response to an advertisement that "laborers were wanted," sought the place for employment. This is indignantly, and we hear, truthfully denied. Mr. Dougherty may be found at all times during office hours leaning against the stone railing in front of the Nevada Bank.

Recently, says a London correspondent, in one of the most crowded thoroughfares of London, a hoary-headed, trembling pauper bore aloft a banner with the startling announcement that he had saved the life of the queen when she was a child, and had for the loyal act received the sum of one pound on the spot, and a few days later a further acknowledgment of three pounds from the Duke of Kent. Surely if the aged postulant for alms is an impostor, he should not be allowed to trade on such an incident; if he is not, out of her stores can not the Queen of England spare enough to keep her quondam rescuer from begging? She is rich, and all the richer because she disdains no addition to her income, and is not reckless in her expenditure. She took every penny that the "Diary in the Highlands" brought in, and did not rest satisfied with the barren honors of flattery and praise so unblushingly lavished on the royal authoress. When Disraeli, at a reception at Windsor, publicly addressed the queen in the following terms: "There are only three books in the world—the Bible, Shakespeare, and your majesty's book," the sovereign was pleased with her courtier's adulation, but still more when that adulation was coined into large receipts. About that time the Comte de Flandres, on a visit to England, was asked by his royal cousin if he had read "The Diary." As he hesitatingly confessed he had not, she graciously offered to send him one of the large copies, which she eventually did. The volume, in gorgeous binding, arrived in Brussels in due time, was acknowledged with grateful thanks, and followed up with the tendering of the bill by the publishers. As it is hardly the custom, even in small and comparatively modern monarchies, to pay for presents received, the king's brother, believing himself to be the victim of an impudent swindler, had the matter investigated. His emissary cautiously made inquiries, and was shown the books of the firm, three in number, recording the transactions in that particular line. No. 1 registered the copies sold to the general public; No. 2 the copies given by the queen, about twelve in number; No. 3, those sent by her order, but for which payment was to be demanded from the recipients, these very numerous, and, among them, the name of the Belgian prince. The emissary promptly paid the fourteen guineas, and carried off the receipt.

There are corners in oil, in teas, in beans, in mining stocks and railway stocks, in wheat, in corn; and why not corners in trousers? That was the important question asked himself recently by a great financial nobleman of Berlin, while at his tailor's. The cloth was of an extraordinary pattern. Palpably it would create a sensation on the Bourse. "I would like to monopolize that pattern," he said to the tailor; "just see how many pairs of trousers it will make." The tailor calculated, and said about eighty-three pairs of trousers could be made from the bundle of cloth. "I will take them all; it would be very disagreeable if one of my colleagues were to appear in a similar pair." His orders were obeyed; and now he glories in having more pairs of trousers of a resplendent pattern than any other man in Berlin.

It is not known out of London circles that Du Maurier's "Mrs. Ponsonby de Tomkins" is drawn for Mrs. Langtry. He always represents her as the beauty in his clever sketches, a beauty who is always putting her foot in it, and extricating herself with grace and tact. This is Mrs. Langtry to the life. She is capable of the greatest faux pas. Once she dropped a bit of ice down the Prince of Wales's back, at an evening party, and then sweetly and graciously turned the rudeness into a compliment. Du Maurier not only credits her with great beauty, but portions out that dry wit which seemingly borders on fashionable idiosyncrasy.

ENGLAND'S QUEEN.

A Growl from John Bull About Her Neglect of Duty.

Everybody knows the Queen's indifference to society, and that, did the London season depend on her exertions, it would be a sorry affair. Whatever entertaining at court the nobility get nowadays is done exclusively by the Prince and Princess of Wales. Her majesty is pleased to "command" that a series of State balls or concerts—usually two of each—be given at Buckingham Palace twice during the season, and accompanies her orders with the direction that the Prince and Princess do the honors in her stead, so that her stay at either Windsor, the Isle of Wight, or in Scotland may not be interfered with. Now and then she holds a drawing-room or two in person, coming up from Windsor the morning they take place. But the moment they are over, away she goes by special train to Osborne or Balmoral. That is the sum total of her efforts on behalf of society, for of the levée business the Prince of Wales has the sole monopoly. Neither opera nor concert does she ever attend, and did the drama rely on her for support and patronage it would be in a bad way, for inside of a theatre she has not been for two decades.

Of course we know very well that hers has been a prosperous reign, and that she has been a model wife and mother, and a good woman generally. I think we are a tolerably loyal people on the whole, and stick up for our queen and country when duty calls; but all the same do we emulate the old woman's parrot, and do a deal of thinking if we don't say much. The fact of the matter is, a queen and sovereign of a great country has no right to occupy its throne, and accept homage and respect from its people, and at the same time live the selfish life of a private individual. A disconsolate widow of over twenty years' standing in private life is one thing; when seated on a throne, quite another. And if the assuaging of a queen's grief must depend on keeping her country for nearly a quarter of a century if not exactly in mourning, at least subject to the ills that flow from a gloomy court and its dismal attempts at keeping up courtly appearances, then it is high time, thinks the country, that she retire into private life altogether, and let somebody else show them that England has got a court ere the recollection of its quondam grandeur fade from the memories of those whose accession to manhood or womanhood ante-date the death of the Prince Consort. But as "somebody else" would necessarily be the Prince of Wales, there are people who dread his accession, and think that instead of mending matters, the event would illustrate the fire and frying-pan proverb to a painful degree. "Better bear the ills," etc., they sagely quote. Perhaps they are right.

However, the ills to be flown to are not altogether unknown. One small item thereof would be the payment of the Prince of Wales's private debts. These are known to be over two millions sterling, as Pool, the tailor, Hunt & Roskell, the Bond Street jewellers, Garrard, the Haymarket silversmith, and King, the Longacre coach-maker, among hundreds of others, have good reason to know. What with his forty thousand pounds per annum allowance from Parliament, and his sixty thousand pounds private income from the Duchy of Cornwall, one would think his Royal Highness had almost enough to get along on comfortably, especially as the princess, his wife, has fifteen thousand a year extra from the country to pay for her clothes. But then jeweled girdles to Sarah Bernhardt cost something; a retinue of professional beauties require rather more to live and dress upon than princely familiarity in public, and Nellie Farren of the Gaiety is an expensive acquaintance for even an heir apparent to the throne. That there will be a deuce of a row when a settlement is asked from the country, there can't be a doubt, and Gladstone, with all he has to do now, may consider himself a lucky man that his having to move the House of Commons for the necessary grant is a measure that still admits of indefinite postponement. As things are, therefore, perhaps one might feel tempted to overlook the keeping of the Prince Consort's effigy lying on his bed, and the daily bringing up of hot water for him to dress for dinner; the blacking of his boots and shoes every morning, and the silly attachment for his former body servant, the now famous Scotch gillie, John Brown, whose name figures on the annual civil list as "Her Majesty's personal servant." One might also endeavor to ignore the fact that in the army one's queen and sovereign is familiarly called "Judy" and "Mrs. Brown," and bear patiently with her constant absence from her public duties, and persistent determination to avoid mingling with her people in society, did her settled aversion to the gayeties of social life include a species of entertainment known as "servants' balls," the attractions of which seem to be the only thing able to combat with the poignancy of her continued grief for a place in her regal heart. COCKAIGNE.

LONDON, August 1, 1882.

An Antiquarian Treasure: "I am shipping to-day a little collection of Wyoming products to the Denver Exposition," said a low-voiced, timid-eyed man yesterday as he came into the office, and ate a peach from the desk where the scientific editor had thoughtlessly left it. "I have been getting together a choice lot of relics that I think will please Western people at the great geological show. It consists of little mementoes of the seats of trousers rescued at various times in my life from the jaws of a favorite bull-dog of mine. I have kept this bull-dog for ten years, and part of the time I kept a water-melon patch. In the winter I kept my coal-house door open, and invited people to look it over after dark. The result has been most gratifying. My dog is getting to be a regular antiquarian. He has some cherished fragments of trousers which he prizes as a miser does his gold. He would get up any time in the night to select a new specimen as it was going over the picket-fence, and then gloat over it for hours afterward. These stern relics I have catalogued, and put in a cabinet for the benefit of science, and will locate them in the west wing of the exposition, so that people can look them over while the band plays and the large fountain squirts. I will also take the dog along. He is getting a little morose now, and old and cynical, but he is a thorough judge of goods.—Boomerang.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

A Laramie Local.

Shorty Foster made his grand farewell appearance in court, Monday afternoon, with the usual decorations. He wore a large watchpocket below his off eye, and a purple lambrequin over the other one. Officer McIntosh had put a plaque on his nose because he was reluctant and coy about going up to the cast-iron rink, and with other little bric-a-brac scattered around over his face, he looked as though he had been holding a night session. Shorty has been up before his honor now several times on the charge of wearing out the furniture on his wife, and caressing her with a piano-leg, and in each case the court has been a little more relentless than in the heretofore. Sometimes Mrs. Foster has paid the fine, and sometimes Shorty has paid it himself, just according to how much a woman's great love would triumph over a three-cornered head. Mrs. Foster has more love than anybody, and she allows it to ramble around over the country everywhere. Having more affection than she felt like lavishing on Shorty, she shed a few sunny smiles and some caresses on some total strangers, and Shorty mixed himself up with some XXX sheep-dip, and choked his wife till you could hang your overcoat on her optics. Then he caressed her with little nicknacks that he found in the back-yard till the officer came, and took him home with him. Shorty means well, but his conjugal record has been stormy, and for the twenty-ninth time he has decided that he and Ella can not be happy together. Their tastes are totally dissimilar, and their natures do not seem to harmonize. The chances are that they will walk adown life's golden sands hereafter by different trails, and the storms of adversity and the sunshine of prosperity will alike find them widely separated. It is a lesson to the young who contemplate a wedded future to understand thoroughly each other's characteristics and quaint styles of assault and battery before they unite.—Boomerang.

Somnambulism in Dogs.

There is something peculiar about somnambulism when considered from a scientific and philosophical standpoint. The sleep-walker, it will be found, still retains a dim idea, even while he sleeps, of the condition of affairs when he went to sleep. For instance, if he leaves his clothes in a certain part of the room on retiring, he knows when he rises just where to find them, even in the dark. This is a question which opens up a wonderful field for physiological and mental research. While young and giddy we became a somnambulist, and excited a great deal of curiosity by our strange freaks during sleep, and this one question of the slumbering mind and its memory of facts existing prior to sleep, was the most remarkable thing about it all to us. We puzzled over that a good deal. At night we would retire to rest, and the next thing we would know, we would wake up in the middle of a contiguous melon-patch, and there would be two or three other somnambulists there in the same patch, and as much surprised as we were. Still there is the same truth staring us in the face. Every somnambulist there had through his sleep retained in his semi-conscious state a perfect recollection of where every article of his clothing was, and how to get out of the up-stairs window without waking the old people. Bye and bye the owner of the melon-patch procured, at great expense, a large humorous bulldog, who was also a somnambulist. He walked in his sleep a good deal. That is why we quit. We didn't propose to descend to the level of the brute creation. We just said, if a bulldog wants to somnam, he can do so, and we leave the field to him. We made this resolution one night just after we had plugged a watermelon. While stooping over in the act, we felt a pang of conscience, and heard our suspenders break.

Perhaps the casual reader has never sat down on a buzz saw and felt himself gradually fading away. If so, he does not know what it is to form the acquaintance of a somnambulist bulldog in the prime of life.—Boomerang.

"Hawkeye Dots."

"Oysters are best in December," says an exchange. May be so; but rats are worst in gnawgust.

As Anna Dickinson is determined to play nothing but male characters, if she is going to play Puck, she'd better not put it off until she is much older.

"Does it affect one unpleasantly or injuriously," writes a high-school girl, "to sleep in the moon-light?" Certes, girle; it makes you light-headed. Gibbous a bard one.

A correspondent wants to know "how we pronounce 'Ras-el-Tin'?" We don't pronounce it at all; we only write it. Do you suppose we read the paper to the subscribers?

Mr. Middelrib came down at 4:15 to take the Express East, and learned that his train had pulled out just a quarter of an hour prior to his arrival. The traveler turned away sadly. "Not lost," he said, "but gone by four."

Whenever George Peck, of the Milwaukee Sun, sees a girl kissing her pet dog, he thinks of the dreadful places where that dog's nose has been during the day, and it makes him sick. This is a view of it that perhaps has not occurred to the woman who kisses her dog, but it is certainly worthy of her careful consideration.

Student wants to know what is meant by the word "loot" in the war dispatches. Why, a lute is a thing with strings that you can strum with your fingers. Hence, anything you can get your fingers onto, that's loot. For example: You deposit your money in a New Jersey bank. Well, that's loot, but you don't get any of it.

"Now, the beauty of a paper collar," remarked the honorable member, coxing a refractory pin, "is its economy. You wear one a week, then you turn it and wear it another week. Then you split it, and you have two new collars with one clean side, good for another week, each of 'em." And adjusting the flat scarf over the red flannel shirt, he went down to dinner.

Tennyson lives in a "large imposing stone structure, built in a free treatment of domestic Gothic of the Tudor period." He hates to have strangers come about the grounds, and one day he caught a tourist in the shrubbery, and chained the unhappy man to a rock and read a new poem to him. The man's heirs brought suit for damages, but couldn't prove anything, and lost their cause.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

To a Friend Studying German.

Vill'st du learn de Deutsche Sprache?
Denn set it on your card,
Dat all the nouns have shenders,
Und the shenders all are hard.
Dere ish also dings called pronouns,
Vitch it's shoost ash vell to know;
Boot ach! de verbs or time-words—
Dey'll work you bitter woe.

Vill'st du learn de Deutsche Sprache?
Dou moost eat apout a peck
A week of stinging sauerkraut.
Und sefen ploudnts of speck,
Mit Gott knows vot in vinegar,
Und deuce knows vot in rum;
Dis ish de only certain way
To make de accents coom.

Vill'st du learn de Deutsche Sprache?
Brepere dein soul to sthand
Soosh sentences ash ne'er vas heardt
In any oder land.
Till dou canst make parentheses
Intwisted—ohne zahl—
Dann wirst du erst Deutschfertig seyn;
For a languashe ideäl.

Vill'st du learn de Deutsche Sprache?
Du must mitout an fear
Trink efery tay an gallon dry
Of foam'n Sherman bier.
Und de more you trinks, pe certain,
More Deutsch you'll surely pe;
For Gambirius ish de Emperor
Of the whole of Germany.

Vill'st du learn de Deutsche Sprache?
If a shendelman dou art,
Denn shtrike right indo Deutschland,
Und get a schvetes heart,
From Schwabenland or Sachsen,
Where now dis writer pees;
Und de bretty girls all wachsen
Shoost like aepples on de drees.

Boot if dou bee'st a laty,
Denn, on de oder hand,
Take a blonde moustachoe lofer
In de vine green Sherman land.
Und if you shoost kit married
(Vood mit vood soon makes a vire,)
You'll learn to sprechen Deutsch, mein kind,
Ash fast ash you tesire.

—Charles Godfrey Leland.

The Old-Time Liars.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

Said the man with a shrew for a wife:
Woman's love is like Scotch snuff;
We get one pinch and that's enough.
The old darkey's idea was:
Woman's lub am India rubber—
It stretch de moah you lub her.

A JERSEYMAN'S SIGN.

Heer pize, and kake, and bier I sell,
Good oysters stood and in de shel;
And frigh'd uns tew, for them that chews,
And with dispatch black butes and shuse.

Advice to a Lover.

Dost thou love, and seek to win her?
Heed an old experienced sinner,
How to make her soft eyes glisten,
Listen:

Seize her hand, and warmly grasp it,
To your heart then fondly clasp it;
Fear not lest your touch distress her;
Press her!

Should she smile, the skies look brighter;
Let your answering glance requite her;
Sit beside her close and snug, or Hug her.

Should she frown, be not afraid;
Press again the scornful maid;
Try with lover's arts to please her—
Squeeze her.

Never yield to melancholy,
Such in love were idle folly—
Wouldst thou win thy fair Melissa?
Kiss her.

If she then adheres to reason,
Foe to love, punish her treason;
Tell her naught will her enamour—
"her!"—A Military Liar.

The Finding of Moses.

On Egypt's banks, contagious to the Nile,
Great Pharaoh's daughter went to bathe in style;
And as she ran about to dry her skin,
She kicked the bulrush that had Moses in.
At that event surprised, awhile she staid
In silence gazing at the boiling fluid;
Then, turning to her maids, she said in accents mild,
"Blood an' ages, girls, which of yez owns the child?"
—From the Recollections of a Dublin Man.

Arabi Bey.

I am flying, Egypt, flying, and it's likely I shall fly
Till I can't fly any further, for I do not care to die.
I'm so stifled by the desert sand, my lungs can hardly wheeze,
And I'm feeling mighty shaky in my stomach and my knees.
Not a bit of camel's s'rloin, nor a drop of camel's whey—
Not an orange or banana has passed my lips to-day.
For I'm flying, Egypt, flying, and my present purpose is
To keep on flying till I know I'm safely out of this!

From Ratapoul to Bag-el-Dad I've wound my weary way—
From Alexandria's marble halls to Bing Whang's coats of clay—
From Snicker Eli's sandy plains to Cairo's tufted walls—
From Thump-el-Hittem's lowly site to Sneez's royal halls—

And still the bloody Britisher comes prancing up behind,
With a threat to tear my inwards out and strew them to the wind!

Do you wonder, Egypt—wonder, with my army 'round me dying,
That I'm flying, Egypt, flying, and propose to keep on flying?—Denver Tribune.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
STARCH.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO'S
CHOCOLATE.

SMITH
BROTHERS'
PACKAGE
BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.
AGENTS,
121 and 123 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM,
For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1883, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious.
For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal.
ASA CLARK, M. D.
References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Shurtleff, Stockton,
Sup't State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.
(Established 1854.)

Commission Merchants

DEALERS IN HAY AND GRAIN.

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY. CONSIGN-MENTS SOLICITED.

39 Clay Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO.
Commission Merchants,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street
Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP,
581 and 583 Market Street, S. F.,
Manufacturers

Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture
Frames, and Bric-a-Brac.

IMPORTERS OF COUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHRO-
MOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY.
OFFICE, 325 Market St.
WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts.

C. SPRECKELS, President,
J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President,
A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO.
San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of

RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON

Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered
Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel,
and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts,
Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting Rods, etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron.

OFFICE, 202 MARKET STREET.

THE AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY
SAN FRANCISCO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ALL
Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar
for export.

C. ADOLPHE LOW, President.
Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON
PACIFIC IRON WORKS

RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO.,
127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco.

Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines—
both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL or Office by Telephone 308.

Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company.
118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants

204 and 206 California Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.

PAYOT, UPHAM & CO

STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS,
Commercial Printers,

and Blank Book Manufacturers
204 Sansome Street, near Pine.

TABER, HARKER & Co.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLES.
GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San F.

It is one of the peculiarities of the play of "Daniel Rochat," that when the curtain falls the brooding discontent which has been gathering in the audience throughout the last act, breaks out in open rebellion. During the action of the play, the sympathies waver, and are now with Daniel, and again with Leah. But when she is led away at last, heartbroken but firm, and they realize that these two lives are forever dis severed which were woven so closely for a few brief days, there is a very storm of murmurs against Leah. It is rarely in a play that the characters seem so very real. People forget altogether that this twain are but the figment of a great imagination, and argue the merits and demerits of the case almost as bitterly as a pair of religionists quarreling over their respective creeds. It has given to many the new luxury of thinking and looking about them. They find this vital problem a not unfamiliar spectre in many households. It becomes of deeper interest than ordinary in the play of "Daniel Rochat," because the lovers are an exceptional man and woman. He towers above his fellows by the right of intellectual superiority. He is a politician, a leader, an orator, and what spell so potent to win a woman's heart as the silver ring of an eloquent tongue?

She is an intelligent, accomplished woman. She comes of English stock, but has been cradled upon Plymouth rock. It is because of this unusual combination, perhaps, that she escapes the narrowness of Puritanic training, for she is not a pious woman, but her religion is deeply grained. She has a broad and liberal mind, too, for she is even willing to be married by Mother Church to save Rochat's giving pain to his family—a grave concession for a Yankee girl. But when he strikes a blow at the rooted convictions of her soul, she is up in arms against the attack upon her anchor to immortality. Miss Sarah Jewett's Leah is a very beautiful creation. From her naive and candid acceptance of her lover's suit till he leaves her by night, unable to bear the brunt of a world's ridicule by submitting to a religious marriage, she is warm, impetuous, loving. She yields to him with charming abandon when the sudden marriage is proposed. She foregoes all the pomp and ceremony, and finery with which a girl loves to mark this great epoch in her life, without a thought. When the civil contract is made, she playfully accepts it as a custom of the country. Rochat alone is grave in this scene, for he alone knows its import. M. Turler, the magistrate, or notary, or whatever he may be, jests with his bit of official tri-color quite as freely as the flighty cousins themselves, a pair of pretty young women, afflicted with a very bad case of stage-laugh, who are merely thrown in to give an added appearance of triviality to the scene, and pronounces the marriage blessing like a man in a farce.

What wonder that Leah, a woman without a prejudice, but with a reverence for holy things, refuses to believe herself married when Rochat declines to have his union sanctified by the man of God? And yet, the stand he takes is so cleverly brought about that he has a grain of sympathy even here. He has come to Switzerland to pronounce a eulogy upon Voltaire, the apostle of his own belief, or disbelief, as one likes to put it. The Paris papers, giving news of his approaching marriage, boldly challenge him to refuse the religious ceremony, and he has ever at his elbow Bidache, that dry, delicious Mephisto to sting him to the pride of refusing to stultify himself before his party, who are looking to him for so much. It is a trying situation—love and ambition, the master passions of the human race, arrayed against each other with crossed swords. What wonder that he tries with the woman of his love the power with which he sways the masses, and seeks to convince her with eloquent reasoning? But there is nothing stronger in all this world than a woman's faith. Once fixed, once rooted, it is as immovable as the everlasting hills. Feeble young girls walked to the martyr's stake and into the mouths of wild-beasts for it in the days of the early Christians, and in these later times so fond, so loving a woman as Leah Henderson will sacrifice all but that for her love's sake. "It does not sound very promising," people will say to whom you relate the plot. "Sardou is a great playwright; but there is certainly nothing very dramatic in the religious differences of a pair of lovers. It is such an every-day affair, you know." Is there not? The intense interest of the fourth act overshadows that of the third; but it is a strong moment in the life of those two when in the face of her little world the husband of Leah's choice refuses to go to the altar with her. With beautiful humility, she begs, persuades, implores. One wonders how he can refuse, as she droops upon his arm, weighted with love and grief. But he is firm, and when the truth of his decision breaks upon her, she leaves him with a swift, sudden farewell. Then one hates him.

When Daniel invades her chamber by night, with perhaps rather a weaker assertion of his right to be there than one would wish to see in his manner, there is the hush of intense interest in the house. One feels that even so mighty a thing as religion can not stand between these warm, palpitating hearts. But these are not a weak man and woman playing at love, as the comedy is played so often and finished so soon. Their love is made of enduring material, as one feels even at the last, when the green curtain rings down upon their separated lives; but it is love subjugated by reason. The interview between man and wife is carried on with a man's fervor on his side, with the pleading tenderness of a woman upon hers. Miss Jewett infuses the scene with all that there is of lovely tenderness in woman's nature. Leah loves ardently, purely, grandly, as she herself says, and Miss Jewett carries out the thought to inspiration. He would be a hard man, indeed, to refuse this gentle creature; but it is only when she appeals to his strength, and crying, "Help me, help me, Daniel!" throws herself upon his breast, that he yields. The inherent chivalry of the true man always responds to the cry for help, and at last he consents, but with the condition that no one shall know it but Leah. Then one despises him. One sympathizes with Leah in her contempt for this bit of littleness in her grand lover.

Next morning, when she comes to the signing of the divorce, pale, cold, and listless, with the divine spark dead in her bosom, one pities him. A night of thinking has dissipated his scruples, and he is not willing to forego the happiness of a lifetime for a mere theory, as his friend Fargis tells him earlier. He is ready to follow her whithersoever she may ask him. But it is too late. Leah has a clear, resolute mind, and looking into the future she sees that with this thorn root growing across the very entrance to their joint path in life there is no happiness for them.

People take such a vital interest in the play that they can not bear to leave the theatre without seeing the lovers in each other's arms. They seem scarcely to believe their senses when the suffering girl is led away, and all is over. But would the play have its strange, vivid effect; would it not be irredeemably commonplace if, at the last, according to all stage traditions, Leah should tear the decree of divorce to fragments, and, crying, "Daniel, I can not give you up," fall into his arms? It was not only his knowledge of human nature, but his art, that made the dramatist leave it as it is—an episode in two strong lives, and not the rounding of them.

De Belleville plays Daniel Rochat excellently well. There is an impalpable something wanting in the man rather than in the actor, a subtle strength which is perhaps due to the lack of the Gaul. But, as the ideal Daniel would be almost as hard to find as the ideal actor for the part, he may be said to have made a success of it. Even the fervid impetuosity of the Gaul was lacking on the first night, when the actor, almost pallid with nervousness, seemed studying to repress himself perhaps to the standard established by his predecessor in the part. There is a rooted belief in the mind of all New Yorkers, that Charles Thorne can stand with compressed lips and heaving chest, and express volumes of meaning. De Belleville improved as his fervor grew, and the weight of his part sat more easily upon him, and, as he is an actor of fine presence and excellent methods, his Daniel was not unworthy of the flawless Leah. Indeed the cast throughout was something to be enjoyed, for was not the winsome Maud Harrison Esther, the high light among the sonorous tones of all this deep feeling? She looked extremely well in her pretty white pilgrim, and quite distracting enough to turn the head of Mr. Casimir Fargis, who promptly proceeded to have it turned in a bit of enjoyable comedy, even though it were a trifle stiff. She manages always to put a great deal into a text, however brief and few her lines. Mrs. Phillips is a delightful Mrs. Powers, and floats about the stage as comfortably and as thoroughly at ease as if audiences were unknown features of the theatre. Her voice is not resonant, and one loses half she is saying at times, but when there is an actual point to be made, she is there to make it, and the tilts at arms between the Puritan lady and Dr. Bidache were most cleverly done. A new sort of Puritanism this, which makes proselytes among the soldiers with a glass of brandy as an accompaniment to the tracts which she sowed like tares. A Frenchman's idea of Puritanism probably, and not a bad one. Indeed it is rather amusing throughout the play to watch for the Frenchman's grasp of our salient Americanisms, not the least of which is the ready-packed trunk which dispenses with the absolute necessity for the trousseau and the apparently thoroughly established fact of American promptitude. Stoddard's Bidache stands out clear and sharp from everything around it—a genre study to delight in, and not to forget. His obstinacy, his zeal, his dry, caustic tongue, his belief, as fixed and rigid as his carriage, even the uncompromising bang of his straggling hair—are the telling details of a strong drawing. Quite in contrast to him is Fargis, the easy-going free-thinker, who is quite content with his own philosophy without seeking to convert his fellow creatures, and has sense enough, as all these cool philosophers have, to know that an anti-religious wife sitting upon his hearthstone would be a dangerous element in the family peace. The part is admirably fitted to the actor who plays it. Mr. Stuart speaks his lines with all due feeling; but the "head of the family," as he is spoken of more than once, demands an actor of greater calibre. In proper hands it could be made a very telling part in this wonderful play, which has set us all to thinking and arguing and turning the vexed question over and over, only to leave it, as David Rochat and Leah Henderson did, an unsettled one at last.

BETSY B.

The Californian for September opens with the continuation of Leonard Kipp's "Thaloe"; James Berry Bensel contributes a poem entitled "Remembered"; "The Wreck of the Golden Rule" is described by W. A. Patterson; Kate Heath is the author of "One Afternoon"; and "Deathless Gain" is a poem by T. S. Collier. The editors announce that next month the name of this magazine will be changed to "The Overland Monthly." From a business point of view the idea is a good one. It is to be hoped the editor can bring his magazine up to the old Overland standard.

"Intercepted" has been running all the week at the Baldwin Theatre to good houses, and it is anticipated that since Miss Helen Mason, the debutante, has given way to Miss Eva West, it will be more satisfactory.

Mr. Bruno Gortatowsky has just arrived in this city from Germany. He is a pianist who has studied in Berlin and Stuttgart under Raith, Lebert, and Pruckner. He will shortly give a piano recital.

We have received from M. Gray, 117 Post Street, the "Billets-Doux" waltzes, composed by W. Stuekenholz, and dedicated to Mr. A. T. Badiam.

DANIEL ROCHAT.

The Trotting-Horse Reporter Dilates Upon It.

"Is the society editor in?" asked a rather pretty young lady, as she swung the door of the editorial rooms gently open yesterday afternoon.

Nobody noticed her for a moment, but finally the trotting-horse statistician, who was explaining to the dramatic critic why "Muldoon's Picnic" was a greater drama than "Daniel Rochat," became aware of the presence of one of the gentle sex, and waved his somewhat profuse hand in the general direction of a chair, the movement being understood as an invitation to be seated. The young lady accepted the proffered hospitality, and remained silent.

"It's no use talking," continued the horse editor, resuming his conversation with the dramatic critic, "you ducks that come raw from a college, and fall against a newspaper office, thinking that you are too fly for any use, are just as liable to make a break as anybody else. If 'Daniel Rochat' is a good play I'm a Chinaman, and that settles it. Now look at the heroine—that Henderson girl. She's gone on Dan, ain't she?"

The dramatic critic admitted that such was the case.

"And Dan," continued the horse editor, "is just looney about her. Everything is lovely. The old lady doesn't buck-jump or drive on one line, as old ladies are apt to do when anybody wants to marry a girl of theirs, and there is no old man to steer clear of, or dog to poison, or anything that generally makes it tough work for a fellow to catch a girl these times. They get the word trotting level, and go down to the quarter-pole like a double team, don't they?"

The critic nodded assent.

"What does Dan think? What has he got a right to think? He says to himself: 'Here is a girl that it will do to buy pools on. She ain't going to break or strike a pace. A man can go through life with her at any gay bit he likes, and if somebody knocks a spoke out once in a while, or pinches him a little too close to the pole, she won't dive into the fence and break her check-rein, and like enough get distanced.' That's the kind of talk Dan gives himself, ain't it?"

"It is possible that you are correct," replied the critic, "although I must confess that at Yale—"

"Never mind about Yale; we are not there this afternoon," said the repository of information concerning Maud S. "What I want to get at is that Sardou was chewing on the wrong apple when he wrote that play. This Henderson girl is mashed on Dan, and wants to marry him. They paw around for a couple of acts, and finally the date for the performance is fixed. The fellow with the red sash—he joins 'em according to the civil code. Then the girl says the race is a mile, and repeat, so to speak, and expects the preacher to marry 'em again. Dan says not much; no preacher in his. Girl cries, and grabs him by the neck, and burrows in his shirt-front with her nose; but Danny doesn't weaken. 'No parson for me,' he says; 'I love you fondly, madly; but I am not a chump.' The girl bursts out crying, and leaves him. Next day Dan wants to hedge, and says he'll go the whole rackets, church and all. Then the girl says she's changed her mind, and doesn't love him any more. Now, in 'Muldoon's Picnic'—"

"Excuse me, gentlemen," said the young lady; "but which one of you is the society editor?"

"We don't keep one on this paper, miss," said the horse-critic; "but the whole gang takes a crack at that style of journalistic labor once in a while. Is there anything we can do for you?"

"I was going to ask," said the girl, "if it would be too much trouble for you to give me some hints as to the proper way to receive and dispose of guests at a wedding; how the supper should be served, and so-forth."

"You want to know what is 'en riggle' and 'recherchy,' as the French say," remarked the horse man. "We can give you the correct pointer. Are you the blushing bride?"

"Yes, sir," said the girl, in a rather weak voice; "that is—"

"Oh, I understand," said the horse editor. "I appreciate your feelings. I was once young and bashful myself. Now, about this wedding. The receiving part is easy. After the nuptial ceremony is concluded, you and Mike—"

"But his name isn't Mike," said the young lady. "His name is—"

"Oh, I know all about that," said the equine journalist. "Of course, his name is Adelbert, or Reginald, or some other dry-goods clerk nonsense, but in giving advice we always allude to the sucker as Mike and call the bride Hannah. It saves time. Now, after you and Mike are married you want to jog along home, and plant yourselves at the back end of the parlor. Better have a floral bell, or something like that to stand under, because it is considered the correct thing, and makes a better toot ensemble, as the French say. Then the guests they get in line and go by you on a slow walk—a kind of we-buried-him-sadly-by-dead-of-night clip, and you shake hands with each one, and say, 'Thanks, awfully'; and they look at you and Mike as if you were a couple of prize cattle, and feel sorry for you."

"And the supper?" asked the young lady. "Oh, yes, the supper. Well, at some weddings they feed in the dining-room, and at others each guest sits on a chair and has his lunch brought to him. Now, I always advised the use of chopped feed at weddings—bring on the ham sandwiches and ice cream at the same time. They can't eat the sandwiches first, you know, because if they do, the cream will melt, and if they throw in the cream to start with, the sandwiches will act like Banquo's ghost—they will not down"; and the horse-reporter winked vigorously at the dramatic critic in order to attract the attention of that person to his able joke. But the critic was trying to smoke a cigar that the advance agent of the circus had given him, and did not look.

"Of course," continued the biographer of Goldsmith Maid, "it would be better if you could give each guest a box-stall, and throw the feed in early in the evening, but this is not often practicable, so you had better keep on the old racket."

"I am sure I am very thankful, sir, for the interest you have taken in this matter," said the girl, "and I shall follow your advice. Which is the way down stairs, please?"

"There are two ways," replied the horse-reporter. "You can jump down the hatchway or take the stairs. Our elevator never runs."—Chicago Tribune.

AT THE FAIR.

FREUD'S CORSET HOUSE.

In a prominent and well-located position on the north side of the gallery, just at the head of the front stairs, Freud, of 742 and 744 Market Street, makes a fine display of corsets and other articles of his own manufacture, as well as Paris importations. An hour here can easily be passed in admiring these beautiful goods. In a case occupying the centre of the department is his own work, which is of the finest and most substantial description. There is one corset in this case which is especially attractive to the ladies. It is of the most elegant kind of white satin, adorned with fine finishings, and is known as "The Bride's Corset." In another case there is shown the corsets that received the first prize in the Paris exposition, and they are indeed lovely, especially the one in black, woven with gold thread, and one in blue, woven with silver. These are pronounced by all who see them as being the finest specimens of corsets ever seen in this country. Another one which is much admired, is that on the figure, and made of blue satin embroidered in white silk. There are also the "Magnetic," and the "Electric" corset, with many other styles. Quite a novelty of this house is the new satin down bustles. Freud's business is so steadily on the increase that he has been obliged to enlarge his store by taking the two adjoining buildings on Dupont Street. There is now an entrance on Dupont to their main building.

ARPAD HARASZTHY & CO.

In a central location on the first floor at the left-hand side of the main entrance to the Pavilion, and occupying a space twenty feet by sixteen, can be seen a display that not only owes its attraction to its arrangement, but also on account of the good spirit it calls forth. The large pyramid of excellent and well-known wines draws its own special attention. Here can be found Zinfandel, Claret, Gutted Hock, Riesling Hock, California Burgundy, and brandies from the vineyards of 1877 to 1881. But towering above all in this pyramid, so grand and noble in its appearance, and composed of over seven hundred bottles of all sizes, is the Eclipse Champagne, on which this well-known firm, located at 850 Washington Street, so justly prides itself. The whole arrangement of this section, so gaily brilliant with its flags, banners, and other decorations, speaks the artistic taste of the proprietors, and is the genuine admiration of the hundreds of visitors who come to this place both day and evening.

G. T. MARSH & CO.

One of the most attractive departments in the pavilion is that occupied by G. T. Marsh & Co., of 625 Market street, with their grand assortment of Japanese and Chinese goods. The tasteful and artistic manner in which their place is arranged, adds greatly to the exhibition. The walls are hung with a deep rich red, which sets off to the best advantage the costly articles. At the back of this booth there hang two panels of gold thread embroidered brocade, the design representing Shishis gambling. These embroideries are valued at three hundred, and three hundred and seventy-five dollars each. In the centre stands a large bronze piece inlaid with gold and silver. It represents Kato Kio Masa, the deified hero and the conqueror of Korea. It is costly and elegant. Some very exquisite work is found in three small pieces of Satsuma. They reach only five inches in height, and are valued at one hundred and fifty dollars. They consist of an incense burner and two vases. In fact, all articles here are works of the highest art. This firm has two places in the fair—the one just spoken of is on the north side of the gallery, at the head of the western stair-case, and the other is on the lower floor facing the orchestra. These goods are sold to show that this house sells at lower rates than any other of its kind on this coast, as they have no reciprocal trade. The firm has the advantage of one of the partners living on the spot where these articles come from.

O. F. WILLEY & CO.

At the east end of the Gallery we noticed a display of carriages, of which O. F. Willey & Co. No. 427 Montgomery Street, have the most prominent show, consisting of many fine styles, suitable either for public or private use, from the largest coach to the light sulky. We noticed particularly a very fine wagonette, with canopy top, to seat eight persons, and also a fine victoria for ladies' Park driving, which is a novelty here. In fact their display seems to be the attraction at this end of the hall.

JOHN F. MYERS.

The new Adams & Westlake Oil-Stoves (pat'd 1882) may be seen in use Thursdays and Saturdays in the fair, at the third stand on the first cross aisle, at the right of the main entrance to the fair-building. Mr. John F. Myers, the agent, will be present to explain its merits during the process of baking, etc. This stove, the most perfect thus far invented, should be examined by every one contemplating economical and effective cooking. The depot for these stoves is at 77 Fourth Street.

BEAUTIFUL BILLIARD TABLES.

The lovers of the time-honored game of billiards are especially gratified by the splendid exhibit made by the J. M. Brunswick & Balke Company, the manufacturers of pool and billiard tables. The tables are situated on a raised stand in the centre of a main hall, near the band-stand. Every evening a grand billiard tournament is played by expert players on a Brunswick & Balke table. The crowds of spectators are nightly astonished beyond measure by the extraordinary runs made by the players. But they easily comprehend the reason when they are allowed to examine the table itself, with its superb Monarch Cushions, which are now conceded to be the most accurate and uniformly elastic in existence. Added to this are complete and elegant sets of cues, racks, ivory balls, and tables, whose finish and elaborate design leave nothing to be desired.

THE REGIONS ABOUT DUNCAN'S MILLS PRE serve their green foliage all through the dry season. For hotel accommodations apply to Queen & Goode, Duncan's Mills, N. P. C. R., Sonoma County, California.

MR. GEORGE J. GEE, ORGANIST OF TRINITY Church, will resume lessons on piano, organ, etc. September 1st. Address, care of M. Gray, 117 Post Street.

CCXLIII.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons.—Sunday, August 27.
Fish Chowder.

Melon.
Boiled Tongue, Mayonnaise Dressing.
Corn Fritters. Lima Beans.
Roast Ducks, Apple Sauce.
Tomato Salad.
French Pancakes.
Apples, Peaches, Plums, Gages, Pears, Figs, and Grapes.
PANCAKES.—Make a thin paste with one pound of flour, four eggs, two tablespoonfuls of sweet oil, one of French brandy, a little salt, the necessary quantity of luke-warm water and milk, about half of each; let it remain thus two or three hours at least; then put about one ounce of lard, butter, or oil in a frying pan, and set it over a brisk fire; when hot put some of the paste in with a ladle, spread the paste so as to cover the bottom of the pan; fry on both sides, place it on a dish, dust with fine, white sugar, and serve. They may be spread with jelly or preserves and rolled.

—REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE IS THE MOST WONDERFUL healing medium in the world. Try it.

—SO GREAT IS THE FAITH REPOSED IN AYER'S Pills by those who have given them a trial, that the consumption of them almost passes belief, far exceeding any precedent. They cleanse the blood, improve the appetite, promote digestion, restore healthy action, and regulate every function. They are pleasant to take, gentle in their operation, yet thorough, searching, and powerful in subduing disease.

—HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

—EVENING DRESS SUITS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS can be had at J. COOPER'S Tailoring Establishment, No. 24 New Montgomery Street, Palace Hotel block. Also black frock-coat suits for funerals, etc.

—DR. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET, cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

—MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

—LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL REMEMBER that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

—MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street. (Phelan Block).

CHAS. GOFFRIE,
SOLO VIOLINIST, FROM LONDON.

For many years Musical Instructor to

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES:

Le Duc de Penthièvre.

The Duchess of Hamilton, (nee Princess Marie de Baden).

La Duchesse de Chartres, (nee Princesse Françoise d'Orléans).

La Princesse Marguerite de Nemours.

La Princesse Isabelle de Montpensier, etc.,

Gives to advanced piano pupils instruction in the works of Mozart, Beethoven, etc., with violin accompaniment.

Address 807 BUSH STREET.

A Home among the Grape-Vines.

FOR SALE IN FRESNO COUNTY,
a most desirable partially improved Vineyard of 20 acres, capital five-roomed house, stables, barns, horses, and wagons, and all appliances for cultivation. The property adjoins Briggs's vineyard. Five acres set out in one-year-old vines. For further particulars apply to F. H., 310 Tehama Street, San Francisco.

MR.

"MR. NASBY IN EXILE."

The last sensation in the literary world. The book has been published but one month, and has already reached a sale of ten thousand copies. It has seven hundred pages and two hundred illustrations. Price—In cloth, $4; library binding, $5. Sold by subscription only. For circulars, terms to agents, etc., address SAMUEL CARSON, publisher and wholesale bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco. Agents wanted.

—Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,
10 POST STREET,
...AND...
718 SANSOME STREET.

Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Operaglasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

WILL INTRODUCE THEIR

FALL-STYLE HATS
THIS DAY!

Call and examine their immense Stock at

336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

REMOVAL.

FRANK C. EDWARDS

WILL REMOVE TO PHELAN'S BLOCK

ON OR ABOUT SEPTEMBER 1ST.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 310 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

NATHANIEL GRAY. C. S. WRIGHT. J. A. CAMPBELL.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS

641 Sacramento Street.

NASBY

SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, AUCTIONEER.
JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
Stock, Real Estate, and General
AUCTIONEERS.

116 Montgomery Street,
Occidental Hotel Block. SAN FRANCISCO

SIERRA NEVADA SILVER MINING
Company. Location of principal place of business San Francisco, California—Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 17th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 74) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, 309 Montgomery Street, Room 57, Nevada Block, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twentieth day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and, unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.
E. L. PARKER, Secretary.

Office—Room 57, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns—Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.

AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

IN

J. R. COWEN. J. W. PORTER.
COWEN & PORTER,
FUNERAL DIRECTORS,
118 Geary Street, San Francisco.
OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

RUPTURE

WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-Medical Belts always have excelled all other electrical appliances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs. This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States. Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco.

A REMARKABLE NEW BOOK!

KALANI OF OAHU,
An Historical Romance of the Hawaiian Islands.

BY DR. C. M. NEWELL, OF BOSTON.
ONE VOLUME, 12 MO, 415 PAGES. PRICE, $1.50

This beautiful story illustrates life in the Sandwich Islands before immigration brought the vices and disorders of European life among them, and so altered the character, habits, and tone of one of the most remarkable races of the age. The book has been read by King Kalakaua, who recently visited our city, and has received his approval. For sale by all Booksellers.

SAMUEL CARSON,

Publisher and Wholesale Bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A copy will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE FAIR,
at the PAVILION, LARKIN ST.,
near MARKET, opens TUESDAY,
AUGUST 15th.

FINE

Snits, TAILORING Snits.
$25. Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.
Snits, TAILORING Snits.
$40. Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.
Snits, TAILORING Snits.
$60. Merchant Tailor and Clothier,
J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION, for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Biliary, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders. Prepared by DR. STARKY & PALLEN, Philadelphia, Pa. Package contains all directions, and is easily sent by express, ready for USE AT HOME. H. E. MATHEWS, Forwarding Agent, 806 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlets.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANOS, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,

As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with

J. H. MOTT & CO.,

647 Market St.,

Nucleus Block, Second Floor.
Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY
LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

EXILE.

KNABE
PIANOS!

A LARGE INVOICE JUST RECEIVED. CALL and see these magnificent instruments before purchasing elsewhere.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO.,
721 Market Street.

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker.
428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF
FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A colored blacksmith of Vienna, Georgia, was shoeing a mule not long ago, when the animal disengaged itself, and drove one of its hind feet against the negro's head with the force of a battering-ram. A few days afterward some one asked the owner if the blacksmith sustained severe injuries. "I can't say that he did," responded the man, dejectedly, "but the mule goes on three legs."

A clergyman in one of the Scotch country districts, says Chambers's Journal, had a stranger to officiate for him one day, and meeting his beadle afterward, he said to him: "Well, Dougall, how did you like last Sunday's preaching?" "It was a great deal over plain and simple for me," replied the beadle. "I like sermons that jumble the judgment and confound the sense. Oo, sir, I never saw one that could come up to yourself at that."

An Arch-Street Church (Presbyterian) clergyman coming out recently, says the Philadelphia Progress, encountered a backsliding young man passing. B. Young Man—"Ah, doctor, how d'do? Fine weather." Clergyman (gruffly)—"Bad weather—hot—empty benches." B. Y. M. (seeking to propitiate)—"I had the pleasure of hearing you preach last Sunday." Clergyman (suspiciously)—"Me? Preach? Eh? What was my text?" B. Y. M. (floored, but recovering)—"Why, doctor! Is it possible you can have forgotten?" Catches a car.

The Chroniqueur of the Paris Univers Illustré—Gérôme, otherwise M. Ludovic Halévy—has been reminded by England's interference in Egypt in the Khedive's behalf, of an incident which he once witnessed in the streets of Paris. A powerful man was observed administering the soundest of sound thrashings to a woman with whom he had been walking. The indignant spectators rushed to her assistance, and her cowardly assailant made off. "Can you identify him?" "Do you know who he is?" she was asked. "Of course I know him," was the reply; "he is my protector!"

During a shower recently, says the Detroit Free Press, a citizen, carrying a very wet umbrella, entered a hotel to pay a call to some one up-stairs. After placing his umbrella where it might drain, he wrote upon a piece of paper and pinned to it the sentence: "N. B.—This umbrella belongs to a man who strikes a two-hundred-and-fifty-pound blow—back in fifteen minutes." He went his way up-stairs, and after an absence of fifteen minutes, returned to find his umbrella gone, and in its place a note reading: "P. S.—Umbrella taken by a man who walks ten miles an hour—won't be back at all."

Daniel Wilson, Bishop of Calcutta, was a most eccentric old man. As usual at family prayers, which he invariably conducted himself, he prayed by name for the people staying with him. There was a gentleman from Madras for whom he prayed, and then he said: "Let us pray for his dear wife and dear children." A thought struck him; he paused, and said to his chaplain: "By-the-by, is he a married man?" "No, my lord, he is not married." "Ah, well, never mind," he resumed; "he may marry, and the children may come." On another occasion it was related that he was preaching against the sin of avarice, when he delivered himself of the following remarks: "My brethren, there are several forms of avarice; one form has recently been brought home to me most unpleasantly. You all know my arch-deacon there, a most excellent man; well, last week he sold me a horse for five hundred rupees; it is not worth ten. This, my brethren, I consider a most unpleasant form of avarice."

An economical young man takes three ladies to dinner at a Paris restaurant, and before the repast is brought in, says confidentially to the waiter: "Whenever I call for three bottles of Chambertin bring us a good second-class Beuine; it is less heating to the blood, and the little dears'll never know the difference—you understand?" The waiter replies that he does. Dinner is served; Chambertin is demanded, and Beuine is brought in, according to agreement. Presently the generous diner calls for the bill, and when he receives it his face clouds visibly. "Here, waiter," he observes, discharging a whole broadside of nods and becks, and wreathed winks upon that functionary, "there is some mistake here in the wine item." "Oh, no, sir," says the waiter courteously; "there are three bottles of Chambertin charged, and that was what you ordered." "Certainly three bottles of Chambertin," chorus the ladies, "we remember you ordering them. It is all right." The economical young man has nothing to do but to pay up, and to endeavor to calculate how much he has made by his prudent forethought.

Among the Northern men who went down to General McDowell's headquarters shortly before the battle of Bull Run, "just to see the fun," was Mr. Kennedy Marshall, of Butler, Penn., then a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, and one of his reminiscences of the stampede and wild flight to the North after the defeat, relates to the late Judge McGuffin, of Newcastle. "He had been one of the 'On to Richmond' crowd," says Mr. Marshall, "who had come down to stiffen up the President's spine, and was loud in advocating a vigorous prosecution of the war. He was a large man, and wore a long linen duster. When the rush to the rear began, he ran with the rest. He was fat, and as the crowd gradually swept past him, he at last began to think the rebels must be almost within grasp of his flying duster-tails. Blind with sweat and dust, he tripped on a log and fell flat on his stomach, or as flat as he could fall on such a round stomach. A zouave, who was hard at his heels, came down with emphasis on top. Mr. McGuffin was certain that the Philistines were upon him, and with a weak endeavor to roll his eyes around, that he might see his foe's face, exclaimed: 'Great God, gentlemen, can't this thing be compromised?'"

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,

For all the Purposes of a Family Physic,

CURING

Costiveness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Dysentery, Dyspepsia, Foul Stomach and Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetters, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and Purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgatives yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organs into action, and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skillful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens, send certificates of cures performed, and of great benefits derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take, and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OF

the Thunder Powder Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Alameda County, California. Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 1) of Forty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room No. 5, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. M. OAKLEY, Secretary.

Office Thunder Powder Company, 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees held on the tenth day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 18) of Thirty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 10th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 14th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Trustees.

A. W. HAVENS, Secretary, Office—Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

OPHIR SILVER MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 21st day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 42) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 14th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

Office—Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

BEST AND BELCHER SILVER

Mining Company.—Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 24) of Fifty (50) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 29, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the 18th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

WILLIAM WILLIS, Secretary, Office—Room No. 29 Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

MEXICAN GOLD AND SILVER

Mining Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 4th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 20) of One Dollar ($1) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 7th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. L. MCCOY, Secretary, Office—Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

RUHL BROTHERS

AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

522 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either require or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG AND MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,
Or W. H. PARKER, M. D.,
4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

PEBBLE SPECTACLES!

MULLER'S OPTICAL DEPOT

135 Montgomery St., nr. Bush,

Opposite Occidental Hotel.

Specialty Thirty-two Years.

COMPOUND ASTIGMATIC LENSES

Mounted to Order. 127 Two Hours Notice.

The most complicated cases of defective vision thoroughly diagnosed, free of charge.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
dealers in Old London Dock Brandies, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Jack, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liquors, etc. 320 MONTGOMERY, and 521 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

CATHARINE TOEDTER, formerly CATHARINE ROBINET, and PETER TOEDTER, her husband, Plaintiff, vs.
DAVID FOGARTY, Defendant.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 1, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Catharine Toedter, formerly Catharine Robinet, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against David Fogarty, defendant, on the 14th day of August, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book Two of said Court, at page 187, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point on the westerly line of the southerly line of Ellis Street, running thence southerly along said line of Larkin Street forty-seven feet to the northerly line of Willow Avenue; thence at right angles westerly along said line of Willow Avenue eighty-seven feet and six inches; thence at right angles northerly forty-seven feet and six inches, to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Eight, as by the map of said City and County.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 17th day of September, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder, for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, August 19, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
LOUGHBOROUGH & NEWHALL, Attorneys for Plaintiffs.
August 19, 26, September 2, 9.

(Department No. 7.)
IN THE SUPERIOR COURT,
City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRBAIRN, Plaintiff,
vs.
NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

GIVEN under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 31 day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

[Seal.] DAVID WILDER, Clerk.

By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

[Department No. 7.]

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a Judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,327 97-100 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 15th day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 165 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, running thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27 6-12 feet; thence at right angles northerly 120 feet; thence at right angles easterly 27 6-12 feet; and thence southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement. Together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 15th day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff
J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.
August 5, 12, 19, 26.

CURTIS, DIXON & CO.,
CIGAR MANUFACTURERS

FACTORY, 309 to 313 CLAY STREET.

Office, No. 309 Clay Street, between Front and Battery.

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. O. Box 998.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.

We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.
Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30
LIABILITIES.	$3,752,099 09
Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO

Price $25.

Weight 170 lbs.

Has 1/2-inch
Steel Teeth.

Made to rotate either
way. Very thorough
in its work and don't injure the vines or trees. Used by R.B.
Blowers, G.G. Briggs
and all leading vine-
yardists.

THE JACKSON VINEYARD HARROW.
The Best Harrow made for Vineyards and Orchards.
Made by JACKSON & TRUMAN, - San Francisco, Cal.

WILLIAMS, DIMOND & CO.

SHIPPING AND

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Union Building, Junction Market and Pine Streets, San Francisco.

AGENTS FOR PACIFIC MAIL S. S.

Co.; Pacific Steam Navigation Co.; The Cunard
Royal Mail S. S. Co.; The Hawaiian Line; The China
Fradere's Insurance Co., Limited; The Marine Insurance
Co. of London; The Baldwin Locomotive Works; The
Glasgow Iron Co.; Nich. Ashton & Son's Salt

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES,
DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVER-
WARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"A necessity at every Table and at every Bar."

New York Tribune.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS.

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,

HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,

(ROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,

TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.

WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,

Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.

PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President.

WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.

ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President.

E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED OIL CLOTHING

WATER-PROOF, AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.

MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,

ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,

RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING

BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,

Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

DECKER BROS.

IS NOW THE

BEST.

KOHLER & CHASE,

137 POST STREET, NEAR DUPONT.

General Agents for Pacific States.

ICHI BAN,

22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that
ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION,
and that all are welcome to visit it
every day or evening of the week,
without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,

LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,

AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,

At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:
210 BATTERY STREET,

San Francisco.

DEPOTS:

Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf, Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

When ordering wine, don't call for "California Champagne", merely, but state the brand, "EXTRA DRY", or the brand's name. We are the only producers of NATURAL SPARKLING WINES on this coast.

J. M. LITCHFIELD & CO.

MERCHANT TAILORS,

And Dealers in Gents' Furnishing Goods,

415 MONTGOMERY STREET,

bet. California and Sacramento, San Francisco

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 10.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 2, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

CIRCLED BY FIRE.

The Awful Peril of a Brigade in the Midst of a Flaming Forest.

During that most terrible time of the insurrection of the Sepoys, Hindoos and English alike committed more crimes, more horrors, and more abominations than had been recorded in Europe for more than three centuries. While the Hindoos killed and massacred with a refinement of cruelty which was unexampled, the English, in the cities and throughout the country, hanged, decapitated, or shot from the cannon's mouth every suspected or denounced individual. The laws of the Reign of Terror against the suspects in 1793 was a mere trifle beside the sanguinary enforcement of martial law in India.

General Wilson was besieging Delhi, and was waiting for reinforcements. Three thousand soldiers under General Scott were coming up through a valley running east and west. Another column, consisting of four squadrons of cavalry, the Fourteenth Regiment of English infantry, and six pieces of cannon, under command of Colonel Mackenzie, had taken a more direct route through a vast forest—the forest of Massallhi—which would hasten their arrival by at least five days. Colonel Mackenzie, who was still quite young, was considered a valiant soldier. He had recently proved his bravery and ability before Sebastopol, and had the highest reputation among English officers for being able to extricate himself from a difficult situation with honor. The officers and soldiers of his little corps had a blind confidence in their chief, who himself felt capable of great deeds.

The column followed the banks of a dried-up stream. High branches of immense trees formed a vault, and moderated the terrible heat of the sun, so that they were able to advance in the middle of the day without excessive fatigue to man or beast. The miniature army was skillfully distributed. Some distance in advance twenty hussars reconnoitred the road; then came the foot-soldiers, flanked by the cavalry on the right and left; the elephants, carrying the baggage and dragging the artillery, followed; and finally, a mounted guard brought up the rear. The colonel, and his friend Richard Welcome, major of artillery, rode halfway between the advance guard and the head of the regiment. They could have conversed aloud without being overheard by any one whatever; but at this time there hung over the whole of India such an anxious solicitude that unconsciously the two officers spoke in a half whisper. After a long silence, the major slowly said:

"Have you noticed, colonel, that the two or three villages through which we have passed—"

"Were completely deserted? Yes, Dick; I have noticed it."

"Does it not make you uneasy?"

"To any one else, Dick, I would say no. But you are a man incapable of fear, and besides, after me, you have the responsibility of the expedition. That is why I say to you yes, it does trouble me."

"Why?"

"Absolutely I do not know. But in all the other villages we have passed through there have been people—hostile people, it is true, but still human beings—pariahs, women, and old men."

At the very moment that the colonel uttered these words, two troopers fell back to report the first houses of a hamlet.

The necessary precautions were taken to avoid falling into an ambush, and the advance was continued. This village, like the others, was entirely uninhabited. It consisted of a few huts, built partly of branches and partly of loam, the best of which looked like a dog-kennel. We searched every hut. Not a soul, not a domestic animal—nothing.

"These people must have fled from some formidable danger."

"May not that danger befall us?" asked the major.

"Certainly. What could the few wretches sheltered by these cabins have to fear from us?"

Colonel Mackenzie knit his brows. The march was resumed after two hours of rest, during which the roads and paths were fruitlessly explored. Side by side the two superior officers rode on for a while in silence. Both were gloomy and preoccupied. Suddenly Mackenzie raised his head.

"Something is certainly the matter," said he, still whispering, "but what? I am racking my brains to find out. I can surmise nothing."

"Do you apprehend peril?"

"Yes, Dick, I feel it."

"Of what nature?"

"Ah, that's it! If I only knew that, it might be at least partially averted. There is certainly some mysterious, invisible work going on around us—something dark and inscrutable."

At these words Richard Welcome looked at the colonel as if he half suspected him of fear, but William Mackenzie, having turned toward the major, presented a calm countenance in which the most intrepid courage was expressed. A few seconds afterward the colonel drew from a pocket in his saddle a chart, which he spread out on the neck of his horse.

"Here, Dick, my friend," said he, "look, here is the plan of the forest. We entered it about thirty-six hours ago, and according to my reckoning we must have made thirty miles in all."

"I think so too, Will," replied the major.

"In that case there are still fourteen miles to cross before reaching the open country."

"Yes, but it is already four o'clock; our men and horses are exhausted, and if they march until night, that will be all they can do."

"Oh, I know that very well," muttered the colonel, impatiently. He was silent a moment, and then resumed with animation: "I would give half my fortune to be out of this forest. We meet too few people in it."

"And without taking into consideration," said the major, "the report that Tantia-Taupee, the companion and rival in ferocity of Ben-Madho, has possession of the country in these regions."

"Yes."

"Another silence."

"Oh!" resumed the colonel, at last, "if the scoundrel comes with his army to offer me battle, even here, in the midst of these trees and brushwood, I would undertake, with your six cannon and my two thousand brave soldiers, to chase him as far as his legs could carry him. But how can I provide against any diabolical scheme of which this fiend incarnate is capable?"

"The officers might be discreetly asked if they think their men are in a condition to march five hours longer," said the major.

"Hum!" muttered Mackenzie; "yesterday they accomplished twenty-three miles, which is an enormous distance in such a country, and with soldiers who for the most part have come from Europe."

"No matter; we must ascertain what further exertion they are capable of."

"Yes; but the troops will suspect our uneasiness."

"Nothing is easier than to prevent that. The officers can be ordered to advance under the pretext of giving them orders for camping, and then we shall get the information we desire."

"All right," said Mackenzie.

The officers on being questioned were unanimous in declaring that it would be running a risk of losing a number of men on the way if they tried to make them march until ten o'clock at night. One of them added:

"Every foot-soldier who allows himself to be distanced by the column would be a dead man."

"Why?" asked the colonel; "because of the tigers?"

"Yes, colonel, because of the tigers on two legs."

"What do you mean, Chardson?"

"That we are watched—followed."

"By whom?"

"By marauders; who knows, by the enemy, perhaps."

"Why have you not told me that sooner, captain?"

"Because I had no proofs; but all the officers are dreading something, especially the cavalry officers."

"Ah!" said the colonel, at length; "but the soldiers do not mistrust anything, do they?"

"I hope not, colonel."

"Very well, Chardson; I am pleased that you have been so sharp-sighted. Moreover, I thank you for having dared to speak to me of your suspicions. Could not the stragglers be put on the elephants, or ride double with the cavalry?"

"The elephants!" interrupted Major Welcome; "that would be rather difficult. They already have their full load, which consists of our food."

"You are right; but the cavalry?"

"Yes, perhaps the cavalry could each take a man behind, and the strong foot-soldiers could double their pace so as to make four miles an hour."

"And, besides, when they are too weary they can replace their comrades on horseback," said the colonel. "We have three battalions of infantry. Each battalion can mount, and by turns rest in this way for an hour."

"You know the horses are already very much fatigued, colonel," said Captain Chardson.

"Yes, but I do not want to encamp in this forest to-night. We have still fourteen miles to make before leaving it. They must be made."

"They shall be made, colonel. But will not these measures impress the soldiers?"

"No. They must be told that on leaving the forest we will receive intelligence of the siege of Delhi, which it is necessary to obtain this very evening in order to operate in accordance with my instructions."

The officers were advised of the decision of their superiors. The men who were the most fatigued received orders to mount behind the cavalymen, who numbered in proportion to the infantry nearly as one to three. They obeyed without much urging, on the contrary, were very much pleased with this relief of their weariness. This increase of burden was, doubtless, not relished by the horses, but the exigencies of the case would not allow them any indulgence. The column moved more rapidly, and accomplished more than four miles during the first hour. The soldiers certainly thought there was a reason for this singular manœuvre, but they believed the news from Delhi was unfavorable, and that it was necessary to hasten in order to succor the besieging army. Besides, they had entire confidence in their chief, and their good humor did not sensibly diminish. After the second party of foot-soldiers had mounted, night fell. It was a solemn moment. Despite the care which the officers took to hide their uneasiness, despite the gayety which they affected perhaps a little too noisily, they were not able to entirely conceal the anxiety which haunted them. As darkness gradually descended upon the forest, the soldiers themselves felt less inspired. The moon would not rise until late, and in consequence of the thick foliage, the blackness of the night was unredeemed by the bright starlight peculiar to that country.

Instinctively the column concentrated. The cavalry of the advance guard and those who closed the march unconsciously diminished the distance which separated them from the main body of troops. Each man crowded close to his neighbor. There was not one straggler. Apprehension gave legs to the most exhausted. William Mackenzie encouraged the greatest possible gayety. Dick Welcome seconded his chief, riding from the advance to the rear-guard, giving orders, and inviting the soldiers to laugh and sing. They would have gladly complied, and indeed for a moment accompanied a young sergeant who struck up a lively tune, but the heart was not in it, and the refrain died away on their lips. The gloom of uncertainty pervaded all. There was no acknowledged danger before them, but from the chief to the lowest foot-soldier they abandoned themselves to the influence of presentiment. Each of these men unwittingly recalled to mind the abominations which had taken place during this atrocious war. They recounted the most horrible details of the mutilations of which so many of their compatriots had been the victims. In the darkness, augmented by the dust in which the horses seemed to move mysteriously, the motion of each man, and even the gigantic silhouettes of the elephants, surmounted by their enormous loads, produced a feeling of profound fear and despondency. Nevertheless the advance continued. It was about an hour after nightfall. At times the creaking of branches or some other sound was heard, but nothing unusual.

"Six miles yet, Dick," murmured the colonel, who made his repeater strike; "six miles. At least an hour and a half longer, for we have commenced to travel less rapidly."

"This darkness oppresses me," replied the major, quietly.

"Would it be inexpedient to light the torches, so as to enliven the march?" said the colonel, after a moment's pause.

"Yes," replied Welcome; "if the dogs commanded by Tantia-Taupée are at our heels, each soldier carrying a torch would immediately become a living target for their almost unerring aim."

But, behold! At the very moment when Welcome expressed his opinion very positively the sky was illuminated, and the night became less dark.

"There," said the major, "is that the moon?"

"It is not the moon," abruptly said Mackenzie.

"Nevertheless, it is in the east that the sky is brightening."

And in fact in the clear sky a light, like the rising dawn, could be distinguished through the thickness of the foliage.

"What can this singular appearance be?"

A sergeant was summoned, the same one whose joyous song had had so little effect a few minutes before.

"Wilcox," said the colonel, who knew him personally, and knew that he was as agile as a monkey, and exceedingly courageous; "Wilcox, climb to the top of that tree, and look toward the east, in order to find out the cause of that light. It is probably some town with its inhabitants that those black devils of Hindoos have delivered over to the flames."

The sergeant gave a spring, and rapidly gaining the high branches, was lost to sight. Those below waited until he should descend or speak. Suddenly he was heard to cry out:

"The forest is on fire!"

"The devil!" said the colonel.

The major, less excited, made a speaking-trumpet of his hands, and interrogated Wilcox.

"In what direction?" he asked.

"Toward the east, as the redness of the sky indicates."

"About how far off?"

"About six miles."

"Is the fire large?"

"No; as far as I can judge from here, the trees are burning for a space of two hundred yards."

"Very well; you can come down, James."

He descended, and returned to the ranks. Mackenzie, Welcome, and several other officers were collected at the foot of the tree which had served as an observatory.

"It is probably nothing," said the colonel. "It is not astonishing that a fire should kindle easily in the forest, considering the drought which lasts for eleven months in this district."

"And who knows but the fire was caused by the imprudence of our own men during the halt this afternoon? It may have been smouldering for several hours," said Welcome.

"Very possibly, Dick," replied Mackenzie; "but for all that, we must not lose a minute. The column must move forward again."

They set out anew at a rate which would have enabled them to leave the forest before the expiration of three-quarters of an hour.

CHICAGO NOVELETTES.

"Every man remain at his post, and do not stir from it on any pretext," said the colonel to his officers. "You, Dick, go to the head of the artillery. I will remain at your side." The third party of infantry were now in the saddle. There was great haste. William Mackenzie was still gloomy and preoccupied. The major, his friend from childhood, was astonished at his silence and anxiety.

"Do not be uneasy, William," said he; "this fire is not what you fear."

At these words Mackenzie quickly raised his eyes to his companion in arms.

"Ah!" he said, "have you also thought that perhaps it has been kindled by the jackals of Tania-Taupée?"

"In fact that idea has presented itself to my mind; but why should they kindle the fire so far from us?"

"Because our night march has doubtless deceived them."

"Indeed—"

"They believe that we encamped at nightfall, and have no idea that the column has marched more than eight miles since then."

"It is possible."

"Be it an accident or an ambushade, Dick, the danger is not the less great. In my opinion, the fire will reach us by means of the underbrush much more rapidly than we think. We must advance to the edge of the wood by a forced march."

"The men—"

"Oh, we no longer have a choice of means. We are no longer permitted to spare them if we want to save them," interrupted the colonel, almost in a loud voice.

"Do you think so, William?"

"If necessary, I would not hesitate to excite their fears, so as to rouse them."

"You are unduly alarmed," said Richard Welcome.

But he had scarcely spoken when Captain Chardson presented himself before his superior officers, unsummoned.

John Chardson was quite a young man, but his mind was already matured, and the colonel valued him highly.

"What is the matter, captain?" asked Mackenzie.

The young man extended his arms before him, and pronounced the single word, "Look!"

In that direction also the sky had gradually brightened. The colonel and Dick Welcome started in their saddles.

"Another fire!" muttered Mackenzie, "and this time in front of us, on the edge of the forest that we would leave in twenty minutes."

"A million devils!" exclaimed the major; "are the cowardly knaves determined to roast us alive?"

The major had spoken so loud that five or six soldiers of the artillery overheard him. But caution was no longer seasonable. To the right the forest blazed anew, then to the left. The intentions of the incendiaries could no longer be doubted. They had a design upon the English column, and it alone.

"Let a torch be lighted," commanded Mackenzie.

The order was executed. The colonel studied his chart attentively, and said:

"Fortunately, we have arrived at a point where the roads leading out of the forest are quite numerous. This one, running toward the north, is the longest, and consequently the most dangerous. That one, to the south, and until proved to the contrary, must be considered the most practicable."

"But are we not following the shortest road?"

"Yes, but it is cut off by the fire."

Not a word was added. More than one already considered it folly to think of the roads, the plan of the Hindoos evidently being to fire the woods wherever the little army could pass.

James Wilcox was ordered a second time to climb to the top of the gigantic cedar. The colonel went up with him, so as to form his own estimate of the gravity of the danger. They did not have to ascend very high to be convinced that the situation of the column was desperate. It was the centre of a veritable circle of fire. The conflagration was assuming mighty and terrible proportions. The colonel descended in great haste. The quaking troops were halted. With heads erect, and nostrils widely distended, the horses turned, snuffing toward the side where the peril was probably the greatest.

Behind the artillery the elephants, much excited, gave signs of terror. Their conductors could scarcely control them, even by means of blows intermingled with exclamations. The soldiers regarded each other gloomily.

"My friends," said the colonel, "we are warring with wild beasts. The danger which threatens us is imminent. I need not attempt to conceal it. We are in the midst of a circle of flames."

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Sir Garnet Wolseley's proclamation announcing to the Egyptians that "the mosques shall be respected, and all supplies paid for," shows, observes the New York Times, that he at least understands how to treat the Eastern races. A similar line of policy won golden opinions for General Roberts during the campaign of 1880 in Southern Afghanistan.

Indeed, just as there is no more certain way of earning an Oriental's undying hatred than by insulting his religion, so there is no surer passport to his favor than by showing respect for it. A strategem of this kind was successfully practiced by General Championnet, when the French occupied Naples at the opening of the present century. Finding it impossible to withstand the fury of the Neapolitan "lazzaroni," who murdered every straggler from the French ranks, and even rushed knife in hand upon them when they were planting cannon in the streets, he decided to attempt conciliation. A guard of honor was placed in front of the shrine of the favorite Neapolitan saint, Gennaro or Januarius, and the countersign given to the French sentries was "Reverence for Gennaro." This wily courtesy turned the scale at once. The streets resounded with cries of "Long live the French," and the whole native population hastened to range themselves on the side of the invaders.

"Mrs. Livermore," says Margery Dean, "tells a story of a linguistic experience in Antwerp. It is the city of processions. Desiring to know the meaning of one of these street displays, she asked a man in French. His reply was unintelligible. For some moments they wrestled, even resorting to paper and pencil; but it was no use. At last it occurred to Mrs. Livermore to ask him if he knew even the least English. 'Good Lord, yes! Was born in Eastport, Maine!'

"Welcome home, Pansy."

Dappleval was at its prettiest this sweet June day as it nestled cozily among the hills that towered above it on every side. Down in the shady glen where the village church stood, almost hidden by the cypress trees whose great houghs of green were swept caressingly against the sides of the modest structure, Pansy Perkins was standing, and as Ethelbert Pettingill spoke the words with which this chapter opens, her face lighted up with a radiant smile that was beautiful in its sad expanse of territory.

"Come to me, Pansy," he said.

It was Ethelbert's voice, tender, gentle, that spoke, yet with something in its tones that made the girl pause.

Presently Pansy spoke.

"It is very hot, is it not, darling?" she said.

"Yes," replied Ethelbert, "and it is getting late, and we should be going home." And as he spoke the girl looked up at him with those dark eyes that had witched so many men.

"Do you love me?" she said.

"Passionately, my angel," was the reply in tremulous tones.

"And you will huy me some ice-cream?" she continued.

Ethelbert felt his heart throbbing against his suspender, and for an instant he could not reply. But the momentary agitation was soon over, and he spoke out in mellow tones:

"I will do it with pleasure."

The peachy cheek of the girl was laid close to his now, and the velvety lips kissed him tenderly back of the left ear. And then, turning her head slightly, Pansy whispered to herself: "I have not lost my grip."—From "Pansy's Peril," by Joseph Medill.

"My own darling!"

George W. Simpson says these words softly to himself as he lies in the hammock under the linden trees, the soft breath of a June zephyr kissing the pearl-colored pants that fit him so suddenly, and then rioting among the scarlet bank of roses that are climbing in fanciful ways around the pillars that guard the entrance to Distress Warrant Castle. She of whom he speaks there is a beautiful girl with a dusky, piquante face—a face that is arch, sparkling, and bright, as only brunettes faces can be, and over the laughing face is a fluffy mass of dark waving hair, while a pair of pansy-dark eyes with golden lights in their soft depths, and sweetly curving lips tinted with the velvety crimson of the rose, complete a picture that would make your head swim.

Pearl McCloskey is indeed beautiful, and as she comes singing along the graveled path with the golden light of a summer day falling upon her uncovered head, the very birds that are caroling among the branches of the lindens seem to pause and look at her. She sings in a low, sweet voice that is tremulous with dinner a little Breton love-song that she had heard in Milwaukee:

Mary Ann McLaughlin, don't you cry;
Wipe the tear-drops from your eye;
You'll be happy by-and-by—
Mary Ann McLaughlin, don't you cry.

The pure, Madonna-like face of the young man lifts itself from the depths of the hammock, and he looks at the girl with a weary, wistful, two-hot-days-and-no-white-vest-in-the-house expression that would move a plumber. She sees him, and runs eagerly to the hammock. Putting her dimpled arm around his neck she kisses the rosebud mouth, and then seats herself by his side.

"Do you love me as much to-day as you did last Thursday?" she asks, while the brown eyes sparkle with merriment. But back of the laughing look there is a tender, loving, I-must-not-let-him-get-away expression that tells how she worships this man.

"Yes, sweetheart," replied George; "I love you more every day of my life, for you do not sing as much as you used to."—From "How He Loved Her," by Joseph Medill.

"No, darling, it can never be."

Up from the meadows that stretched away to the westward of Brierton Villa came the sweet, soft scents of the magnolia blossoms that were waving languidly in the sensuous movings of an August breeze.

"I shall miss him sorely," said Gladys McMurry, looking wistfully at the fast-disappearing form of Ethelbert O'Brien. "In the long, dreary days of winter, when the sky is overcast with leaden clouds. I shall miss my Ethelbert. And yet it is better so. Better that I should bear alone the secret burden of my woe—a burden that can never be lifted, never be cast aside until the icy arms of Death shall he stretched forth to welcome a storm-tossed soul that is only too anxious to come to his embrace." And with a convulsive sob, the girl sank upon a prettily made bench of strong oak limbs, and was soon sitting upon one foot, while the other peeped coquettishly out from beneath the fleecy folds of her soft white dress.

But though the pretty head was laid upon the dimpled arms, and the starry eyes were sending forth floods of bitter tears—tears of repentance and sorrow—Gladys was not alone. Ethelbert had paused where the path turned into the roadside to pluck a rose, that he might have some memento, no matter how fragile, of the happy hours he had spent at Brierton Villa. Looking back as he stood there, he had seen Gladys seat herself upon the rustic bench, and noticed her dejection and grief. Quickly retracing his steps, he stood by her side, and saw the lissome form convulsed with sobs—saw that she was sitting upon her foot in a very agony of despair.

"Do not weep, darling," he said, making a bluff to preempt the other end of the bench.

Gladys looked up. Her eyes were dim with tears, and as she placed her other foot with languid grace upon the unoccupied portion of the bench, a sweet, loving smile illumined her face, and in the dewy eyes there came a look of sweet content.

"Do you promise me, then?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Ethelbert, bending tenderly over her, and trying to nip a kiss on the fly, "you shall have all the matinee tickets you want."

"Then," said the girl, taking away her foot, "nothing but death shall part us."—From "Her Foot was Her Fortune," by Joseph Medill, the Tribune Novelist.

SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS.

The fall fashions are rapidly coming out. The costumes are new and beautiful, the styles are various in regard to outside garments, and there are some pretty novelties in fringes and other trimmings. New draperies are brought forth for decorating bedrooms, and many new shades are making their appearance; although reds, of all tints, and greens are destined to be the most popular during the coming fall and winter season, red especially. Jackets and hasques will undoubtedly take the lead in that part of the ladies' costumes. Redingotes are exceedingly stylish. I saw one a few days since just put on exhibition by one of our leading importers. It was of brocatelle; that is, the flowers were brocatelle on a watered-silk ground. The whole showed the new shade known as pain brûlé, or brown-bread color. The material was of the very richest and most elegant description. The garment reached within about seven inches of the bottom of the skirt, and was trimmed with a new trimming material, forming a ribbon plush. It was put on down the front on both sides, growing wider as it reached the lower part. It then extended around the base some six inches in width. There were cuffs, pockets, and collar, all very deep cut, of this ribbon plush. The lining was of pourpre, or royal red plush, showing various tints in the shading. The price was one hundred and seventy-five dollars. Another redingote was of silk, giving the appearance of net in the new shade of putty. Upon this open-work fabric was embossed velvet in designs of peaches. The heavy satin lining was of the exact shade. This redingote was cut up the back nearly to the waist, and filled in with a jabot of lace on either side. The lace was in its way something entirely new, being of real Spanish, in stripes, alternating with stripes of a sort of silky fabric. It was of the shade to correspond with the cloak. A couple of rows of this lace went around the base, and formed a jabot up each side of the front. The sleeves were of the bell-shape, and elaborately finished with the lace. There was still another new cloak. This also was of a new shape, somewhat shorter in the back than in the front. The fabric was in texture heavy, and of an invisible check. The color was of a very delicate shade, touching on the terra cotta. The sleeves were flowing, and reached below the body of the wrap. A fringe four or five inches wide, composed of iridescent beads and silk tape, adorned the base, and was headed with real ostrich plumes in their natural tints. The sleeves were trimmed with a wing-shaped passanterie, which also covered the seams in the back, and formed a collar around and over the shoulders. The lining was of satin of a Bismarck brown. The latest outer garments for misses and school girls are English walking-jackets of cloth, and in all the dark shades, particularly bronze, cadet blue, and dark grey. As a general rule they are plain, though the dressy ones are ornamented with galeon or braid, with a loop of ribbon and a cut jet buckle. Jackets, either for the street, house, or carriage are also quite in vogue for ladies. I saw an exceedingly rich one. It was of tinsel brocade, the flowers being of pale-pink and blue, on a black ground, and the whole shot with tinsel. It had a deep, reverse collar of black velvet, with cuffs and pockets to match. It was lined throughout with light-pink surrah satin. The price was seventy-five dollars. Opera cloaks are now beginning to be imported by our merchants, three of which are too beautiful to be passed over unnoticed. There was one of red pressed flannel, lined with red surrah satin, and profusely trimmed with black braid. There was a deep pattern of it around the edge, in imitation of gimp. Up the front, sides, and back the braid represented long, graceful feathers. A deep fringe of red and black silk finished the base. A handsome walking dress is made of bottle-green ladies'-cloth. The skirt is in kilts, at the front reaching up to the waist, and growing shorter, till they reach the back, where they are about eighteen inches high. The bottom of the skirt is finished with a wide piece, say six inches wide, of plush the shade of the dress goods. The over-dress, or polonaise, is made with reverse front laid in soft plaits and edged with the plush. The back has the usual drapery. The waist is double-breasted, vest shape, with a puff of plush over the seams of the arm-holes. It has a Sarah Bernhard collar of plush, with cuffs to match. The smoked-pearl buttons are ornamented with steel. A plush hat, elaborately trimmed with shaded pink and red feathers, is to be worn with it. A dinner dress was approaching completion at one store I visited. It consisted of dark green satin with embossed lilies of black velvet outlined with gold thread, and satin the very lightest tint of green. The whole was ornamented with a lace-work of gold thread woven with chenille. The body was square cut, with elbow sleeves. The novelty in fringe was that made of narrow black ribbon of number one and two. The ribbon was either plain or watered, the watered being the most stylish. This ribbon is mixed with chenille or silk, and many are edged with balls of cut jet that give a rich and beautiful effect. The fringes are of various widths, running from five to fifteen inches, and range in price from three dollars up to eighteen and twenty. They will be principally used on three-quarter cloaks of any material, except plush and velvet, and even then they will be admissible on velvet when mixed with chenille. Feather-trimming promises to be more in vogue the coming season than it has ever been before, and will take the place of the deep, heavy ruching which has been so universally worn around the bottom of dress skirts. It is said that parasols for the fall and winter will be edged with feathers. At one house is shone a new supply of cretonnes for decorating bedrooms. In Europe it is now becoming quite the style to hang the walls as well as the windows with these gaily-figured cretonnes, (that is, in toilet-rooms), and the fashion is beginning to take hold here. The cretonne can now be purchased for twenty cents a yard. The ground is usually light blue, pink, or black, upon which are flowers of every possible color or tint. A new and decidedly beautiful trimming has just come out. It measures four inches wide, and is of plush. The plush is in raised work, forming oblong designs of an inch and a-half long, and an inch wide. It is yet so new that the price was not marked upon it when I examined it, a day or two since.

HELENA.

August 23, 1882.

LITERARY NOTES.

"The Commerce and Industries of the Pacific Coast" is a large volume of advertisements written by John S. Hittell. Its title leads to the supposition that it is a cyclopedia for the Pacific Coast trade; but if such was the intention of the author and publishers, it is certainly very imperfect. But comparatively few names are to be encountered in the various departments of commercial industries, and those are frequently of minor importance, and evidently inserted for remuneration. The only approach to thoroughness appears in the appendix, where a tolerably complete list of Pacific Coast merchants and manufacturers is published in microscopic type. Published and for sale by Bancroft & Co.

Astronomy is one of the most fascinating of studies, and yet it is lamentably neglected by the schools throughout the United States. In fact, a score of years ago it received more attention than it does at the present day. One reason of this neglect is that there has been a lack of text-books both comprehensive and suitable for beginners. This is now remedied, however, by two Eastern astronomers, Professor Isaac Sharpless and Professor G. M. Phillips, who have written an admirable treatise on "Astronomy," for school and general readers. It is well illustrated, and may be readily comprehended. Published by Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia; for sale by Joseph A. Hoffman, 205 Montgomery Street; price, $1.25.

A lack of artistic taste has much detracted from the good material to be found in Mr. Richard E. White's "The Cross of Monterey, and Other Poems." Mr. White appears to be gifted with much imagination and ability, and even in the cases where he has closely copied the themes of some well-known poems, he has evinced a constructive talent. But he is oppressed with a villainous ballad metre, which haunts almost every piece in the volume. With the exception of a few sonnets, and one or two other pieces, everything is in this monotonous metre. The poems possess, however, the merit of having California subjects, and of being after a fashion faithful pictures of Pacific Coast scenes. Published by the California Publishing Company, 403 California Street; for sale by the booksellers.

Judge Frank McGloin has chosen the little kingdom of Cambodia, on the Gulf of Siam, as the scene of a singular romance, entitled "Norodom." It is a story rich in Oriental coloring, and dealing with the hot passions of the East. A youth who has been jilted by a village belle describes her beauty to the king, in the hope that the monarch will quickly grow weary of her charms, and end her life. The king makes the addition to his harem; but so much does he love the girl that her happiness is prolonged until his death, when she is made queen by an admiring populace. At several points the interest flags, but these are redeemed by the strong action and graphic incidents of the rest of the volume. As a picture of Eastern life it is rather a success. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; for sale by James T. White & Co., 23 Dupont Street.

Announcements: Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston, make an announcement that will give much gratification to the lovers of poetry. They will shortly publish a volume which is to be a complete collection of the poems of Thomas Bailey Aldrich. It will be an edition de luxe, and will be illustrated by twenty-eight engravings done by seventeen members of the Boston Paint and Clay Club. Among the first publications of G. P. Putnam's Sons for the fall season will be: "Social Equality," by W. H. Mallock; "The Political Conspiracies Preceding the Rebellion," by Thomas M. Anderson, Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. A.; "A School Atlas of Astronomy," by A. Keith Johnson; "Easy Star Lessons," by R. A. Proctor; "How to Succeed," by Senators Bayard and Edmunds, Commissioner Loring, Hamilton Gibson, General Sooy Smith, E. P. Roe, Lyman Abbott, and Thomas Edison. Dr. C. M. Newell, of Boston, whose recently published novel, "Kalani of Oahu," has attracted so much attention, announces that he contemplates the speedy publication of a new romance, of which the old king, Kamehameha, shall be the hero. The author has in his possession notes of some startling incidents, secretly confided many years ago by the king himself to a resident who is now very aged.

Professor J. R. Seeley, nearly a score of years ago, set the religious world agog with a work entitled "Ecce Homo." It was written in what many readers are pleased to call a "beautiful" style. Several answers, and also volumes supporting it, were afterward published which served to sustain interest for several years. The author has just written a work entitled "Natural Religion." It is the result of a series of papers which appeared in Macmillan's Magazine from 1875 to 1878. The author begins with the remark that he endeavors in the volume to promote neither orthodoxy nor heterodoxy, but that he believes that in religion, as in politics, there are truths outside the region of party debate, and that these truths are more important than the contending parties will easily be induced to believe. Upon this premise he strives to lucidly point out those truths. Published by Roberts Bros., Boston; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.25.

Miscellany: Mr. Aldrich has gone to the Novgorod Fair—a festival which he intends to describe in print. Mr. W. M. Rossetti quotes Trelawney as saying concerning Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," that he found in it the materials of poetry, but not poetry itself. Florence Marryat, the English novelist, has been on the stage as Lady Jane, in "Patience." All the letters of Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Southey addressed to the late Sir John Coleridge have been consulted by Doctor Brandt during the preparation of his new work on Coleridge. These letters cover nearly the whole of the poet's career, and begin with the appeal to buy his discharge from the army. Some of the originals of George Cruikshank's drawings for the illustration of Ainsworth's books will be sold at the coming auction in London of the novelist's library. Mr. Samuel Longfellow will begin work upon his biography of his famous brother about the first of October. He intends to write the book at Cambridge. Several sons of famous fathers are living on their parentage in London. All the Year Round is still "conducted by Charles Dickens." This magazine was the dead Dickens's personal property, and was left to the present Charles Dickens with the proviso that the name should be placed at the head of its pages. Douglas Jerrold was the editor of Lloyd's Weekly News, and when he died the proprietors continued the family name by putting in the line, "Edited by Blanchard Jerrold." The editing is said to consist in the drawing of a salary. Fan is nominally edited by Tom Hood, a son of Thomas Hood, the famous humorist.

The latest number of Q. P. Index's "Monograph" essays are "Historical Quotations," by A. Hayward, Q. C.; "Richard III.," by Goldwin Smith; and "Felipe II.," by John Fiske. Published by J. W. Christopher, 47 Dey Street, New York; price, 10 cents each. The North American Review for September has an article by Dorman B. Eaton on "Political Assessments," "Oaths in Legal Proceedings," by Judge Edward A. Thomas; Thompson B. Maury, late of the Signal Office, contributes an article on "Tornadoes and their Causes;" "Architecture in America" is by Clarence Cook; Augustus G. Cobb writes of "Earth-Burial and Cremation;" and J. F. Manning on "The Geneva Award and the Ship-Owners." Harper's for September begins with an entertaining paper about "A Summer at New York;" Mrs. John Little's "In Surrex" is written in her usual charming style; G. P. Lathrop's "Spanish Vista," contains some especially fine illustrations. In Lippincott's for September is an illustrated paper on "An Antwerp Printing-House," by Rose C. Kingsley; a poem, "At War," by Louise Chandler Moulton, and an interesting article, "Songs that have made History," by Amelia E. Burr. The Magazine of Art for September opens with an illustrated sketch of the life and works of the American artist, G. H. Boughton. "Canterbury Cathedral" (illustrated) is the second paper that Mr. T. G. Bonney has given on this stately old edifice. "Japanese and Chinese Bronzes" will have an especial interest for San Franciscans. The article on "Van Dyck" is illustrated by some well-executed engravings from the great master's works.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Hurricane.

Lord of the winds! I feel thee nigh;
I know thy breath in the burning sky;
And I wait, with a thrill in every vein,
For the coming of the hurricane.

And lo! on the wing of the heavy gales,
Through the boundless arch of heaven he sails.
Silent and slow, and terribly strong,
The mighty shadow is borne along,
Like the dark eternity to come;
While the world below, dismayed and dumb,
Through the calm of the thick, hot atmosphere
Looks up at its gloomy folds with fear.

They darken fast, and the golden blaze
Of the sun is quenched in the lurid haze,
And he sends through the shade a funeral ray—
A glare that is neither night nor day,
A beam that touches with hues of death
The clouds above and the earth beneath.
To its covert glides the silent bird,
While the hurricane's distant voice is heard
Uplifted among the mountains round,
And the forests hear and answer the sound.

He is come! he is come! do ye not behold
His ample robes on the wind unrolled?
Giant of air! we bid thee hail!
How his gray skirts toss in the whirling gale;
How his huge and writhing arms are bent
To clasp the zone of the firmament,
And fold at length, in their dark embrace,
From mountain to mountain the visible space.

Darker—still darker! the whirlwinds bear
The dust of the plains to the middle air;
And hark to the crashing, long and loud,
Of the chariot of God in the thunder-cloud!
You may trace its path by the flashes that start
From the rapid wheels where'er they dart,
As the fire-bolts leap to the world below,
And flood the skies with a lurid glow.

What roar is that?—'tis the rain that breaks
In torrents away from the airy lakes,
Heavily poured on the shuddering ground,
And shedding a nameless horror round.
Ah! well-known woods, and mountains, and skies,
With the very clouds!—ye are lost to my eyes.
I seek ye vainly, and see in your place
The shadowy tempest that sweeps through space,
A whirling ocean that fills the wall
Of the crystal heaven and buries all.
And I, cut off from the world, remain Alone with the terrible hurricane.

—William Cullen Bryant.

To the West Wind.

O wild west wind, thou breath of autumn's being,
Thou from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
Pestilence-stricken multitudes; O thou
Who chariotest to their dark, wintry bed
The winged seeds, where they lie cold and low,
Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the spring shall blow
Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth, and fill (Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in air)
With living hues and odors plain and hill:
Wild spirit, which art moving everywhere;
Destroyer and preserver: hear, O hear!

Thou on whose stream, mid the steep sky's commotion,
Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are shed,
Shook from the tangled boughs of heaven and ocean,
Angels of rain and lightning; there are spread
On the blue surface of thine airy surge,
Like the bright hair uplifted from the head
Of some fierce Maenad, even from the dim verge
Of the horizon to the zenith's height,
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou dirge
Of the dying year, to which this closing night
Will be the dome of a vast sepulchre,
Vaulted with all thy congregated might
Of vapors, from whose solid atmosphere
Black rain, and fire, and hail will burst: O hear!

Thou who didst waken from his summer dreams
The blue Mediterranean, where he lay
Lulled by the coil of his crystalline streams,
Beside a pumice isle in Baia's bay,
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser day,
All overgrown with azure moss and flowers
So sweet, the sense faint picturing them. Thou
For whose path the Atlantic's level powers
Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below
The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear
The sapless foliage of the ocean know
Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with fear,
And tremble, and despoil themselves: O hear!

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share
The impulse of thy strength, only less free
Than thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in thy boyhood, and could be
The comrade of thy wanderings over heaven,
As then, when to outstrip the sky's speed
Scarce seemed a vision, I would ne'er have striven
As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh, lift me as a wave, a leaf a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!
A heavy weight of hours has chained and bowed
One too like thee—tameless, and swift, and proud.

Make me thy lyre, even as the forest is;
What if my leaves are falling like its own?
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies
Will take from both a deep autumnal tone,
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, spirit fierce,
My spirit; be thou me, impetuous one!
Drive my dead thoughts over the universe
Like withered leaves, to quicken a new birth;
And by the incantation of this verse,
Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawakened earth
The trumpet of a prophecy! O wind,
If winter comes, can spring be far behind?

—Percy Bysshe Shelley.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Victor Hugo has become so deaf that he can not enjoy conversation.

Mr. Archibald Forbes, the famous correspondent, is lecturing to crowded audiences in Australia.

Clémenceau, Gambetta's great opponent in the Chamber of Deputies, was first to offer words of condolence to Gambetta on the announcement of his mother's death.

The Count de Chambord is now at the Marienbad Springs in Bohemia, where he occupies a private house. He lives a retired life, dividing his time between taking the waters and attending mass in the morning, and wild duck shooting in the afternoon.

Prince Bismarck from his country seat at Varzin directs the foreign affairs of Germany. An almost uninterrupted communication by letter and telegraph is maintained with the German Foreign Office. Count Herbert Bismarck acts as his father's secretary, while Count Rantzau, Bismarck's son-in-law, deciphers dispatches.

The Empress of Austria lately asked whether a visit from her would be well received by the Pope during her journey incognito through Italy. The Pope requested the Nuncio at Vienna to ascertain if the visit had any political scope, or was a simple act of devotion. If the latter, a cordial affirmative reply was to be given.

In a Russian exile known as "No. 11" a Siberian traveler lately recognized at Yakutsk the Grand Duke Nicholas Constantinovich. In 1875 the grand duke was exiled to Orenburg for stealing his mother's diamonds and insulting the Czar. Afterward he plotted with the nihilists to assassinate the present Czar. His banishment to Siberia followed.

M. Carvalho, the director of the Opera Comique, has lost his singular suit with the Duc de Marmier and the Duchesse de Fitz-James. They, as the legal representatives of the Duc de Choiseul, who built the theatre in 1781, claimed a box which the latter had reserved for his own use. The French courts hold that the plaintiffs still have the right to occupy the box.

Should the next child of the King and Queen of Spain be a boy, he will bear the name of Alfonso or Ferdinand, or both. If a girl, she will be named Maria-Theresa, after the famous empress, who was the great-great-grandmother of Queen Marie, and the great-great-great-grandmother of King Alfonso. The royal pair are, by the way, also both descended from Louis XIV. of France.

Miss Risley-Seward, a daughter of ex-Solicitor of the Treasury Risley, became a great favorite with William H. Seward while he was Secretary of State, and subsequently accompanied him during his tour around the world. Mr. Seward in his will bequeathed her thirty thousand dollars on condition that she should adopt his name. She accepted the money, adopted the name, and now refuses to marry, because she will not consent to change her name. At present she is in Italy studying the old monasteries of Tuscany.

General Skobelev was interviewed shortly before his death by M. Fryze, a Polish journalist, who began to talk by saying that the very sight of a journalist must be obnoxious. "Oh, on the contrary," replied General Skobelev, "I owe my present position mainly to the press, and especially to the English press. If it were not for the special correspondents, of whom there were always some with me during the Turkish war, I should have remained a major-general, and no one would have heard of me."

Madame Vallemberg, the daughter of Mr. D'Ehrenoff, the Swedish Minister to the Porte, is in training for a swim across the Bosphorus. This is with the concurrence of her husband, a naval officer, the son of a rich banker of Norway, to whom she was married a year or so ago. Madame Vallemberg's mother was a daughter of Sir Thomas Reed, a former British consul-general in the Tripolitan State of Northern Africa. Madame Vallemberg has already swam with the stream down from Therapia to Yenikioi, the next village on the Bosphorus, on a trial trip.

At the Guildhall banquet to her majesty's ministers it was touching to see Professor Fawcett, the blind postmaster-general, with his girlish wife, and to note her tender devotion, helping every movement of his hands, particularly when he tremblingly held the huge loving cup which was handed round. Every gentleman as he takes it bows to the lady next him. She takes off the lid, and holds it while he drinks. After having quaffed, he wipes the edge where his lips rested, bows, and gives the cup to the lady, holding the lid for her while she drinks; and so the cup passes round.

A Philadelphia artist who saw Arabi in Alexandria last winter draws this sketch of his personal appearance: "A tall, heavy-faced man, sullen, swarthy, with only a pretty clear eye to soften the general harshness of expression, and a black mustache to hide a not particularly finely carved mouth. His legs are as unattractive as his face. The under-pinning looks too frail for the rest of the body. He is a hulky man, not Falstaffian in girth, but a broad, thick-chested fellow, built on the lobster pattern. Take him from his heavy head to his spindle legs, Arabi Pasha reminds one more of a negro than of the agreeable and pleasant-faced gentlemen one meets among the Arabs and Egyptians."

Nearly every day Peter Cooper drives down to his office, and stays there for a few hours. As he comes out to his coupé he is surrounded by a bevy of seedy-looking men. Each in turn steps up to him with a "Good day, Mr. Cooper," and an expectant look in his eye, and just as regularly the benevolent old gentleman puts his hand in his pocket, and gives him a piece of money, and a "Good day to you." "Why do you let these people annoy you, Mr. Cooper?" asked an impatient young man the other day. "They don't annoy me at all," said the philanthropist. "They are old friends of mine, poor fellows. Many of them have seen better days. They don't want much—just enough for a dinner or a lunch. When I am ready to leave the office I put a few dollars in change in my pocket, and give it to them when they speak to me. They expect it, you know, and I wouldn't like to disappoint them."

Most wretched indeed must be the life of the Czar, if even a tithe of the stories related may be credited. In the harbor of Peterhof all the vessels have, it is said, frequently been alarmed and searched three times in a single night, while the imperial yachts are constantly kept by anchors weighed and steam up, to facilitate the instantaneous flight of the Romanoff family, if occasion demanded. And the belief is current that the Czar has ordered all his movable property, of every sort, to be moved and safely lodged in some foreign land. Meanwhile the Boyar aristocracy, zealous adherents to the Romanoff throne, unceasingly urge the necessity of immediate coronation. So impressed is Alexander with their arguments, it is said, that he is secretly preparing for a sudden coronation either in the Kasan Cathedral, St. Petersburg, or in the palace chapel, Peterhof, the announcements regarding a coronation at Moscow being made merely to throw the nihilists off the track.

The death of the Princess Roland Bonaparte leaves her husband a very rich man. Two years ago he was a second lieutenant in a line regiment, with nothing but his pay to depend upon; his sister was studying engraving and sculpture; his father, Prince Pierre Bonaparte, the slayer of Victor Noire, was dying in poverty. In a lucky hour Mademoiselle Marie Felix Blanc, the daughter of the great keeper of gaming-tables of Monaco, agreed to exchange her millions for the title of "princess," even though it was given by the son of Pierre Bonaparte and a working woman, and its legality is not admitted by such members of the family as Prince Louis Lucien. In July, 1881, her widowed mother died, and her vast fortune passed to the two princesses and their brother. It is but just to say that the young woman who has just died was a modest, amiable, and clever girl, and that Prince Roland has proved himself a dutiful and affectionate son and brother, and a hard-working soldier. His sister Jeanne was married in March last to the Marquis de Villeneuve-Esclapon, a member of an old French family of Royalist traditions. She received a dowry of a million from her brother and his wife.

ECHOES FROM EVERYWHERE.

The editor of the Argonaut has been unable to find room for me lately. But he is away. He is up to his midriff in the filthy pool. Like flowers after rain I lift up my bruised head. I will be revenged upon him—ha! ha! A deep revenge is mine. I shall take all the space I want.

Just before dinner the other day, I picked up one of Dumas' dramas, "La Tour de Nesle." My attention was attracted to it by having read an item mentioning the death of Frédéric Gaillardet, who wrote in collaboration with Dumas upon this drama. Gaillardet was for many years the Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats-Unis, and an excellent one, too. He was one of the few French journalists who thoroughly understand American affairs. Lahoulaye is another. But he is a publicist rather than a journalist.

The drama interested me so that I could not lay it down until I had finished it. Yet it is stuffed as full of horrors as is the "Pirate's Own Book." It hinges upon the illicit loves of Margaret of Burgundy, wife of Louis X.; her amours with stranger gallants come to visit the gay city of Paris; the number of richly dressed bodies found floating in the Seine from day to day; the mystery surrounding the gloomy Tower of Nesle; and generally it is bloody and horrible. Yet it is a fair exponent of the taste of Paris fifty years ago. And the taste of Paris was then, as it is now, the taste of the world.

With my mind full of this bloody drama I went to see "Daniel Rochat." For three hours a large audience sat listening with keen interest to—what? The discussion of an idea. For Rochat is nothing but the personification of an idea—that of modern atheism—and the play is nothing but a vehicle for carrying the arguments discussing it.

It was instructive to see how much the taste of the world had changed.

I was rather amused at the demonstrations of applause when "Daniel Rochat" was played last week. Any unusually violent outbursts of atheism from Daniel or Bidache were received with applause from the gallery. Correspondingly, Lea's protestations of attachment for her faith were received with applause from the dress-circle—principally from the women. The men in the dress-circle were mostly silent. I suppose they are Agnostics merely, and do not know what they believe. Women and the lower classes of men have firm convictions.

It is curious, by the way, how differently stage emotion affects different people. For instance, when "The Banker's Daughter" was on, a couple of weeks ago, many women wept copiously. Some of them were hard-hearted wretches, too. One of the dampest there I had seen stab reputations with as little compunction as a bug-hunter would impale a beetle upon a pin. And a certain Boniface I wot of, who will skin you alive if he has a fair show, wept profusely. So did Zulana. As the curtain was falling I said to her:

"How well Mrs. Trestellas is looking to-night!" Zulana looked up through her tears.

"And what a very handsome dress that is she has on."

"Pooh!" cried Zulana, "she bought that stuff because it looks like cloth, but it isn't—it's only suiting. And those buttons she's stuck all over it only cost two bits a dozen. I'll wager the whole suit could be had for thirty dollars."

"Indeed!" I replied, "what a very lucky fellow Trestellas is. But I see the play has moved you, my dear, Pardon me for disturbing you."

The "unsatisfactory ending" of "Daniel Rochat" has been the cause of a great deal of discussion recently. The majority of people have stoutly maintained that it should end in the conventional and commonplace manner—to wit, by the lovers "making up." The minority have maintained that such an ending would ruin the play, dramatically speaking. The minority is right. The minority generally is, by the way. Of all human aspersions upon the Deity, "Vox populi, vox Dei," is the silliest.

Apologies of all this, here is a letter written by Miss Jewett herself to an inquiring friend, when the play was running in Brooklyn over a year ago. It will be read with interest by the advocates of both sides:

In speaking of the play of "Daniel Rochat," I must begin by paying my tribute to the author. I think Monsieur Rochat one of the first and best dramatists of our day, and I find myself happy and at ease in demonstrating the exquisite consistency of his works. To me he seems a master in motive and dramatic construction, and if my sentiment and feeling did not agree with his, I should differ with great deference. I am too radical myself to agree with the belief of Lea Henderson in "Daniel Rochat," but she agrees so perfectly with herself, as a character, that I can not conceive of changing the result of the play. It is most painful, but inevitable. I understand that it would be infinitely more comforting to bring the lovers together, but I think it would be entirely out of harmony with the two characters. They represent opposite types, equally strong, equally sincere. In both cases love meant a demand, and a concession on either side could not have been genuine, only a means to gain an end. Lea was wise enough to see this, and the dignity and pathos of her renunciation are to me most eloquent. The public does not like to be pained in its amusement, and I doubt the general popularity of Sardou's last play. It is a tragedy of convictions. Daniel's yielding was only a temporary weakness; he was as secure in his disbelief as Lea in her belief. They had grown into different faiths, and the sympathy they desired each in the other simply did not exist. Lea says: "The distance between our souls would only widen and widen, and finally engulf our happiness." The interest of the play seems to me to lie in the development of the two characters; the arguments on both sides of the religious question seem to me mere platitudes—they have been made over and over again. The woman's belief is a sentiment of her nature lived into conviction; the man's atheism an experience verified by living; it answers his requirements, and agrees with his study and observation. Why should her influence contradict his determination? His mind would surely assert itself against her, and knowing this, she felt her failure. No, I can not imagine an influence strong enough to change the character of either, and the infinite dignity of the separation expresses perfectly a love that life made impossible.

Apologies of "La Tour de Nesle," of which I spoke but now, it may not be uninteresting to recall the fact that Dumas and Gaillardet fought a duel, by reason of some quarrel they had. It was in 1834. They fought with pistols, at fifty paces, advancing to fifteen paces, and firing at will after the word. Neither was touched. Although both desired to continue the duel, the seconds, being of the regulation French stripe, refused to allow it.

But one—Bixio. This gentleman was a good deal like Hammer of the Ninety-seventh. He besought Dumas

(who was an excellent shot) to kill Gaillardet at the first fire—"not that I have any feeling against him," quoth Bixio, "but I have heard that every man receiving a fatal gun-shot wound turns around before he falls. I would like to know if it be true—purely from a scientific standpoint. Kill him, please."

But Gaillardet lived until 1882. And how with Bixio? During the revolution of 1848 he was leading a charge against a harricade in the Rue Soufflot. A ball fired from a house-top struck him in the shoulder, passed through his lung, making a wound fifteen inches long, and came out near the dorsal vertebrae.

Bixio leaped convulsively into the air, spun around three times, and fell upon his face.

"It is true—they do turn," he muttered, as the blood gushed from his mouth and nostrils.

He had solved the problem.

In Tuesday's papers I read an account of how a young woman was prevented from "seeking a watery grave" (Call) through "hurling herself into the black waters of the bay" (Chronicle) by means of "the timely intervention of one of our efficient police" (Examiner). The cause of this young person's desire to choke herself with dirty water was apparently a barber—a very Lovelace of a barber, who had three inamoratas.

Sigh no more, girls, O sigh no more,
Barbers deceive ye ever
From flower to flower, like bees, they soar—
To one girl constant never.

Now, far be it from me to prevent the sex from making fools of themselves in such a manner as seemeth best to them. That they can do so thoroughly no true man will deny. But I consider their selection of homunculi extremely uncomplimentary to the stronger sex.

For instance, some months ago a young girl, as handsome as she was silly, committed suicide for a tailor. Did I say a tailor?—nay, he was a tailorkin—a sartorial hop-o'-my-thumb.

This was certainly hard on the youth of the city, but presently there came another. This time the young lady, notwithstanding the fact that she was a handsome brunette, fixed her affections on a boot-black. But he was a faithless and cold-hearted boot-black, and allowed her to sit, like Patience on a monument, smiling at grief. "Alack! Alack! O my boot-black! He cometh not," she said, "I am a weary, weary—I would that I were dead!" So she took strychnine or something, and the doctors held an autopsy, and doubtless commented on the beauty of the cadaver.

Now this third creature would slay herself for a barber. I pray her pause. Let her kill herself, an' she will, but worthily. There is nothing romantic about dying for love of a tailor, a barber, or a boot-black. Let her take higher ground. There must be gamblers, burglars, or murderers with whom she could fall in love. Were she to kill herself for one of these, she would at once attain a more permanent place in literature than the columns of a daily paper.

My little dears, (of the lower classes,) when you want to commit suicide, do it romantically. Then shall nothing so become you in life as the leaving of it.

Monday night I went to the California to see Mr. Edgar Fawcett's play, "The False Friend." Mr. Edgar Fawcett has written some excellent verse and some very clever novels. He has also written a very bad play. It is called "The False Friend."

Mr. Edgar Fawcett's play bored me immensely. I stood it as long as I could—I am soon and easily bored—and then I went to the circus.

I had been in some doubt as to why "old" John Robinson calls his concern a "great moral circus." It could not be by reason of the personnel, for a more truculent looking set of low-browed knaves than are the supers I never saw. I soon discovered the reason. Dan Rice, the sometime clown, who is connected with the circus in some other capacity, delivered what I am justified in calling a homily. He apostrophized our Golden Gate, our climate, the beauty of our women, etc., and then emitted some moral apophthegms, and bade us all be good. If we are, I suppose we shall all go to a celestial circus in the New Jerusalem.

Mr. Rice closed by introducing what he called "the beau ideal of beauty—the most renowned, elegant, and distinguished lady in the perfeshun—Maddumazell Dee Granville." The lady appeared clad in a combination of evening dress, street dress, and tights. She wore a large white hat, an extremely décolleté corsage, which gave promise of leading to a dress, but only developed into a gauzy and extremely abbreviated skirt or skirtlet of lace, which fell around her hips. Below were tights, encasing a pair of massive limbs. But the Maddumazelle was massive all over.

She began by seizing a chair in her teeth, and waving it gracefully around her head. In the intervals of this performance she would assume a statuesque attitude, (a circus statuesque attitude, bien entendu), and survey the spectators with superb scorn. I caught her eye during one of these intervals of magnificent fatigue, and I know in my heart of hearts that the Maddumazelle despised me.

They have an excellent rider in this circus—Mr. Robert Stickney. It is not so much what he does as the way in which he does it. He is one of the most graceful of men—a rare thing with Americans—and a handsome fellow withal. He is slightly reminiscent of Omar Kingsley, the famous "Ella Zoyara." Of course you remember him? I was reading Gottschalk's memoirs recently, and a reference that he makes to the furore caused at Havana by the "hermosa señorita Zoyara" reminded me of the last time I saw that peculiar person. Of course every one knows now that "Ella Zoyara, the greatest lady equestrienne in the world," was Omar Kingsley. But for a long time it was not known, and the strength and dash of Kingsley made him a phenomenal success. He used to be an extremely handsome fellow, with curling black hair, black eyes, small hands and feet, and a fine figure. I can recall him now, entering the ring as a jaunty écuyer, his riding-whip at the traditional angle, making eyes at the men, and kissing his finger-tips. They used to rave over him in the Spanish-American lands to the south of us. Many were the gifts Zoyara received from amorous Spanish dandies.

But I am wandering. I was going to speak of the last time I saw him as Zoyara. It was at his benefit, and he was the ring-master. Many years had elapsed since he had worn the female garb. But when Zoyara bounded into the ring, the transformation was complete. No one would have recognized the smug ring-master of a few moments before. She went through the regulation feats with daring grace, and finally came to the hoops. She cleared all but one, which an awkward super persisted in holding at an impossible angle. Three times she passed it, and each time the super grew more uneasy and more awkward. Finally Zoyara attempted it, but the super had lost his head. He succeeded in catching Zoyara's foot with the hoop, and she was dragged from her horse, and hurled with much force to the ground, where her forehead struck against the edge of one of the wooden stools used for standing on.

There was a roar of dismay from the audience, and then a storm of hisses leveled at the unhappy super. Zoyara rose, picked up the hoop, gracefully presented it to the super, smiled, kissed her hand to the audience, bounded after her horse, mounted, and finished the act successfully. The whole thing was so neatly done, and Kingsley's command of his temper was so great, that the audience fairly rose at him.

I admired his self-control extremely; for I had seen him drilling his troupe once when there was no audience present. The vigor of his profanity then convinced me that had such been the case at this time he would have laid out the super with a stool.

The other evening I witnessed what its participants believed to be a "social gathering." It was the annual something of one of the many lodges to which I belong, and which I never attend. Curiosity led me to look in.

The revelers were all very worthy people, of the lower middle class. But they took their pleasure sadly. Between the dances the sexes separated. The men gathered like flies around the door, and glared gloomily at the women. The women sat in rows around the room, and stared stonily at the men. A decorous hush pervaded the—I was going to say mortuary chamber. One looked involuntarily for the corpse.

But two persons struggled against the general gloom. One was a large fat man, in a sad-colored suit, who walked about the room with a sweet though artificial smile upon his lips, and a straw in his mouth. This latter was evidently intended to give him a reckless appearance.

It failed—it reminded the spectator only of coming rain.

The other person was a man attired in yellow garments—the coat being of the variety known as "sack," and the trousers of the variety known as "baggy." This person carried a light cane with him upon the ball-room floor. He also endeavored to divert the current of the public mind. A preposterous child in a red frock was standing in the centre of the floor. The yellow-clad man stiffly advanced, and solemnly chucked the child under the chin. The action, I have every reason to believe, was intended as a playful one. But the preposterous child began to sniffle, the assemblage looked on with mute though solemn disapproval, and the yellow-clad man faded from the fête like the dissolving view of a stereopticon.

A wicked wit in one of the Paris papers gives the following as the repertoire of plays at Sarah Bernhardt's theatre:

"Sarah Bernhardt the Sculptress." In this piece Madame Bernhardt will sculpt a bust of Monsieur Damala.
"Sarah Bernhardt the Paintress." In this piece Madame Bernhardt will paint a painting of Monsieur Damala.
"The Taking of the Bastille by Sarah Bernhardt." In this piece Madame Bernhardt will storm the Bastille, single-handed, against an army of veterans. The army of veterans will be represented by Monsieur Damala.
"The Creation of Sarah Bernhardt." A Scientific Drama. In this piece Monsieur Damala will assume the rôle of Chaos.
"Sarah Bernhardt in Spain." With Ballet. In this piece Madame Bernhardt will imitate the sound of castagnets by simply shaking herself.

Doctors, as a rule, grow very cold-hearted. I met one Thursday evening of last week, who was apparently in a hurry and a temper. Being in neither myself, I thought I would add to his:

"Hullo, Doc!" I cried, "whither away so fast? I know it's not a patient, by your speed."

"No," he replied, "it's"—Here his voice fell to a hoarse whisper.

"Ah," said I, "that's what I supposed. But what do you look so glum about, then?"

"Because I'm late," grumbled Medico. "I just came from Oakland, and a cursed idiot jumped off the boat, and made us lose half an hour. Confound him!"

"Perhaps he didn't think of the delay he would cause."

"Of course he didn't. The man was evidently a boor. Utterly destitute of breeding. To keep three or four hundred passengers waiting just because he wanted to relieve the world of his worthless life. No gentleman would do such a thing, sir."

Perhaps the doctor was right. If any of you recollect Monpavon, in Daudet's "Naboh," you will remember that he went to his death gaily, with a flower in his button-hole and a smile upon his lips; that he killed himself in a bathroom, that "he might make no mess"; and that he left an apology for what mess he did make.

On the California Street cars last Wednesday I saw a—to me—most interesting Old-Fashioned Person. He was clad from head to foot in black broadcloth, which is now never worn save by old-fashioned persons and parsons. His hat was a silk one, but there was no "bell" to the crown, no "curl" to the brim. It was a plain, simple cylinder, with a little rim around the bottom—such a hat as Muldoon wears on the variety stage. His collar was a standing one, and rose threateningly on either side of his face toward his ears. He showed a full expanse of shirt-front (ladies may not have noticed that for these many months the shirt-front has disappeared, and is only visible in evening dress). In this shirt-front appeared the familiar shirt-studs of our child-bood—the ones which are really buttons, and which really button the shirt. Around the shirt-studs appeared the like-wise familiar imprints of a thumb—a maddened thumb, which, in impelling the stubborn stud, had wreaked havoc with the shirt. The cuffs were those laboriously antique things which doubled back upon themselves. At the intersection of the baggy ridges thus formed were a pair of United States shields, gorgeous in the glitter of red and blue enamel. I am patriotic, but I could not muster moral courage enough to wear those sleeve-buttons.

This Old-Fashioned Person was really delicious. He looked as if he had just stepped out of 1850.

But he detected my perhaps too inquisitive gaze. Regarding me with asperity, he took a large apple from his pocket, which he sternly peeled and ate.

Ah me! He was indeed old-fashioned. I lack the courage to consume in public either peanuts or pop-corn.

A number of months ago I translated a most amusing sketch by Gustave Droz, entitled "L'Ame en Peine." It went on to say—but never mind what it went on to say. It was officially condemned by the Virtue and Morality Editor of the Argonaut. He was stern in his condemnation. He said he was surprised that I should ever have done such a thing into English. It was calculated to bring a blush to the cheek of every modest maiden.

Etc., etc., etc.

I accepted my punishment meekly. I confess I am not strong on what is or is not calculated to bring the blush to the cheeks of modest maidens. My ideas, in fact, are so extremely heterodox upon this subject that I sometimes consider these easily-colored maidens as not modest but only prudish.

Perhaps I am wrong.

However that may be, the obnoxious MS. was promptly pigeon-holed, and I sometimes gaze upon it when I feel that I am growing wickedly free in my language.

Yet the other day there came into the Argonaut office a MS. It was a translation of the same sketch, and it was translated much more literally than I had dared to do it. I repaired to the Virtue and Morality Editor.

"Have you read this?" I inquired.

"No."

"Do you know what it is?"

"No."

"It is a translation of the same sketch for which you so fiercely scored me some months ago. You remember?—the one which 'was calculated to bring a blush to the cheek of every modest girl'?"

"Well?"

"Well, this translation has been done—and well done, too—by a most estimable young lady, whom you know and esteem."

The Virtue and Morality Editor of the Argonaut wheeled round upon his chair, and devoted his powerful mind to the inspection of his morning mail.

He knows more about mails than females, evidently.

I happened upon two items in the Paris papers last week which interested me extremely. Both were about Henri Murger's "Vie de Bohème." This—one of the most charming books that ever was written—I read once a year. I am never without a copy. Or stay—I was some months ago. My extravagant praise so impressed a naval friend of mine that he ransacked the town to purchase a copy just before he sailed, and such being our barbaric condition that there were none to be had, I loaned him mine, on condition that he would return it when his ship reached New York—which promise he loyally fulfilled.

Of the two items of which I speak, one was a mention of the fact that the "Société des Amis des Livres" had just published a luxurious edition of Murger's book. This society, by the way, consists of some three-score wealthy book-lovers, who meet once a month, eat a good dinner, drink good wine, and discuss good books—not "good" in the moralist's sense, but in the bibliomaniac's. They have a fashion, too, of getting up costly editions of famous works, printing two or three hundred copies, and then destroying the plates.

Well, they have just issued a marvelous edition of the "Vie de Bohème." It is printed on creamy, ribbed paper, as thick as Bristol card-board. It is the traditional rivulet of text in a meadow of margin. And it is thickly studded with the most dainty etchings in the world.

Alas! I shall be unhappy until I get my fingers on a copy, and I can not spare the money. The superfluities of life cost me so much now.

The other item I saw was an account of the death of Jean Wallon, author of a number of works on philosophy and religion. He was the original of the character of Colline.

Delightful Gustave Colline! Man of many books, I love thee! From the "Foreign Authors' Pocket" of thy shabby, snuff-colored vestment, to the abyss in thy coat-tails where dictionaries lay engulfed, thou wert wont to produce gems of wit which Murger embalmed in prose. Genial Gustave Colline! May thy life in the next world be as bappy as that in this was merry.

A book not so well known as the "Vie de Bohème" is a sequel, which takes place during the Revolution of '48. In the ups and downs of that troublous time Colline becomes Minister of Foreign Affairs. He at once installs the ministry in a café, and proceeds to play billiards for the various embassies. The amounts put up against them range from some thousands of francs for the post of minister at the Court of St. James to a glass of beer for that of Switzerland. The prudent Colline thus amasses considerable lucre before his official head falls. Some of this he gives to Rudolph and Schanard, two Bohemian friends, who at once charter a cab for a month, that being their ideal of luxury. The fall of Colline's ministry leaving them stranded for funds, and having nowhere else to go, they cook, eat, and sleep in the cab for the remainder of the month. The meeting between the fallen statesman and his two friends—he having discovered their ambulatory residence by reason of a stove-pipe sticking out through the circular window in the back—is touching in the extreme.

Zulana had been down to Monterey for a few days. I will admit it frankly—while she was gone I had been having a Time. I will further admit frankly that when she came back I said nothing whatever about what kind of a Time I had.

But the finger of fat was poised above me. Zulana found me out. And this was the way:

I was engaged in skillfully disposing my locks over my marble cocoanut, when Zulana entered. As the malpunctuated report said of Palmerston, "she entered in her hand, a paper in her eye, a glare."

I saw that glare, and shuddered.

"I should like to know," she began, in a somewhat high-keyed voice, "I should like to know what this means."

"Certainly, my dear," I meekly replied, "you shall—as soon as I know what it is."

I was not tooting my horn very loudly that morning. I am an old bird, and I fully recognize the fact when the day is cold.

"It is," she replied, "or rather it purports to be"—here her voice became bitterly sarcastic—"a poem."

"Well, well, my dear, what if it is? And who wrote it?"

"It is in your handwriting," said Zulana, "and it is very silly. I will read it." And she did. It ran thus:

A broken fan! O hapless wight!
Gaze on your work with soul contrite.
Think what a clumsy lout you are
When thus a fragile fan you mar—
Hate yourself for your awkward plight.

Yet broken fans may be set right;
Not so the hearts their owners smite—
Longer they bear the fatal scar
Than does the fan.

Shall I forget that merry night?
Shall I forget those eyes so bright?
Graved on my heart their memories are—
Graved on my heart, too, is the scar.
Would I could mend it as I might
A broken fan!

She read it execrably. I couldn't help noticing that, despite my terror.

"Now, if you can explain to me what this means," she began, icily—

"Why, nothing at all, Zulana. How can you be so absurd? It is just some little poem I have seen somewhere and copied—that is all."

"When you lie to me, sir," she said, cuttingly, "I wish you would at least not insult my intelligence by doing it so transparently. This was written by you. It is original, for there are corrections in it. See—here you have changed thing to lout; and then again fan-sticks reunite to fans may be set right."

"Why, y-e-e-e-s, so I did, come to think of it. I did write it. Upon my word I had forgotten it."

"A likely story. Now, sir, I want to know all about this. Whose fan did you break? And to what creature do you permit yourself to address such language? 'Graved on your heart is the scar' indeed! you old fool!"

"Don't be absurd, Zulana," I interrupted, glibly. "There was no fan, no woman, no broken heart, no merry night, nothing. It was just a fancy of mine, that's all. I was struck by the jingle of the words A broken fan, and thought they would lend themselves readily to the refrain of a rondeau—such as it is. You know I sometimes toss off little bits of verse."

I was gaining ground. I concluded to take the aggressive: "Now don't you think you have made a mountain out of a molehill? Doesn't it strike you that you've been acting rather foolishly?"

Zulana answered, it seemed to me, rather at cross purposes: "You were struck by the jingle of the words 'a broken fan'?"

"Yes."

"And you thought you'd 'toss off a rondeau'?"

"Yes."

"And there was no fan?"

"No."

"No 'broken heart'?"

"No."

"No 'merry night'?"

"No."

"And no woman?"

"NO!"

I breathed more freely. I was out of the woods. But Lord! How I had lied! Still there was a look in Zulana's eye which made me uneasy. She spoke:

"I am sorry that you should have involved yourself in such a network of falsehoods. Had you owned up at the beginning I might have looked upon it as some trifling thing, and forgotten it. Now the anxiety you display, your wealth of lies, the ardent nature of these lines—all these things convince me that it is much more serious than I had supposed. I knew you thoughtless and fond of gayety, Zulana, but I did not think—"

Here her voice faltered, and reversing the piece of paper she had read from, she handed it to me, and hastily left the room.

What were the words upon the other side of that cursed bit of paper that I should first groan, and then swear at my idiocy? Few, but significant—it was a little, plain, simple bill, and it ran thus:

San Francisco, August 28, 1882.
Mr. Zulano,
To ORFÈVRE & CO., DR.
MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.
To repairing Mother-of-pearl Fan.....$4.75.
Received payment,
Orfèvre & Co.

Thus tottered and fell to the ground the colossal fabric of fiction I had so industriously reared. Woe, woe!

Zulana hasn't spoken to me for several days. She'll come round after a while, though. But when she does, I hope she won't go through my pockets any more.

One thing is certain. I must quit—well, quit writing verses on the backs of bills.

ZULANO.

SOCIETY.

The leading social event of the present week was the dinner given by Honorable and Mrs. Leland Stanford to a number of their friends at their city residence on California street on Tuesday evening last.

The house was tastefully and abundantly adorned with cut flowers, and evergreens, and semi-tropical plants, every apartment being enlivened and ornamented with beautiful floral designs. Guests began to arrive at a quarter before seven, and were received by the host and hostess in the main parlor. Mrs. Stanford had on a royal velvet, court train, and wore diamonds and emerald ornaments. At eight o'clock dinner was announced, and the Governor advanced toward the banqueting apartment with Mrs. Stephen J. Field, followed by the guests, and Mrs. Stanford and Judge Field in the rear. The table was simply a marvel in the matter of its floral adornment, which was a feast of itself, to say nothing of the splendid repast that followed, and which lasted until eleven. The following are the names of the guests, and the order in which they sat at the table:

Mrs. Judge S. J. Field on the right of the host, who sat at the centre of the table, on the east side; then to the right of Mrs. Field Rev. Dr. W. H. Platt, rector of Grace Church; then Miss Carrie Gwin, S. M. Wilson, Mrs. Colonel Charles F. Crocker, James Flood, Mrs. William T. Coleman, D. O. Mills, and Mrs. ex-Senator William M. Stewart; to the left of Governor Stanford, near Mrs. D. Ogden Mills, General McDowell, Miss Swearingen, Major Rathbone, U. S. A., Mrs. ex-Senator William M. Gwin, Judge Sawyer, and Mrs. S. M. Wilson. Mrs. Stanford sat opposite her husband, with Judge Field on her right, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, J. W. Mackay, Mrs. Easton, William T. Coleman, Mrs. D. O. Mills, ex-Senator William M. Stewart, and ex-Senator William M. Gwin; and on Mrs. Stanford's left were Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, Mrs. General McDowell, Ogden Mills, Mrs. Major Rathbone, Edgar Mills, Mrs. James Flood, and Colonel Charles F. Crocker.

Cards, with names of guests, lay on the table at places designated for occupants, those for the ladies being composed of white satin, twelve inches long, fringed and hand-painted. In the centre of each card was the name of the lady guest and the date, and at the top a monogram L. S., all in gold letters. In front of each lady's plate was a basket of old gold filled with roses tied with satin ribbons of many colors; in each basket were Pauline, Marshal Neil, bon celine, Homer, Duchesse Brabant, Lamark, saffron, and Hermoso rosebuds. The gentlemen's cards were six by four inches in size, and each contained the name of a guest, and in front of each plate was a boutonniere of tuberoses.

On Wednesday morning last General McDowell entertained Admiral Aslambeff and Prince Meschersky at breakfast. There is quite a round of festivities promised next week, conspicuous among which is the reception to be given by Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills, in honor of their son, who married Miss Livingston, of New York, some five or six months ago, and their daughter, who was married to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the distinguished journalist, a little more than a year ago, all of whom are at present at Milbrae, at which place the reception will take place on Tuesday evening next, a special train to carry guests having been chartered to leave here at 9 in the evening. On the succeeding evening there will be a brilliant gathering at Menlo Park, the occasion being a reception by Baron A. E. Olarovsky, the Russian Consul-General, to distinguished officers of his government now in this city, and others. The anticipated arrival of the Princess Louise and her husband, the Marquis of Lorne, has thrown our British society into a whirl of social excitement. The party left Quebec yesterday, and are expected to arrive here on or about the middle of the month. The Cosmos, (carrying fourteen guns,) Admiral East, which will soon arrive in port from Victoria, has been detailed to carry the party to British Columbia.

Notes and Gossip.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Mastic, of Alameda, who have been staying at Monterey for a few days, have returned. Mrs. Eddy and her daughter, Mrs. Sawyer and her daughter, and Mrs. Pillsbury, are all in Switzerland. Mr. and Mrs. D. McRuer have been spending a few days at Monterey. Mrs. Fawcett, of Santa Barbara, is at Monterey. Mrs. W. H. Wallace has returned from Etna Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Walker, of San Rafael, accompanied by Miss Walker, are in New York. Colonel and Mrs. James H. Withington, and Mr. and Mrs. Willard V. Huntington, who have been spending a week or so at Monterey, have returned. Miss J. P. Adams, of Oakland, who has been visiting Monterey, has returned to her home. Miss Mamie Wilson, of San José, who has been visiting Mrs. Judge Wallace, has returned to her home. W. P. Harrington, of Colusa, left for the East yesterday. Paymaster Colby, U. S. N., and Mrs. Colby have returned to Mare Island from Napa Soda Springs. Mrs. Senator Miller and Miss Dora Miller will return to New York from Europe next week. Mrs. Breckinridge, Mrs. W. F. Good, and Miss Sue Wilkins, returned to Monterey on Saturday last. Mr. and Mrs. George Hamlin, who came on here from New York to be present at the wedding of Mrs. Hamlin's sister, (Miss Gerke,) have been spending a few days at the Hotel del Monte. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crocker and Miss Hattie and William H. Crocker are spending a few weeks in Norway. Mrs. W. S. Keyes, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Blanding, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Laton, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wetherbee, Mrs. J. H. Dickinson, and Miss Ortiz were among those who went to Monterey on Saturday last to stay over Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. James V. Coleman have returned from Tahoe. N. G. Kittle and family have returned from San Rafael for the winter. Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Scott have returned from Monterey and Santa Cruz. The Misses Adams, of Menlo Park, left Thursday last for Washington Territory, accompanied by their father, Mrs. R. G. Sneath and daughter went to Tahoe on Wednesday last. Mrs. General Barnes and her son William leave for the East on Wednesday next. Mrs. Ford, who has sojourned three months at the Big Trees, Yosemite, and other places in the Sierra Nevada mountains, has returned to the Occidental. Mrs. R. McDonough, who accompanied Mrs. Ford, has also returned to the Occidental. Mrs. Adam Grant, accompanied by her son and niece, Miss Minnie Hammond, of Chicago, are at Lake Tahoe. Major Hammond is at Clear Lake, the guest of Captain and Mrs. Floyd. Miss Jennie Miller of Sacramento, is visiting in this city. Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Huntington and party, who spent a portion of last week at Tahoe and the Geysers, returned on Monday last, and will leave for New York on Monday next, via the Southern route, stopping over a few days at Los Angeles. Mrs. Creed Haymond went up to Sacramento on Monday last, to stay a week or two. Mr. and Mrs. Loring Pickering went to Monterey on Saturday last, and returned on the following Monday. Miss Lizzie Stevenson, of Sacramento, is visiting friends in this city. James Freeborn and family, who have been stopping quite a while at Monterey, accompanied by Miss Smith, returned home for the season on Monday last. Mrs. H. L. Holden and Miss Canfield have also returned from Monterey. L. W. Curtis, U. S. N., will arrive here from the East to-morrow. Livingstone Stone, U. S. Fish Commissioner, is visiting this coast, and is at present in Monterey. Ex-Governor F. F. Low and Miss Flora Low returned from Monterey on August 2d.

VANITY FAIR.

"Surf-bathing," says a writer in the Atlanta Constitution, "is a revelation. I went in yesterday with a lovely and modest woman from the North, with whom I had but a short acquaintance, although I had seen a good deal of her. As we stood awaiting the coming of a huge wave she clutched my arm, and poising herself on one foot, hended the other leg, and pulled her stocking over her knee—trying vainly to make it cover a strip of white. She thought nothing of this, neither did I. In an instant the wave was on us, and we were riding the swell as happy as a pair of ducks. That evening this lady went sailing with the same party that had been bathing with her in the morning. As she stepped over the side of the boat she exposed about four inches of her pretty silk stockings, and her face was crimsoned with shame and mortification. Now, why this difference? But if the dressing on the beach and the unconsciousness with which the most modest of girls stand the exposure consequent upon it is remarkable, the conduct of a crowd in bathing is still more so. That is the miracle of social life, I think. The girls are clad in this prancingly pretty dress—the passing pressure of the waves outlining the curves of the body—and yet there is not the slightest prurient suggestion, and no hint of gallantry. I don't believe a scandal was ever born in the surf. I noted at one of the resorts several days ago the handsomest woman I ever saw on the beach. She was tall and slender, but divinely formed. Her pretty head was poised like a queen's upon a swan-like neck that swelled into snowy bust and shoulders. A bathing shirt, loosely tied about the neck, and without sleeves, gave perfect play to her superb body. Black silk stockings, and feet that left perfectly outlined footprints, set regularly in the sand at about thirty degrees divergence. There was something royal in the unconscious grace and beauty of this woman as she walked into the water the cynosure of a hundred eyes. Utterly dwarfing her escort, she seemed disregardful of his presence, and when the foam was clustering about her knees raised her gleaming arms above her head, and went like a flash into the body of an incoming breaker."

English authorities state that youthful damsels make use of polar-blue paper, with a lily thereon inscribed, for epistolary purposes. Engaged people adopt orange flowers as a fitting emblem for their writing paper from the moment of betrothal to that of marriage. Sporting characters are naturally lavish of horse-shoes and jockey-caps, even where billets-doux are concerned. A successful ménage proclaims its happiness to the world by choosing two partridges contentedly sitting side by side on a tuft of greensward, as the inscription for the family note-paper. In the matter of perfumes, héliotrope du roi has recently come in vogue. But refined society seems to have frowned so resolutely on all intrusive odors, even of the most balmy description, that it seems useless to give any novelty in that line the peculiar stamp of fashion.

"A great many fine clothes are worn at the Saratoga hops," writes a World correspondent. "On a recent Saturday night a lady, who never appears in the same dress twice, wore a magnificent pale blue costume, very full dress indeed, and blazed with diamonds at her ears, on her wrists, and a splendid necklace around her throat. This simple creature thought a hotel hop the place to display jewels. Suppose she were invited to the White House to dinner, what difference could she make between an occasion of the highest distinction and a tri-weekly dance at which half the women wear their morning clothes? There seems to be something in the feminine nature that keeps them from applying practical sense to small things. I look upon that bejeweled woman as a corrupter of youth. How many younger women and girls will she lead astray? The conclusion is forced upon me that she thinks the hotel hop a very distinguished affair. I don't." To offset this the London World remarks: "For possessors of good jewelry, the affectation is, excepting on great occasions, never to display it. Naked arms and throats in the young greet one on every side. Let anybody who doubts this cast an eye around a dinner table in the country. It will then be perceived that those known to have untold wealth in the shape of these refinements of the toilet hidden in their dressing boxes only allow them to shine by their absence. Then turn to the poorer country neighbors, and it will be found that they carry all their little possessions on their person in the shape of bangles, chains, etc., with accompanying gold locket."

Parisian society is now considerably Anglicized. The cafés are taking the names of taverns and bars. The aristocrats are giving their children English names, and it is considered the right thing to have none but English servants, and speak to them in English. Dinner is served in the English style. On some tables English dry sherry has made its appearance. The Prince of Wales is the modern French exquisite's model of manners and elegance.

Of men who go to balls, says the London World, less could be written than of men who stay away. It may safely be predicated that there are but few of the rougher sex who confess to going for their own amusement. The men of mature age who frequent the dance are, as a rule, of the ever-green species, who, having discovered the secret of perpetual youth, aspire to no higher ambition. The middle-aged individual whose youth was not gilded is also a feature of the modern ball-room, and has even been known to become a social power. The young man of promise is not very often seen; yet there are exceptions, for there are those who hold that no social opportunity should ever be let go by, and a supper given to the wife or a dance to the daughter of some powerful personage may be a first step to better things. Here and there one observes men whose presence is entirely inexplicable. They find no amusement in the monotonous round, and take no pains to disguise their weariness; they are too indolent to utilize the dance opportunities which the more pushing are on the lookout for, and they share the amazement of their friends as to why they ever come, and where, having come, they do not hurry away again. Then there are the energetic persons, who dance every dance as if their lives depended upon it. It is generally supposed that they belong to the class of chance diners-out, who, having performed yeomen's service for the plainest and most unattractive girls in the room, are rewarded by an occasional eleventh-hour invitation to dinner, when some one more desirable has failed. Time would fail to describe one-half of the other types that crowd the doorways, and, for the most part, whose one redeeming quality is extreme youth. There is the epicene young man, whose perfumed air and embroidered appearance rouse strong desire to violence on the part of his more robust brethren; there are the herd of striplings whose chief characteristics at present are their feet and hands. There are the youths of slightly maturer growth, who, having arrived at the white-waistcoat stage of development, and on the strength of being members of some newly established club of juveniles, and of having their names inscribed on half a dozen invitation-lists, feel that the world indeed is their oyster. The smart young man of the present day is one of the most curious outcomes of the age; his future is doubtless full of the widest possibilities, which are all the more interesting, inasmuch as his present condition is utterly destitute of promise of anything in particular.

An attempt has been made abroad to revive coral, but as yet with no extraordinary success. Coral of the purest rose hue is becoming to very few complexions, and should be worn only by young people. The rarest specimens are extremely dear, and these require a setting of diamonds to make them at all desirable as personal ornaments. Mrs. Mackay is said to own the finest rose coral in Europe. But as she owns the "finest" of every gem, few ladies envy her this possession, which is about as available as a curio, and is simply something to admire in a velvet jewel case.

Science has investigated the absorbent and radiant power of different fibres and different colors, but man in his wisdom disregards this, and prefers the worst instead of the best. Woman may expose her brain to the direct rays of the sun by wearing a small, useless bonnet, but fashion compels her to carry a parasol to compensate for it. On the other hand, fashion, not so cruel as she is painted, is equally in favor of large hats with useful brims. Not so with man. Broad brims are tabooed, and parasols are not permissible. With regard to the neck, man has no choice; a collar he must wear, and one fitting close to the neck and reinforced by a cravat or tie. To woman alone is granted the comfort of low-necked, half-low, heart-shaped, or loose-fitting collars. The body, or trunk, is no better off. Man must wear a stiff white shirt, a vest, and a lined and padded coat. Woman need wear but one (visible) garment, which may be made as light and thin as is possible without being transparent. It is even doubtful whether the tightly drawn corset, that object of universal use which is so violently denounced by the opposite sex, causes more discomfort than the numerous articles with which man surrounds himself; for physiologists have learned that woman can breathe with the upper part of the lungs, (thoracic breathing), and therefore suffers less from tight-lacing than man. As regards the arm, matters are pretty evenly balanced, with the odds in favor of woman, who may shorten her sleeves as much as she pleases, and in no case wears more than one long-sleeved garment where a man wears three. Cuffs she may dispense with, but he can not. Her sleeves may not be lined; his must, unless of very thick material.

"Cheering intelligence comes to us from the shores of France," says the New York Hour, "to the effect that crinoline is not to be worn. The proverbial taste and intelligence of the French people have once more asserted themselves, and have secured the world at large from an immeasurable calamity." It is interesting in this connection to compare this statement with some of the fashion news of two decades ago. A correspondent in a Paris letter to Harper's Weekly written in the spring of 1860 announces the "gratifying news" that the "Empress Eugénie has issued the imperial fiat that the crinoline shall be at once abolished. It is most fitting that the empress should end this grotesque deformity of fashion, since, as every one is aware, it was only brought into fashion when Napoleon III. was expecting the speedy advent of a Napoleon IV."

France is still unrivaled in two things, both highly essential to the perfection of a toilette. One is the trimming of a bonnet, the other the draping of a mantle or of a skirt. Recalling the well-known recipe for a perfect salad, which requires a miser to dole out the vinegar, a spendthrift to pour in the oil, and a madman to stir the whole, one might say that to secure perfection in a costume it should be cut by an English tailor, draped by a Frenchman, colored by an Italian, and the details supplied by a Spanish woman.

"A dreadful new fashion is threatened," says a correspondent, "which will undoubtedly not be adopted by American young ladies at Newport or the White Mountains. It is said that adventurous Parisiennes intend to start the style of wearing silk socks instead of long stockings for mountain excursions, under boots in passementerie to imitate lace. I do not believe that this new mode will ever become popular; but it may be tried by some of the eccentric French dames and damsels who go on tours throughout Switzerland. When I last visited Chamouni I saw two young Frenchwomen, apparently ladies, who were making the excursion to the Mer de Glace in full Knickerbocker costumes of dark-brown cloth, which differed from the ordinary suits of that character worn by men merely in having a short-belted blouse substituted for the masculine jacket and waistcoat. These young ladies while ascending the mountain met a party of American tourists. One of these last, a little girl of about ten years of age, was mounted on a mule. 'Pray pull down your dress, mademoiselle,' said one of the Frenchwomen, as she passed, serene in skirtless array; 'you are showing your ankles,' which reminded me somewhat of the gentleman who was bathing in a river, and who, seeing a coach with two ladies in it overturned in the midst of the stream, gave as his reason for not going to help them get out of the carriage that 'he had not any gloves on.'"

STUDENTS IN PARIS.

How Ebenezer Bowers Led a Gallant Charge against a Rival Studio.

A cloud of smoke, a roar of laughter. "Bravo, Bottomgate! Bravo!" Some dozen bearded, disheveled young men are seated at a table on which are the remnants of a meal, and many empty bottles. They all gaze in one direction, and renew their shouts, "Bravo, bravo!" A small, pale-faced, pale-haired young man is dancing wildly at one end of the squalid room. The son of an animal painter, and intended for the church, it was only after some three years of study for the divine office that he suddenly wearied of the prospect of slipper-garnished curatodom, and took to his father's trade. To this moment he has not lost the effects of his pious training, and will discourse for hours on religion and its intimate connection with the development of art; paints Virgins and St. Johns, and spends the evenings growing more and more pious as he grows more huffed. Bottomgate has a little studio of his own. A narrow street, a narrower doorway, and black passage. Feel your way up the dark staircase—up, up, cinqième! open the door. A bed on the floor, easels, canvases, and hare walls; a wash-stand and chair are wheeled into the corner; bed-room and studio in one, sickly with paint odors. But who are Bottomgate's friends? French and Americans, they are assembled at a farewell supper of a bony, under-sized New Englander, who is returning to his native country after three or four years' study in Paris. Coming a raw lad, fresh from the severe discipline of an Eastern States home, he is leaving well-certificated in the "péchés mignons" of his artist "camarades," and an exhibitor in the Salon. Eb'n-e-e-zer B-a-o-w-e-r-s, as his friends delight to call him, imitating his dry, nasal twang—Ebenezer Bowers arrived in Paris utterly ignorant of the world in which he was to live so long, and having a high ideal, almost a reverence for art, was somewhat taken aback when, on entering the atelier, he and another "nouveau," a large-headed, huge-lipped French dwarf, were set to fight a duel with long paint brushes. Each rubbed his brush in color, red or green (complementary colors by an atelier joke,) and dabbed at his opponent's face or neck, a hit in the eye or mouth by either bringing mighty applause from the crowd of smoking blouses congregated around the fencer-victims. Ebenezer as "nouveau" was obstreperous and dogged, and as a punishment for his sundry complaints and murmurings when ordered to go out and bring drinks for his numerous masters, he was made to spend a whole night boxed up in the wooden pedestal of a giant cast, which was placed, extinguisher-like, over him, the cast on top to keep him fast in his prison the while. Half-stiffed, dusty, dirty, but amenable at the next morning's exit, from that day Ebenezer was conquered; nay, even became zealous in his office as "nouveau." One afternoon, coming back liquor-laden, he was attacked by the "nouveau" of a rival atelier near, and after a prolonged struggle robbed of his precious burden. Arrived torn, breathless, and bleeding, he recounted his misfortunes to his brethren, who rose en masse, and quickly arming themselves with sticks, umbrellas, fire-irons, and large easels, and stools, (these last as battering-rams,) led by Ebenezer, made a furious onslaught upon the hated neighbors. The bitter clamor of a hundred eager tongues, the stormy thumpings on the stout door of the rival studio-castle, lasted for some half-hour, when that hinged barrier giving way, the two wild hordes rushed at each other with fury. Who can sing the deeds of daring of these Greeks and Trojans of art? The battle was long and bloody, and Ebenezer a hero. When the gendarmes arrived, and took the rioters bodily off to the "mairie," Ebenezer was last seen struggling, wriggling, and kicking in the arms of a gigantic "gardien," who with great difficulty bad collared this torn, foaming, squirming, swearing Yankee, still clinging to the fragments of a recaptured bottle. The two ateliers were shut for some six months after this by order of the minister, but Ebenezer came back with an established reputation. This spare American would not leave Bottomgate to dance alone to-night were he not tinged with sadness at parting, for he much likes to "sling his toes," as he calls it. Ebenezer, at "Bullier's" is a great sight. Head up, eyes right, solemn of countenance, his legs describing all sorts of strange arcs, they being but hung loosely to his body, he will dance against all comers. "I went to Bullier's the other night," wrote Bottomgate, when he first came to Paris to the tutor priest who watched over his earlier years; "I went out of curiosity; you know one ought to see this sort of thing while one is in Paris. Dining in the Quartier Latin at ten o'clock, I made my way along the boulevards—along, along, until I saw 'Jardin' in large gas letters, and following the stream setting towards the entrance, I found myself elbowing by a crowd of strange-looking young men and maidens. A blaze of light, and the tops of many hats, walking, music, noise, and dust. A widespread, low-roofed and iron spandrelled region, lighted by a thousand lamps. To the left the band played on a platform; to the right a sea of tables and chairs, under trees hung with Chinese lanterns. In the midst twenty or thirty sets of quadrilles were going to the music of 'Olivette.' The men, gay young fellows mostly, and lithe-limbed, walk, amble, or frisk across and back with their partners, without any sort of arrangement. They choose their own steps, their own time, and seem to dance out of pure exuberance of spirits. I saw strange groups of students—tall, mulatto-colored West Indians, with the respectable silk top-hat, hobnobbing with wild-looking 'Gascons' or sun-browned Midi youth. Then a handsome Apollo-like German, tenderly arm-in-arm with a hump-backed, sad-eyed 'camarade.' This is the true genius of the place. But professional dancers come here to show off. A crowd near the band watches the efforts of four of these last. I laughed to see two Chinamen there, much pressed to dance by some roguish young women, but this failing, a bold maid took them by the pigtails, and, one in each hand, walked them about the garden like lambs. Another tried to make a tall, shy, awkward young Englishman dance. His confusion was delicious; but I am quite sure he did not understand half the volume of words she poured out at him in French. There was the usual quota of British tourists in loud check suits and caps, and a paterfamilias, who scanned, somewhat conscience-stricken, but with great curiosity, the antics of the dancers."

WASHINGTON REMINISCENCES.

More Concerning the Social and Political Lights of Ten Years Ago.

Madame Catacazy, wife of the Russian Minister, was a woman of fine presence and unusually attractive. All of the outer surroundings at her mansion were Siberian; but, once within the presence of this peerless French woman under a Russian banner, and the atmosphere was incomparably genial. It was not unusual for a person to run against a dozen lackeys in white kids, and carrying silver trays for the rapid transit of your cards, before you approached the lady of the house; but, after going through the ceremony of paying your respects, you were free to roam at will through the salon, and listen to graphic descriptions of Russian winters, told in excellent English, flavored with French accent and gesture. Madame Catacazy was not so young as she was handsome. Her complexion was like the heart of a sea shell, and her hair was of the color called golden, while her eyes, although not positively beautiful, did not detract from her attractiveness. She always wore a robe of velvet at her receptions, made with a graceful sweep of train, also a loose sacque of the same open at the throat, with flowing sleeves heavily embroidered in gold, revealing the fair proportions of her neck and arms, and the superb contour of her shoulders. The dwelling of the Muscovite minister was not remarkable in any sense, unless you observed the Russian coat of arms embossed in white on the glass panels of the door, and at times saw the Russian ensign flying from the flagstaff. Madame C. was a great admirer of General Grant, and the best proof that the President was not unkindful of the lady's taste existed in the fact that many a bouquet sent her from the distinguished occupant of the White House exhaled its fragrance in the most pretentious apartment of her house. The madame used to take pleasure in calling a number of her American friends to account for "reading so much in French, but not talking it."

At this time Hon. Lyman Trumbull was United States Senator from Illinois. He was undoubtedly the ablest lawyer and the most skillful debater in the Senate at the time. "He was a man of unquestionable integrity and great moral worth, possessing rare scholarly attainments. While not easily irritated, I once saw him aroused while engaged in debate with the uncongenial Senator from Massachusetts—the great Sumner. It was Greek meeting Greek, and the two colubiniads fired red-hot missiles at each other over Governor Walker, of Virginia, whose administration they were warmly discussing. Trumbull resided upon the site of the old capitol prison at that time; and, by the way, this was the spot where Calhoun breathed his last; where Mrs. Greenough and Belle Boyd lingered long in prison; where Mrs. Surratt was confined, and where Wirz was hung."

Garrett Davis was one of the senators from Kentucky, and was the Rip Van Winkle of the upper house. He had been asleep since 1840, and did not know in 1870 that slavery had been abolished. Otherwise he was a man of some ability, and spoke clearly and well; but his topics of 1840 generally cleared the galleries. One day Mr. Davis dropped down into the waiting-room of the Congressional bath-rooms, and was informed by an attendant that it was his turn next, "as Mr. Revels, the colored senator, would soon be out." Davis turned as white as a sheet in his amazement, and glared angrily at the author of the monstrous announcement. But the enraged Kentuckian did not speak until he returned to the Senate chamber, where he cleared out the galleries in a two-hours' speech.

The severe and uniform plainness with which Miss Sherman used to wear her hair was a safe criterion for strangers to follow at receptions bent on identification without introduction. She was as refined and courteous in her bearing as the general was sharp and abrupt. She had a fair, intelligent face, as I remember it; cold, rather than intense or eager, and a grace that always provoked admiration when mere prettiness fails. Miss Sherman of that day is now the wife of a naval officer. Beck, now a senator from Kentucky, and then a representative in Congress, used to go a good deal to receptions with his oldest daughter, who was very handsome, (she died not long ago,) and the two always held a small court, on account of their prepossessing ways. Another daughter of Senator Beck is the wife of an officer of the marine corps.

Mrs. Senator Williams, of Oregon, was one of the most dazzling ladies in Washington; and after the appointment of Mr. Williams as attorney-general she became much sought after, and her receptions were crushes that were impossible to describe. It was said of Mrs. Williams that the men all admired her and the women all hated her. It was also said of Mrs. W. that she was formerly "an uncultivated person," and there was much more fault found with her by those of her own sex. But she became the queen of society, all the same; and with great wealth, like that of Mrs. Mackay's, at her disposal, she would, like the latter lady, have dazzled the fashionable world. On New Year's, 1873, while making a call on Mrs. Williams with Major Drew, of the army, I heard Governor Graham, of North Carolina, formerly United States senator, secretary of the navy under Fillmore, and Whig candidate for vice-president with General Scott—"gentleman of the old school, sir," and he himself distinguished for his charming manners—say of the hostess that she was the most bewitching woman he had ever met. Governor Graham had, notwithstanding, known Sallie Ward, Harriet Lane, Madame Le Vert, Mrs. Bouigny, Mrs. Aaron V. Brown and her two daughters, Cynthia and Narcissus Saunders, and other famous ladies who had lived in Washington before or during Buchanan's administration. During the winter of 1869-70 Mrs. Williams had with her from Oregon a Mrs. Xavier, who was also quite attractive. Senator Williams was at that time probably the strongest man from the Pacific Coast, unflinching in his duty, untiring in his energy, quiet, unostentatious, and greatly esteemed. Allan C. Thurman was in the Senate then, and was the ablest man on the Democratic side. He was scholarly and practical. He was always ready, spicy, and sound in debate, and graceful and parliamentary at all times. His oratory was chopped, but classical. The oldest man in the Senate at that time was Simon Cameron, the Thurlow Weed of Pennsylvania politics.

Charles Sumner and Oliver P. Morton were the leaders of the Republican party in the Senate at that time. Mr. Sumner was the most attractive man in the Senate, and all who visited the galleries for the first time at once searched for the senator who was nearly beaten to death by an enraged South Carolinian in the old Chamber twelve or thirteen years before. Sumner had a massive forehead, over which lingered a swath of gray hair. He was a very fine-looking man, but he was always so soberly and so solemnly in earnest that he was, at least seemingly, uncongenial. He was a compeller of men, and had a domineering manner at times. But he was the most steadfast, energetic, and influential friend the black slave of America ever had, and his was the quickest hand to shake that of Hiram Rhodes Revels, after the latter's admission to the United States Senate in 1870 by a very close vote. Sumner was pleasant at home, so I have heard his friends say. I never spent but one evening with him. I had just introduced Charles Wetmore, of Oakland, who was in Washington early in 1873 for the first time, to Colonel John W. Forney, at or near Willard's Hotel, and the colonel said that he was going up to Sumner's, (who had a house next to the Arlington,) and invited us to accompany him, which we did. Louis Napoleon had died that day, and Mr. Sumner told us all about how he had met him at Lady Blessington's, in London, away back in the '40's, and what he thought of him. He also gave us a description of Count d'Orsay, whom he often met at Lady Blessington's. He showed us his books and many valuable old letters, and otherwise entertained us for an hour or more, and then invited us to supper, which we all declined, because we were to attend a banquet to be given that same evening at Willard's to Stanley, the discoverer of Livingstone.

I have said that Morton was one of the leaders of the Republican party in the Senate at that time. He was the leader, I think, because he was a stronger man than Sumner. He lacked the New England culture and eloquence of Sumner, to be sure, but he had the impressiveness and strength of character of the brainy and liberal men of the West, and he often carried schemes successfully and triumphantly through the Senate that Sumner would never have dared to have advanced beyond conception. I always considered Morton too bitter in his reconstruction opinions, and thought he lacked that noble sentiment of Lincoln, "with malice toward none, and with charity for all," in a too marked degree for the good of the country. Still he was one of the greatest men of our day, and the glory of his fame as the "War Governor of Indiana" is imperishable.

I well remember the day that Ben Butler and "Sunset" Cox had their great scene in the House. I have forgotten the subject upon which they met upon this occasion, but think it was over a resolution to expel a member from South Carolina on account of his sale of a cadetship, during which Cox referred to Whitmore as a carpet-bagger. The latter was defended by Butler, who showed that Whitmore had lived longer in South Carolina before he became a candidate for Congress than Cox had been in New York when he became a candidate for a like position. It was give and take between the two, and the House was in a great uproar for some time. At last Cox got very angry, and went over to the Republican side, and said some very severe things right under the nose of the hero of Big Bethel, as Butler was often derisively called in those days. He was so severe that the great body gradually got over its disorder, and you might have heard a pin drop anywhere in the hall. Cox was so close to Butler that the latter might have strangled the little New Yorker on the spot, and many were afraid that Butler would answer Cox with a blow. But he did not. He sat in his seat at least thirty seconds after Cox had concluded, and then the people in the crowded galleries leaned forward, and every member rose to his feet. He then glared at Cox another half minute, and, waving him away, said: "Shoo fly! don't bodder me!" I doubt if there was ever, in the House of Representatives, such a roar of laughter and vociferation. Democrats themselves laughed until they cried, and Cox got quietly back to his seat, and tried to rally. But it was impossible, and the house adjourned in a state of great indecorum. Bill Shaffer, who made a fortune out here in Bodie three years ago, rode down from the Capitol that evening in an F street car, and seeing Butler in the same conveyance, asked: "How, in the name of wonder, did you ever think of 'Shoo fly' in your reply to Cox?" "Well," replied Ben, "you see he had been buzzing around me for several days, and the first thing I thought of, when he came so near to me to-day, was a blue-bottle fly, so I—" "Great God!" exclaimed Shaffer, "what an escape you made! Had you breathed the word bottle, Cox would have coked you up forever." All who call to mind the attitude of Generals Grant and Butler in relation to each other at the close of the war, will appreciate Shaffer's remark. I first met Mr. Cox at the house of the Misses Emma and Ada Webb, who lived with their parents on Sands Street, Brooklyn, when not playing, in July, 1866. I found him to be even at that time a very fascinating fellow. He was exceedingly felicitous, I remember, in his manner of congratulating Miss Emma Webb upon her success as a lecturer, which was temporary, she having taken the field as the Anna Dickinson of the Democratic party. During the progress of the scene between Cox and Butler, Sargent, James A. Johnson, and Axtell were members of Congress from California, and probably remember the episode well. Old Covode, though not a member at that time; was on the floor, and fell laughing into the arms of Fernando Wood. There was a rare picture! Just imagine Fernando Wood, of New York, hugging honest old John Covode, of Pennsylvania, on the floor of the House of Representatives. No wonder Congress adjourned after such a tableau.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 30, 1882.

B. C. T.

Complaints are made at Aix-les-Bains that baccarat is played at the Casino to an altogether unwarrantable extent, and it is believed that the pastime will, in consequence, be prohibited. A short time ago an English gentleman, while on his wedding tour, lost at that place all the money he had with him, and was obliged to telegraph home for more.

A Baltimore girl at Cape May, says Puck, wears a red-white-and-blue bathing suit, and when a shark chased her the other day she said he came for a close shave.

OFF FOR THE WAR.

The Gay Scenes in London at the Departure of the Troops for Egypt.

The London season is now virtually over. That annual event, for so long a time the tacitly acknowledged terminal point to summer fashionable life in the metropolis—the Eton and Harrow cricket match—has taken place, and the only thing that now keeps people in town is the excitement attending the departure of the troops for Egypt. It is curious that so trifling and common a thing as a cricket match, the contending elevens of which are composed for the most part of boys still low down in their teens, and consequently in its play and progress unfruitful of any but a comparatively inferior order of cricket, should be regarded as an event sufficiently important to wait in town for, or to draw the crowds it does of the highest people in the land every year to Lord's Cricket Ground. The secret of it, however, lies in the fact that Eton and Harrow, while the two greatest, are the two most aristocratic schools in England. As such, they comprise among their hundreds of boys the sons and brothers of the noblest and most influential families in the kingdom.

But, though the match is over and the usual time to flit has arrived, and August is the month for the German baths, yachting at the Isle of Wight, grouse-shooting on the Scotch moors, and garden and lawn-tennis down at their country places, the swells of London society at the end of this season have other and graver matters to occupy their thoughts, and the talk and gossip in the smoking-rooms and bow-windows of the United Service, the Army and Navy, the Guards, the Marlborough, the Raleigh, and the other aristocratic military clubs of the West End, where the swells most do congregate in the off hours, is not of the last escapade of a certain professional beauty; the latest scandal about the Countess of A— and the actor; the charms of the "City" man's daughter whose dot, despite her beefy exterior, has made her the belle par excellence of the season, or the pot of money so-and-so landed at Goodwood, but of who has gone, is going, or is likely to go to Egypt. England is certainly sending her crack troops to do battle for her this time, and if regiments whose officers consist of no one less than a baronet can't subdue the hordes of the rebellious Arabi, it will not be because their country grudges to let them go and do it.

The past week has witnessed the departure of the Scots Guard and the Household Cavalry, and great was the excitement attending their going. On Sunday morning the first battalion of the former regiment marched out of the Wellington Barracks amid a scene unequalled since the days of the Crimea. Clad in their white service jackets and white-turbaned helmets, there was little resemblance in them to the red-coated, bear-skinned fellows that all American visitors to London know so well as the sentries at Buckingham Palace, the Tower, the Bank of England, and the Haymarket Opera House. Down along the Thames embankment to Blackfriars Bridge they marched, eight hundred strong, with their band playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and "The British Grenadiers," and officered by some of the bluest blood in Britain. Though but seven o'clock, the neighborhood along the line of march was awake, and every window occupied by kindly faces and waving handkerchiefs. Cheer after cheer rang out upon the morning air, and sticks, hats, and handkerchiefs waved over the heads of the surging crowds which lined the roadway, and in their enthusiasm pressed in upon the soldiers as they marched, on several occasions actually lifting them off their feet. In command of the brigade of which the Scots are to form a part also went the Duke of Connaught. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Connaught, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge accompanied his Royal Highness on board the transport to bid him good-bye.

On Tuesday the Household Cavalry, consisting of a squadron each from the First and Second Life Guards and the Horse Guards, (popularly known as the Blues,) sailed. They were differently accoutred from the way one is accustomed to see them, sitting like equestrian statues in their sentry-boxes in Whitehall. The burnished cuirass, high plumed steel helmet, and long jack-boots were missing, but in their stead were serge tunics—red for the Life Guards and blue for the Blues—white turbaned helmets—a style of headgear now generally adopted throughout the army for service in hot countries—and brown leather boots, swathed about the leg with serge. The Prince of Wales, who draws pay as their colonel-in-chief, was on hand with the princess to make them a speech, and bid them good-bye. In the undress uniform of a field-marshal, he rode round and inspected them, while the princess sat in the carriage and looked on. Then he complimented and congratulated them, and wished he was going with them, after which the officers of the squadron dismounted, took off their right-hand gauntlets, and advancing to the carriage of the princess, she shook each cordially by the hand, and wished him farewell.

It was a pretty scene in its way, and no doubt the prince meant all he said about wanting to go himself. They say his royal mamma won't let him, but the truth is he is sadly out of health, and has been warned by his physicians for some time past to go a slower pace than heretofore, if he wished to feel the weight of England's crown on his head. The selection of Colonel Ewart to command the household cavalry in his stead is regarded as rather a snub to the famous though somewhat eccentric Colonel Burnaby, the author of "A Ride to Khiva," who has lately been promoted to the lieutenant-colony of the Blues. Among the other swells who went as officers of the squadron were Lord Edward Somerset, (the Duke of Beaufort's son,) Sir John Willoughby, and the Hon. Oliver Montagu, (son of the Earl of Sandwich). The latter is the gentleman whose name was so frequently, and somewhat injuriously to the lady's reputation, coupled with that of the Countess of Lonsdale during her husband's lifetime, but who since the earl's death and the succession to the title by his brother, has rather given up the running in favor of Mr. Luke White.

Lord Coleridge, the Lord Chief Justice of England, is reported to have accepted the invitation of the Bar Association of New York to pay them a visit next. Lord Coleridge was the attorney-general who prosecuted the Tichborne claimant, gaining much notoriety. He is one of the few "old school" lawyers left in England. LONDON, August 11, 1882. COCK.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.
Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."
A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY Editor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1882.

CONTENTS:

Page.	Page.
EDITORIALS:
The Political Machine and the	INDIVIDUALITIES..... 3
Republican Party—The Manner	ECHOES FROM EVERYWHERE..... 4
in which Higgins, Gannon, and	SOCIETY NOTES AND GOSSIP..... 5
Buckley got Control of Affairs	VANITY FAIR..... 6
—Would it be Possible to Revive	STUDENTS IN PARIS..... 6
the Old People's Party?—A Re-	WASHINGTON REMINISCENCES..... 7
view of Some of the Disgraceful	OFF FOR THE WAR..... 7
Scenes at the late Primary Elec-	THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS..... 10
tion—An Irish Prophet—The	A REBEL SONG..... 10
Roman Catholic Miracles—A few	HAWTHORNE'S POSTHUMOUS NO-
Men who Should Receive Re-	VEL..... 11
election to Office..... 8-9	THE TUNEFUL LIAR..... 11
CIRCLED BY FIRE..... 1	DRAMA:
CHICAGO NOVELETTES..... 2	Betsy B.'s Letter—Wagner's
SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS..... 2	New Opera—Dramatic Gossip..... 12
LITERARY NOTES..... 3	STORYETTES..... 14

BY TELEGRAPH.

SACRAMENTO, Friday Noon.

Estee's nomination is a surprise to me. It is not satisfactory. I will reserve till next week the privilege of defining the Argonaut's position.

PIXLEY.

In a government where all can vote it is important to understand the details of party management; to know who it is who manages, and how it is that the machinery of our political system is manipulated. In a community that governs itself through political parties it is necessary to know by whom the party ranks are captained, and by what means and for what ends the party machine is run. We have just elected ninety-six delegates from San Francisco to a Republican State Convention. Before this paper is read it will be known whether the scheme that was hatched in this city shall have succeeded or not; whether the candidate of the machine shall have been nominated or not, and whether the slate shall pass through the convention unbroken, or whether it shall be sponged clean by the honest men of the party. If this were to be the only convention of the season we would not write this article; we would accept the situation, trusting that no serious consequences would result from the deliberations of a body in which there are so many intelligent, brave, and honest men as will be found at Sacramento. When that body has acted, made its platform, and nominated its candidates, we shall repose with great confidence upon the intelligence and patriotism of the Republican party for a result. To the extent that candidates are deserving, to that extent they will be supported; to that extent only have they any right to expect support. All things else being equal, a Republican should vote for a Republican. All things else being equal, a Democrat may vote for a Democrat, but under no circumstances should an intelligent community be caught supporting good men on a bad platform. The candidate who will endeavor to make it appear that he is better than the principles he represents is a hypocrite. The candidate who will falsely claim to be controlled by party principles which do not satisfy his intelligence and conscience is a knave, and the candidate who dare not avow his opposition to a party declaration, if he thinks it wrong, is a coward. Later in the campaign we can make our personal applications.

Let those who claim to be intelligent and respectable Republicans consider by whom, how, and for what purpose the party machine is run within their party lines. In the Republican party, and in the Democratic party, there is the "machine." Each has its "hoss," and each its recognized captains, who are of the working force. The rank and file belong to both parties. The pimps, lovers, and idlers; the criminals, drunkards, and vagrants, who compose so large a portion in all great cities, form a common working force for these machines. We presume we will not wound the abilities of Messrs. Higgins, Gannon, Chute & Co., of the Republican party, nor of Christopher Buckley or Mr. Samuel Rainey, of the Democratic party, by recognizing them as managers of their respective machines. They are friends, and they work together. Like attorneys, they work for themselves by obtaining from their clients professional employment. Messrs. Higgins & Co. are not retained by the Republican party to attend to its general business; nor are Messrs. Buckley & Co. for the Democracy. It is a mistake to suppose that these gentlemen are Republicans or Democrats. They are neither. They are professional men. They are politicians, working for themselves and for money, just as the lawyer works for money for himself. One political firm works within the Republican party; the other within the Democracy. State officials, legislators, and supervisors are to them in the relations of judges and jurors before whom they practice. Their clients are largely corporations. For a consideration they will aid to obtain a franchise or promote special legislation. Between the "hosses" there is never any personal feeling. These machines often run together, and work in entire harmony. Messrs. H. & Co. will aid Messrs. B. & Co. to carry a Democratic primary. B. & Co. will return the favor to enable H. & Co. to carry a Republican primary. Thus each firm secures the convention of his party, and secures the nominees of that convention. When the candidates are nominated, Messrs. B. & Co. meet with Messrs. H. & Co. and agree who shall be elected. All things being equal, each party machine will vote for and work for its party, and look to its party for the small offices to reward its workers. But if one party has the kind of a man in candidacy that the machine can not use, then the two machines unite on the other candidate, by an agreement as to the division of appointments, and all the pimps, lovers, drunkards, idlers, vagabonds, and office-holding and office-seeking workers of the two machines unite to elect those candidates with whom the hosses have made the best terms. Oftentimes the machines get all the deputyships, as we think they did in the case of Stuart and — (we reserve to a later day in the campaign the privilege of giving the names of the candidates with whom hargains shall have been consummated.) These hosses are sometimes in desperate conflict. These machines are often in earnest opposition, just as lawyers who, getting deeply interested for their respective clients, work zealously for them. When the trial is over, the lawyers shake hands. When the party warfare is ended, the hosses "connubiate." To rail at Higgins, Gannon, and Chute; to scold at Buckley and Rainey; to lose one's temper, and get angry in writing or speaking about them, is neither wise nor politic. It only gives them additional importance, and they are not even offended. They had rather be kicked than not noticed. A lawyer had rather be advertised by abuse than to be overlooked. So the hosses get business, and the machine gets grists, by the constant assaults upon them. If the Bulletin had never written of the "Higginses," the "Gannons," the "Chutes," of Boss Buckley, and Sam Rainey, these gentlemen would not hold the exalted positions they now occupy in the estimation of knaves, nor would they be regarded as so important by fools. They would not be hosses. George Hearst would not employ them to make him governor, nor would Horace Davis entrust to them his candidacy for Congress. And there would be no machine, if from the respectable—simply respectable—class of society, there were no one to employ them. If the gas company, and the water company, and the railroad companies had never engaged them to carry a convention, or hired them in the lobby, or used them for any purpose, but had always treated all the professional politicians as criminals, there would be no such practices within the field of politics as now exist—that is, these things would not exist, if business men performed their duty as citizens. If the business men, property-owners, and tax-payers would take as much interest as does this rohhier class, the corporations, railroad, gas and water companies would not be compelled to hold their property, as they now do, at the mercy of these conspirators; the tax-payers would not be sweated as they now are by these soldiers of fortune. Those who have nothing are handed together by thorough organization, and marshaled by competent leaders, to prey upon those who have something. Millions are stolen which property pays through taxation; corporations are robbed and plundered. If the corporations would spend as much money, and put forth the same effort to assist the tax-paying community to resist these hosses and machines as they do to placate them and buy them off, they would not figure in either party. If the respectable element of society would combine, they could drive this vicious element together. It would be compelled to hide in one party or the other; and when it was once driven together, it could be crushed.

Now, very shortly we will have a municipal election in San Francisco. These factions are in command of all the party machinery. They will aid each other to put up nominating conventions. Buckley & Co. will run one; Higgins & Co. will run the other. They can not be beaten at a primary election; and if by any accident an independent man is nominated for office who has not sold himself to the machine, he will be betrayed and beaten. So long as decent, property-owning, tax-paying citizens are divided and the machines united, so long will society be governed by professional politicians, and the party he managed by hosses. The Bulletin earnestly advocated a primary election. It has been tried, and it failed, and primaries always fail. More Democrats than Republicans voted at some of the precincts at the last Republican primary. The election was a fraud in most of the wards. It was worse—it was a farce. The delegates are seldom representative men, and are often men without principle or property. They go to the convention for the money that is in it, or to serve some friend who wants office. There has been hut one successful mode ever found in San Francisco to secure good conventions, and to bring good results out of a municipal scramble—"The People's Party," "The Tax-payers' Party," "The Citizens' Party"—the party that came, purified and clean, out of the old Vigilante organization, and gave San Francisco the best municipal government it ever had—the party that was essentially an independent party. It was composed of the men who owned San Francisco. It had no County Committee; it held no primaries. It was neither Whig nor Democratic; it was neither Democratic nor Republican. It attended only to city politics; it left State and national politics to the management of parties. We should be glad to see this history repeated. We should be glad to have the experiment tried once more of independence and no party in the selection of officials for this city. We should be pleased if prominent merchants would take the lead again, and call together the members of some old and long-forgotten convention. Let them name another nominating convention. Let it meet in secret, and in secret consider the claims of all candidates for office. We shall be glad if Mr. Dempster, William T. Coleman, Sam Soule, 33 Secretary, or the ever vigilant "Eye," will call together a convention of good citizens to act as a nominating convention for municipal officers. Anything is better than the Republican party machine; anything is better than the Democratic machine. The fact is, and it is an alarming one, that we are falling under the control of a class of political managers, who are "roh-hers" in a very thin disguise. This city is drifting to confiscation; it is drifting into the control of an exceedingly vile and dangerous element. Let us quote from the Call a description of the kind of political future that is opening up to us. The description is accurate, and we have no doubt truthful. We delight in flinging an occasional brickbat at the Call office, but we always hope, if it hits Mr. Pickering, it will hit him on one of his soft spots where it won't be fatal. We always fire at his head. The Call is more accurate and impartial in its news-gathering than any other morning journal in San Francisco, and we quote from it the following:

The Seventh Ward polling-place was at No. 416 Folsom Street, and was a scene of turbulence and violence, disgraceful in the extreme. The two tickets in the field were called the "Boohar" and "Harrington," and each faction had on the ground the pick of the roughs and boddums from all portions of the city. Such a gathering of the vicious and criminal element has rarely been seen by those who had the misfortune to be residents of that portion of San Francisco. The roughs and malefactors of every ward seemed to be massed in this particular precinct, and the respectable mechanic or business man who endeavored to enjoy his right of suffrage was indeed in great good luck if he escaped without injury to his person or clothing at the hands of paid fighters, whose sole object was to prevent and obstruct those from voting who were in opposition to the men who hired them. Few of the real Republican voters of the ward were permitted to vote. Occasionally a respectable-looking person would fall into line, but before he could reach the ballot-box some person would catch him by the coat-collar, drag him to the edge of the sidewalk, and then let go, disappearing in the crowd. The individual who was so unceremoniously dragged out would naturally attempt to regain his place, and then the cry would be raised: "There's a fellow trying to sneak in." A police officer's attention would be called to him, and a second time he would be taken by the collar, and yanked out into the street, where he would meditate on the beauties of our free institutions for a few moments, and depart, a sadder if not a wiser man. This sport got to be quite monotonous after a while, and Tom McCormick, the pugilist, who was evidently the king-pin of the Boohar faction, enlivened things by displaying his powers on another bruiser's nose. He was arrested twice during the day, but was immediately released on bail, and resumed his interesting pastime. Jim Toland and "Yorkey" added to the zest of the entertainment with their presence. John E. Ross, Assistant Engineer of the Fire Department, took an active part in the affair, and was busily engaged in securing votes for the Boohar faction. One of Harrington's friends, named Ward, who was acting as challenger during his chief's absence, was dragged from his position near the door, knocked down, and pretty badly beaten. When the polls closed, there were fully sixty persons waiting in line for an opportunity to vote. As an evidence of the disgraceful manner in which affairs were conducted only two hundred and sixty-two votes were polled, although the club roll showed four hundred and sixty-two names, and it is safe to say that not one hundred of the ballots were cast by bona fide Republican voters. The afternoon was filled with successive fights, and the air was blue with blasphemy of the foulest nature. Altogether it was one of the most scandalous and disgraceful elections ever held in any ward, and reflects no credit on those concerned in it.

In the Twelfth Senatorial District, No. 37 Ellis Street, the Call says:

Among those most active in this ward were men known to the police as gamblers, vagrants, "lovers," and ward strikers, a class of individuals who make themselves very officious in ward clubs, irrespective of party, men who owe allegiance to neither of the great political organizations, and whose only aim is to dip in the sack of those who will pay most for their services.

The Examiner's account is equally emphatic in its narration of the disgraceful scenes. We do not quote from it because it is the Democratic organ, but we do not hesitate to declare that its narration is equally correct.

The Chronicle gives the following as its observation of the Seventh Ward contest :

In the Seventh Ward the professional politicians voted one hundred and ten certificates of registration, and carried their ticket by about sixty majority. This polling place was the scene of the worst and most disgraceful time ever witnessed at a primary, the details of which were superintended by William Higgins and Sam Rainey, a Democrat, in person. The police arrested no less than a dozen men, and interrupted the progress of about as many fights. It was said that some of the desperadoes employed to do this bulldozing actually contemplated the assassination of William Harrington, the leader of the opposing faction, and once during an incipient row he was knocked down.

We commend all this to the serious consideration of reflecting minds. We commend it to the thoughtful attention of Republican and Democratic gentlemen throughout the State, and heg of them to answer the question to themselves, whether a government can endure, law be enforced, property protected, and personal liberty preserved if this criminal element shall be permitted to obtain control? We will not close this article without saying how deeply we resent the conduct of certain men who consider themselves gentlemen, and who would be very indignant if we named them as spies in the Republican camp, as traitors to principle, as senseless, willing tools of the machine, and as selfish, cowardly figure-heads. When the time comes we will name them, and will abide the consequences of their indignation. We expect the criminal and blackguard class to allow itself to be used by the machine; but when men of property, of family, of birth, and official position, who have been honored in the past, and who are ambitious for the future, consent to go through a primary contest so utterly disgraceful as was this recent one as the candidates of the machine; when they allow themselves to be used as wheels, cogs, and levers in this Juggernaut that is crushing society, we will indulge ourselves in the luxury of naming them, and of classifying them with the vile company with which they associate. We have no suggestions, other than general ones, to make in reference to the mode of calling a county convention. We would prefer a non-partisan one; but if the Republicans are determined to run a straight ticket, we would not be averse to the Republican County Committee naming from the twelve wards twenty-four good citizens. We say good citizens. Let these twenty-four name forty-eight others, more or less, who shall act as delegates to a nominating convention. We would prefer this convention to be half Democratic and half Republican, but all respectable. A convention thus composed of good citizens could present such a ticket as no machine or combination of machines could defeat. It would sweep the city like a broom. It would bring out such an array of home defenders to fight against the party thieves as would be altogether irresistible.

The Roman Catholic journal, "devoted to the propagation," etc., says the Turkish empire will be overturned and demolished about the year 1882, and in proof of this assertion quotes the prophecy of a celebrated French papist by the name of Rohrerhacker, who wrote in 1832. This Rohrerhacker, or prophet, or whatever he may turn out to be, bases his prophecy upon those of Daniel and the Book of Revelations. He reproduces all the jargon and unintelligible jumble of the seven beasts and ten horns, the teeth of iron, the claws of brass, the little horn, and the purple and scarlet woman drunk with blood etc., and after figuring up horns, beasts, cities, kings, and kingdoms, ciphers out the destruction of Islam and the overthrow of Mohamedanism this year. This Rohrerhacker prophet of the holy Roman Church is silent about the agencies which are to accomplish this result. If it is England that is thus predestined to overthrow the Turkish empire, and to work out such grand results for Christianity and civilization as are involved in the destruction of Rome's greatest enemy; if the Crescent is to wane and fade out, and over it the Cross is to regain its ascendancy; if Constantinople is to become again an ecclesiastical appanage to Rome, and if England is the instrument for the accomplishment of this result, and the war in Egypt the opportunity—then it would seem to us that papal Rome, Catholic Ireland, the Land-League of San Francisco, and the Roman Catholic family journal, "devoted to the propagation," etc., ought to call off their dogs from England, dry up the yawp of resolutions and the clamor of Irish oratory, and let the Lion have full swing to work out the predictions of the prophet Daniel and the other prophet, Rohrerhacker.

The success attending the convention that gave our city its present officials, and the disgraceful failure attending the recent primary for delegates to the State Convention, are suggestive. Our Sheriff, Sedgwick, is a success. He was elected after a hard contest with one of the Pope's Democratic Irish, supported by both machines. Higgins and all Ireland, from the Cove of Cork to the Giant's Causeway, opposed the election of John Sedgwick because he was an American, and supported Desmond because he was not. Our County Clerk is making a good and clean administration. Alex. Badlam, the Assessor, is highly ornamental but awfully expensive. O'Grady, the Tax-collector, is Irish. John Cherry is all right for Recorder. Brickwedel is a full hand of trumps. The Treasurer is all right. The Board of Education is phenomenal. The Mayor is an honest man, and the Board of Supervisors is an improvement on any we have had in a decade. Some of these men ought to be renominated. It makes no difference how nominating conventions are called, if we get good candidates. It makes no difference how candidates are elected, if we get good officers. Primaries always were and always will be failures. There is no way of preventing a Republican scalawag from voting at a Democratic primary, or a Democratic scalawag from voting at a Republican primary. There has been no mode yet invented for keeping either party independent of the control of "hosses." We do not know of any human device for securing an honest and well-conducted primary election. The experience of San Francisco with all parties for thirty years past is that the best nominating conventions, the best candidates, and the best city governments come from conventions arbitrarily called and secretly conducted. If good men are brought together to make nominations nobody cares how it is brought about, except the men who want office for themselves or their friends, or who want to make money out of politics by some indirection.

The Roman Catholic family journal, "devoted to the propagation," etc., in San Francisco, devotes five columns in defense of the miracles at Knock and Lourdes. The only direct and positive proof of the miraculous genuflections of the image of the Holy Mother of God upon the gable end of the parish church at Knock, in Ballyhomis, afforded by these articles, is the testimony of a young girl whose mother is now keeping a prosperous boarding-house for the pilgrims who are thronging to this marvelous shrine. This testimony is amply sufficient to convince bigots, fools, or even superior minds who yield the control of their reason to ecclesiastical authority, or allow their intelligence to be governed by spiritual influences. No testimony can convince any one of sound sense—one with a sound mind in a sound body—of the possibility of any deviation from the established laws of nature. It is only the irreverent, and those misguided by education, who think God works His healing miracles through calcined marl from a parish church. This may do for the ignorant peasantry of one of Ireland's poorest parishes, but it shocks the reason of all intelligent persons, and it should offend the pious mind as something worse than blasphemy.

Our eloquent conversational friend, the Hon. Drury Melone, was chosen delegate to the Republican State Convention by the independent constituency of the Seventh Ward, as represented by the machine of Mr. William Higgins, Colonel Gannon, and Richard Chute, Esquire. He was chosen to cast his vote for the Hon. Morris M. Estee of Napa for Governor. We are sorry to be compelled to recognize this otherwise respectable gentleman as one of the utensils. We are not sorry to know that he will be hereafter identified by his scars. When such men as Horace Davis, Dr. Simpson, and Drury Melone become the willing instruments of William Higgins, Colonel Gannon, and Richard Chute, Esquire, we allow to the machine—bad as we think it—the better character, and one more deserving of the respect of good citizens.

"The latest news from Egypt to-day," said Chairman Toohey to the Land-League, "is that the English are getting fearfully worsted." A murmur of applause greeted this remark. Mr. and Miss Golder sang a song, the usual collection was taken up, and the League adjourned. What a hopping and jumping there must be among the fleas on the British lion when they are informed of the movements of the Irish Land-League in San Francisco.

It would seem as though, for the first time in the history of San Francisco, there is a real opposition to the old gas company. The companies that have been heretofore organized were all either strangled in the cradle or bought off as they evidenced competitive strength. These companies were all heralded with loud protestations of virtuous purpose. They were all advertised as real rivals, and all promised reduced prices and improved gas; but all either fizzled out or sold out. The Central Gas-light Company has come to the front without any fuss or brag. It is now producing gas, and has been supplying over twelve hundred consumers for more than six months. Among these consumers are the Palace and Grand hotels, the Russ House, the Tivoli, the Free Public Library, and the new Mechanics' Pavilion. At the last place the new light is seen in its perfection, and it is a beautiful light. The works already constructed evidence ample capital. The additional works now being constructed at the Fillmore-street front are of the very best character, and indicate unlimited means. When completed, San Francisco can be easily reached in all its parts by its mains and distributing pipes. In the meantime, the Board of Supervisors is indicating an intention to make a two years' contract with the old company. The new works are prepared to light two-fifths of the streets at less than one-fourth the price of the old company. In a short time the new company can light all San Francisco at one-fourth the money the old company is now demanding for a moonlight schedule. Our supervisors are justly earning for themselves a good name. We hope they will deserve it by resisting the golden arguments, and give the long-suffering people of this city good gas at low rates. More anon.

Every now and then the hog-wallow press of the interior breaks out into a spasm of personal denunciation against the editor of the Argonaut. Vituperative and abusive language is regarded by the more illiterate and vulgar country editor as strong writing. He sits upon an upturned nail-keg, in his unclean editorial den, and works himself into a fever of indignation because the views of the editor of the Argonaut are not his views. Unlearned, coarse, illogical, ill-tempered, irrational, vulgar, and malicious, he deems it the right thing to assault the Argonaut and its editor with vulgar personal abuse, because upon the question of immigration, naturalization, temperance, the Sunday-law, and other Americanisms, this paper is not in sympathy with the criminal, pauper, and vagabond element that is endeavoring to control the politics of the country, and endeavoring to destroy its institutions. This country editor is, as a rule, a foreign-born individual, usually a printer by occupation, who, by some process of intellectual development, has been transformed from the case to the editorial chair. As a rule he is of Irish birth or lineage; a papist in his religion, and a Democrat in his politics. He drinks whisky, chews plug tobacco, smokes a pipe, is unclean in his habits, immoral in his practices, and living upon the skirmish-ground and border-land between blackmail and heggary. His paper is his weapon of attack, which he uses as would a bravo or a blackguard to demand tribute, or as his mendicant-bag in which to receive alms. He hopes, in his assaults upon the Argonaut, to commend himself to the village idlers and politicians, among whom he passes for an oracle. He hopes to obtain the dignity of being kicked by us, and aspires to the immortality of having himself named in the Argonaut. This journal has now been established five years, and as yet no blackguard, Democratic, Irish papist, drunken country editor has achieved that distinction. We have no time for this kind of controversy, no space for it, and no inclination to indulge in it. And yet we will be honest enough to admit that we are not indifferent to it. We enjoy it; it flatters us; it is evidence that our shafts hit; it advertises the kind of work we are conscientiously endeavoring to do; it is an assurance that we are not working in vain.

P. S.—When this kind of country editor writes and prints personal assaults upon us, we would be glad if he would send us his paper marked "personal," as it frequently happens that we do not see these assaults. Friends in the locality will oblige us by sending copies for our scrap-book.

It is not without a pardonable amount of gratification that we call attention to the fifth plank in the platform formulated by the Republican Convention. It reads: "History and experience unite to prove the necessity of preserving one day in seven as a day of rest from labor. Without legislation on this subject, the laboring classes might be compelled to continue in unceasing toil; therefore we are in favor of observing Sunday as a day of rest and recreation, and while we expressly disavow the right or the wish to force any class of our citizens to spend that day in any particular manner, we do favor the maintenance of the present Sunday laws, or similar laws, providing for the suspension of all unnecessary business on that day." When it is considered that the Argonaut was the first to advocate such a plank, and that, single-handed and alone, it has hatted for its adoption, our exultation is excusable. There are many purblind Republicans who fear this plank will injure the party. They were never more mistaken in their lives. While in the city it is possible that the cohorts of Gin may cause some slight defection in the ranks, in the country the sentiment is almost unanimously in favor of the Sunday law. The issue is clear-cut—Respectability and Republicanism versus Gin and Democracy. Not the least gratifying feature of the matter is that the log-rollers sent by the so-called "League of Freedom" to Sacramento are reported as "extremely dissatisfied with the Sunday Law plank in the Republican platform." We are pleased that they are displeased.

In the affair of the twenty-sixth instant at Kassassin, the Egyptians met their second defeat at the hands of the British. Although they fought desperately, the discipline and superior equipments of the British force were too much for their ill-organized troops. It is now said that Arabi Pasha would like to make terms of peace. On Wednesday he asked for an eight-days' armistice. This may be the preliminary for a larger demand. Its prompt refusal by General Wolseley shows that the British nation intends to follow its former policy, and prosecute the war with its unrelenting energy until quarter without being begged for by the prostrate rebels.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

The Parisian Jesters.

Prince X., a noble stranger who has been in Paris precisely forty-eight hours, is asked: "Well, Prince, what do you think of our Parisian women, eh?" "Charming creatures, indeed; but you know from what I've seen of them so far I am not sure as to the constancy of their affections, you know."

A physician falls into a fit while making a round of visits, and is carried into a drug store. "Send for Doctor X—," says somebody. "No, no; not for him," says the dying man, feebly, at the mention of his rival's name; "if he brought me round it would advertise him! I prefer to die."

"Here, waiter, a glass of beer!" "Beer, sir?" "Yes, sir! Instantly, sir!" After the lapse of three or four minutes, the waiter having remained rooted to the spot, the would-be customer shouts again: "Ho, waiter! That beer!" The waiter (moving away at a snail's pace)—"In a minute, sir! I'll run off and get it now, sir." Guest—"You'll run? If that is what you call running, what do you do when you walk?" Waiter (promptly)—"I sit down, sir."—New York World.

The Maddening Waltz.

Professor James P. Welch, of Philadelphia, an old-time dancing-master, is going to begin a crusade against the waltz. He says that the waltz, as now danced, is peculiarly immoral and shockingly vulgar. We thought likely that just as we got so that we could walk around over a lady's train to waltz time, and felt as though we could mingle in good society and join the giddy throng, some giant reformer would sail in and hush the whole business. This is not the first time we have been left in a similar manner. Professor Welch claims that the dancers, especially among the lower classes, become too contiguous, and that at the seaside resorts waltzers are too sociable altogether. This is a natural result of the two sexes going in swimming together. It was not allowed when we were a boy. Of course the Atlantic is a pretty big pond, and there is room for all; but man is a social being, and he hates to go four miles away and bathe by himself when he is liable to have a cramp and get drowned. He naturally wants to bathe somewhere where a young woman, wearing a blue dressing-sacque and a bracelet, can run in and rescue him when he gets a cramp. Waltzing, however, should be reformed somewhat. The young man who thinks he ought to insert his nose in the ear of his partner while dancing ought to be taken out in the cloak-room and his attention called to his error. A large man with a two-year-old club could explain it to him so that the whole matter would be perfectly obvious. Waltzing is just like everything else—it can be perverted. Even the camp-meeting has recently been the subject of harsh and bitter criticism. When the camp-meeting gets perverted, it is time for us all to beware. None of us are safe. Whether in the ball-room, at the seaside, the camp-meeting, or in the sleeping-car, the journalist is surrounded by a cordon of disguised foes, any one of whom will down him if he don't keep his eyes constantly peeled. We live in an age of temptations, and consequent victories or defeats. Let us, therefore, brethren of the press, so live that the first man who points the finger of scorn at us may be worn out on the cold bosom of earth.—Laramie Boomerang.

Look Not upon the Soda.

There is a beautiful young lady in this city, a temperance girl, who has a pair of eyes that sparkle so that a stranger would think she was winking when she looked up and smiled. She was on the way to the temperance lodge the other night, and stopped at a soda fountain to get a glass of soda, and when the clerk asked what flavor she would have, she looked up, and smiled, and said: "I will leave that to you." The clerk said afterward, when her brother came in after the lodge was out, to whip him, that he would have sworn she winked. It seems some of the customers want a little brandy in their soda, and the proprietor told the clerk when anybody winked and looked sort of cunning, to put in a little brandy with the flavoring. The soda began to take effect on the girl just as she got into the ante-room, and instead of whispering the pass-word to the outside sentinel, that worthy official, who is a young married man, says she put her mouth up to his ear, and bit it, and then threw her arms around his neck. He would not have cared so much about this, only his wife was in the ante-room putting on her regalia. The soda girl also caused remarks in the ante-room by getting into her regalia first, and pulling it on as she would a pair of trousers. There is a hole in the door which the applicant for admission puts her mouth up to, and whispers the pass-word into the ear of the inside sentinel, who is a lady. The soda girl put her mouth up to the hole, after giving three distinct raps, and as the ear of the sentinel covered the hole on the opposite side of the door, the soda girl said: "Set 'em up. Soda with perfu (his) mery in it." As the regular quarterly pass-word was "Strong drink is raging," and the inside sentinel smelled liquor on the breath of the applicant, she thought some saloon character was trying to get into the lodge, so she drew her stuffed club, the badge of her office, and opened the door. Seeing that it was a member, the guard let the girl in, after reprimanding her for her levity, and the girl marched to the middle of the floor. The custom is for a member on entering to go to the middle of the floor, look at the grand worthy chair-holder, and place the right index-finger to the right side of the nose, and keep it there until the chairman responds, when the new-comer takes a seat. The girl instead placed her thumb to her nose, and wiggled her fingers, and went and took a seat beside the chaplain, and put her feet upon the desk in front of the good man. The chaplain fainted, the worthy chairman declared a recess, and the members all gathered around the sister, whose face was flushed. The sisters tried to get her into the ante-room, and soak her head, but she said she wanted to ride the goat, and she took a run and jump, and sat upon a table as though it was a side-saddle, and laughed so loud the brothers and sisters thought she would disturb the worshippers in a saloon not far away. Finally the choir struck up the tune, "Cold water, bright water," and the soda girl sang: "Johnny fill up the bowl," and tried to put her thumbs in the arm-holes of her vest, and walk like Pat Rooney. The brother finally got her to go home, and now it is a go-as-you-please between the girl and the drug-clerk and the proprietor and the girl's brother as to who is to blame.—Milwaukee Sun.

The Parlor Bed-room.

"On sundry occasions," said the Jester, "I have been sentenced to pass one night in solitary confinement in the modern chamber of horrors known as the spare room." The passengers all groaned in horrible chorus, and closing the car windows moved a little nearer the stove. "Yes," said the tall, thin passenger, "it is on the first floor, next to the roof, and the cold, steel-blue starlight glitters in through the dormer window, and sometimes between the shingles." "And you can reach out of bed with your hands," said the man on the wood-box, "and scrape enough frost off the walls to make a snowball as big as a turnip." "They won't let you have a light," the sad passenger said; "the old man says there is a heap of lumber and trash in the room, and they're afraid you'll set fire to something." "As you grope your wayless way across the room," said the Jester, "you bump your head against all manner of things you don't know the names of; bundles, and hunches of seed things, and weeds and 'yarbs' hanging up to dry, stiff withered leaves down your back every time you strike a hunch, and this makes it mighty comfortable for you while you sleep. And about half way across the room to the head, you black your eye and knock yourself down with an ear of corn, hard as flint and twenty-two inches long—took the first premium at the county fair eight years before, and the old man's had it hanging from the rafters ever since." "And if you sit up right suddenly in the night," said the sad passenger, "you run a scythe in your eye that hangs over the head-board." "The sheets are not so thick as tin plates," said the tall, thin passenger, "but they're a great deal colder." "And no matter how long or how short you are," said the Jester, "the blankets are always about six or eight inches shorter than you are. And if you tuck them around your neck and under your chin, your feet stick out all night." "And in that house," said Endymion, "they eat breakfast in the night, every time. You hear the old man about two o'clock in the night shouting at the family to get up and eat. You think there is a fire somewhere, and you want to run and jump into it, so you make a rush for the stairway, miss your way, walk out of the dormer window, slide down the snowy roof, and land down among the cattle." "It's all right, though," said the brakeman, "for the cattle toss you right back through the window again, and you go down stairs all right. When you find the alarm is only for breakfast, you say you believe you'd like to wash your face and hands before you eat." "All right," they tell you, "you'll find the trough right by the well, over in the twenty-acre piece, down by the timber." That's a mile and a-half away, and the snow knee deep. The first man who performs his ablutions breaks the path for the rest of the family." "You find a towel," said the cross passenger, "about six feet long, leaning up against the end of the smoke-house. You bang it against the corner of the house a few times, to make some breaks in it so that you can fold it up and carry it under your arm, like a piece of bark. You start away, but you come back and say you'd like a piece of soap." "All right." They give you a gallon of soap in a stone jar two feet high. You say you prefer toilet soap, and they give you a bar three feet long, and hard as an ax-helve." But here the whistle blew long and loud, and the passengers hurried away to a hotel full of solid comfort.—Burdette.

A REBEL SONG.

[The following lyric possesses great interest from the fact that it has seldom appeared in print in the North, and is said to have been very popular among Stonewall Jackson's soldiers, as they sat around their camp-fires in the Valley of the Shenandoah.]

"Come, cheerily, men, pile on the rails
And stir the camp-fires bright,
No matter if the canteen fails,
We'll have a roaring night.
Here Shenandoah brawls along,
There hurly Blue-Ridge echoes strong,
To swell the brigade's rousing song
Of 'Stonewall Jackson's way.'"
"We see him now; his old slouched hat
Cocked o'er his eye askew,
His smooth dry smile, his speech so pat,
So firm, so bold, so true;
The Blue-Light elder knows 'em well
Says he, 'That's Banks. He's fond of shell,
Lord save his soul! We'll give him hell!'
That's Stonewall Jackson's way."
"Silence! Ground arms! Kneel all!
Hats off!
Old 'Stonewall's' going to pray!
Strangle the fool that dares to scoff!
Attention! 'Tis his way.
Kneeling upon his native sod,
In forma pauperis to his God—
Stretch forth thine arm—lay bare thy rod!
Amen. That's 'Stonewall's' way."
"He's in the saddle now. Fall in!
Steady the whole brigade!
Hill's at the ford, cut off; he'll win
His way out, ball or blade.
No matter if our shoes be worn;
No matter if our feet be torn—
Quick step! We'll with him before morn
In 'Stonewall Jackson's way.'"
"The bright sun scatters hack the mists
Of morning—and, hy George!
There's Longstreet struggling in the lists
Hemmed by an ugly gorge.
Pope and his Yankees whipped before!
Bayonets and grape, 'hear Stonewall roar;
'Charge, Ashby! Pay off Stuart's score
In Stonewall Jackson's way."

A notorious scamp, much affected in a revival, once went to Jonathan Edwards, and said to him, in the religious parlance of the time: "I realize that I am the chief of sinners." "Glad to hear it," replied the dominie; "your neighbors have long realized it." "I feel," persisted the whining penitent, "that I am willing to be damned for the glory of God." "Well," replied the hard-hearted preacher, "I don't know anybody around here that would have the slightest objection."

COMPARATIVE STRENGTH OF BAKING POWDERS.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative strength of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. SCHEDLER. A one-pound can of each Powder was taken, the total leavening power of volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated in the above diagram. This practical test for strength by Prof. SCHEDLER only proves what every observant consumer of the ROYAL BAKING POWDER knows by experience, that while it costs a few cents per pound more than the ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work.

A SINGLE TRIAL OF THE ROYAL BAKING POWDER WILL CONVINCE ANY FAIR-MINDED PERSON OF THESE FACTS.

* While this Diagram shows some of the alum Powders to be of a higher degree of strength than ordinary Powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum Baking Powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS, DRS. LOVE AND MOTT.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I have purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a Cream of Tartar Powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum, or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph. D."
"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. H. A. MOTT, Ph. D."
"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or other injurious substances. HENRY MORTON, M. D., President Stevens Institute of Technology."
"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Massachusetts."
"June 23, 1882.—I have made a careful analytical test of Royal Baking Powder purchased by myself in the open market here, and in the original package. I find it to be a Cream of Tartar Powder of the highest degree of strength, containing nothing but pure, wholesome, and useful ingredients. JUAN H. WRIGHT, M. D., Analytical Chemist, formerly Wright & Merrill, St. Louis."
The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, and at State Fairs throughout the country. No other article of human food has received such high, emphatic, and universal indorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and hoards of health all over the world.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER COMPANY, 106 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.
WILLIAM T. COLEMAN & CO., SOLE AGENTS.

HAWTHORNE'S POSTHUMOUS NOVEL.

The literary circles of Boston are at present much interested over the contest in the Hawthorne family. Messrs. J. R. Osgood & Co., the publishers, recently issued a circular stating that they would shortly publish a posthumous novel by the late Nathaniel Hawthorne, entitled, "Dr. Grimshawe's Secret." Messrs. Osgood & Co. were understood to have obtained their information, together with the manuscript, from Mr. Julian Hawthorne. The latter gentleman, at all events, was to furnish, it was said, a preface to the book. According to this first statement, the manuscript of the story was discovered among the papers of the late novelist, and upon being deciphered, revealed an almost perfectly developed and finished work, requiring only a few touches by way of revision or addition in unimportant particulars. This production had lain unknown in a trunk for eighteen years, and this treasure-laden trunk had "accompanied the family," (presumably that of Julian Hawthorne,) and had been in Europe most of the time since the last publication of Hawthorne's posthumous works. This circular was copied by the Boston Advertiser, which journal also appended a long note, discussing the forthcoming book, and also its great author's peculiarities of writing. The announcement, however, was promptly followed by a denial on the part of Mr. Hawthorne's daughter, who is now Mrs. Lathrop, that there is any such thing in existence as a complete romance by her father. She explains in detail the disposition made of her father's papers after his death, and avers that a finished work, such as "Doctor Grimshawe's Secret" is asserted to be, could not have escaped the notice of any member of the family. She denies a number of minor averments made in the Advertiser statement, and unquestionably leaves upon the mind the impression that, in her judgment, the publication of the forthcoming novel under her father's name would be an unscrupulous forgery. To a reporter of the Boston Traveller her husband observed: "Of this new romance we know absolutely nothing. There was a fragment, a study for a romance, among Mr. Hawthorne's papers, whose character and motive correspond with that announced in the forthcoming work, but it was only a fragment. At the time of Mrs. Hawthorne's death all of Mr. Hawthorne's papers were in her possession. She died in London, and her two daughters only were with her at the time, Julian Hawthorne being then in America. After her death, my wife—who was not my wife then," he said, smiling—"carefully went over all the papers left, giving them two examinations. We found the MS. of 'Septimus Felton,' which was published in the Atlantic Monthly of October, 1872, and among others this 'unrelated fragment' to which I refer. This consisted of a manuscript book, written in 1858, which seems to have been the first study for a new romance. While its plan was radically different from 'Septimus,' there were also many points of resemblance. Some time after our marriage, Mr. Hawthorne's papers and literary remains were divided, and this sketch was among the papers that passed into the possession of Julian Hawthorne." For a time it was expected that the grave misgivings excited by Mrs. Lathrop's statement might be set at rest by explanations, which, it was understood, had been requested from Mr. Julian Hawthorne by those who had made themselves responsible for the original announcement. But it can not be said that the interview of a special correspondent with Mr. Julian Hawthorne, whose results were printed in the Advertiser on August 16th, were satisfactory. The correspondent begins by acknowledging that much of the first statement published in the Advertiser was incorrect; that the novel "is not as complete a work" as was asserted; that there is "a small break in the middle," and that "several chapters are needed to finish the book." He admits, too, that the handwriting is very different from several specimens of Hawthorne's manuscript which he had seen. The writer of the communication likewise acknowledges that Mrs. Lathrop was right in contradicting several of the minor affirmations in the first statement, relating for the most part to the elder Hawthorne's literary habits. On the other hand, this special correspondent has seen the manuscript of "Dr. Grimshawe's Secret." "The writing," he says, "and its evident age—for it is old and brown—are proof to the eye at once that the manuscript is a genuine work of Hawthorne." Regarding this statement, the New York Sun remarks: "The fact that it is old and brown proves nothing as to authorship; and the correspondent has just said that the writing differed notably from other specimens of Hawthorne's. The interview with Mr. Julian Hawthorne, published in the Advertiser, leaves the controversy just where it was before. Mr. Hawthorne produces a manuscript which he says was his father's. Mrs. Lathrop says that no such manuscript was among her father's papers. No attempt is made to show how it might have been there, and yet have escaped her notice. On the whole, we advise the publishers to insist upon a somewhat closer investigation of the matter, and meanwhile it might be well for them to name their authority for the original announcement, part of which, at least, is now acknowledged to have been incorrect."

CCXLIV.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday, September 4th.

Crab Soup.
Cantaloupe.
Breaded Lamb Chops.
Tomato Sauce. Potato Croquettes.
Boiled Ham.
Fried Egg-plant. Summer Squash.
Roast Venison.
Currant Jelly and Port-wine Sauce.
Beets, Mayonnaise Dressing.
Jelly Custards.
Sponge Cake, Pears, Peaches, Apricots, Nectarines, Plums, Gages, Figs, Apples, and Grapes.

JELLY CUSTARDS.—Make a custard of one quart of milk and six eggs, sweeten with one cup of sugar, boil gently until it thickens well, and flavor with vanilla when cold. Fill your custard-glasses two-thirds full, and heap with jelly. Use red for half of the glasses and yellow for the remainder.

An eccentric old gentleman who had married his second wife, a hoydenish young creature, entertained a party of gentlemen one afternoon, and was much chagrined by the non-appearance of his girlish spouse. Upon inquiring he ascertained that she was in the garden, and thereupon invited his guests out to be introduced to her. As they rose to accept the invitation, his son, a lad of fourteen, exclaimed: "Don't do it, dad!" "Why not?" he asked, angrily. "Because," returned the boy, half apologetically, "she's up a cherry tree."

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Peeping Tom.

There was a wife in Coventry
Whose name was Mrs. Brown;
Her husband was a high-toned bird—
The mayor of the town.
He did misuse the people so
It raised an awful storm,
Till Mrs. Brown declared she would Inaugurate reform.
The old gent said he'd yield him to
The prayers of Mrs. Brown.
If she would ride upon a mule
All naked through the town.
She quick did let the people know
The promise of old Brown,
And they unto their houses hied
While she rode through the town.
But one old rooster, bald and gray,
Upon his knees went down,
And peeped out through the keyhole at
The disrobed Mrs. Brown.
Straightway his eyes fell out, and he Forevermore was blind,
And ever after lived a life
Detested by mankind.
But always, to his dying day,
That ornery rooster baid
The sight of glowing Mrs. Brown
With unfeigned bliss recalled.
—Unknown Liar.

An Orthographical Fancy.

With tragic air the lovelorn heir
Once chased the chaste Louise;
She quickly guessed her guest was there
To please her with his sighs.
Now at her side he kneeling sighed
His sighs of woeful size—
"Oh, hear me here, for lo! most low
I rise before your eyes.
This soul is sole thine own, Louise—
'Twill never wean, I ween,
The love that I—aye, e'er shall feel,
Though mean may be his mien."
"You know I can not tell you no,"
The maid made answer true—
"I love you aught, as sure I ought—
To you 'tis due I do!"
"Since you are won, O fairest one!
The marriage rite is right;
The chapel aisle I'll lead you up
This night!" exclaimed the knight.
—H. C. Dodge.

A Murderous Symposium.
THE CUCUMBER.

I am the festive cucumber,
My victims by thousands I number,
In the still night-time
The stairs they climb,
In garments of rosewood lumber.

THE HOLE IN THE ICE.

Oh, come and tumble through me,
Small boy with eyes of blue,
My depths are dark and gloomy,
But cool enough for you.
Yes, I will keep you nice and cool,
Then you won't have to go to school.

THE BLOWN-OUT GAS.

O sweet to me when Corydon takes Chloe
Daown ter the city fer ter see the sights,
Her hunnit might be called a trifle showy—
His cotton gloves are neither lefts nor rights.
O' nights
He hlowes me out, and I, most unpretentious
Asphyx them into the Sweet Subsequentious

THE MULE.

They have twisted my tender and touching tale,
And I really know not why;
But somehow or other, each took a sail
To the Saccharine By-and-by.

THE KEROSENE CAN.

When the wind whistles and the snow drifts higher,
The maiden lifeth me to light the figher,
Oh, never more will Connemara see
That fair young exile skipping gay and free
Among the pigs about the cabin yard;
She's all on hand; hut rather tired and charred.

THE TOY PISTOL.

O you poor rivals,
Tuppenny rivals,
Six for a centlet,
Hear my old-war-whoop:
I can discount you,
Every occasion.
Lo, when I tackle
Small boy superfluous,
I am a terror,
Terror from Wayhack,
W. County.
For I can check their Native garrulity,
Giving them lockjaw;
Prithee, friend, make no
Error about it.
—V. Hugo Dusenbury, Professional Poet of Puck.

Bewailings of a "Broken Baritone."

A las! alas! "my cake is" DO,
"My sun of life has set," RE,
But, could I keep a single MI,
"I might be happy yet." MI,
Chauting on E's no ease to FA,
At upper notes I strain, FA,
Doughtful of FA—"so near yet" SOL,
I strive for it in vain.
E'n dead-heads long have "damned my" LA,
"Too flat!" "You're old," they cry,
Fools! "old SOL sinks by nature's" LA,
So "how is that for high?" SI
Gone are those that I used to—
A DO, RE, MI, FA and near,
Naught's left me but to drink—to die—
My SOL, LA, SI's my "bier!"
—Boston Times.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
STARCH.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
CHOCOLATE.

SMITH
BROTHERS'
PACKAGE
BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.
AGENTS,
121 and 123 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM,
For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION
called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal. ASA CLARK, M. D.
References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Saurdett, Stockton,
Supt. State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.
(Established 1854.)

HAY, GRAIN, AND
COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

39 Clay Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Telephone No. 35.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO.
Commission Merchants,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street

Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP,
581 and 583 Market Street, S. F.,
Manufacturers
Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture
Frames, and Eri-c-n-Brac.

IMPORTERS of GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHROMOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY.
OFFICE, - 325 Market St.
WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts.
C. SPRECKELS, President,
J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President,
A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO.
San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of
RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON
Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered
Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel,
and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts,
Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting
Rods, etc., etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron.
E, 202 MARKET STREET:

THE
AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY
SAN FRANCISCO,
MANUFACTURERS OF ALL
Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar
for export.
C. ADOLPHE LOW, President.
Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON
PACIFIC IRON WORKS
RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO.,
127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco.
Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines—
both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL or Office by Telephone 308.
Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company.
118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants
204 and 206 California Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.
PAYOT, UPHAM & CO
STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS,
Commercial Printers,
and Blank Book Manufacturers
204 Sansome Street, near Pine.
TABER, HARKER & CO.
IMPORTERS AND WHOLE
GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San F.

If the accomplished Union Square Company had sought long and far for something with which to relieve the tension of interest in "Daniel Rochat," and give an interval of dullness before the sensational "Lights o' London" flashed upon us, they could not have hit it more unerringly than in "The False Friend." It is a pyramid of intentions, and nothing more. One feels constantly that something must be said; but nothing ever is done or said of any importance, for there is not a strong scene in the play. The work is well laid on, but after that the artist's cunning failed him. For some unreasonable reason it is generally a bad lookout when a play begins with a prologue. It is like a house built upon stilts—which may be a very good sort of a house, but has a tremendous vista of foundation. One likes to be plunged at once into the thick of the story in a play, and let it unravel itself. And yet, perhaps it would have been difficult to have omitted the Australian canyon in this new phase of the Tichborne tale. By the way, we need not consider our amour propre wounded so long as they spell it "canyon," but all the world knows that California has a patent right to the "cañon," as Australia has to the bush, or India to the jungle, or Ireland to the bog, though there be bushes, and jungles, and bogs elsewhere.

We are taken from the lonely scene under the antipodean sky to the lawn of Fielding manor, where at least half a dozen tenants, in blouses and clogs, are bleating a weak hurrah for the coming home of the prodigal. Some of the resident gentry are discreetly distributed upon the green, and an old lady of eighty-two, and perhaps some months and some days—though, contrary to custom, these trifling additions are not mentioned—is wheeled in an invalid's perambulator by an old serving-man, who looks like Kerry, and acts with all the responsibility of the Queen's John Brown. As these two are the only picturesque-looking ones in the play, so they are the only two parts worth playing.

As for Lucian Gleyre, the villain and the hero, he is but a half-hearted villain, and certainly the shallowest of impostors, with a disposition to confess, which is really phenomenal. "You are not Cuthbert Fielding, you are Lucian Gleyre," cries a young woman in a long black dress, pointing a dramatic forefinger at him. She has informed us previously that she is an "American" with a history, and is at present engaged as music mistress for Edith Fielding. "His name is Lucian Gleyre, and he is my husband," cries the young woman in black. "My name was Lucian Gleyre, and I was her husband," acknowledges the young man, "but I am now Cuthbert Fielding," and without giving any very lucid explanation of how this interesting state of affairs ceased to be, he proceeds to prove his identity according to the time-honored custom of the drama, with a bible and a bit of verse. The aged lady accepts the verse against the evidence of her own eyesight, and curtain!

In the second act, Mr. Lucian Gleyre is comfortably established at the manor, and has but one thorn in his pillow—the lover of Edith Fielding, a young subaltern in the possession of a very fine uniform, and a very detective disposition. Mr. Lucian Gleyre having acquitted himself satisfactorily of a very uncomfortable interview with this young man, is about to seek the comfort of his thornless pillow, when he is surprised by the aged lady, come at this singularly appropriate hour—it is upon the stroke of midnight—to present him with a portrait of his mother. He seizes it, kisses it, and dilates in the most glowing manner upon its faithfulness to the fond familiar features. "Villain, your villainy is unmasked," cries the aged lady; "that is the picture of your aunt, and this is your mother!" "Certainly this is my mother," cries Gleyre; "I only fell into your trap to entrap you. My own, dear mother," and he apostrophizes the other picture till the aged lady brings her glasses to hear upon it, and discovers that she has made another mistake. "Villain," she cries once more. But the villain, fearing that she is about to spring a whole photograph gallery upon him, heads her off with a confession. "I am not Cuthbert Fielding," he says, "but he is dead, and I might as well be here as another man." He further intimates to the aged lady that silence would be a commendable policy on her part, whereupon, like all women so advised, she sets up a howl with all the might of her lungs, and calling for help, vanishes into the dark. Just here occurs the most singular effect of the play. Simultaneously with the aged lady's exit comes a crash. The first thought of the audience is the kitchen pantry, the second is a reverberating shot; but it transpires that Jupiter, to enhance the interest of the play, has hurled a unique bolt, as the French would say, athwart the Fielding sky, and its one accompanying flash of lightning strikes the aged lady, and literally fires her out of the play at the close of the second act. This is unkind to Jupiter, or the author, since she has the only part in it, a circumstance which has had something to do with Mrs. Phillips's extraordinary success.

Lucian Gleyre is then obliged to look about for some one else to whom to make confession, and is surprised at night—it is one of his peculiarities to be surprised by night—by the entrance of the real

Cuthbert Fielding. Once more Gleyre confesses. It seems to be a luxury with him, as Grace Roseberry said of the hapless New Magdalen. He invites the real Cuthbert to a chair, which the real Cuthbert accepts, and gazes pensively at the ceiling while Lucian explains the situation—a situation which he resolves to hold, and in his capacity of magistrate has the real Cuthbert clapped into jail. Gleyre seems to be forever in the attitude of Boss Tweed, and with thumbs in pockets to ask them independently what they are going to do about it. At this stage it becomes imminent that he should look about for some one else to whom to confess, and Miss Edith Fielding is about the only interested party left. Gleyre's love for her having been divined by the jealousy of her lover, she consents to play a trick upon him, and by her arts to move him to the confession of his imposture through the confession of his passion. With a clever actress this might have been made a good scene, but Miss Eleanor Carey is only a pretty, pleasing woman, with nothing of art or subtlety in her acting, and the opportunity went unimproved. Mr. De Belleville failed to make any impression in the part, because it was too faintly outlined. Gleyre is not a villain either of dash or suavity. He is simply a man who, seeing the opportunity, has seized it, without the boldness to hold it or the finesse to carry the deception.

As for the Tichborne story, though truth be stranger than fiction, it is still a little too near and new to be thrilling. It has a smack of the newspaper, and a flavor of stale news. It is like a dress or a bonnet or a piece of furniture which is just old enough to be out of fashion, but not old enough to be old-fashioned. In short, the worn Tichborne story needs a reversal. If the fat claimant had but known the sea of literature into which he was plunging a thousand pens, perhaps he would have forborne his venture, and kindly remained a fat butcher at Wapping. Why does not some one now write a play in which an usurper should boldly rise and put the true man out of place? Such a tortuosity might puzzle an audience in a world where it is only necessary to make an assertion to have some one believe it.

The sub-plot in "A False Friend" is not unlike a scene in an old English comedy, but Mr. Fawcett, comedian, is forced to stand about with nothing in particular to do, but willing to be as funny as he can should opportunity arise. Miss Harrison is equally tied, although the idea of her part, a young girl haunted by a possible stepmother, is not a bad one. For that matter, there are many good ideas in "The False Friend," but everything is vague, misty, nebulous. There are no situations, no climaxes, and there is no go to anything. People have been saying a good deal about Mr. Stoddart's Andrew, but it is, in effect, nothing but the strong personality of the artist standing out through a part weakly written in. It is not a character like Babbage or Bidache; the one the brusque man of business, with a kind heart beneath the crust; the other the dry man of brains, the leader of the party rather than the orator at whose elbow he stands, and who carries conviction with a coup de theatre, as it were. Andrew is simply an old servant man, weakened by age, and without a peculiarity in the world. Yet his reception shows the readiness of the multitude to acknowledge the skill of the artist.

There is far more to speak of in Mrs. Phillips's Lady Ogden—a sketch which is extremely well done. In fact, the death is unpleasantly realistic, and quite subdues the risibles of those who were moved to laughter by the funny little thunderstorm coming in just at the nick of time, and going out like a flash in the pan as soon as its work was done. Can it be possible that they are beginning to economize in thunder in the theatres?

People went away from "The False Friend" with a curious feeling of having been defrauded of something that they might have had. Everything seemed to be a mere rehearsal, and went slowly; but perhaps it is just as well that our emotions have been let down a peg, that we may tune them up again for next week's sensation under the flaring lights of London town. BETSY B.

A number of prominent citizens have requested Mr. W. R. Palmer to take a benefit, in order that they may have an opportunity of testifying their appreciation of the pleasure which has been afforded them by the performances of the Union Square Theatre Company, under his management. The performance will probably take place on the afternoon of Thursday week, and a programme of special interest is being arranged, which will present the principal members of the company in characters that they will represent only on this occasion during their present stay.

At Haverly's California Theatre "The False Friend" has been playing all the week to fair houses. At the Baldwin Theatre "Hazel Kirke" will begin a series of farewell performances under the management of Gustave Frohman, on next Monday evening. Emerson's Minstrels have returned to this city, and will open at the Standard Theatre on next Monday evening. On Monday afternoon there will be a rehearsal of the new opera, "Otumbo," by Messrs. H. A. Stuart and Borchert, of this city.

—ON NEXT MONDAY EVENING "HAZEL KIRKE" will make its reappearance on the stage of the Baldwin Theatre, under the efficient management of Mr. Gus Frohman. The company has recently made a tour through the country, where it was received everywhere with enthusiasm. There has been little change made in the cast, the company being composed of the same members, with but one exception, that of Mr. Henry Lee, whose part is now taken by the popular local actor, Mr. Joseph Grismer. The hold which "Hazel Kirke" has on the San Francisco public is extraordinary. Beside the constant patronage of the theatre-loving public, it has succeeded in calling out not only all those who occasionally visit the theatre, but also many who could not have been brought to any other play. Notwithstanding the fact that it ran for a long season a short time ago, there is as much interest manifested by the public anticipation of the coming reappearance as if it were entirely fresh. This, however, is perhaps somewhat due to the fact that this is the last chance that the public will have this season to witness this charming little play, as the company goes East at the conclusion of the present short engagement. J. H. Love, late business manager for Emerson, is the treasurer, and W. W. Randall, well known as an author and journalist, has been engaged as business agent of the Madison Square Company.

WAGNER'S NEW OPERA.

Production of "Parsifal" at the Bayreuth Theatre.

Margery Deane, in a recent letter to the New York Tribune, gives a description of the first performance at Bayreuth, July 24, of Wagner's new opera, "Parsifal." The plot is taken from an old legend about the Knights of the Holy Grail, (Christ's communion-cup,) which Tennyson has also used in one of his poems. Parsifal, (or Percival,) a youth of "holy innocence," is chosen to save the life of Amfortas, king of the Knights of the Holy Grail, who, having laid aside his sacred Spear at the seductive solicitations of Kundry, a beautiful enchantress, is wounded by Klingsor, an evil magician, whom he had gone forth to vanquish. Amfortas may be healed if Parsifal can regain the sacred Spear, (the weapon which pierced Christ's side at the cross,) and touch its point to the wound. Parsifal passes through many temptations, but through faith withstands Kundry's temptations and Klingsor's machinations. He captures the Spear, redeems the imprisoned soul of the beautiful Kundry, and heals the wounded king. "The opera," writes Mrs. Deane, "began promptly at four o'clock P. M., and the first act lasted one hour and three-quarters. This was because the tempo is taken so slowly; and although the second act is longer in text, the less serious character of the music shortens it to one hour and five minutes. The third act began at a quarter to nine, and at ten o'clock the curtain fell. As for Materna in the part of Kundry, her wild, disordered hair half covering her face, in the first act, make her fiendish and uncanny to look upon; but in the second act all the beauty which dress and a fascinating exterior can bestow, are hers. Her gown is a marvel of art; a soft cream-colored silk covered with exquisite embroideries. Nothing could be more perfect or grand than her acting in every scene. In the flower-garden the whole stage is filled with huge tropical flowers, and the flower-maidens are only so many more blossoms of the very same hue. The music of "Parsifal" is constructed on the 'motives' principle. A 'motive,' formerly called 'theme,' is a short musical phrase which represents either a person or an action, and is introduced either by the orchestra or in the vocal part. This 'motive' appears in the orchestral part whenever a reference is made to the 'warning.' In this consists the originality of Wagner's music. The better the hearer is acquainted with these 'motives' the deeper his appreciation of Wagner's genius. In Weber's 'Freischutz' and 'Euryanthe,' and Auber's 'Masaniello,' we find the occasional use of themes alluding to certain persons or situations, but Wagner is the first composer who has brought the symphonic style of composition into a positive form, and adopted it as the real type of an operatic work. From this point of view he is the only worthy successor of Beethoven. Every scene and every character is represented by the most perfectly appropriate music which was ever set to words. There is a wonderful variety. The leading motives number twenty-three or twenty-four, of which the most important refer to the following subjects: The Grail, the Evening Supper, the Prophecy, Parsifal, Kundry, Amfortas's grief, the Maiden's enticing song, and the song of Faith. There is no overture, but each of the three acts is preceded by an introduction in which we hear the motives of the scenes characterizing each act. The style of composition is simple but noble throughout, and so is the orchestration. A notable feature of the latter is that the string and wind instruments predominate. Another is, that the brass is used in a very moderate degree. That 'Parsifal' is not adapted to an ordinary theatre will be easily conceived. Wagner has written it for Bayreuth, partly because he wished to dedicate something to the people who have dedicated so much to him. He calls it a 'Bühnen-weihe-festpiel,' (stage-consecrating festival play,) thereby signifying his desire that it is to be consecrated to the exclusive use of the theatre in Bayreuth. The scenery is more rich and magnificent than anything which was ever put upon any stage. No one can question the perfect artistic taste with which all parts were pictorially represented. The stage apparatus is very complicated. Carl Brandt, who constructed the machinery for the 'Nibelungen,' was engaged upon this work when he died last year. His son has, however, carried out his plans with wonderful success. The decorative part was designed by Foulkowsky, an enthusiastic admirer of Wagner's. Wagner has supervised every detail of the preparations, as he did for the 'Nibelungen,' not only as musical director, but as stage manager, elocutionary instructor, etc. If a gesture was wrong or a syllable indistinctly spoken, the master was ready with his criticism.

The San Francisco Philharmonic Society experienced so much success in their concerts last year that they have decided to give a grand series of six concerts during the coming season, to take place on the first Friday in each of the successive months of October, November, and December of this year, and January, February, and March of 1887. Mr. Gustave Hinrichs will conduct, as before, and previous to each concert will be given a rehearsal for subscribers only. The subscription-list is now open at Sherman & Clay's Music Store.

—THE GREAT CIRCUS COMBINATION WHICH John Robinson brought here from the East has been playing to crowded audiences all the week. The extensive scale on which this circus is managed necessitates two separate rings, with a performance going on in each ring at the same time. There are nearly a hundred performers, together with a squadron of horses. The managerie is one of the most complete affairs ever brought to this coast, and the trained elephants and trick dogs excite wondering comment. This afternoon and evening will take place the last performances of this circus. The eminent success which this combination has attained is greatly due to the untiring efforts of its able advance agent, Colonel Foster.

—ON NEXT MONDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 4TH, the Standard Theatre will be reopened by the Emerson Minstrels. This theatre has been entirely refitted and decorated. The latest style of opera chairs has been introduced into the parquette and dress-circle, and popular prices will prevail. The company is composed of twenty-five artists just from the East. Everything betokens a long and successful season.

—M. STRAUS, THE ARTIST, LEAVES FOR THE East about October 1. Previous to his departure he will have an exhibition of all his paintings and finished studies, at the rooms of the San Francisco Art Association, Fine Street, beginning to-day, and closing with a sale Friday evening, September 8.

—HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

—Dr. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET, cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

The Baldwin Theatre.
GUSTAVE FROHMAN, LESSEE.

A BRILLIANT EVENT!
Commencing next Monday Evening, September 4th, 1882,
And Every Evening (Except Sunday)
Wednesday and Saturday Matinees.

The Original Madison Square
Theatre Company

In a Farewell Series of Performances of the Most Popular and Successful Play ever produced.

HAZEL KIRKE

ORIGINAL SCENERY

POSITIVELY
FAREWELL
PERFORMANCES
GOOD BYE.

HAZEL KIRKE

POPULAR PRICES
25, 50, 75 cts.
NOTHING EXTRA
TO RESERVE.

BOX OFFICE NOW OPEN.
Secure Your Seats in Time.

— REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE IS AN INVALUABLE dressing for inflamed and sore joints. Price 25 cts.

— IT IS AN INDISPUTABLE FACT THAT HALL'S Hair Renewer renews, cleanses, brightens, invigorates, and restores faded or gray hair to its youthful color and lustre, cheaply, quickly and surely. People with gray hair prefer to buy it, rather than proclaim to the world through their bleached locks that they are becoming aged, and passing on to decay.

— MR. GEORGE J. GEE, ORGANIST OF TRINITY Church, will resume lessons on piano, organ, etc., September 1st. Address, care of M. Gray, 117 Post Street.

— MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

— LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL remember that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

— MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

— GO TO Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

EMERSON'S STANDARD THEATRE.
WM. EMERSON.....Sole Proprietor and Manager

Monday Evening, September 4th,
GRAND REOPENING
OF EMERSON'S STANDARD THEATRE, with a NEW MINSTREL COMPANY,
Composed of Twenty-five Artists, selected from the best Eastern Talent.

The Theatre has been entirely refitted and decorated. The Parquette and Dress Circle have been furnished with Patent Opera Chairs of the latest style. No expense has been spared to insure the comfort of its patrons.
A new first-part scene has been painted by Wilkins.
No extra charge for reserved seats.
Mr. Emerson intends to make this company the strongest in the United States, so that San Francisco can boast of being indeed the home of minstrelsy.

POPULAR PRICES.
Opera Chairs, Dress Circle, and Parquette.....75c
Balcony.....50c
Matinee.....50c and 25c
No extra charge for reserved seats.
Box-office will open Saturday morning, September 2d, for the sale of Reserved Seats.

HAZE L. CORK.

NOTICE.

Messrs. FRANK J. SYMMES and VANDERLYNN STOW, having purchased the entire Stock and good will of the business as formerly conducted by me at

122 & 124 SUTTER STREET

The patronage of all my friends is hereby respectfully solicited for them in the future.

THOMAS DAY.
San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 14, 1882.

The undersigned will continue the above-mentioned business in the name of

THOMAS DAY & CO.,

And the patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

FRANK J. SYMMES,
VANDERLYNN STOW.

PHILIPPE'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
235 KEARNY STREET

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF BUSH.
PROF. Da FILIPPE continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by his easy, practical method, saving months of study. Classes and private lessons. Apply from 3 to 5 or 7 to 8 p. m.

RUPTURE Cured. Greatest Invention of the age. FURCE & SON 704 Sac St., San Fran. Cal.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.
Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

WILL INTRODUCE THEIR

FALL-STYLE HATS
THIS DAY!

Call and examine their immense Stock at
336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 320 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years

MR. NASBY IN EXILE.

The last sensation in the literary world, and has already reached a sale of 10,000 copies. It has seven hundred pages and two hundred illustrations. Price—In cloth, $4; library binding, $5. Sold by subscription only. For circulars, terms to agents, etc., address

SAMUEL CARSON,
Publisher and Wholesale Bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco.
A copy will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

COMPOUND OXYGEN
NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders. Prepared by DR. STARKEY & PALLEN, Philadelphia, Pa. Package contains all directions, and is easily sent by express, ready for USE AT HOME. H. E. MATHEWS, Forwarding Agent, 606 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlets.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANOS, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,
As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with
J. H. MOTT & CO.,
647 Market St.,
Nucleus Block, Second Floor.
Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

M. Straus, Artist, will sell through Messrs. Easton & Eldridge, Auctioneers, on Friday Evening, September 8, 1882, at 8 o'clock, P. M., at the Art Gallery Rooms, Pine Street, his Entire Collection of Paintings, comprising Eastern, California, and Oregon Scenery. The pictures are all finely finished, and comprise the labor of years. They will be on exhibition from Tuesday, September 5th, up to hour of sale, and on Thursday, day and evening. Catalogues now ready at Association Rooms, or the office of the Auctioneers. Don't fail to see these fine paintings.

EASTON & ELDRIDGE,
Auctioneers, 22 Montgomery St.

THE "Dress Reform" CORSET,
Specially for Stout Figures, (worn with or without Straps,) by mail, $3.00. Send waist, hip, and bust measure. Also, Shoulder Braces, Union Under Flannels, Ladies' and Children's Comfort Waists, Bustles, Hose Supporters, etc. Send for Circular. The only Depot for these goods.
MRS. M. H. ORER & CO.
Boston Dress Reform,
326 Sutter Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
An Elegant Corset to Order for $1.

FINE
Suits, $25. TAILORING Suits, $30.
Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.
Suits, $40. TAILORING Suits, $50.
Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.
Suits, $60. TAILORING $70.
J. S. HAND, Merchant Tailor and Clothier, 314 KEARNY ST.

A REMARKABLE NEW BOOK!

KALANI OF OAHU,
An Historical Romance of the Hawaiian Islands.

BY DR. C. M. NEWELL, OF BOSTON.
ONE VOLUME, 12 MO., 415 PAGES. PRICE, $1.50

This beautiful story illustrates life in the Sandwich Islands before immigration brought the vices and disorders of European life among them, and so altered the character, habits, and tone of one of the most remarkable races of the age. The book has been read by King Kalakaua, who recently visited our city, and has received his approval.
For sale by all Booksellers.

SAMUEL CARSON,
Publisher and Wholesale Bookseller, 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A copy will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

CHAS. GOFFRIE,
SOLO VIOLINIST, FROM LONDON,

For many years Musical Instructor to
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES:
Le Duc de Penthièvre.
The Duchess of Hamilton, (nee Princess Marie de Baden).
La Duchesse de Chartres, (nee Princesse Françoise d'Orleans).
La Princesse Marguerite de Nemours.
La Princesse Isabella de Montpensier, etc.,
Gives to advanced piano pupils instruction in the works of Mozart, Beethoven, etc., with violin accompaniment.

Address 807 BUSH STREET.
C. P. SHEFFIELD. N. W. SPAULDING. J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker.
428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns--- Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.
AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

J. R. COWEN. J. W. PORTER.
COWEN & PORTER,
FUNERAL DIRECTORS,
118 Geary Street, San Francisco.
OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-Medical Belts always have excelled all other electrical appliances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs. This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States. Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco

JOHN TAYLOR & CO.
118 and 120 Market Street, and 15 and 17 California Street
ASSAYERS' MATERIALS, MINE
Mill Supplies; also Druggists' Glassware.

MANUFACTURERS OF FINE JEWELRY,

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

There is a good anecdote told of Joachim Raff, whose death has recently left a blank in the musical world. When Meyerbeer died, Raff was living in Paris, and wrote the funeral march which was played at Plassy before Rossini. "Well," asked Raff, "what do you think of it?" "Mon cher," replied the caustic maestro, "I think that it would have been better if it had been your funeral and Meyerbeer's composition."

When Aurelien Scholl, and "Baron" Harden-Hickey arrived at the Dutch frontier, on their recent excursion, with a view to dueling, the customs inspector glanced at their baggage, and remarked: "Ah, swords! Swords are dutiable, sir. Seven francs each, if you please. Step this way." And he politely ushered the duelists into the office, where they paid the duty. Then he wished them good-day politely, and they stepped out and into the arms of a gendarme, who confiscated the weapons.

The wife of the great French naturalist, M. Geoffroy Ste.-Hilaire, once lost a handsome diamond necklace, and the house was in an uproar in consequence of the vanished bauble. Incidentally the naturalist mentioned that a favorite baboon, which he kept up stairs, had been playing for some days past with a necklace precisely similar to the one described. He was indignantly asked why he had not taken the necklace from the animal? "I thought that it belonged to him," calmly answered M. Geoffroy Ste.-Hilaire.

A facetious Paris journalist, wishing to "take a rise" out of Léon Gozlan, inserted the following paragraph among the odds and ends of his paper: "M. Léon Gozlan was at one time a sailor, and while serving on board a brig not only caused the crew to mutiny, but also killed the captain." In the very next number of the journal appeared a letter, addressed to the editor by the author of "Notaire et Chantilly." It ran thus: "Monsieur: You say that I have been a sailor, which is quite true; that I caused the crew of a brig to mutiny, and then killed the captain, which is also perfectly correct; but you forgot to add a detail which may particularly interest your readers: after killing the captain I ate him!—Léon Gozlan."

Conversing about old-fashioned names, ex-Secretary Blaine recently told a correspondent a story about an aunt of Mr. Cheney, of Boston, who named her children after names she found in French novels. "Every child," said Mr. Blaine, "had a romantic French name. One was named Valet—Valet Cheney." "Where did she get the name Valet from?" I asked. "Well, it was this way. I knew Valet well when I was a boy. I also knew he had a middle name, for he used to write it Valet D. C. Cheney. One day I asked him to give me his whole name. 'Mother got it out of a French novel,' said Valet. 'My full name is Valet de Chamber Cheney. Pretty name, isn't it? And uncommon, too. They spell it in French Valet de Chambre.'"

A New Yorker, says the Wall Street News, who spent several weeks in Europe this summer, set aside a half-day before leaving Paris to settling with his landlord. The host made out his bill for every meal and lodging—so much for candles, so much for ice, milk, water, etc., as is usual with them—and when the Yankee had looked it over, he said: "It is not enough; you have forgotten one important item." "Great heaven! can it be possible?" gasped the landlord, and he ran away to think. After an hour's hard work he could add nothing except the cost of another candle. "And are you going to let me off with this?" "I—I think I have it all." "Oh no, you haven't; but that's none of my business. I will pay it as it stands." "Will monsieur be kind enough to mention the other item?" "See you hanged first—here's your money." Then the host went away to rack his brains. The idea that he had not charged enough almost drove him frantic, but he could not remember that lost item. At length, as the Yankee was about to leave, he approached him with tears in his eyes, and besought him to reveal the secret. "Why, I called you the most brazen-faced robber in France!" was the reply, as he laid down a five-franc piece. "You did! Thank heaven—that's always three francs! Here's your change—good-bye—bon voyage!"

Sir Walter Scott was in the habit of employing in literary work a German student named Weber. Being an interesting person, he became a favorite with Scott's household, and often dined with them. Sir Walter, knowing that Weber was inclined to drink too freely, encouraged this intimacy, that he might keep him as much as possible from temptation. When Sir Walter left Edinburgh at Christmas, 1813, the two parted kindly, and on the day after his return Weber was with him in the library, as usual, making extracts. As the light began to fail Scott leaned back in his chair, and was about to ring for candles, when, seeing the German looking at him with unusual solemnity, he asked what was the matter. "Mr. Scott," said Weber, rising, "you have long insulted me, and I can bear it no longer. I have brought a pair of pistols, and must insist on your taking one of them instantly." And he produced the weapons which had been placed under his chair, and laid one of them on Scott's paper. "You are mistaken, I think," said Scott, "in your way of settling about this affair—but no matter. It can, however, be no part of your object to annoy Mrs. Scott and the children; therefore, if you please, we will put the pistols into the drawer till after dinner, and then arrange to go out together like gentlemen." Weber answered with the same coolness: "I believe that will be better," and laid the second pistol on the table. Scott looked both in his drawer, saying: "I am glad you have felt the propriety of my suggestion; let me only request further that nothing may occur at dinner to give my wife any suspicion of what has been passing." Scott then went to his dressing-room, and immediately sent a message to one of Weber's intimate companions, who came and took him away. He had been on a long walk through the Highlands, during which he had drunk too heavily as to unsettle his mind. He became a hopeless lunatic, and until his death was supported at Scott's expense in an asylum at York. But for the great novelist's self-control, there would have been a murder in that quiet library.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care. Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever. It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color. It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean. By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong. As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE, For the Whiskers,

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color which will neither rub nor wash off.

MANUFACTURED BY
R. P. HALL & Co., Nashua, N. H.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS IN MEDICINES.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either require or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG and MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,
OR W. H. PARKER, M. D.,
4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

PEBBLE SPECTACLES!

MULLER'S OPTICAL DEPOT

135 Montgomery St., nr. Bnsh,

Opposite Occidental Hotel.

Specialty Thirty-two Years.

COMPOUND ASTIGMATIC LENSES

Mounted to Order. 25 Two Hours Notice.

The most complicated cases of defective vision thoroughly diagnosed, free of charge.

SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, AUCTIONEER

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

Stock, Real Estate, and General

AUCTIONEERS.

116 Montgomery Street,

Occidental Hotel Block. SAN FRANCISCO.

NATHANIEL GRAY. C. S. WRIGHT. J. A. CAMPELL.

N. GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS

641 Sacramento Street.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

SIERRA NEVADA SILVER MINING

Company. Location of principal place of business San Francisco, California—Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 74) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, 309 Montgomery Street, Room 37, Nevada Block, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twentieth day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and, unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

E. L. PARKER, Secretary.
Office—Room 57, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OF

the Thunder Powder Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Alameda County, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 11) of Forty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room No. 5, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. Y. OAKLEY, Secretary.
Office, Thunder Powder Company, 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINing Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, State of Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the tenth day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 16) of Thirty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 16th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 14th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

A. W. HAVENS, Secretary,
Office—Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

OPHIR SILVER MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 21st day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 42) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 14th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. L. MCCOY, Secretary.
Office—Room 16, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

BEST AND BELCHER SILVER

Mining Company.—Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of July, 1882, an assessment (No. 24) of Fifty (50) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 29, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24th day of August, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 18th day of September, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

WILLIAM WILLIS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 29 Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

ALASKA

COMMERCIAL CO.

NO. 310 SANSOME STREET,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

411 413 & 415 SANSOME ST. S.F.

Importers of All Kinds of Paper.

CURTIS, DIXON & CO.,

CIGAR MANUFACTURERS,

FACTORY, 309 to 313 CLAY STREET.

Office, No. 309 Clay Street, between Front and Battery,

SAN FRANCISCO,

P. O. Box 993,

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

CATHARINE TOEDTER, formerly CATHARINE ROBINET, and PETER TOEDTER, her husband, Plaintiff,
vs.
DAVID FOGARTY, Defendant.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 1, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Catharine Toedter, formerly Catharine Robinet, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against David Fogarty, defendant, on the 14th day of August, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book Two of said Court, at page 487, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Larkin Street, distant seventy-three feet southerly from the southerly line of Ellis Street, running thence southerly along said line of Larkin Street, forty-seven feet to the northerly line of Willow Avenue; thence at right angles westerly along said line of Willow Avenue eighty-seven feet and six inches; thence at right angles northerly forty-seven feet and six inches, to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Eight, as by the map of said City and County.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 13th day of September, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder, for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, August 19, 1882.
JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
LOUGHBOROUGH & NEWELL, Attorneys for Plaintiff.
August 19, 26, September 2, 9.

(Department No. 7.)

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT,

City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRBAIRN, Plaintiff,
vs.
NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30 day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

(Seal.) DAVID WILDER, Clerk.
By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

(Department No. 7.)

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

Superior Court. (Late 4th District Court.) No. 22,467. EXECUTION.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, attested, on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 1st day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,279.70 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 1st day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereinafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 165 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, running thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27 5-12 feet; thence at right-angles northerly 120 feet; thence at right-angles easterly 27 6-12 feet; and thence at right-angles southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement. Together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the first day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff
J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.
August 5, 12, 19, 26.

NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 11th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated San Francisco, August 28, 1882.

SUMMER RECREATION.

RUSSIAN RIVER HOTEL, DUN-

can's Mills—A favorite resort for tourists. Bathing, fishing, hunting, boating. QUEEN & GOOD, Prop'rs

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.
We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.
Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	327,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30
LIABILITIES.	$3,752,099 09
Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due Banks.....	327,431 09
Dividends unpaid.....	131 50

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO

Price $25.

Weight 170 lbs.

Has 1/2-inch Steel Teeth.

Made to rotate either way. Very thorough in its work and don't injure the vines or trees. Used by R.B. Blowers, G.G. Briggs and all leading vineyardists.

THE JACKSON VINEYARD HARROW.

The Best Harrow made for Vineyards and Orchards.
Made by JACKSON & TRUMAN, - San Francisco, Cal.

WILLIAMS, DIMOND & CO.,

SHIPPING AND

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Union Building, Junction Market and Pine Streets, San Francisco.

AGENTS FOR PACIFIC MAILS S. S.

Co.; Pacific Steam Navigation Co.; The Cunard Royal Mail S. S. Co.; The Hawaiian Line; The China Traders' Insurance Co., Limited; The Marine Insurance Co. of London; The Baldwin Locomotive Works; The Glasgow Iron Co.; Nich. Ashton & Son's Salt.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"Apollinaris Water is an article which is produced by Nature and is not the handiwork of man: it is a Natural and not an artificial Water."

U.S. Treasury, 28 January, 1882.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS!

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,

HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,

GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,

TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.

WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,

Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.

PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000

ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President.

WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.

ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President.

E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED OIL CLOTHING

WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.

MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,

ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,

RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO'S SOLID COTTON BELTING

BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,

Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

DECKER BROS.

IS NOW THE BEST.

KOHLER & CHASE,

137 POST STREET, NEAR DUPONT.

General Agents for Pacific States.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free | $72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine

ICHI BAN,

22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,

LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,

AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,

At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:

210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:

Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf, Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

J. M. LITCHFIELD & CO

MERCHANT TAILORS,

And Dealers in Gents' Furnishing Goods

415 MONTGOMERY STREET,

bet. California and Sacramento, San Francisco.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO
110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 11.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 9, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

RAMON'S ROMANCE.

A Story of the Mexic Land, and How a Spaniard Loves.

He was only a potter of the people; poor, and pious, and peaceful, contentedly whirling his little lathe day after day, loving his labor, eager to advance in his art, but otherwise unambitious, unassuming, with never a dream beyond the simple, homely life of the hour, and never a dread deeper or darker than that Tiburcio Fuentes's last load of wood from Pinos Altos might prove delusive juniper, instead of sturdy oak, and that so the contents of his kiln might be lost in the firing.

He loved his work, did this untutored Sonorense, as men not often do love their own handiwork. The tender, cherishing pride he had in his red ollas and cántaros, and glossy, dark green and brown mesetas, was more like the objective love of woman than the subjective and utilitarian interest of man. From the days of his early boyhood, among all the tropic splendor and balmy beauty of his native village, on the loamy banks of the swift-flowing river at Rosario, Ramon Gutierrez had been wont to gather up handfuls of rank, black clay, and from it shape forms rudely imitative of the shapely vessels and quaint toys moulded from the plastic and fragrant clay of Guadalupe, and brought up hither from the further tierra caliente, by some comparatively enterprising master of a pack-train.

His parents—untaught peasants as they were, dwelling in a poor, bare jacal, beneath a great tamarind tree just outside of Rosario, diligent and devout, and none the less faithful to each other and to their religion that their constancy was all unwedded—had destined Ramon for the priesthood, half awed at the thought of their own presumption, and much doubting whether so much indulgence might be accorded their hope. But the slender, little brown lad had rebelled fiercely against the holy vocation, protesting his aversion with a wild abandon and energy that astounded his father and mother and the good old village priest, long used to his unquestioning obedience and gentle compliance.

"What! make myself padre, and know only the books—the dead, dull books! No, no, no! That I can never do. I will be ollero, and learn to make—ah, such brave, beautiful figures as never were seen of men. But I would lead also a holy life; all the offices will I do; confession and every feast day will I keep, and offer—yes, not alms alone—not limosnadas only—but votive offerings of my best work—images of great beauty for all the saints. So would I atone for that I am, as you say, ingrate, in that I will not give my life to God and the Holy Mother. A priest! I would be dreaming of my clay over the blessed host, and listening for the lathe when the litany should be chanting. Command it not, mamacita. Ah, father, spare thy son! Señor padre, intercede for me, that they make me not priest against my will!"

So all day long the boy had raved and entreated, until the good old priest, full of pity for his distress, had temporized and hesitated a respite from Ramon's determined father, indignant at his secession from reverence and obedience; and, beckoning Ramon aside, Father Gumecindo put into his hand a coin of gold, and said:

"To-night goes Marco Villega hence with his boats; to-day they will be laden. Go, then, to Marco with my commendation, and take passage hence, for thy father will have thee priest whether or no. But—hear me, boy—think not I would counsel a child to set at naught the wishes of his elders. I help thee to depart, not for pity on thy puny pain, but for churchly zeal. I were loth to have thee as my successor, for naught were worse for the church than the reluctant service of an unwilling minister."

And so that night Ramon arose from his little bed, which was only a sheep-skin spread on the hard earth floor, and carrying his rawhide sandals and his treasured knife, he stole away between high hedges whose thickets of great reeds of Castile made the air rich with heavy odor, down past the rock-ledge hill where crapy pink mallates swung out their trailers of bloom, amidst flaming, brilliant tavachines; and among all the village houses, on whose red-tiled roofs, tenantless now in the cold, pale moonlight, by day, in the sultry noontime, great green and bronze-mailed iguanas lay basking; through groves of guavas, glossy-leaved and waxen-blossomed, and plummy palms, and rustling plantains, down to the rapid river, where a half score of canoes, dug out of once stately forest growths, were putting off for the seaport, forty leagues away. And there—once past the treacherous currents, and the sunken rocks, and the rapids, and all the sore portages of the river; the ghastly caymanero below lone Chametla, swarming with ravenous saurian monsters; and the threatening sandbar where the river joined the sea, with great, white-topped, green-walled waves thundering forward to engulf the frail craft; and the dreary, desolate straits, untenanted save of half-savage fishermen, bivouacking on many a narrow eyot where snaky mangroves grew, their slimy stems thick-encrusted with little coppery flavored oysters, that were sometimes out of water at very low tide—after these and many a stranger sight from the rolling, unsteady canoes plunging through the waves, Ramon Gutierrez came to anchor in the great port. In a wretched peon quarter, far out along the Playa del Estero, the boy learned his simple trade.

He was always conscious that, even in so common and mechanical a craft as his, there might be many degrees of excellence beyond the skill that wrought rude playthings and domestic utensils. He never dreamed of the marvelous potentialities of conception and execution compassed by the masters of his art, but he divined that training and experience might develop powers and talent unknown here; and divining, there grew upon him an unquellable longing to be in the wonderful land yonder, away northward, of whose attainments and enterprise in science he had heard from chance American travelers such accounts as seemed fairy tales indeed. Moved by this desire, and by some element of restlessness in his nature—who shall say it may not have been a strain of Gitano blood, filtered down through many generations from far-off Spanish progenitors?—some vagrant or nomad instinct one day impelled him to sever such slight ties as he had formed at the great busy, bright port on the white tropic sands, and untrammelled, with none to let or hinder, he wandered northward, away, always northward, along the rockbound coast of the great western gulf, over many a painful, weary league of burning desert sand, and many a chain and spur of mountain heights that sentinelled the wealth of a world, but warned off investigation and development with the uplifted, forbidding hands of grim tradition and bloody reminiscence. Stony, and sterile, and austere as that mineral region seems—more if the beholding eyes have gazed on tropic bloom and beauty—it seemed to Ramon that he was standing by the gates of Paradise when he stopped on the crest of the eastward bill, footsore and tattered, to look down upon the hybrid habitations of Silver, nestled among a scant growth of clustering cottonwoods, vivid green from a grateful shower that had swept over the town, and that even now hung down a dense gray curtain on the hither side of Pinos Altos.

And here, in the remote frontier mining camp, overflowing with abuses, and absurdities, and anomalies, Ramon found a poor dwelling-place, and with his own deft and slender bands set up a modest kiln of adobe, and built himself a primitive lathe, and sent it whirling under the clay that, for want of even a burro—the patient, kindly donkey of the country—he carried down from its distant bed of deposit, in a rawhide slung over his own graceful shoulders. He was an atom—he was less than an atom—in the organization of Silver. The money-getting population knew not even of his existence, save as they came, having tested the grateful use of great water-cooling ollas when summer heats set the earth agasp, for the sake of creature comfort, to hector and haggle over his large porous vases of correct and classic shape, such as, mayhap, the marriage feast of Cana knew. Naught cared Ramon for their indifference or their contempt. Little knew he, little recked he, how they held him. Only when penurious greed heat down the price of his wares until no margin of profit remained for his labor, only then he murmured, half protesting, half grumbling, "Dios! how they are hard—los Americanos!" The very indolence of the Mexican nature is in a measure wholesome, since its imperturbability is superior to the scorn of narrow minds.

So Ramon wrought on, at his oven by the great adobe church, in contentment, and what to him seemed comfort, unshaken by a tremor of trouble, unpierced by a pang of passionate pain, until the day that Charlotte Pleyel came to stand beside his kiln, to awaken, all unwitting, the slumbering heart of the man in his hosom, and teach him the bitterness of fate.

It had rained in the night-time, and the sky, clear-washed, was cobalt behind its cumulous curd-white clouds; the cottonwoods shook their leaves with a sound like the clapping of myriads of tiny elfin hands; the blackbirds were carolling their own gurgling roundelay; the boom of blasts in the neighboring mines was less sharply resonant than usual; and the thunder of the stamp-mills down in the gulch drifted up the valley, subdued till it might have been a far-away surf dashing on ocean's shore.

Charlotte Pleyel and Miss Harrod were fast friends and firm. Both had been trained to a broader reach and a higher aim than the petty gossip and narrow purpose that surrounded them here. Charlotte, with all her mental force, had the artless enthusiasm of a child, with a child's well-believing and credulous faith in the whole world. Upon this ingenuous trust Miss Harrod's intense consciousness and keen reading of motives, seen by the light of experience, acted as a restraint. The two natures were complementary. So much they found in common of appreciation and attainment, that their companionship sufficed each for the other, almost without contact with the little world about them.

This morning, taking a new route homeward from one of the long, healthful strolls in which both delighted, they saw, on turning the corner of the churchyard wall, Ramon's rude furnace, and made their way thither among the scattered refuse and rubbish, all manner of debris, and sodden, undried adobes. Ramon Gutierrez was unloading his kiln, briskly whisking off dust and ashes from the flowerpots and deep bowls that lay, clean, red, unglazed, in the uncovered oven. The innate tact and unfeigned courtesy of his race stood him in ready stead when they announced their errand.

"How placidly he takes it all," said Charlotte Pleyel. "Do you suppose that stoicism is assumed for effect, or is it one of the race characteristics you often flaunt in my face?"

"Your latter hypothesis is correct," said Miss Harrod, dryly; "I rejoice to note that you prove amenable to instruction. Given, an American or an Englishman, of this humble grade, what flippancy, what would-be facetiousness, what impertinence of attempted equality, would meet such an unusual step as this of ours. But this poor fellow, without blankets enough to protect him from the cold, with every tradition of poverty and privation behind him, maintains his own self-respect without an effort to infringe upon ours. My dear, it is the coloring of heredity; a drop, perhaps, of the blood of some ancient hidalgo runs in his veins. Behold the man!"

Ramon had been gazing on them with an ease of regard that was as unconstrained as inoffensive, manipulating the while the mass of moulds. He put out his hand with a warning word as Charlotte with an unheeding bim, then laughed good-naturedly at her uncomprehending dismay.

"He says they are too hot to handle," said Miss Harrod. "Later, when they shall be cool, they are at our service."

"Ask him if we may come, as we planned, to work here. I have always longed for work like this. Of course we will pay for the trouble we give."

Ramon, when their desire became clear to him, disclaimed all thought of remuneration. "But of a surety! Most gladly will I give you aught of pleasure. Will the lady try now? These clumsy cups and dishes, these homely flowerpots, are all I have now. But other forms I can mould as well, when there is need. Will you but give to me a thought?—one little word of what you would have? For money? Ah, no. How should I be paid for a poor hall of clay? The whole round world, is it not made of earth?—and shall I ask pay for a bit of its crust? No! My house is poor and small, but it is yours."

Thenceforward Charlotte and Miss Harrod found novelty and purpose in their frequent visits to the little dim room where Ramon wrought. The lathe learned lovelier shapes of symmetry and strength, as its master modeled his creations after many a cut and design of world-famous vase, and artistic amphora, and long-lost lachrymal. The two women made themselves foster-mothers of his work, and brought forth every fine fact and fancy in their ken that might avail in his art. Ramon's sincere but simple gratitude was as far as possible from abjectness or sycophancy. He took their aid with straight-forward directness and matter-of-fact good faith, and a quiet, unconcerned maintenance of his own dignity, scanning and criticising with the artless freedom of a child old line engravings and etchings that were priceless.

"Is he the less bappy for knowing naught of Wedgewood and Palissy? Would he be more skillful for learning of Di Cesnola and Schliemann? Would it make his glaze smoother or more brilliant could he read of Pompeii and her frescoes, and all the treasures exhumed there?"

"No," said Charlotte; "he has copied that drawing—see with what admirable aptness—all ignorant that the cinerary urn it imitates held the ashes of a king and hero! Let him alone in his blissful ignorance."

But many an unwonted coin found its way to Ramon's hand for his improved workmanship. Not alone with patterns they aided him. Sending away for manuals on all branches of the ceramic art, the two studied together, and then verbally imparted their knowledge to the grown-up child who could not read for himself. And Miss Harrod, practical to a degree, paused one afternoon in the full swing of their daily healthful tramp among the barren hills, and made Charlotte share with her the burden of a great silken kerchief filled with a clay that her dilettante geology told her was kaolin, and patient reading and pertinacious experiment found its use. Then Charlotte unpacked her kit of porcelain colors, and set artistic eye and dexterous fingers at work in skillful ornamentation of over-glaze. So spread the fame of merit to be found in Ramon's dishes and flagons, and his plaques and tiles, crude though they still were, in that far-off valley, where as yet the beautiful was in ignominious subjection to the useful.

But, for all the pleasant consciousness of good deeds done and benefit conferred, Miss Harrod was ill at ease. She saw how every germ of feeling latent in the inactivity of Ramon's nature was developing in the light and warmth of their contact and counsel. Reared among Gutierrez's countrymen, she knew to a shade every possible combination in that strange compound of pride and passion, of hardihood and humility, of impulse, indolence, and irrationality, making up the ardent, inflammable Southern nature. She told herself all reassuring things, and rebuked her suspicions, and ridiculed herself for an ultra tendency toward romance. Yet her misgiving and foreboding grew apace. She could not fail to note how Ramon's speaking face glowed into sudden warmth when, lingering in his work-room, Charlotte's soft voice breathed approbation in the few broken words she could master of liquid Spanish; and bow his beautiful, lustrous eyes lost their languor, and lighted up with an intensity of admiration that was almost fierce, when they dwelt on Charlotte's fair, sweet face. One day Ramon, kneeling to knead the plastic clay, felt his cheek brushed by the long, silken braid of fair hair that swung over Charlotte's shoulder, as she moved near him, steadying a tall tankard she was bearing to the furnace. The dark potter caught that pressure, and held it to his lips with a swift, stealthy more significant than any outburst of frenzy could have

Miss Harrod set her teeth in her lip, to stifle her cry at the sight of that demonstration of suppressed and struggling emotion. But Charlotte, little vain as some spotless saint in marble, far above the thought of human passions, turned her eyes from the glowing furnace to the obscurity below all unconscious and unsuspecting. "You have dropped your clay, Ramon. How unfortunate! Is it quite spoiled? Another batch, then. And will you loosen my hair, dear? It caught on the lathe, and Ramon must not touch it—his hands are earthy." Miss Harrod drew Charlotte outside, although the rain was falling heavily. "I will not stay there another minute. I will go there never again. It is frightful." She stopped, conscious of Charlotte's wondering regard. "I am nervous. The fumes of the glazing-mixture went to my head, or some compound of chlorine set free from the colors in reaction. I—don't care to go back to-day."

Once away from the spot she took herself severely to task, as for unwarranted and groundless indignation.

"Of course, the poor fellow admires Charlotte—who could help it? Adores her even as the humblest believer may worship a saint. But further than that—or closer—hah! I'm growing childish. This weak, intellectual atmosphere vitiates my judgment." She told herself that the caress she had witnessed was an involuntary but impersonal homage to beauty—that homage of a dark race for blonde beauty, that might trace its origin back to Montezuman days, when Guatemozin and his fellows looked eagerly and longingly out across the eastern ocean for the promised coming of the fair god. But try how she would to lull her fear by ethnological conclusion, she could not dispel her conviction that Ramon's feeling for Charlotte was not the reverence of a devotee nor the gratitude of a beneficiary, but the infatuation of an ardent, undisciplined nature, undominated by any restraining influence of education or of expediency. He made no further alarming manifestations, but Miss Harrod could not help observing that as the days sped on he grew thin and pale, as one who is wasted by acute illness or by great grief. His sunken cheek, his feverish, shining eyes, his thin, tremulous hands, moved the girl's compassion. Yet she made it her earnest aim that she and Charlotte should go to the work-room as little as possible. In the dearth of diversion consequent upon the social chaos of Silver, it had become a favorite resource to frequent Ramon's dark and dingy little abode, and Miss Harrod found it no difficult task to be there only accompanied by some of her acquaintance. But in the difficulty of inventing plausible pretenses for avoiding the place, she developed an impatience and irritability that amazed Charlotte Pleyel.

"I don't see why you want to keep fagging at one whim forever," she said, crossly, one day. "No, I don't want to go to the pottery. For my own part, I like variety. And it hurts my lungs. I don't care to ruin my health for a few paltry bits of clay that would not cover my grave. I mean to walk to the top of Chihuahua Hill—I've never been there. Of course, you will do as you please."

As they passed one of the score or so of saloons that Silver boasts, Ramon, sitting on the pavement, looked up at them with piteous eyes that touched Miss Harrod sorely. They had not seen him for a fortnight.

"It can do no harm to greet him, he looks so ill."

These few days had wrought sad ravages in his face and form. He was wasted and shrunken, his face haggard and hollow. Miss Harrod had long suspected some organic trouble of the sort, but notwithstanding she knew it was the cause his race invariably assigns for such ailments, she heard with angry impatience Ramon's meek explanation of his malady.

"Sickness of the heart; yes, by that I suffer much. Something of palpitations, much of pain. No, no doctor can cure, I think. It comes from suffering—from sorrow—por la tristeza."

"Nonsense!" said Miss Harrod, in vigorous Spanish idiom. "¿Ni que tristeza! I dare say you've had heart-disease all your life long."

Half way up the hill, Miss Harrod brought her companion to a standstill.

"How uncommonly careless to have brought no glass! With one, we might see as far almost as the Mogollons. Wait you here, Charlotte, and I will just scamper down and borrow one from Le Cher." She had not gone a dozen rods toward the jeweler's, when the sound of voices in the steep, stony street behind her arrested her steps, and sent her hastening back with flying feet. A score of squalid natives thrust frowzy heads and ungainly, half-naked bodies out of their burrow-like hovels; the commotion of speech, pitched to accents of petulance or of pain, had stirred their sluggish sense to something like curiosity. Charlotte Pleyel, alarmed, amazed, with lips that quivered and eyes that commanded release, stood there in tragic attitude, clasped in the arms of Ramon Gutierrez. His dark olive skin was livid with excitement; great strained veins stood out on his brow and bare throat, thick and purple; his eyes were dilated and distended.

"Ramon!" cried Miss Harrod, in the vernacular, rude and rapid, "how dare you! Let go that lady at once! Do you hear?—or I shall strike you down like a dog! What do you mean, you bound?" She lifted her light umbrella club-wise, all her cold and cynical indifference gone, fierce as a tigress in defense of the woman she loved. Ramon opened his enfolding arms with a sudden pulsing motion that thrust Charlotte toward her friend with a force that almost felled her. His voice, normally gentle as a woman's, was hoarse and hard when he spoke.

"She would have entered yonder," he cried, pointing to the hut before them; "and I could only hold her—she would not understand. One lies there ill—ah, black and putrid! I would not let her go; how could I? Think, lady, of that perfect face all seamed and unsightly with the disease of scars. What, then!—do I not say it is viruelas?" Then Miss Harrod, not staying to explain, with only a word to Ramon, seized Charlotte and hurried her away to safety, far from the infected house.

For weeks a vague rumor had terrified the timid of small-pox here in Silver, unquarantined and unopposed by common precaution; but the authorities, fearful of deterring immigration, had hushed the whisper down.

All the profuse praise and earnest gratitude bestowed upon him availed not to lighten Ramon's despondency. In lieu of the olden gentle brightness a dull and stolid gloom had fallen upon him—a despairing and hopeless apathy.

"My work has for me now nothing of interest," he said, to Miss Harrod's kindly effort to awaken his attention. "Confession—no! I am done with the church. She succors not her children in the day of need; she opens no road to my doubt and pain. Ay! that I am wrong and mad, I know full well; but one's heart does not reason. Ah, yes! the difference I see, and the unworthiness, and the want of hope, but yet it hurts!—ay, Madre de Dios, it hurts!" He threw up his arms as he moved away with the unbalanced action of one deeply drunken.

That night a strange sense of uneasiness oppressed Miss Harrod. Telling herself this presentiment of impending evil was but natural to a nervous system undone by the shocks of the day, following her anxious strain and perplexity of weeks past, she fought with all the might of her will what seemed to her an irrational and childish terror. But at last, actuated by the force of a fear she could not define nor locate, she yielded in a sort of defiant desperation, and went swiftly away through the deepening dusk to the hotel where Charlotte abode. A tall, white figure was perched on the breakwater before her door, and Miss Harrod sat down beside her friend.

"I have a foolish apprehension of coming trouble or danger to-night," said Charlotte Pleyel. "The effect of our alarm to-day, perhaps, or else my nerves are agitated by electricity in the air. Do you see what a storm is raging yonder over Bear Mountain? The lightning is so sharp! The storm-king hurls jagged spears at the earth to-night. I hope the floodgates are all in. Do you know, the last rain sent the water almost over this wall?"

For through the streets of Silver, when the rains fall, rush turbid and turbulent torrents of water, that cut off unwary stragglers from their own quarter sometimes for hours; and that necessitate for houses on the lower levels defensive breakwaters of masonry, with floodgates to har out those angry streams.

"I wish—oh, how I wish!—Richard would come to-night." "He may," said Miss Harrod, soothingly; "the coach is late. Hark! I hear it now, just coming down the long hill."

Sitting in silence, they heard the heavy stage rumble down the road, and pause ponderously a brief while at the ugly, picturesque old postoffice building, around on the corner, under the cottonwoods. They could picture the inevitable sensation among the idle crowd of loungers hanging over the wooden breakwater there, and could imagine how the querulous officials grumbled over the mail-hags. Then the great, lumbering vehicle swayed around the corral corner, stopped at the hotel office, and—yes, a tall, light figure sprang out, and with long, eager steps came forward. Charlotte rose with one glad cry:

"Oh, Richard!"

"Well, Charlie, I'm home again. What! crying, dear little woman! Not sorry I'm here?"

Before the tender, teasing words were spoken, some one lurking in the shadow of the cottonwoods had leaped forth; some one with a dark, set face, transformed by devilish jealousy and hate; some one with eyes that gleamed bright, and a knife that flashed brighter; some one who would have exacted a dear cost for Richard Pleyel's caress but for Miss Harrod's keen vision and alertness. She caught Ramon's uplifted arm, and dashed him back against the house, flinging the weight of her whole body upon him. Richard Pleyel swung Charlotte into the shelter of one strong arm, and, quick as light, dropped into readiness of aim the unfailing weapon of the country.

"What does all this mean?"

"He embraces her!—he!" cried the maddened Mexican in the very muzzle of the murderously leveled revolver. "I meant no harm; I was here but to see her precious face, until that— But he embraces her, and you think I shall not kill him?"

"You think you love Charlotte? No!" Miss Harrod's voice, low, steady in her forced composure, cut through the air like the ping of a shot or the hiss of a whip-lash. "You think you love her, and yet you would slay him of all the world most dear to her—her husband!"

Ramon's knife fell from his hand and clinked on the pavement. His head drooped.

"Her—her husband, say you?"

"Her husband, and the father of her child."

Inside the open door just then a baby-voice rang out. It seemed to exorcise the demon of insane passion and cruel hate that had raged in Ramon's breast. Over his worn, troubled face stole something of the old look of gentleness and simple faith.

"I never dreamed of this," he murmured; "the saints bless her little one!"

"Well, must we stand here all night, doing private theatricals? There is Gerry, crying. What is this all about? Shall I shoot that damned brigand?" Richard Pleyel, understanding not a word of the dialogue, full of wrath and perplexity, restrained his natural impulse, fearful of acting with wrongheaded haste, and indemnified himself for that self-control by opening the safety-valve of profanity.

"No," cried Miss Harrod, "no, oh, no! It is all a mistake. He thought you—some one else."

"A pleasant prospect for 'some one else,'" said Richard, grimly, "and a large and enthusiastic reception for me."

When Ramon had gone uncertainly around the shadowy corner, Miss Harrod renewed the sensation. For the first time in her life she quietly swooned away. She had done her part; she had striven to guard his wife from the very knowledge of evil, and she had saved the life of the man she had loved long before he had known Charlotte.

Later, Richard Pleyel, revolving the situation slowly in his mind, announced his intention of finding Ramon. "Fellows who make such mistakes should be put under restraint. They are dangerous in the character of strays." And Miss Harrod, conquering the deadly physical weakness that had overcome her, insisted upon being of the party. The search was not attended with signal and unqualified success. They found Ramon's rooms; they found shattered fragments and pieces broken in firing; they found beautiful hits he had finished, glazed and glittering; a heap of unused clay, and a silent wheel; and they found the Mexican potter, dead among his work, his lifeless face resting upon his lathe.

NEW MEXICO, September, 1882.

YDA H. ADDIS.

CHICAGO NOVELETTES.

"Stop that horse-car!"

It was a halmy afternoon in August, and all the world seemed wrapped in a mantle of loveliness. The wind was sighing through lawn and garden in a drowsy fashion, and the flowers that lined the graveled walks of Coastcliff Castle seemed to be heckoning with loving hands to the Lady Esmeralda, as she sat in graceful poise on a velvet-covered fauvel, and gazed in a languid, dreamy, no-washing-to-hedone-for-three-days manner upon the pageant of nature.

But when the voice of one she knew—one she had loved with a deathless tenderness in the halcyon days gone by—came floating to her on the scented breath of the morning, a thrill passed through her, and the eyes, erstwhile so listless, gleamed with the baleful fires of revenge. Looking eagerly across the croquet-ground, she saw Pizarro McGinnis, the man who had scorned her love, coming across-lots on a run, while far in advance, and now almost opposite Coastcliff Castle, was a horse-car. The girl smiled grimly.

"Stop that car!" shouted Pizarro again.

The smile had faded from the pretty face now, but no look of pity took its place. "Devil a stop will he get from me," she murmured, and went into the house.

In a few moments there was a rap at the door. Esmeralda answered it, and found Pizarro there.

"You have blighted my life, false woman," he said. "I had a job way out on Blue Island Avenue, and now I shall lose it because you would not stop the car."

"Do you mean this?" asked the girl, kicking the dog off the front steps as she spoke.

"Yes," said the man, "you have utterly blasted all my prospects."

"Then," said Esmeralda, a look of holy calm and peaceful joy stealing over her face, "the Mulcaheys are avenged."—From "Passion's Upas-Tree," by Joseph Medill.

"Good-bye, papa."

The plump, white arms of Erica Brown were thrown about her father's neck, and the pretty face with its riant mouth and cunning dimples was pressed closely to the bronzed cheek of the farmer, as he stood in the kitchen doorway a moment before going out to his daily toil.

"I am going to plow the south meadow this morning, my darling," he said to the girl, "and when noon comes you must have my accounts as treasurer of the church all arranged, because the Building Committee will be here after dinner, and I am to turn over the money in my hands, so that the erection of the new church in the little dell just beyond where we buried that mouse-colored heifer two years ago last spring can be commenced at once." And kissing his daughter again, farmer Brown took a bite of hard tobacco and went away into the glad sunlight.

* * * * *

The petals of the June roses had fallen like a pink carpet along the edge of the woods, contrasting prettily with the vivid green of the grass and leaves. Above the hum of insects and the twittering of the birds rose the sturdy voice of Farmer Brown, swearing at the off mule. "Get up, darn it!" he said. But the mule only waved its ears in a sensuous, languid fashion, and looked wistfully into the next meadow, where the starry-eyed kine were grazing, and the old sorrel mare that had a splint on her near front leg was quaffing the incense of a new-born day. Picking up a short stick, the farmer advanced and struck the faithful mule a cruel blow just abast his midship ribs. Stretching out his hind legs in a dreamy, listless way, the mule felt them touch something, and in a moment Farmer Brown was sailing in the far blue overhead.

The little church in the mossy dell is not completed yet, and the Building Committee is anxiously waiting for the treasurer to come down.—From "He Cometh up as a Firework," by Joseph Medill.

"It is too true."

The tone in which these words were uttered was not that which one would expect to hear from the lips of a man so strong of limb, lithe of figure, and fair of face as Harold McIntyre. But though he stood there beneath the old elm-tree, in the full vigor of buoyant, youthful strength, his voice was the voice of tears, and over his face there passed ever and anon—more anon perhaps than ever—a sad, weary, four-flush look that was pitiful indeed. Bertha Redingote, to whom he spoke, was an only daughter, (her father had always been lucky), and between her and Harold there had grown up a love that the years had only fostered and strengthened.

They were to be married in the fall, these two—the sensuous, dreamy, coal-going-up-one-dollar-per-ton-every-day season, when the leaves begin to turn from tinted green to vivid scarlet—and, lover-like, they had been talking over the future.

"Yes," said Bertha, "I suppose there comes a time in every man's life when he wants a home—a home in the true sense of the word. The most unromantic man in the world has these dreams. And romance is a very beautiful thing."

"And are you then so very romantic, my sweet?" Harold asks, drawing the girl closer to him and kissing her tenderly.

"You know I am, darling," the girl replies, tapping with her riding-whip the pretty foot that peeps coyly out from beneath the dark blue dress.

"An elopement would be very romantic," says Harold.

The face of the girl lights up with a radiant smile.

"It would be delicious," she exclaims. "To steal away on a beautiful summer night like this, with the moon shedding a glory over all the earth, and seek some little ivy-crowned chapel where a hooded priest was waiting, and there be made the wife of the man you love, would he just too sweet."

And she draws closer to him.

"It is moonlight to-night," Harold says.

"Yes," replies the girl.

"And there is a chapel in yonder dell."

"I know it," Bertha says.

"There is only one thing wanting," He speaks the words slowly and with a tinge of pathos in his tones.

"What is that?" asks the girl, bending forward.

"A man to marry," he hisses in hoarse, bitter tones, and flees with a mocking laugh into the tall timber.—From "How Harold Skipped," by Joseph Medill, the Tribune Novelist.

A DAY AT LONG BEACH.

Our New York Correspondent Visits the Popular Long Island Resort.

On a perfect summer day this week I went to revisit Long Beach. It was at its best, under a clear sky and with fine atmospheric conditions; but it does not need to be seen at its best to give you a favorable impression of it. Without doubt this resort is the most superior of all the watering-places on Long Island. To be sure, you pass through Long Island City, on your way thither from New York, a city famous for its vile smells, and must hold your nose. But what pleasure is obtained without some self-sacrifice? Well, Long Beach is not a seaside town, with rival hotels filled with people who are trying to outshine each other, nor is it like Coney Island, with its jostling crowds and endless bang and rattle. This is what it is not, I say; for there is as much in what a thing is not as in what it is. There is nothing here but the hotel and several cottages. The beach itself is famous. One of the best features of the place is that the trains do not approach near enough to the hotel to disturb the guests or the cottages. This seclusion is what the better classes seek at the seaside, and when this spot was found out they took possession of it.

As I expected, I found the guests amusing themselves in a quiet way. There are no attractions external to the hotel, save the bathing on the beach, and yachting outside the breakers, which is indulged in by men who have a taste for that form of amusement. As for the ladies, they bathe in the morning, idle away the afternoon, lounging or reading, and flutter around the piazza at night in search of—lawful prey, if the truth must be told. They wear coquettish bathing-suits in which there is a very perceptible dash of æstheticism. Very pretty caps are worn in the water, and silk stockings, some of them artistically embroidered. As at other resorts, there is a marked tendency in bathing-costumes to fit the figure snugly, and to be scanty—which is all very well for the plump and shapely. The innocent naturally suppose that stockings are worn because they prevent an exposure of the bare flesh, and thereby a shock to the modesty of the wearers. "Isn't it this?" a young friend asked me with some astonishment. He had been at the Beach several days, and was desperately in love with a blue-eyed sylph, who wore dark-blue stockings clocked with red when sporting in the surf. It pained me to tell this youth that a woman, who said she knew what she knew, had told me in confidence that it was not to cover up their legs, of which they are proud, but to hide their feet. "By Jove! I never thought of that," the young man said. It was also a revelation to this ardent youth to learn that the feet of these pretty society young ladies are often deformed, and that their toes are crooked and have all sorts of protuberances on them. These sportive maidens were not born so. Tight shoes with high heels did it.

In the afternoons, mothers and their daughters sit in arm-chairs on the piazza, reading (I must say, to be truthful) sensational novels; and they are so dog-eared that some of the guests must exchange civilities and trade books. Most of the costumes were of airy summer fabrics, tastefully made and worn with grace. Under the marquees on the beach were more readers, half reclining on benches or on the sand. At this time of day, an air of complete repose seems to rest on everything. Late in the afternoon the concert opens, and the novel-readers waken into life, and engage in conversation or promenade on the piazza back and forth. Then there is dressing for dinner, and preparation for the enjoyment of the evening—little hops in the parlors, night concert, strolling on the beach, and confidential chats in shadowy corners. There is flirting, of course, and some attempts at match-making—that is, acquaintanceships are formed with a view to possible consequences. But where can enough people to make a small town (for there are a thousand guests in the house) live under the same roof without campaigning a little?

A very large proportion of the guests are from New York, and there are many good names among them. There are others from different parts of the country, and, in justice to these ladies, it should be said that they are quite as ambitious to give signs of their wealth and station as the people from the metropolis. The cottages which extend down the beach on a line with the great bouse are tenanted by persons of distinction. The second cottage (just back of which is a little chapel) is occupied by the fat and jovial Colonel Bob Ingersoll and his family. He has found time to run away from the Star Route trials in Washington, to spend two or three days each week at his cottage. Colonel Bob is such a good conversationalist, and is so perennially happy, that his society is courted by both men and women. His two daughters are very interesting looking girls, with round faces aglow with natural bloom. Their manner is somewhat reserved and shy, which may be accounted for by the fact that they have a consciousness all the time that many people whom they meet regard Colonel Bob, their fond papa, as a veritable Mephistopheles. Mrs. Ingersoll is a tall, pale woman, who does not care much for society. Although the Ingersolls have quitted their Illinois home, and now have a house in Washington, they have not abandoned all of their Illinois ways. A large flock of chickens may be seen any day back of their cottage, scratching in the sand. The notorious iconoclast sits on his piazza sometimes, and watches them with the interest of a back-country farmer.

They have been hunting the fox at Newport. This pastime is now out of season, but as it shakes up somewhat torpid livers, too much fault should not be found with it. The meetings there have been those of the Queens County Hunt. Around Newport the country is picturesque, but owing to the unevenness of the ground, and the natural obstructions to cross-country riding, the sport is more fatiguing than it is on the stretching meadows of Long Island. There is always a large number of fashionable spectators in coaches and carriages, producing a picturesque scene. At a meeting the other day our friend Freddie Gebhardt (who got a fall, poor boy, before the day was over) was conspicuous among the riders. So was Pierre Lorillard, and that very fat but polished Russian, Mr. Eliot Zabrowski. Mr. Peter Smith, of England, always joins in the chase, and is envied by his fellow-riders because he is an Englishman. Ah, me! what a cursed thing it is to be born in this country of ours. There are as many lady riders, it is said, at a meeting here, in proportion to the whole number of riders, as attend a chase in England, and the number is increasing rapidly, I am told. Mrs. Belmont Purdy is a famous horsewoman, and frequently goes to a hunt in weather that keeps all the other female riders at home. Another distinguished rider is Miss Emily Havemeyer, who received the brush at a recent meeting at Newport. She is frequently seen cantering on the drives at that resort with the fearlessness and grace of an amazon. Light-tinted habits are worn at the chase. They are very snug and scant, and are worn with a brown Derby hat. There can not be any doubt that great progress has been made in horsemanship of late in the country, and that American women can stick to their saddles when following hounds as well as English women. A few years ago only the woman of a bold, dashing nature was seen on horseback. Now the young lady of fashion must as well know how to ride as to dance, and many of the ladies who ride to hounds cut as good a figure as the gentlemen. Let any accomplishment once become fashionable and women will acquire it—are sure to do it, in fact.

As I have talked so much about the pastimes and the vagaries of fashionable life at the seaside, I will speak of another custom that has attained great popularity among the young people. By young people I mean those of a marriageable age, yet who have not married. It is a revival of the old-fashioned straw-ride, which boys and girls in the country so delight in. This is it—there are some modifications, to be sure, to suit the circumstances: In the country the straw-ride is taken in the winter season, in a huge sled, and the night is spent at some farm-house in dancing country-dances on a puncheon floor. He who has not gone on one of these frolics, let me say, has not enjoyed all of life. Well, our seaside friends scramble into a cart or a wagon, instead of into a sled. Straw is strewn on the floor of the wagon to lessen the resistance. The young people sit very close together (not always compelled to for economical reason—they like it) and enjoy themselves. The heavy wheels jolt over a country road—the moon may be shining—to some little hotel, where the landlord is surprised into activity. There may be a dance, if a fiddler can be procured, or a supper, or both. At a late hour the merry-makers tumble again into the straw; again the heavy wheels grind on the road; broad shoulders and lithe forms are strangely blended; the moon is low. These frolics are indulged in particularly at Long Branch, but they are also popular at many of the quiet nooks on Long Island frequented by the aristocracy.

At Brighton Beach, yesterday, a handsome yellow girl created a sensation in the crowd moving uneasily in front of the music pavilion. She had a plump, fine figure, and was dressed with an elegance and taste that showed her charms to advantage. She wore a close-fitting jersey of brocaded silk, laced at the back with a crimson cord, from under which fell a beautiful maroon velvet skirt. Her hat was a jaunty one of white straw, and her boots were of patent leather with the latest agony (this used in its literal sense) in heels. My first impression was that she was a rich Creole from the South, or the wife or mistress of some West Indian planter. This was my first impression, I say; but it faded away when I saw her afterward trundling a baby carriage walking at the side of her mistress. She was only a nurse-maid. Society indulges in whims at all seasons, but at no time so much as when at watering places. This transformation of nurse-girls, once arrayed in calico gowns and muslin caps, into the semblance of princess, is one of them. Life at Saratoga is largely made up of a contest between the female guests as to which shall wear the handsomest dresses and display the greatest number of them. This rivalry even goes so far that the piazza of one hotel is pitted against that of another. War is declared at the opening of the season, and hostilities go on without interruption until the close. The nurse-maid is a part of the family establishment. Why should she not be made to contribute to its magnificence? So she is dressed up, to her infinite delight. I know of no mothers like those of New York to gratify their vanity in respect to the display of their maids and children. Baby and nurse are daily put on exhibition. One day the little creature is dressed in pink, and its little head reclines on a pink pillow covered with lace. The nurse also wears pink to match the youngster's outfit. When baby is attired the next day in blue, the nurse likewise puts on blue—the pair forming a study in blue, you might say—and so on. Meanwhile, the mother attends the balls at the hotel, drives her village cart, and takes part in all the gayeties of fashionable life, only giving enough attention to her child to see that the daily programme is carried out.

NEW YORK, September 1, 1882.

"Poor Oscar Wilde!" says "Brunswick," in the Boston Gazette; "he is terribly tormented here, and yet he stays on. He must find us better paying than his own countrymen. But he has to stand a great amount of teasing. The other day he visited Long Branch, and when he went into the drawing-room of the West End Hotel, in the evening, a party of young men and maidens dressed in the most æsthetic costumes danced the "Patience" lancers, assuming the most agonizing attitudes before his very eyes. He didn't like it at all, and left the next day. Now he is visiting Beecher, at Peekskill. There is a certain resemblance between Beecher and Wilde. The long hair, the smooth face—but there the likeness ends. Beecher looks as though he had blood in his veins, while Wilde has the appearance of having lived on chalk and water."

M. Camille Flammarion, the eminent French astronomer, predicts the probable end of the world by its coming in contact with a comet, which he says will make its appearance in September. The comet will pass so near the earth, he declares, that the planet will have great difficulty in escaping destruction.

It is not difficult to sympathize with the horror of a dream which Sidney Smith once had in illness, and afterwards related to Mrs. Kemble—he dreamed that he "was chained to a rock and being talked to death by Harriet Martineau and Macaulay."

We have forty-six rear-admirals under pay. "The rear of the navy seems well protected," thinks the Lowell Courier.

PORTIÈRES.

The Momentous Question of Drapery versus Doors.

In an interesting plea for the use of flowing curtains in place of unwieldy doors, a writer in the New York Times remarks that wherever doors are not absolutely needed let us discard them. They are absolutely needed at the entrance of a house and to all the bed-rooms in the dwelling, and we like one (for scientific reasons) at the top of the kitchen stairs—why there should be another at the bottom has long been a puzzle to us. Smells that can not be kept out by one door must be in a bad way, or ventilation is wholly at fault. In reception-rooms we would do away with all doors. Curtains will fill their places a thousand times better. As to having a portière, as it is called, and a door, why should we? If we have one we do not need the other. Curtains cut off draughts far more effectually than doors, which, in truth, create them, and, by raising or drawing aside a curtain, we gain an outlet of air far more effectually than by setting the door open and having it slam the instant there is a breath of wind. Then, too, life would certainly be longer in many families, for after all, there is only a certain amount of force in the world, and much of it is expended in reiterated commands to "Shut that door," or "Leave the door open, will you," as the case may be. We give our vote decidedly in favor of curtains—tapestry ones, it may be, in winter; cool, delightful, pretty muslin ones in summer. Some houses have a double entrance door. What is the use of the inner one, and how far can it be replaced by a curtain? It is of very little practical use at all, and a hanging would answer every purpose. If there is no inner door, the curtain is still an advantage. If the entry is small, and that objectionable thing, the staircase, is prominent, as most architects now love to make it, the introduction of the hanging will save a certain shock to the nervous system every time the bouse is entered, and that is a gain. Even if the stairway is in broken flights, and a stained-glass window throws a mellow light into the hall, even under those fortunate and little-to-be-hoped-for circumstances, the substitution of drapery for wood will prove an advantage. Then the doorways opening in the hall, the reception-room, and the dining-room. Why should they meet us with the atrocious persistence of the modern door? Why not have them converted into pleasant objects by merely removing the door, and hanging drapery from a simple pole? It need not indeed, and should not, be long or full, only sufficient in length to touch the floor, and in width to fall in easy folds. A double cord can be so arranged that a curtain of this kind is as readily pulled back as a door is opened or shut, and how charming a hall looks where, instead of three or four blank doors, draperies suitable to the season hang in graceful folds. It may be objected that the substitution of curtains for doors would do away with a feeling of privacy and seclusion; everything would be heard, and servants would know more of family discussions than is exactly desirable; but to this there is the obvious reply that no doors can shut out secrets; that they never have done so, and never will. A sense of insecurity where the curtain alone separated us from the ears of the household might tend to the cultivation of lower voices, and to the suppression of many a word of rudeness and contempt which would never find utterance if we reflected that the "walls have ears." These hangings ought never to be glaring, and it is an open question whether an interior is really the better for the introduction of such very handsome materials for curtains as wealthy folks can indulge in. Do the heavy plush hangings, with their embroidered designs or "inlaid" work in equally handsome cloth or velvet, really look better than simpler bangings of light material handsomely embroidered? The whole "beauty" of such decoration lies in its suitability. Most dwellers in houses may well be content with simple hangings, in which lies scope for any amount of decorations, either by the needle or the brush. The most fashionable, if not always the most effective, draperies are in panels of different materials. The upper panel, for example, of satin, the centre of velvet, and the lower one of plush, or three different tones of color in the same material, are often used. None the less still more effective hangings are those in which the ground is strictly uniform and neutral in tone, and which are dependent for beauty upon the colors introduced by painting and needlework. Great efforts have been made of late to overcome the objection to the many openings to a room, and one method resorted to in the hope of obliterating the "cut-up" appearance of an apartment with three or four doors and as many windows, has been the introduction of wall-hangings and portières of the same material. The effect in some rooms is very pleasant, and as it is easily carried out the plan has something to recommend it. Tapestry hangings for the purpose are only within the reach of the few, but very simple materials are often used, among them that known as "dennin," which is of neutral blue color. A bordering of deeper blue or of neutral red is arranged around the room immediately below the ceiling, and upon this airy, handsome designs can be worked or painted or sewn on in relief; a deeper border or dado of the same design and material runs in like manner around the bottom, and the hangings thus prepared are carried right round the room, with the exception of the doorways and windows. Over these shelves are placed, upon which the bordering takes the shape of a hanging or cornice, and beneath this projection a plain iron rod is fixed, from which the drapery depends by means of rings, so that it can be thrown aside at pleasure. The effect is heightened if the mantel-shelf is similarly treated, and the frieze bordering carried round it, fitting into the fireplace. These hangings are of course plain and inexpensive; but there is no limit to the expense that can be lavished upon them when the attempt is made to reproduce by their means the effect of the tapestry hangings of the past. But in view of the articles furnished by modern ingenuity, art, and taste for wall decoration, it seems rather more suitable to limit draperies or hangings to the windows and doorways of a room. In doing so, if regard is had to the intention of the hanging, there is scope for every variety of taste, and there is no reason why in our modern houses should not reproduce all the beauty and effect of our ancestral homes of ancient splendor.

SOCIETY.

The Mills Reception.

A reception to Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, by Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills, at their residence at Millbrae—which has been talked of and looked forward to by society people for some time—took place on Tuesday evening last, and was as brilliant and delightful as it was possible to make it. It was attended by four or five hundred ladies and gentlemen from San Francisco, who left here by a special train at a quarter past nine o'clock in the evening for Millbrae, where they took carriages for the scene of festivities, over a highway prettily illuminated by Chinese lanterns and other lights. The grounds surrounding the handsome residence were also brilliantly illuminated, and presented a very agreeable and enlivening scene. The house ornamentation and floral decorations were truly elegant and tasteful in conception and arrangement, and all the other accessories, such as music, supper, etc., were as complete and as excellent as it was possible to make them. The guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. Dancing shortly afterward commenced, and was kept up until about two o'clock the next morning, when the guests finally departed, and returned to this city about three o'clock. This entertainment was given in honor of a son and daughter of the house who brought back from the East a wife and husband for their first presentation to San Francisco society. It will be remembered that something more than a year ago Miss Mills became the wife of Mr. Whitelaw Reid of the New York Tribune. He was not present at the entertainment, having been unexpectedly summoned to New York a few days since. Mr. Ogden Mills Jr. married Miss Livingstone of New York, a few months since. This is the first presentation of his bride to the family circle in San Francisco. There has been no entertainment ever given in our city more elegant or more select, nor where great wealth was more carefully kept subordinate to good taste.

The Whitney-Myrick Wedding.

Trinity Church was fashionably filled on Wednesday evening last, the occasion being the wedding of Captain Folliot A. Whitney, U. S. A., and Miss Hattie Myrick, of this city. There was a large number of officers in attendance beside the ushers, all of whom, except Generals McDowell and Kautz, were in full uniform. The bride is a pronounced brunette, and has a handsome face and figure, and is well known in San Francisco as a lady of culture and refinement. There never was a pleasanter or happier looking bride. She stepped along on her way to the chancel with all the graciousness and gracefulness of a young queen. Captain Whitney, of the Eighth Infantry, who is a fine specimen of American manhood, being nearly six feet in height and well proportioned, was in full uniform. He is a native of Washington, D. C., and joined the army of the Union as second-lieutenant of the First Maryland Cavalry, April 25, 1862. He fought all through the war, and was twice brevetted for gallant and meritorious service—once in the battle of Olustee, in Florida, and again in an engagement before Richmond. He entered the regular army before the close of the war, receiving his commission as first-lieutenant in the First Artillery on October 14, 1864, and was later transferred to the Eighteenth Infantry and subsequently to the Eighth. He is now on duty on this coast, and is a great favorite with all who know him.

The chancel was tastefully ornamented with cut flowers and evergreens, and overhead was a beautiful floral design containing the letters "W." and "M." in monogram and surmounted by two doves.

The bridal procession entered the church at a quarter to nine, preceded by the ushers—Lieutenant J. Pitcher, Eighth Infantry; Lieutenants Mott and Bailey, First Artillery; and Lieutenant Tate, First Cavalry. Then came the groomsmen and bridesmaids—Lieutenants Mott, L. Pitcher, and Hurlbert, all in uniform, and the Misses Nina Platt, Florence Godley, and Carrie Durbrow, all in white. Then Mrs. Elliott (a sister of the bride) and the groom, and Mr. Elliott and the bride-elect. The bride had on a costume of white satin, princess train, and wore a white tulle veil.

After the ceremony the bridal party repaired to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, where a reception took place, to which the following-named guests were invited, most of them being present:

General and Mrs. McDowell, Harry McDowell, General and Mrs. Kautz, Captain and Mrs. Bailey, Major Wilhelm, Captain Savage, Lieutenant and Mrs. Lynch, Lieutenant and Mrs. Winslow, Lieutenant and Mrs. C. M. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Berry, Colonel and Mrs. Sullivan, Miss Jennie Sullivan, Colonel and Mrs. Andrews, Miss Andrews, Captain Dillenback, Lieutenants Best and Hunter, Colonel and Mrs. Frank, Lieutenant Chamberlain, Lieutenant Tate, Mr. and Mrs. King, Colonel Smith, Colonel and Mrs. Bryant, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, General and Mrs. Elliott, Messrs. Nicholson and Beasley, Mrs. and Miss Mansfield, Dr. Mansfield, Captain and Mrs. Collier, Mr. and Mrs. Godley, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, Miss Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Durbrow, Miss Durbrow, George and Harry Durbrow, Mr. and Mrs. Platt, Dr. and Mrs. Landers, Miss Landers, Mrs. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Black, General and Mrs. Stoneman, Mr. and Mrs. Swift, Mr. and Mrs. Torbert, Miss Sheda Torbert, Mrs. Woods, Colonel and Mrs. Stevenson, the Misses Stevenson, Colonel and Mrs. Weller.

The De Nervo-Neal Wedding.

On Thursday afternoon there was married, at the residence of her parents, (where every girl ought to be married,) Miss Lillie Neal to Mr. De Nervo, of the banking house of Alfred Borel & Co. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Lion. The guests were confined to the relatives and more intimate friends of the contracting parties. The entertainment was elegant, the bride's presents most generous, and the bride as handsome as handsome could be. After the ceremony the bridal party went to Monterey.

Notes and Gossip.

Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Huntington, Miss Huntington, Miss Stoddard, and Mr. Pardee, who have been here since the first of July, left on Monday last for New York, accompanied by Mrs. Scott (a niece of Mrs. Huntington) as far as Los Angeles. Mrs. Crooks and her family, who have been visiting the Eastern watering places during the summer, and at which Miss Calla Crooks received much attention, returned home on Sunday last. Master Frederick H. Le-favor, of the Ranger, and wife, née Miss Collins, have arrived in New York and are at the Sturtevant House. Mrs. George Hamlin, who came on here from New York a few weeks ago to be present at her sister's wedding, will spend the winter with another sister, Miss Lillie Gerke, on California Street. General Thomas H. Williams and his daughter, Miss Mamie B. Williams, of Oakland, who have been visiting Monterey during the past week, have returned. Mr. and Mrs. Drury Melone, who have been staying a month at Monterey, have returned. Mrs. George S. Ladd returned from Monterey last week, after a stay of some months. Mrs. J. B. Haggin also returned from Monterey, where she has sojourned for several months. Mrs. Leland Stanford returned from Sacramento on Friday last. Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Dodge and their niece, Miss Mollie Dodge, left for the East during the week; Miss Dodge, has been an established favorite in San Francisco society since her stay here. Major Hammond has returned from Clear Lake. Captain Floyd, who has been in town for a few days, has returned to Clear Lake. Mrs. William Norris leaves on an Eastern visit week after next. Mr. and Mrs. Wright and Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford, who have been visiting Tahoe since their return from Monterey, got back from the lake on Tuesday last. Miss Edith Blanding has returned from Congress Springs. Mrs. Walter Dean and family have gone to New York. Mrs. Gordon Blanding will extend her stay at Monterey until the first of October. Mr. and Mrs. Stanwood, who have been spending the summer at San Rafael, have returned to the Palace. Mrs. Adam Grant and her niece, Miss Mamie Hammond, of Chicago, have returned from Lake Tahoe. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Payne have returned to the city. Mrs. Colonel W. B. Lent and her daughter, Miss Fannie Lent, are contemplating an early return to New York for the winter. Mrs. Thomas Breeze has returned for the season. Lieutenant F. W. Nahor, U. S. N., has been staying a few days in Los Angeles. George Gee has returned from Napa County. Lieutenant J. S. Oyster, U. S. N., arrived from the East on Thursday last. The Washington Sunday Herald says that the belle of the late garden party at the Grand Union of Saratoga was Miss Maud Hopkins, of San Francisco. The engagement between Archibald Forbes, "the great English war correspondent," and Miss Lulu Meigs, daughter of General Meigs, has been broken off. Captain Phillip, U. S. N., and Mrs. Phillip, have been on an excursion to Alaska. Mrs. Phillip accompanies her husband on the Ranger on its next trip down the southern coast. Miss Livingstone is visiting at the Navy Yard. F. R. Ames, U. S. A., has returned from Los Angeles. Justice and Mrs. Field left here for Washington on Tuesday last. Mrs. General Barnes and her son William left for Cambridge on Wednesday last; Mrs. Barnes, after seeing her son entered at Harvard, will visit her relatives on the Hudson and return to San Francisco early in November. Miss Viola Lowery, of San José, is visiting the family of Judge Sawyer. Mrs. J. M. Mansfield, of Napa, is visiting friends in this city. Mrs. Homer King, who has been spending the summer with her parents at Napa, has returned for the winter to her residence corner of Sacramento and Hyde streets; her sister, Mrs. Frank B. Edgerton, who has been roaming in Europe for nearly two years, left Liverpool for New York on Saturday last, and upon her arrival in America she will meet Miss Julia Sterling, of Napa, (who has been a guest of Senator and Mrs. J. P. Jones for the past eight months) and the two will return to California together, accompanied, probably, by Miss Bessie Grattan, who is now at Long Branch, and who, it is rumored, has won the heart of a wealthy New Zealander. General T. C. W. Smith, U. S. A., and Mrs. Smith, and Captain G. E. Merton, U. S. A., and Mrs. Merton, are stopping temporarily at the Grand, having arrived from Arizona and New Mexico a few days ago. Miss Van Dyke went to Monterey on Tuesday last to stay a few days. Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Merrill, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Merrill, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Holbrook, and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Stetson and the Misses Stetson, went to Monterey on Saturday last and returned during the early part of the present week. Captain Oliver Eldridge left for the East on Wednesday last to be gone until the middle of October. The Marquis of Lorne and his wife, (the Princess Louise), and their party, who left Canada on Monday, arrived at Chicago on Wednesday, and again departed on Thursday for this city, where they will probably arrive on Thursday or Friday next. The distinguished party are accompanied by Mrs. Herve and Miss McNeill, ladies in waiting to the princess; Colonel De Winton, the Governor's private secretary; Captain Bagot, aide-de-camp, and Doctor Barnie; also Colonel Tourtelotte, of General Sherman's staff, two orderlies and eight servants. Splendid suits have been placed in readiness for the party at the Palace, but it is not yet known how much attention the Governor and his wife will be willing to receive, although the Scotch and English residents of our city trust that they may be permitted to honor a daughter of the Empress of India in a fitting, if not, indeed, in an imposing way.

An English princess carried a Mother Hubbard parasol at the garden party at Marlborough House which she designed and painted her ownself. The design consisted of quaint Kate Greenaway children running round the edge, chasing a quantity of butterflies that fluttered over the whole surface. It was a spirited and an amusing picture, and in a good deal better taste than the jeweled parasol carried by one of her royal mother's subjects on the same occasion. Apparently flowers and loud colors were exhausted for this enterprising lady, for she bore triumphantly over her head a white-watered silk affair with a rosare at the top of amethysts and topaz, forming a star encircled with rows of seed pearls. Stones of smaller size were carried in a line down each of the bamboo stretchers of the frame, and the whole terminated by a fringe of white silk, on which were a profusion of jewels.

Chicago girls have discovered, it is said, that by keeping five or six hexans in the mouth the voice is given "an old aristocratic family accent."

The latest telegrams from Corea states that the uncle of the king has seized the throne. It's a cold day, even in Corea, when a pawnbroker gets left.

A DORMITORY SCENE.

A Northern Girl Describes Some Southern Girls at a Camp-Meeting.

It was in Kentucky. "The Camp of the Women" we christened it when we were ushered into the neat lodging-house for ladies on the camp-meeting premises. Twenty white single beds, with spring mattresses and good hard pillows; four nails driven into the joist by each headboard, to hang up petticoats and bonnets; clean pine floors, sweet pine walls, open pine rafters, above which the new pine roof spread protecting hands, with finger-tips touching on the ridge-pole, among the upper tree-houghs. There was a motherly woman in charge. Mankind had been banished to outer darkness, and we abandoned ourselves to that delightful "we-can-do-as-we-please" feeling, which the presence of the masculine element invariably destroys.

"Oceans of space," chirruped the trim little woman next door. She had put her watch in one shoe, and her switch and net in the other, and placed them both, like little soldiers on guard, under the head rail; her long, bright hose fluttered from the post, her bustle was coiled trimly under the head; her skirts, that rattled like chimes of faint bells when she lifted them over her head, were hung, with their dainty ruffles and rickrack, on the pallid wall. "Oceans of space! Isn't it jolly to crowd into close quarters, and get along with six feet instead of twenty?"

"Yes, ma'am. It reminds me of the Centennial," says a shrill voice from the farther corner. "We had to roll up our clothes in hundles and lay them on the floor, and but one could move about and dress at a time."

The time is ten o'clock; we are ready for the lights to be turned out, when up the stairs, all talking at once, as only women, Southern women, know how to do, without discord, comes a hevy of girls from a friend's cottage—six, eight, ten, eleven, we count, as their heads appear above the floor, from the unboxed stairway.

All cousins, Kentucky cousins, met by appointment on the old camp-ground. Eleven girl cousins! And how they did rattle on!

"Cousin Hallie, Cousin Tom was mightily provoked."

"Pooh! Cousin Bettie, I reckon it's Cousin Sallie you mean. Cousin Sallie is perfectly devoted to Cousin Tom, so Cousin Billy says."

"Why, Cousin Hallie, you don't know what you're talking about—me! Why, Cousin Tom is paying his addresses to Cousin Henri Woolfolk; didn't you know that? Yes'm."

"Cousin Mettie and Cousin John are coming to-morrow from Lexington; they stayed for the frolic at Crab Orchard Springs. They say Cousin Mettie was the prettiest girl on the floor. I reckon she was."

I don't doubt it, as these sample cousins disrobe. Luxuriant hair, silken and soft, about their shoulders; exquisite arms, tapering, slender, white, and shining as ivory, gleaming above their heads, as they brush their loosened locks; white foreheads, all alike, all with dark eyes; such pretty embroidered clothing—"ruffles and lace and snowy puffs," which Watterson asserts or laments "that only the angels see." Such harmless, innocent girls, all bound by interlacings of family ties, all with marked family resemblance.

After all the hair is plaited, and all the shining arms are hidden under muslin sleeves, they take their stockings—this queer hand of girls—and going close to the lamp, examine them for holes as if they were to read their fortunes on the dainty hose. Every left hand is thrust in the foot of a long-legged stocking. Some of the cousins discover wee holes in the toes, and they stand darning, with their heads bent toward the lamp, while the other cousins press around.

"Nonsense, darnin' stockings after eleven o'clock; some women in this dormitory want to get to sleep before morning," growls an elderly lady.

I doze from sheer fatigue, although the lights are bright, and the talking unabated. From time to time I rouse enough to see that the cousins are grouped three and five in a bed, sitting upright, with their arms about each other, and their heads together. Their talk has grown lower, but anon spouts up with little giggles and exclamations. Then they flit up and down the long room, hack and forth, mysterious and mischievous. Their moving forms and the white clothing hung high on the walls, and the rafters towering above, change in my sleepy brain to the ladder reaching from earth to heaven, upon which the angels ascend and descend. When I am roused—by the silence, I suppose—I find each pretty head bent reverently in prayer, in the sweet, childish fashion of the past, and the old lady who resented their darning is sitting upright, her arms clasped grimly about her knees, her nightcap in a frenzied peak, her spectacles awry, muttering, "I wonder what them gals will do next. Twelve o'clock, and they've been a chatterin' straight along. I reckon they'll pop up from their knees and begin a wardenance; they've done everything else."

But at last everything is still. The lantern is turned low. Mrs. Brannin, the janitress, is tip-toeing about, when a scream brings friend and foe to their elbows.

"Oh, Mrs. Brannin! do you think there are any snakes in here?"

"Snakes, miss? Shure and there couldn't be."

Then the whole eleven appeal to Mrs. Brannin to tell them there are no rats around; they are "so afraid of rats." My distracted neighbor puts on her specs again, sits up in bed, hugs her knees, and, wagging her ghostly nightcap, declares plaintively that she is "a stranger in these parts," and then announces her intention of arising and preparing to be burned at the stake.

Toward morning it is quiet in "the camp of the women." The stars slip along and peep through a knot-hole near the roof. An owl hoots in his wide-eyed dreams, and the railroad trains rumble and grumble along the track a mile away. Then the stars tremble like dew-drops amid the pink cloud-blossoms of the dawn. A mocking-bird takes up the song the whip-poor-will has dropped. A fresh breeze springs up to meet the sun, and the chatter of the cousins recommences. They all tell their dreams, and have a sign for every dream.

When I return from morning prayers in the chapel, they are yet pluming themselves before the looking-glasses. They sit in the breezy upper room, when they are ready for church, waiting for Cousin Mettie and Cousin John from the dissipations of Crab Orchard.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A SUSPENDED ELOPEMENT.

Love Struggling with a Bulldog, a Fire-Escape, and an Irate Farmer.

I had loved Bella for more than a year. When I say that I was over twenty-five, my readers of the sterner sex will, I am sure, be impressed by my constancy.

Bella had money. Not that this had, of course, anything to do with my extraordinary devotion, but it served for a time to be the barrier to our happiness. I first met and fell a victim to Bella's charms when her mother was alive. Her father had then been dead several years. The old lady took to me. I have a knack of getting on with old ladies. This is a very useful gift when they are well off, and are the mothers of lovely daughters. I advise all young men to cultivate it. The main point is always to be more attentive to the mother than the daughter. It is well to throw in occasional remarks about the apparent degeneracy of the age, and allude to the superior constitutions and characters of the preceding generation.

All was working smoothly for Bella and me, when cruel Fate, in the shape of a drunken car-driver, crushed the mother under its juggernaut wheels. We prosecuted the driver, and an intelligent jury, largely influenced by the wealth of the car company, decided that pedestrians have no rights which car-drivers are bound to respect.

It turned out that, by her father's will, Bella, in the event of her mother's death, was, until her twenty-first year, to be placed under the guardianship of an uncle, who was a farmer in Vermont. This same uncle was an admirable specimen of the typical Vermonter. He could freeze to the chance of making a dollar harder than a lobster's claw to a small boy's investigating finger. He had two great hulking sons, and determined that Bella should marry one or the other. Indeed, he believed he was acting most kindly in giving her a choice, instead of insisting on her taking the first-born. When old Green found out that I had come into the neighborhood, and was hanging about the premises, he sternly warned me off, and even hinted at the fierceness and number of the dogs which populated his yard at night. I took his word for the dogs—it was about the only thing I would have taken it for.

Bella was virtually a prisoner. The old farmhouse was three stories high—a very unusual thing in that part of the country—and she was locked in at night in her room on the top floor. With great difficulty I managed to get one or two letters to her; but so closely was she watched and guarded during the day that speech with her was impossible. I was in despair. There was yet a year to run before she could claim release from this guardianship. Was there no means of escape possible?

While I was pondering over this question in the little hotel where I had now been staying some weeks, I heard a strange voice addressed to the proprietor in loud tones, and I distinctly caught the words "portable fire-escape." Instantly an inspiration flashed through my mind. I joined the party, and in doing so heard these words:

"It's just the simplest thing in the world. A two-year-old baby couldn't hurt itself. No, sir, it 'ud like to have one for a plaything, and 'ud amuse itself all day hauling itself to the top o' the house and lettin' itself down again. They're so light and easy, that when folks don't want escapes I often sells them as baby-jumpers. Jest try one; it's only four dollars and a half. Make it four to you, as an advertisement, seein' you keeps a hotel, and you'd ought to have one for the protection of your guests."

"Guess not. My place is only two stories high; and if we have a fire, they can jump out or burn, just as they durn please." And the careful hotel-keeper strolled off.

"What have you there, my friend?" I asked of the stranger.

"A portable fire-escape. Simplest thing in the world. But I was a fool to come to this section, anyhow. There isn't a house high enough for a man to hurt himself much if he rolled off the roof, and a Vermonter 'ud sooner take chances on his life than spend a dime, any day."

"I'll tell you how you can sell one escape for twenty dollars, and no trouble either."

"You will! I'm your oyster."

I unfolded my plot, and found a sympathetic listener. He was to go up to Bella's uncle's house and try to sell an escape. Of course, we knew that would be perfectly hopeless. So, after being rebuffed, he was to insist on leaving one on trial for a week or two, till he came around again. He was also to try to smuggle a letter to Bella, explaining that she was at night to get possession of the escape, attach it to her bedstead, and slide down into my waiting arms, which would be waiting as near as the dogs would let them. On the night she was ready, she was to signal in a certain way with a candle at the window.

The peddler started off, and soon returned, having been successful in getting the letter to Bella, and having given an exhibition of how to use the escape. For several nights I waited in vain for the signal, but at last it was shown. I did not hear the dogs about, and I gently crept nearly under the window. It was opened.

"Are you there, Bella?" I whispered.

"Yes."

"You're not afraid, dear?"

"Not very. I've tied the end round the bedstead, and I don't think I can slip out of the loops. Have you a buggy waiting?"

"Yes, dear; at the first turn of the road."

"Very well. I am going to try now. Oh!"

She had launched herself off from the side, and was descending beautifully.

"Don't come too fast, dear. Use the check rope if you feel you are coming too quickly."

She had got to the second floor, when there was an unaccountable stoppage.

"What's the matter?" I cried.

"It won't move."

"Shake the rope."

"I have."

"Loosen the check."

"It is quite loose."

"Try to pull up a bit."

"I can't; I'm stuck fast."

"Let me shake the rope."

"Try. Oh! oh! It's no use; it won't move."

"Can't you slip out of the loop and slide down the rope?"

"I'll catch you."

"No, I can not; I am sitting in them, and can't get out."

"Oh, what's to be done?"

"I'll try to climb up and see."

Bella sat dangling in the air, like Mohammed's coffin, between heaven and earth.

I tried to climb, but the rope was not half an inch thick, and I slipped back. Then came the tragic sequel. There was a rush of something behind me, and a bulldog seized me in that part which had been nearest to him as he approached. I have heard of soldiers riddled with bullets, or almost cut and thrust to pieces by swords and bayonets, who have still advanced upon the enemy. I don't believe they could have done it with a bulldog hanging on rearward. If any one of my male readers doubts this aspersion of man's courage, let him get an angry bulldog and try.

Other dogs began to give tongue. Bella screamed. Lights were seen moving in the house.

"Go!" she cried; "they will kill you if they find you."

"But I can not leave you, Bella." I must own this was not true. I was leaving her in small sections down the dog's throat, and I felt I must run away.

"Go; save yourself."

By a convulsive effort I shook off the dog, a considerable portion of my trousers and a couple of good mouthfuls of my anatomy, and bounded over a fence and up a tree. From there I watched the triumphant Vermonter haul Bella into a second-story window. Then they came out, and with much crying and swearing began to look for me. I am happy to say they were unsuccessful. About two hours afterward I ventured to limp home.

Bella never tried to elope again. She remained proof against all the arguments of her uncle and the charms of his Green Mountain boys, and when she became legally her own mistress she became mine legally too.

Never saw that fire-escape man again. Perhaps it was better for him I didn't. He never called for his machine. Possibly he heard something of the story in his travels.

I don't know that there is any moral to this tale, except never to use a rope fire-escape for an elopement. There must have been something prophetic in the instinct of the author of the old song, when he wrote:

"When a lady elopes
Down a ladder of ropes,
She may go to Hongkong for me."

JULIAN MAGNUS.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 7, 1882.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The nomination of M. M. Estee is a journalistic triumph for the San Francisco Chronicle. That paper was for him from the start, advocated and aided his nomination, and is fairly and justly entitled to the admission that without its influence he would not have been nominated. If the Chronicle shall, with its usual zeal and ability, continue to be his champion through the campaign, it will have a rightful claim to be considered the organ of the administration, and entitled to its patronage.

We need not be ashamed of Governor Woods, the Republican candidate of the Southern Congressional District, when we compare him with any of the gentlemen who have represented that district in the Congress of the United States, and we may be justly proud of him when we compare him to Tully, his Democratic opponent. Governor Woods possesses a clean record, and is soher and good-mannered. He is an able debater, and an enthusiastic, sincere, and earnest Republican. He has had a large experience in public affairs, and is capable of making a splendid canvass in a district that is against him. In the event of his election he will make a mark in the Congress of the United States.

A. E. W. Worley, of Colonel Jackson's Post, "price one cent," was a delegate in the lately deceased Republican Convention. He diligently labored for three days in persistently ear-wiggling members to indorse the bill introduced by Page into Congress, that the sixteenth of October he declared a national holiday, in commemoration of the discovery of America on that day by Christopher Columbus. When we remember that if it had not been for Columbus there would be no America, and if no America there would be no Colonel Jackson, and if no Colonel Jackson no Post, "price one cent," we profoundly sympathize with the movement that would set aside the sixteenth of October for a national holiday, upon which our Italian citizens could furl their lateen sails, and not go a-fishing.

A London lady of the esoteric, rational dress circle has recently let the cat out of the divided-skirt hag. She says that, while it divides the legs from each other, it yet has an undivided skirt over this arrangement, so that in reality it amounts simply to trousers—that is, drawers worn under a skirt—nothing in the world but the old, old story, encircled with a little new lace and bugles, and called by new and rational names.

Austrian astronomers now claim to possess the largest refracting telescope in the world, that lately completed at Vienna. The length of this instrument is thirty-three feet and six inches.

It is said that there are three men in this country who read the Nation regularly. One of them is the proof-reader of that pink-and-white sheet. The other two are its editors.

Before the wedding day she was dear and he was her treasure; but afterward she became dearer and he no treasure.

Two styles of consolation: A man's—"Just what I expected." A woman's—"I told you how it would be."

The wise are free from perplexities, the virtuous from anxiety, and the bold from fear.

THE ENGLISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Edward Everett Hale, the well-known writer, sends the following letter to the August Wide Awake: "I have spent the last two evenings in the gallery of the House of Commons in London. The theory is that no strangers whatever are admitted. True, galleries are built for them, and the 'Speaker's gallery' is open to all strangers introduced in the proper way. Still, if any member of the House were disagreeable enough to look up and say, 'I see strangers,' the Speaker would have to order the sergeant-at-arms to clear the galleries. Even the reporters for the newspapers would have to go. More than half a century ago, some member—I think Mr. O'Connell—was angry with the newspapers, and for a month he had the galleries cleared every night, so that nothing of the debates was published but the little which members would tell. In the second place, the gallery is small. There are two large galleries for the House of Lords, for Embassadors, and for members of the House of Commons, if they should be crowded out below. These were wholly empty the two nights I was there. But for other people the gallery seats, even with crowding, are about three or four hundred only. All intelligent people in the world are glad to go, so the chances are bad for any one. In Washington, nearly two thousand persons can sit in the gallery of the House. In the Senate galleries there is room for ten times the number of Senators. I obtained a permit. The manner of entrance was like a novel. You enter through that grand Westminster Hall, which is often the place of a scene in Shakspeare. Parliament once sat here. Oliver Cromwell was inaugurated as Lord Protector here. There are now five statues of Elizabeth, of James I., of Charles I., and Charles II., and of some other kings here. Between Charles I. and Charles II. there is no Oliver Cromwell, however. You pass through this hall over the spot where Cromwell was inaugurated, and turn to the left into a beautiful new hall with fine statues of orators. From this you come to a large lobby, full of gentlemen, talking. I went at once to a side door, and, to a man in a black gown, more elaborate than you ever saw on a college stage, I said, 'I am admitted by Hon. Mr. —, who bids me say "—" to you.' The word I was to say was the pass-word, as if it were 'Hano-ver,' though that was not my pass. The man looked at a book, bowed, and I passed under a curtain, upstairs. Here I took my place in the gallery, among many other men, most of them, I think, working men, who were all very silent and attentive. Opposite us, at the other end of the long hall, we could see ladies tightly pressed against Gothic windows, with just such sashes as a stained-glass window has. The result is that these ladies look from our gallery exactly like pictures in a stained-glass window. Beneath them, in two rows, in a gallery like ours, were two lines of reporters, thirty or more in all. Opposite us is the Speaker's chair or throne. It is a high chair on a dais, with a canopy in dark wood over it. Beneath the Speaker sit three clerks. He and they are all in gowns and wigs. In Parliament, if members wish to write or read, they retire to rooms for that purpose. In practice, therefore, the House of Commons is much more empty than our houses of assembly or of representatives ever are. Much of the time when I was in the gallery there were not twenty members in the house. On the conservative or opposition side there would be only one, the 'whip,' as he is called. He is there simply to watch things, and see that the conservatives suffer no harm. Twice last night the conservative 'whip' rose and said: 'I rise to a point of order. There seems to be no quorum present.' Whoever was speaking had to sit down on the moment. Then the Speaker rose and said: 'The point of order is raised that there is no quorum.' Then he sat down and waited, silent, perhaps a minute. But instantly—summoned by telegraph from the library or lobbies—liberal members came streaming in and took their seats. At the end of the minute the Speaker rose, and began counting the house aloud, 'One, two, three, four,' and so on, till he came to forty. Forty is the number for a quorum. As soon as he said 'forty' the member who was speaking went on with his speech, and all the new-comers went out together to their former lives, laughing and talking. In this way the conservative whip made sure that as many as forty liberals, or supporters of government, were at hand. Probably he had ready to come in a considerable number of his own side. But none of them came on these two calls, because they would not be counted. Had not thirty-nine liberals been at hand to make forty with the one conservative, the house must have adjourned. It is part of the business of the liberal 'whip' to keep a quorum in attendance. While I have been in London there has been some discussion in the papers as to the extreme difficulty of keeping a quorum present on Tuesday. I can hardly make you understand the very complicated forms of the business of the house. I think indeed that many of the members of the house do not understand them. But they pay great deference to the Speaker's interpretation of them. In fact, his office is not political here, as with us; and although he has great power, it is understood that his province is judicial, and that he will not use his power in any partisan way. With us, the Speaker of the National House of Representatives appoints all the committees. This fact gives him great political power in the conduct of business. Many persons would tell you that his post is the most important in our government after the President's. Perhaps it is. I had the very great pleasure of hearing Mr. Gladstone speak. It was a little speech, of ten minutes' length, on a question of the currency. But it was long enough to show the great elements of his power. He was perfectly at ease. The speech had no more formality about it than has the talk of a couple of boys in walking to school. It was simply as if he were talking to a knot of men, mostly younger than himself, on a subject in which they were interested, and where they knew that he was at home. He stood quite at ease, turning from the Speaker to different parts of the house as he referred to one member or another, resting on the table as much as he really wanted to rest, but not in any attitudinizing way. And he showed the greatest power of all by sitting down the moment he was done. Although he did as they all do, that is, he summed his speech in a few words at the end, without any formal climax, or 'peroration.'"

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

A writer on France in 1816 says: "The best claret is made on a farm called La Fitte, which is not large, and can furnish but a small portion of the wine sold under that name. People say that the quality of the fruit differs on the adjoining ground, even close to the partition fence."

Tradition says that beer was first made at Pelusium, on the Nile, 400 B. C.; but nowadays only a crude kind of barley beer is made by the natives in Egypt. There is, however, a brewery in Cairo, owned by a Geneva company, and worked on the German system, which can turn out four hundred barrels a week.

A statue in clay of Oliver Cromwell has been placed in the private corridor behind the House of Lords, with what object no one seems to know. It is all the more surprising that there is no statue of the Protector in London, as his features might be exactly reproduced. At Mr. Wilkinson's, near Sevenoaks, is Oliver's head. It is supposed to have been blown down from the top of Westminster Hall, where it had been placed, picked up, and sold to an ancestor of Mr. Wilkinson. The head has been embalmed, and the hair and features are in excellent preservation. There is the hole in the skull made by the pike on which on which it was impaled; also, a hole where a large wart has been cut out.

An account is given in English journals of the performance of a locomotive on the Great Northern Railroad, which recently carried the Duke of Edinburgh from Leeds to London—one hundred and eighty-six and three-quarter miles—in three hours, or at the rate of sixty-two miles per hour. This speed has frequently been equaled, and sometimes passed for short distances, but it is remarkable as the average rate for such a long journey. The engine had driving-wheels eight feet in diameter, or two feet larger than the wheels of the American engines. To accomplish the trip in the time given, the wheel must have made two hundred and nineteen revolutions per minute, or more than thirty thousand in three hours.

The most perfect specimen of a type-setting machine is now substantially complete in a private room at Colt's Hartford establishment. By an ingenious arrangement, it distributes while it sets, and the work of distribution being slightly more rapid than the setting, the cases are always full. The distributor is regulated in such a way that the instant the most frequently used letter case (say that of e) is filled, the work of distribution stops, to be resumed as soon as the case begins to be emptied. If the machine will do the work of two men setting type, (and much better than this is claimed for it,) it can readily be said to do the work of four, since the tedious work of distribution is disposed of at the same time, as a sort of side issue. And each letter goes into its appropriate case as certainly and regularly as the Yale key fits into its own lock.

Literary puzzles, now the fashion, are not exactly a novelty. An advocate, named Marchant, took it into his head to write a long love-letter from which the vowel a should be excluded. It exists printed, but absurd. In 1816 one Rouden outdid the love-letter by composing La Piece Sans A, which was acted (but only up to the commencement of the last scene) at the Théâtre des Variétés, drawing a crowded house to witness the first performance of this dramatic cripple. The curtain rose. Duval entered from one side of the stage and Mengozzi from the other. The first words uttered by the latter personage were: "Ah, monsieur! vous voilà!" At which the whole audience burst into a roar of laughter. It was a curious beginning for "A Piece Without an A." Luckily Mengozzi was within earshot of the prompter, and corrected his mistake with "Eb, monsieur! vous voici!"

Mr. E. B. Elliott, the Government Actuary, has computed the weight of a million dollars in gold and silver coin as follows: The standard gold dollar of the United States contains of gold of nine-tenths fineness 25.8 grains, and the standard silver dollar contains of silver of nine-tenths fineness 412.5 grains. One million standard gold dollars consequently weigh 25,800,000 grains, or 53,750 ounces troy, or 4,479 1-6 pounds troy of 5,760 grains each, or 3,685.71 pounds avoirdupois of 7,000 grains each, or 1 843-1000 "short" tons of 2,000 pounds avoirdupois each, or 1 645-1000 "long" tons of 2,240 pounds avoirdupois each. One million standard silver dollars weigh 412,500,000 grains, or 859,375 ounces troy, or 171,614.58 pounds troy, or 58,928.57 pounds avoirdupois, or 29 464-1000 "short" tons of 2,000 pounds avoirdupois each, or 26 307-1000 "long" tons of 2,240 pounds avoirdupois each. In round numbers, the following table represents the weight of a million dollars in the coins named:

Description of Coin.	Tons.
Standard gold coin.....	1 1/2
Standard silver coin.....	26 3/4
Subsidiary silver coin.....	25
Minor coin, five-cent nickel.....	100

Napoleon III. was fond of pomp and show, besides being a confirmed sensualist; and he derived a personal enjoyment from his entertainments. They were on a magnificent scale; but the only marked or lasting influence of the Imperial Court, as regards fashion or manners, was on female dress. The invitations to Compiègne and Fontainebleau were commonly for eight days; and a lady was expected to change her dress three or four times a day, and never to wear the same dress twice. The outfit for the visit was computed at not less than twelve thousand francs. A Frenchwoman of the imperial circle complained that she could not dress for less than one thousand pounds a year. A milliner's bill, on which an action was brought, amounted to fifteen thousand pounds for three years, and the fair defendant paid twelve thousand pounds into court. The case was reported in the Gazette des Tribunaux. This spirit of extravagance proved catching, and extended to England, where traces of it are still discernible. It is not uncommon for a lady at a country house to come down in a morning dress, change it for lawn-tennis or a walk, put on a neglige trimmed with lace for the afternoon tea, and then dress for dinner or a ball. No indefensible fashion has taken so complete a hold on women of all classes as the fashion for false hair. Seventy-five tons of hair from the east paid duty at Marseilles alone in 1875, and Monsieur Baudrillard computes that double that quantity is annually worked up in France. The exports, principally to England and the United States, are estimated at seventy-five thousand pounds sterling.

Valuable discoveries have been made and valuable inventions suggested by the veriest accidents. An alchemist, while seeking to discover a mixture of earths that would make the most durable crucibles, one day found that he had made porcelain. The power of lenses, as applied to the telescope, was discovered by a watchmaker's apprentice. While holding spectacle glasses between his thumb and finger he was startled at the sudden enlarged appearance of a neighboring church spire. The art of etching upon glass was discovered by a Nuremberg glass-cutter. By accident a few drops of aqua fortis fell upon his spectacles. He noticed that the glass corroded and softened where the acid had touched it. That was hint enough. He drew figures upon the glass with varnish, applied the corroding fluid, then cut away the glass around the drawing. When the varnish was removed the figure appeared raised upon a dark ground. Mezzotinto owed its invention to the simple accident of the gun-barrel of a sentry becoming rusty with dew. The swaying of a chandelier in a cathedral suggested to Galileo the application of a pendulum. The art of lithography was perfected through a suggestion made by accident. A poor musician was curious to know whether music could not be etched upon stone as well as upon copper. After he had prepared his slab his mother asked him to make a memorandum of such clothes as he proposed to be sent away to be washed. Not having pen, ink, and paper convenient, he wrote the list on the stone, intending to make a copy at his leisure. A few days later, when about to clean the stone, he wondered what effect aqua fortis would have upon it. He applied the acid, and in a few days saw the writing standing out in full relief. The next step was to ink the stone and take off an impression. Hence the litho-

OLD FAVORITES.

Prelude to the Voices of the Night.

Pleasant it was when woods were green,
And winds were soft and low,
To lie amid some sylvan scene,
Where, the long drooping boughs between,
Shadows dark and sunlight shewn
Alternate come and go;

Or where the denser grove receives
No sunlight from above,
But the dark foliage interweaves
In one unbroken roof of leaves,
Underneath whose sloping eaves,
The shadows hardly move.

Beneath some patriarchal tree
I lay upon the ground;
His boary arms uplifted he,
And all the broad leaves over me
Clapped their little hands in glee,
With one continuous sound—

A slumberous sound, a sound that brings
The feelings of a dream,
As of innumerable wings,
As, when a bell no longer swings,
Faint the hollow murmur rings
O'er meadow, lake, and stream.

And dreams of that which can not die,
Bright visions came to me,
As, lapped in thought, I used to lie,
And gaze into the summer sky,
Where the sailing clouds went by,
Like ships upon the sea;

Dreams that the soul of youth engage
Ere fancy has been quelled;
Old legends of the monkish page,
Traditions of the saint and sage,
Tales that have the ring of age,
And chronicles of old.

And, loving still these quaint old themes,
Even in the city's throng
I feel the freshness of the streams
That, crossed by shades and sunny gleams,
Water the green land of dreams,
The holy land of song.

—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Intimations.

What glory then! What darkness now!
A glimpse, a thrill, and it is flown!
I reach, I grasp, but stand alone,
With empty arms and upturned brow.

Ye may not see, O weary eyes!
The band of angels, swift and bright,
That pass, but can not wake your sight,
Down trooping from the crowded skies.

O heavy ears! Ye may not hear
The strains that pass my conscious soul,
And seek, but find no earthly goal,
Far falling from another sphere.

Ah! soul of mine! Ah! soul of mine!
Thy sluggish senses are but bars
That stand between thee and the stars,
And shut thee from the world divine.

For something sweeter far than sound,
And something finer than the light
Comes through the discord and the night,
And penetrates or wraps thee round.

Nay, God is here, couldst thou but see;
All things of beauty are of Him;
And heaven, that holds the cherubim,
As lovingly embraces thee.

If thou hast apprehended well
The tender glory of a flower,
Which moved thee by some subtle power
Whose source and sway thou couldst not tell;

If thou hast kindled to the sweep
Of stormy clouds across the sky,
Or gazed with trance and tearful eye,
And swelling breast, upon the deep;

If thou hast felt the throb and thrill
Of early day and happy birds,
While peace, that drowned thy chosen words
Has flowed from thee in glad good-will—

Then hast thou drunk the heavenly dew:
Then have thy feet in rapture trod
The pathway of a thought of God,
And death can show thee nothing new.

For heaven and beauty are the same—
Of God the all-informing thought,
To sweet, supreme expression wrought,
And syllabled by sound and flame.

The light that beams from childhood's eyes,
The charm that dwells in summer woods,
The holy influence that broods
O'er all things under twilight skies—

The music of the simple notes
That rise from happy human homes,
The joy in life of all that roams
Upon the earth, and all that floats,

Proclaim that heaven's sweet providence
Enwraps the homely earth in whole,
And finds the secret of the soul
Through channels subtler than the sense.

O soul of mine! Throw wide thy door,
And cleanse thy paths from doubt and sin;
And the bright light shall enter in
And give thee heaven forevermore! —J. G. Holland.

The Nevermore.

Look in my face; my name is Might-have-been;
I am also called No-more, Too-late, Farewell;
Unto thine ear I hold the dead-sea shell
Cast up thy life's foam-tretted feet between;
Unto thine eyes the glass where that is seen
Which had life's form and love's, but by my spell
Is now a shaken shadow intolerable,
Of ultimate things unuttered the frail screen.

Mark me, bow still I am! But should there dart
One moment through my soul the soft surprise
Of that winged Peace which lulls the breath of sighs,
Then shalt thou see me smile, and turn apart
Thy visage to mine ambush at thy heart
Sleepless with cold commemorative eyes.

—Dante Gabriel Rossetti.

LITERARY NOTES.

"The Villa Bohemia" is a bright little story, by Marie Le Baron, of how six charming maidens hired an old country farm-house, and resolved to strictly prohibit the intrusion of any male being. Their unsuccessful efforts are the cause of several amusing episodes. Published by Kochendoerfer & Urie, 200 Broadway, New York; for sale by the booksellers; price, 50 cents.

"Cerebral Hyperemia; Does it Exist?" is a reply which Doctor C. F. Buckley, an able British physician, makes to several works by Doctor W. A. Hammond, of New York, principal among which is a volume entitled "The Nervous System." The author regards Doctor Hammond's works as "misleading, if not pernicious," and in a logical manner dissects their statements and conclusions. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

Mr. W. A. Baillie-Grohman is an English gentleman who visited the Rocky Mountains about four years ago, and wrote letters concerning his trip to several English periodicals, such as Field and the Fortnightly Review. He has since added much to these, and now embodies them in a volume entitled "Camps in the Rockies." Mr. Baillie-Grohman is a member of the Alpine Club, and since the age of ten has spent the greater portion of his time in exploring the high mountains of Europe; so that his descriptions of upland scenery in this country are rendered doubly interesting by reason of the author's past experience. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.75.

Mr. Luigi Monti is the reputed author of "Leone," the latest number of the "Round Robin Series." It is the story of the love of an Italian artist for an American beauty. The scene of the story is laid in Italy. An Italian nobleman, being cheated of his betrothed by her mercenary father, becomes a brigand, and slays the man who married her. She had died some months before, but the brigand steals the child, whom she had left, and places it under the guardianship of an old Capuchin. The monk educates the boy as a painter, and, ignorant himself of the lad's parentage, conceals from him any knowledge concerning the brigand's connection. The boy becomes a handsome and successful artist, and falls in love with the pretty daughter of a New England tourist. A series of complications arise by which the mystery is cleared, and the pair are united in a happy marriage. Published by J. R. Osgood & Co., Boston; for sale by the booksellers.

"Bimbi" is the name that Ouida gives to a volume of children's stories which she has just published. They were written several years ago for the special amusement of the children of the present king of Italy, and are now first brought from royal darkness into public light. The tales are told in Ouida's cosmopolitan jumble, with French, Italian, and Heaven-knows-what interlarded with the English. And yet they are interesting and charming, as Ouida generally is, notwithstanding the abuse which she receives on all sides from the critics. It would be difficult to name a story as picturesque as her novel "In Maremma," which was published not long ago; and yet, with the exception of a few English reviewers, a large number of the critics dismissed it as "tawdry" and "unimaginative." In the present volume the story of the poodle "Mouffou," as the New York Tribune remarks, "is worthy taking a place with 'Rab and His Friends.'" The "Nürnberg Stove" is a delightful story about an old town in the Tyrol and its simple inhabitants. "The Little Earl" tells of an eight-year-old boy's experience on the Isle of Wight. The remaining stories are told in a manner which will hold the attention of the youngest story-listeners. Published by J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia; for sale by Joseph Hofmann, 210 Montgomery Street; price, $1.25.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record for July contains a very interesting paper by Hon. J. N. Arnold on "Reminiscences of Lincoln and Congress during the Rebellion." Some of the incidents therein related concerning Senator McDougall of California will prove highly reminiscent to Californians. The remainder of this number is taken up with notes and records of old New York families. Published at 64 Madison Avenue, New York; price, $2 per annum.—The September number of the Electric contains among other articles "Carlyle's Life and Reminiscences," "Electric Light and Force," by the Right Honorable Viscount Bury; "French Prisons and Convict Establishments," "Wagner, the musician," "Esthetic Poetry: Dante Gabriel Rossetti," by Principal Sharp; "A Song for Women," by A. Matheson; "Personal Reminiscences of General Garibaldi," by his aide-de-camp, Alberto Mario; "From Fish to Reptile," "Doctor John Brown," and "The Great African Mystery."—The September Century opens with a delightful paper on "Thomas Bewick," by Austin Dobson. "Ningpo and the Buddhist Temples" are described by Miss Gordon Cumming. Edmund W. Gosse details many interesting facts concerning "Dante Gabriel Rossetti."—The Atlantic Monthly for September contains, among other articles, the first of a series of papers on the "Nation of Willows," by F. H. Cushing, the great Umi traveler; "The Last Chance of the Confederacy," by General A. C. McClure; and "A Geologic Ramble on the Weald," by Moncure D. Conway.

Announcements: Dr. A. L. Stone's "Leaves from a Finished Pastorate" is nearly ready for the market. It will contain twenty sermons, and makes nearly three hundred pages. It will appear in New York, and will cost to subscribers two dollars and a half per volume. Samuel Carson is the Pacific Coast agent.—The Early-English Text Society will probably issue this year the fifteenth century English poems owned by the Duke of Orleans. They are being reedited from the manuscript by Dr. Hanskeret.—A new translation of the works of Machiavelli, by C. E. Detmold, will be brought out immediately by J. R. Osgood & Co.—M. Zola's new novel, "Le Bonheur des Dames," is to have a heroine of the saintly type.—Madame Judith Gautier, who is an admiring friend of Richard Wagner, and a frequent visitor in his family, has just published at Paris a study of his life and works.—The Youth's Companion, of Boston, has begun the publication of a new serial story by William Black. It was written exclusively for that paper, and is entitled "An Adventure in Thule."—George Alfred Townsend is in Prussia. He will write a book on his return home.—Among the poems to be published this autumn are those of Mary Clemmer and Margaret E. Sangster. They will be brought out by J. R. Osgood & Co.—Our Continental has just purchased Potter's American Monthly, a Philadelphia publication.—Mr. H. C. Bunner's poems, both the serious and the humorous, are to be published in "Holt's Leisure Hour Series."—Jules Verne's latest work is entitled "Le Gazon Vert."—Harper's Christmas will contain a poem by T. B. Aldrich set to music.—A beautiful new edition of "The Lady of the Lake," with one hundred and twenty illustrations by leading American artists, is being prepared for the holidays by J. R. Osgood & Co.—"Highways and Byways," written and illustrated by W. H. Gibson, will be published in September, by the Messrs. Harper. Mr. Abbey's illustrations of Herrick will be printed in a handsome volume in October.—Victor Hugo, nearly thirty years ago, wrote a play with Mazarin for the hero. This play, under the title of "Les Jumeaux," he is now revising for the press.—"Helen of Troy," Mr. Andrew Lang's new poem, is a long one. It consists of six books of almost four hundred lines each. It will be published in London in October, and will be brought out in this country by Charles Scribner's Sons.—A volume from the pen of the late J. T. Fields, "Notes on Men and their Books," will appear during the autumn. It has been edited by his widow.—Miss Constance Fennimore Woolson, who has now quite recovered from an almost fatal illness, has finished her new novel, and the first chapters will be printed in the November number of Harper's Magazine. It is called "For the Major," and is altogether an American story. Another pleasant announcement made by the editor of the magazine is that of a series of short stories which Charles Reade is writing expressly for its pages.—Among the forthcoming publications of Cassell, Petter & Galpin is an edition of Dickens's "Boots at the Holly-Tree Inn," with sixteen full-page illustrations, chromo-lithographed in ten colors, and sixteen illustrations in black and white, from original designs by J. C. Beard.

CIRCLED BY FIRE.

The Awful Peril of a Brigade in the Midst of a Flaming Forest.

11.

The colonel's words fell solemnly upon the ears of the soldiers. There was a hush. After a pause, he proceeded: "Yet all hope is not lost. With God's help, we can extricate ourselves. The fire is the only enemy we have to fear. Let every man search for a clearing. Once that is found, I will answer for the rest."

We have said that Mackenzie inspired his troops with great confidence in time of danger, and now that the chances of salvation were so very slight, he became once more the man of action.

In the twinkling of an eye the men divided into groups, and started in every direction in search of the desired glade. Unfortunately, and as if ill-luck attended them, the column was in a part of the forest where impenetrable thickets abounded. The thick brush interlaced like the threads of an impervious texture. Nevertheless, paths were found here and there. The most intelligent officers, and those familiar with the country, succeeded in penetrating the underbrush.

Suddenly the colonel paused. "A clearing!" he cried. "We passed near one fifteen hundred yards from here."

The drum and trumpet called the men.

"We must retrace our steps," said Mackenzie. "The conflagration is farthest from us on the eastern side, and on that very side there is a clearing. Safety, certain safety, lies there. Forward, my friends!"

The column obeyed. The soldiers, like half-rebellious children, were persuaded to obedience by promises of reward. Yet the colonel conceived that in order to make them hopeful and active, it was necessary to make them aware of his project. Having once more reunited his officers, he said:

"Gentlemen, as soon as we reach the glade, all the men must be employed in tearing up the shrubs, grass, and all the vegetation which has sprung up there. An area large enough to hold the troops must be cleared. The artillery must be placed in the middle so as to prevent the explosion of the powder and the shells. Then we must oppose fire with fire, by kindling the resinous trees and brush around us. Our flames will spread out and meet those of Tantia-Taupée, which will be extinguished for want of food."

The soldiers understood the mechanism of this plan, and already felt assured of safety. They marched steadily for twenty minutes. The cavalry, who had started ahead, were already at work when the infantry reached the glade, which proved much nearer than they had hoped. As the colonel had foreseen, the conflagration advanced with terrible rapidity by means of the grass and underbrush, dried by the rays of the sun. The twigs caught as if by enchantment, and when their flames encountered a resinous tree the latter speedily writhed in the embraces of the formidable element. Very fortunately there was no breeze. The absolutely calm atmosphere allowed the smoke to ascend in a straight line toward the sky. If a violent wind had blown, every man of the ill-fated army would have been asphyxiated before being seriously threatened by the flames. As soon as the main body of the troops arrived, the task was organized. Major Welcome calculated the space needed for a shelter, and the clearing was commenced at the edge of the area indicated. Every man worked hard, and at a disadvantage, for there were no tools, and it was necessary to use the bayonets to dig up the deeply-rooted shrubs and furze, which tore the hands and stained them with blood. Mackenzie, his forehead deluged with sweat, worked like a common soldier. He was impatient at their slow progress. The flames were reaching the glade on all sides, except toward the east, where it was quite distant. The light cast by the three or four separate fires, which were about to unite, was so bright that the men no longer needed torches to work by. The terrible hour was about to strike. The flames would reach the soldiers in six or seven minutes. Would they have time to strip the ground still uncleared? Luckily with two thousand men, an arduous task may be accomplished in five minutes when no pains are spared.

"We shall succeed!" murmured the colonel, looking around him. But at this moment a frightful noise caused all the improvised workmen to raise their heads. It was not the rumbling of the fire; it was something else. Loud stamping and strange roars were heard, the nature of which was not apparent. The elephants waved their trunks, and again gave signs of uneasiness. In two minutes frightfully resounding howls were distinguished, which increased, accompanied by the crackling of branches.

"Malediction!" exclaimed the major; "it is the wild elephants rushing from the fire."

In fact the forest gaped. Gigantic pachyderms suddenly detached themselves from the sombre verdure, and entered the sphere of action of the column. It was a fearful scene. The monsters were too much excited to be deterred by the presence of man. They rushed upon the little army. Mackenzie, seeing the danger, uttered a cry.

"Fire! Fire on the elephants!" he yelled.

They fired rapidly and without aim. It was a disorderly discharge. Several elephants were wounded. Two or three fell. But about forty of them that were unhurt passed through the centre of the column like an avalanche, uttering harsh cries, and disappeared again in the depths of the forest, having spread disorder among the horsemen. More than fifty men had been knocked down, trampled upon, killed, or seriously wounded. Horses ran about in every direction and increased the confusion. One or two tame elephants followed the herd of their congeners. Disorder reigned. The fire was ready to devour the grass of the glade which was not sufficiently torn up. Without some supreme inspiration the column would perish. Two thousand men burned alive!

"Major Welcome," exclaimed Mackenzie, in a stentorian voice, "place your six pieces in battery, and let us fight this enemy."

Richard Welcome obeyed. With rapidity, with marvelous precision, he disposed his six pieces. The conflagration assumed a pointed shape, so that in front of the guns it was scarcely fifty yards off, while to the right and left it appeared still quite distant.

"There!" said Mackenzie, designating the brush which was burning at a few paces, "there is the place to strike."

A veritable peal of thunder followed this command, and then could be heard the noise of trees snapping and shattering one another in their fall. The flames, as though intimidated by this attack, seemed to pause, perhaps because the column of displaced air may have momentarily thrust the flames backward, perhaps from some other cause. Mackenzie resumed:

"Lower, major; fire lower. The ground must be ploughed up so as to hurl the burning bushes right and left."

The pieces were reloaded. Their thunder again shook the forest, and this time they had been so adroitly pointed that the balls stripped the soil, and sensibly retarded the progress of the scourge. A resounding cheer welcomed this partial success.

"Let no one cease working on this account," ordered the colonel. "Pull up everything that can offer food for the flames."

"Fire!" commanded the major, for the third time. Decidedly a breach was being effected. A mass of trees and shrubbery was destroyed. The spectacle, now more sublime, was not the less frightful. Behind the fallen trees the raging furnace was visible. At two hundred yards thick trunks writhed under the intensity of the heat. Magnificent gum trees, higher than and as straight as the masts of a frigate, burned from the base to the summit, like immense torches. At their foot everything was blazing. Animals of every shape and species fled distracted.

"Again, major! Again! Fire without stopping. We are near the open country on this side; who knows but you may mark out a pathway by which we can escape from this hell?"

The cannon balls, in tearing up the soil, cast up on all sides firebrands and flames, which spread from thicket to thicket with terrible haste, and in spite of every effort the circumference narrowed. The space was far from being cleared. Second by second the heat became more sensible. The faces of the resolute men streamed with sweat. The broad track, straight as an arrow, made by the cannonade, became deeper and deeper, but on its borders the fire, fed by the branches and fragments of wood cast up, was hotter and more fearful than ever. The infantry alone were able to work, for the cavalry had enough to do to manage their horses. As for the elephants, they had set control at defiance, and ran hither and thither, creating a new peril in the midst of the already appalling situation. The conflagration now approached from the east. The ground was at last stripped on that side, and the large space might possibly afford a shelter for the unfortunate sufferers. Vision was terribly clear. A flood of light inundated the sky and what remained of the forest. At the end of the gap made by the cannon the trees were still burning. The glade, large enough to contain the troops, was too confined to protect them from the effects of the fire.

"Let the counter-fire be lighted," commanded the colonel.

In spite of the danger of this experiment the men eagerly obeyed. Herbs and roots, heaped up beyond the circumference, within which the men stood, composed the conflagration of salvation—the conflagration which must march forth to encounter the enemy. The heat, now doubled in intensity, became so great that the men could no longer endure it. Those who were nearest the flame felt their beards scorching. The others vainly sought in the depths of their lungs for the breath which was failing them.

It grew hotter and hotter, and the suffering of those nearest the fire became absolutely intolerable. They were the poor infantry, for according to orders the artillery and cavalry had been placed in the centre of the area.

"Major Welcome, widen the opening you have just made," commanded the colonel. "Let three pieces fire to the left, and three to the right; we shall effect a little by that."

Twenty times the canons discharged their balls on the borders of the immense avenue, which they had already plowed in the forest, an avenue illuminated in such a manner that no other spectacle can be compared to it. Under the redoubled shots of the artillery the trees fell, and the road widened. As yet only an army of salamanders might have been able to pass; for men to make such an attempt would still have been an act of folly. Yet the projectiles had leveled and shattered so many mighty trunks and other combustibles, that there was already an appreciable abatement of the fire throughout the whole length of the avenue. But on the two sides the flames were still terrible, and an attempt to pass would have been equivalent to placing one's self on a gridiron. Life within the clearing was becoming a torture. Several men had fallen down. The horses whined with heart-rending, human accents, and the elephants that remained faithful rent the air with their mournful cries of suffering. The explosions of artillery did not cease resounding in the ears of the despondent unfortunates, and to add to their consternation the wild elephants that had disappeared in the depths of the woods, finding nothing before them but flames, had been forced to retrace their steps, and once more congregate within the clearing. Again, they bore down upon the soldiers like a hurricane. Blinded and distracted, they bounded into the midst of the army. Is it possible to depict the chaos, the frightful havoc, the yells, the execrations, the terrors of this infernal scene? No; the imagination itself can form no correct idea. Horses, canon, cavalry, infantry, were alike mown down and trampled upon by this gigantic animal force. The men wished to defend themselves against this new enemy, which caused a momentary forgetfulness of the fire. Guns were discharged in every direction, but the elephants were hardly injured, while more than one soldier fell under the fire of a distracted or unskillful comrade. Mackenzie silently tore his beard. The officers tried no longer to restrain their men. They must be resigned to extermination by these ferocious monsters. Confusion was at its height; frenzy mounted to the brain, when suddenly, the largest, noblest, finest elephant, the evident leader of the herd, paused before the sinister and smoking pathway which the canons had tracked out. He remained a moment motionless, his little piercing eye penetrating the depths so violently opened. Then he uttered a cry—what a cry!—and, trunk erect, he dashed forward. All the other pachyderms followed in his footsteps with a speed of which no one could have believed these masses capable. Heads down, they plunged into this infernal avenue with a noise so horrible that the little army, apparently overwhelmed with dismay at the fire to the exclusion of all other fears in this world, were terrified anew. Some poor wretches among the soldiers, trusting to the instinct of the elephants, leaped upon their backs. The domestic elephants also dashed forward, no one being able to restrain them. With a vague hope, the colonel followed with his eye the mad course of the mighty animals. The air around them was full of burning fragments. More than one fell. All threw the audacious soldiers who had mounted them. They could be seen galloping to the farther end of the fiery lane, and disappearing in the midst of a little black speck which must have been the extremity of the forest.

"Soldiers!" exclaimed Mackenzie, in a voice trembling with emotion, "safety lies there. The elephants with their instinct have shown us the way, and we must follow them. Major Welcome, you have seen. Will you accept the conduct of the cavalry out of this horrible furnace?"

"And you, colonel?"

"I stay with my brave infantry. It would be madness to attempt the passage on foot. But with your horses spurred sufficiently, you will be able in eight minutes to reach the verge of the woods. My soldiers and I will die, or will be saved together. Besides, the departure of the horses will give more room, and we can move farther away from the fire."

"I am ready, colonel," said Dick, simply.

The cavalry mounted. They were not afraid. The elephants had passed, why could they not also? Besides, it would be preferable to die amid the excitement of such an attempt than to be cooked, unresisting, by a slow fire. The major placed his column, three men abreast, himself at their head, and Captain Chardon at his side.

"Forward!" he cried.

The horses, managed with difficulty, would have dashed in their terror against a wall a hundred feet high. They were guided in the right direction, and started at full speed, in their turn, raising with their hoofs whirlwinds of sparks and cinders. Oh, what a frightful charge that was, between two walls of fire! The sweat of both horses and riders filled the air with steam. Now they must either roast or go through. Sometimes a still incandescent tree stretched across their path. They leaped over it; but more than one set about it clumsily, or else did not see the obstacle, and his blinded horse, not observing it, stumbled. Then steed and rider rolled on the glowing earth, the one kicking, the other shrieking. They were the cause of others falling, and the poor wretches writhed several moments before death came to their relief. Further on a huge trunk remained standing, with which the major narrowly escaped collision, but which his lucky star caused him to avoid. More than twenty men, less fortunate than he, lost their lives from this death-trap; while the doomed squadron, visibly diminishing, continued its way, enveloped in the dust and spray of the fire. The flight of these soldiers, in the intense light of the conflagration, through that avenue of fire, might have been mistaken for a charge of demons, under the orders of Satan, in some revolt of hell. Here and there lay a fallen elephant, which, in consuming, emitted a stifling odor. Beside it were the blackened corpses of men, unrecognizable, swollen, motionless. At this point the heat seemed to have reached its climax, and to remain master of courage and fear alike. The horses refused to advance, reared violently, and threw their riders. Of the latter it is unnecessary to speak more. Major Welcome's stallion was about to pause, but Dick planted the point of his sabre in the hind-quarters of the animal, and under this piercing agony the charger resumed its former speed. This was the salvation of the major, and that of the one hundred and twenty who remained of the four hundred and fifty hussars and artillerymen who had left the clearing. The road was strewn with the corpses of three hundred and thirty men, and as many horses. But the effort was made. The breathless gallop had lasted seven minutes. The squadron had just reached a part of the forest which was nearly extinguished, and they already saw before them the open country, which the moon had commenced to illumine.

"We are saved!" exclaimed a young officer, with an unspeakable accent of joy. A terrible volley answered the hopeful speech. Tantia-Taupée's vile bandits, having seen the elephants pass, guarded that exit. They had no time to reload their guns. The squadron, carried forward by their impetuous flight, rushed like a gust of tempestuous wind on the revolted natives, and making a gap in their mass, passed through, and continued their route for more than twenty-five hundred yards. The horses had neither manes nor tails; the men had neither beards, eyebrows, nor hair; but they were saved.

These brave men, exhausted by the fatigues and perils of the night, and enjoying a delicious happiness in the refreshing coolness which surrounded them, cast aside all fear of Hindoos, and all other terrors, and throwing themselves on the bare ground, slept until day. When they rose, a new joy awaited them. Delhi had been taken by assault the evening before, and Tantia-Taupée, on learning of this check to his compatriots, had started several hours before for the kingdom of the Oude, where he could still resist for two years. The major and Chardon would go no further without knowing the fate of Mackenzie. The forest still smoked, but the fire was less intense. Toward midday, with thirty men, they had the boldness to retrace the path of the preceding night. The passage was comparatively easy. When they arrived at the clearing eleven hundred men of the regiment still lived, including the colonel. The horses had become as white as snow during the seven minutes that comprised what Dick Welcome called "The Charge of Fire."—Translated from the Argonaut from the French of Camille Debans, by F. S.

Acting on the theory that in every house there is a skeleton in the closet, a Paris swindler sent out a number of duplicate notes to this effect: "I will reveal all unless you send a hundred francs to J. L. Poste Restante, Paris." It was evidently a good day for skeletons. At least ten persons promptly sent the sum demanded, and the swindler was congratulating himself upon having secured temporary affluence and a prospective fortune when the police swooped down upon him.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.
 Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.
 News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 413 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.
 The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.
 Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.
 No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.
 Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.
 Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."
 A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY - - - - - Editor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1882.

CONTENTS:

Page.	Page.
EDITORIALS:	EDITORIAL NOTES:
The Argonaut's Course in the	An Excellent Choice in the Nom-
Coming Campaign—The Inside	ination of Henry Edgerton and
Workings of the Late Republican	W. W. Morrow—The Evening
Convention—The Various Mas-	Past's Efforts to Obtain a Holiday
querades assumed by M. M.	—A Good Candidate Selected in
Estee—Can the Republican Party	Ex-Governor Woods..... 5
Expect the Support of those whose	A DORMITORY SCENE..... 4
Aid it has Scornfully Rejected?	A SUSPENDED ELOPEMENT..... 5
—The Legal Blunders of the Plat-	FLOTSAM AND JETSAM..... 6
form—The Bulletin's Sudden	OLD FAVORITES..... 6
Conversion—A Few Foreign Can-	LITERARY NOTES..... 6
didates—The Chronicle's Jour-	CIRCLED BY FIRE..... 7
nalistic Triumph..... 2-3	THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS..... 10
RAMON'S ROMANCE..... 1-2	THE SOUL OF THE SUNFLOWER..... 10
CHICAGO NOVELLETTES..... 2	INNER MAN..... 10
A DAY AT LONG BEACH..... 3	STORYTELLERS..... 11
PORTIERES..... 3	THE TUNEFUL LIAR..... 11
SOCIETY:	DRAMA:
The Whitney-Myrick Wedding—	Betsy B.'s Letter—A Langtry Re-
The Mills Reception—Notes and	hearsal—Theatrical Gossip..... 12
Gossip..... 4	YOUNG MEN..... 14

The Argonaut was never less perplexed at the political situation, and never had its line of duty more clearly marked out for the course it ought to pursue, than in the present campaign. There is no one connected with this journal who is not an earnest Republican. Its editor was at the birth of the party; he has been an earnest worker in it; he has been loyal to its principles, subject to its discipline, and has done hard service in its cause. His only defection was to become an elector for Horace Greeley, because Greeley was a better man and a better Republican, and could serve his country better in civil life, than General Grant. The methods of the late Republican Convention, the principles declared in its platform, the significant omissions therefrom, and some of the candidates in nomination, are utterly repugnant to us, and are in utter opposition to every sentiment and in subversion of every principle contained in the editorial writings of the Argonaut during the past five years. Out of the moral and almost total wreck of the convention, the preservation of the Sunday law is the only salvage we have been able to make. The Argonaut is opposed by and opposes the San Francisco "machine." It is a vile thing. The men who run it are unprincipled politicians of the meanest kind, nearly every one of whom is of Irish birth or Irish lineage. Its existence is a continual menace to good government, to property, and to social order. The machine has triumphed, and Morris M. Estee is its result. He was its candidate; he delivered himself over to its direction; he placed his name, his honor, his money, and in the event of his election his appointments to office, and the direction and control of his administration, in the hands of the men who compose the machine. His headquarters were at the saloon of Peter Hopkins, Esquire, whence, in consultation with Richard Chute, Esquire, he directed its movement. Mr. William Higgins made his headquarters at the "Mint" saloon, whence he directed his wing of the working force. Colonel Gannon was acting aide-de-camp between the right and left. The State Central Committee, under Pierre B. Cornwall, held the centre. The primary election was disgraceful. Brute force protected the hallot-box from the approach of honest men, [see last week's Argonaut,] and Mr. Estee sent seventy-five delegates to the State Convention to do his bidding. There is no intelligent man who does not know, nor is there an honest man who does not admit, that such things are never done for party candidates by politicians, except for money, or the promise of office, or as the outcome of some dishonorable bargain. In such ways, with the use of the machine, through violence, fraud, and by illegal and altogether dishonorable practices, he secured seventy-five members in a delegation of ninety-six. His candidacy was one of clamor and misrepresentation—one of brag and false statement. To the citizens of the country he claimed the town; to the citizens of the town he claimed the country. He was nominated by intrigue and bargaining, by false promises, and by a systematic slandering of his principal opponent by himself and his friends. He was one thing to the mountain, and another to the valley. He was one thing to the League of Freedom, another to the Good Templars, and alike insincere to all. Delegates fraudulently elected were easy to manage, and were managed to the making of bargains in his interest. We are not discussing the personal or professional character of the Republican candidate for governor. It may be claimed for him that he is not responsible for the company he keeps; that on his way to Jericho he fell among thieves, and in personal safety was compelled to join the band that he might in safety reach his journey's end. He is nominated in defiance of every honorable party rule, through combinations and accidents entirely discreditable to himself and the conspirators whose nominee he was, and whose candidate he is. Judge Blake, his opponent, was done to death by the whispered slander of his being the railroad candidate. It is a curious fact that, while the railroad resolutions are filled with passionate declamation against the Central Pacific, and all the demagogue orators were allowed full play to their denunciation and to their expressions of hostility to the road, and while the temper of the convention was so pronounced in its hostility to railroad monopoly, as soon as the convention could divide into three parts its temper had changed and its policy became one of conciliation toward the company and concession to all its demands. Such has been Mr. Estee's political conduct as we know it, such his political character as we have studied it. We have said, and we quote from our lecture, "Politics makes cowards of us all," the following: "There should be no other standard for political than for personal conduct. The man in professional, commercial, or agricultural employment should have no higher or purer code than the man who engages in politics. It is just as cowardly and wrong to lie in the pulpit, to betray professional confidence, or to steal in business, as it is to lie or steal in politics, or steal in office, and no more so. The man who will misrepresent, overreach, defraud, and lie in the lowest of ward politics will defraud, intrigue, lie, and cheat in the highest position to which he may attain, and betray the most sacred trust that may be imposed upon him." The Argonaut is, and ever has been, pronounced in its American doctrines. The convention refused to consider, and only through courtesy permitted to be read, a resolution suggesting a modification of our immigration and naturalization laws. A resolution, asking for a moral recognition of the great temperance movement now going on throughout the East, met with like treatment. The president of the League of Freedom—organized for the purpose of obstructing the enforcement of the Sunday law—John W. Shaeffer, was a delegate in the convention, an active worker with the machine, and a supporter of Mr. Estee. After the convention had adjourned to serenade the gubernatorial nominee, and drink Mr. Hayward's wine, (he was the leader of the hydraulic miners, also a delegate in the convention and an active worker with the machine,) it met to repudiate in virtuous indignation a candidate for superintendent of schools, who drinks an occasional glass of wine, and nominated by acclamation another, who is habitually and notoriously intemperate. The Argonaut has pretended to admire brains, courage, and conscience. There were three candidates before the convention, who are men of great learning in the law, of large experience at hench and bar, either of whom would have adorned the Supreme Court. They were Belcher of Marysville, Catlin of Sacramento, and Bronson of Los Angeles. The candidates who are nominated are not men of learning; they are not in any sense distinguished, and, in our judgment, will not adorn the Supreme Bench. Their conduct around the convention, and after it, in lobby and bar-room, was conspicuously wanting in personal dignity. If the Argonaut has been earnest in any direction, it has displayed its zeal in upholding and at all times maintaining the law. This is the basis of our argument against the Sand-lot, against all sorts of riotous uprisings, against Mussel Slough, against Irish land-leagues, and against German and Irish leagues of freedom; yet in this convention a resolution was not permitted that so far recognized the rights of eight agricultural counties as to declare that the decision of Jackson Temple should stand as the law in the slickens case until the judgment was modified or reversed by an appellate tribunal. In the interest of Mr. Estee the convention was organized and run. It only broke away from his control in one instance, and that was the Sunday-law resolution. In the event of his election, he may be depended upon to veto any law in the direction of opposition to alcoholic traffic on Sunday. The president of the convention, an ex-governor and ex-senator, nominated by the Estee machine combination, appointed committees as prepared and handed him by P. B. Cornwall and others of the San Francisco machine. He took his committees from the workshops of W. W. Higgins, Colonel Gannon, and Richard Chute, Esquire. His work was prepared for him by David McClure, Drury Melone, J. R. Hardenbergh, and other members of the machine. He gave all the committee appointments, with one or two exceptions, to the active adherents of Estee, entirely ignoring the candidacy of Judge Blake, Mr. Shafter, or Joseph Russ. He gave committee appointments to such men as Cornwall, Chute, Malone, and Hardenbergh, utterly ignoring such representative Republican gentlemen as James McM. Shafter and others. Why Shanklin was defeated for Surveyor; why Pedlar was nominated for Secretary of State; the bargain with Stearns of Santa Barbara for Lieutenant-Governor; how and by whom Judge Blake was whispered to death; the bargain made by Mr. Estee with the hydraulic miners; the assurances given by him to the valley farmers; the secret work at Estee's headquarters by Hamilton Smith, a Democrat, and president of the Gravel Miners' Association, a person who had no business around a Republican convention, except to debase it; the understanding had by Mr. Hayward with Mr. Pedlar at midnight; Hayward's denunciation and threats, when he supposed Estee was defeated—all these things, and some others, we will reserve for consideration at another time.

We think Mr. Estee represents no sentiment in sympathy with the Republican party of the past. He came late and unwillingly into the party. He voted against, and was opposed to, the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. He bolted the Republican party, opposed its regular nominee for governor, joined with the Dolly Varden movement, and upheld Senator Booth when he charged that the mission of the Republican party was ended, that it had outlived its usefulness, and that he had deliberately burned the bridges behind him, so that he might never be able to return to it. With other men, he bolted the Republican party, and went for Greeley against Grant; and in both campaigns made speeches in vindication of his right to do what the Argonaut has done, and is doing; viz., the right of exercising an independent judgment. Mr. Estee has been office-seeker and office-holder all the days of his life since he was twenty-three years of age. If the Argonaut was right in opposing Mr. Estee as a candidate for nomination because of his identification with that most vile thing in San Francisco which we call the "machine," we are not wrong in withholding from him our vote after he has accomplished his triumph over respectable citizens by the use of brute force, and by the exercise of the very worst and most criminal practices that are known to the lowest element in political management. It will not be consistent for our friends who took part in the Dolly Varden movement—Messrs. Booth, Swift, Estee, and others—to criticise this attitude of ours toward the Republican party as now managed. It will not be at all becoming for that great body of Republicans who repudiated the nomination of Mr. Gorham to forget that we have the same right to repudiate the nomination of Mr. Estee as they had to repudiate the candidacy of Black-and-tan. The same machine, the same men, and the same dishonorable practices gave the party over to the leadership of Gorham as have now surrendered it to Estee. We will trust to the followers of Greeley out of the Republican camp in Grant's second candidacy, and those who within the party opposed his nomination for a third term, to appreciate and understand our motives in not giving to a Republican candidate, irregularly and fraudulently nominated, our support. We desire, in answer to the charge that the Argonaut in this departure will injure the party, to say: It is the men who perpetrate crimes within the party who injure it, and not the men who have the courage to expose these crimes who are working mischief. It is the conspirators, criminals, office-seekers in a small way, and the ambitious, high-reaching, unprincipled knaves, who injure the party by their use of violence, their perpetration of frauds at primary elections, and their hargains and plots in State conventions. We beg, also, to remind our readers that, in assuming this attitude toward Estee, or the wing of the party of which he is the acknowledged leader, there is no element of treachery or ingratitude. The Argonaut owes no gratitude to party leaders; acknowledges no allegiance to the party machine; asks no favor from the party organization in San Francisco; its editor looks forward to no party honors under the present disgraceful and cowardly management; and when Mr. Estee came, unasked, to the Argonaut office, and made promises which he did not keep, and did not intend to keep, he challenged its editor to an opposition which will be as frank and manly as his was mean and inexcusable. The Argonaut, in withholding its support from Mr. Estee, and such other candidates upon the ticket as do not meet its approval, for want of qualifications or fitness, or by reason of their manner of nomination, will endeavor not to forfeit the good opinion of those gentlemen with whom its editor sat in convention, or that larger and equally respectable constituency which composes its readers. We do not claim to influence, in the political sense, any gentlemen who shall, during this campaign, read our paper. We recognize in them a standard of intelligence that can be affected only by an honest statement of unquestioned facts. We shall make no assertions that, if challenged, we do not believe we can substantiate; and none that, if we can not, we will not willingly unwrite and recall.

We have no knowledge as to the course any one will pursue in reference to this coming election. We shall not attempt to control the opinion of any intelligent Republican. What the railroad people, the anti-débris, the temperance, or anybody else will do will not in the least degree concern us. It would seem that the railroad corporations had been retired from politics by the emphatic expression of the resolutions of both parties, and by the severe and personal denunciations of its managers that have been listened to and applauded by both conventions. When Mr. Charles Sumner and W. W. Foote, at San José, and M. M. Estee, at Sacramento, charge criminal acts upon the railroad directory—when the mouthings of every political and impecunious adventurer, who has neither property to tax nor merchandise to move, shall be encouraged to denounce a great industry, simply that he may win the applause of a political mob—it would seem that the representatives of that industry would not be very zealous to advance the political organizations that encouraged such contemptible and shameless demagoguery. The platforms of both conventions are against railroads; the candidates for governor of both parties are against them; the speech-makers of San José and Sacramento rivaled each other in mendacious slanders against them, and the two gubernatorial aspirants will go before the people to outbid each other in denunciation and vilification, while all the lesser ones of both packs will engage in stirring and rivalrous emulation to out-howl each other on the stump. It would seem, therefore, as if the votes of the seventy-five hundred railroad employees were not wanted, and the pecuniary assistance of Governor Stanford would not be asked by either party. This rejection of railroad support is more pronounced by the Republican than the Democratic party, because Governor Stanford and his entire force are Republicans. Governor Stanford was in early times one of the most zealous of party men. He was the Republican candidate for State Treasurer away back in those early days of forlorn hopes. He was the party's first Governor. He has never failed, in State or Federal politics, to aid the party with his best aid. He can not, in self-respect, continue to do this. The State Central Committee can not, with propriety, expect or accept his assistance. The party is turned over to Dolly Varden and the machine. Its leaders are bolters, and its candidate for Governor has held an attitude of hostility to the Republican party for not less than ten years of the past twenty. On this election depends an entire Congressional delegation and a senator in the Congress of the United States. If it shall happen that out of these complications the Republican party loses its Governor, members of Congress, State ticket, and Senator of the United States, it will not then be in position to blame Governor Stanford or the railroad people for the result. If the counties of Los Angeles, San Bernardino, San Buenaventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, San Diego, Tulare, Merced, Fresno, Kern, and Monterey should be indifferent to the result, and not become enthusiastic in the campaign, the reason for their apathy may be found in the fact that this important section of the country was not considered by the convention in the nomination of candidates, but was studiously and contemptuously ignored by it, and nearly all of the offices were given to San Francisco, Sacramento, Alameda, and the central counties. If the business men, moneyed interests, and respectable portion of the Republican party in San Francisco, Alameda, and Sacramento shall not take the usual interest in the success of the Republican ticket, the reason will be that the Republican candidates were nominated by the political machine—the party bosses, the riff-raff, and vagabonds that stole the San Francisco primaries, and ran the convention in the interest of the worst element of the party. If the eight agricultural counties that are in danger of injury from hydraulic mining shall feel that their material interests have been imperiled by the neglect and indifference of the convention to their just and legal demands, it will not be surprising. If the temperance people shall resent the fact that the convention sacrificed them, and refused any sort of recognition or sympathy with their movement, it may be attributed to the cowardly disregard of their wishes, and to the open sympathy given to the saloon and whisky interest by an open alliance with the illegal and law-resisting League of Freedom. If the Republican party shall be beaten—horse, foot, and dragons—and shall be captured—army, camp, and baggage-wagons—it will be owing to the disgraceful alliance between the hydraulic miners, the League of Freedom, the whisky traffic, and the utterly contemptible San Francisco Republican party machine of William W. Higgins, Colonel Gannon, and Richard Chute, Esquire.

The conversion of Saul on his way to Damascus may have been more sudden, but it was not more complete, than that of the Bulletin in its recent conversion to the San Francisco machine and the primary system. The long and constant readers of that valuable and widely circulated journal will remember with what zeal it did for long years combat primary elections; with what fervor it denounced the secret machinations and criminal manipulations of the Higginses, the Gannons, and the Chutes. They will recall its continued iteration of the Mulligans and the Caseys, and with what venomous unction it rolled off its bitter tongue the name of everybody who did not favor a "people's party," an "independent party," a "tax-payers' party," or whatever shape a non-partisan organization took for the election of city officials. The Bulletin is now the open and avowed friend of the Higgins policy. Mr. Higgins has lost control of the County Committee, but he has gained the ear of the Bulletin. The Bulletin is the organ of the machine. It favored a primary election for the last State Convention, and our readers will recall the extract we printed from the Call's account of the criminal and disgraceful scenes that occurred at the Seventh and other ward polls on that day. That primary gave the Republican party over not only to the control of the worst element within it, but to the joint control of the criminal elements of the Republican and Democratic parties, as represented by both party machines. With this result the Bulletin is satisfied, and in its Wednesday's issue writes a congratulatory editorial concerning the results accomplished. This is an utter repudiation of all its past declarations of a desire for honest government. When we know that the Bulletin and the machine are working thus harmoniously together, we look for a controlling motive. When we see the Bulletin's editorial staff reflecting the secrets of the Mint Saloon, and echoing the voice that comes from Peter Hopkins's bar-room, we look for the reason; and we find it in its blind, passionate, unreasonable, and irreconcilable hostility to the Spring Valley Water Company. The machine is opposed—for what cause we do not know, but we guess—to the Spring Valley Water Works Company. The Bulletin, heated in its opposition to the company, defeated in its plans for their discomfiture, overruled by the courts, out-voted by the people, and ignored by the best Board of Supervisors we have had of late years, has made an alliance with the only other political enemy that the company has. It has joined hands with it, and has become a slave to do the bidding of the machine. For more than one year there has not been in the columns of the Bulletin an unkind or slighting allusion to any single member of the Republican machine. It has not criticised any act of theirs, but on the contrary has upheld and supported them through thick and thin. It advocated the last primary, and, in spite of the infamous history of that election day, it now advises another primary, that the same scenes may be enacted, the same results attained, and the city of San Francisco, with all its offices, be turned over to the vile and contemptible mob of party plunderers who will unite for its spoliation. This is infamous and inexcusable conduct on the part of the Bulletin, deliberately undertaken that it may vent the personal hostility of its proprietors upon the Spring Valley Water Company. If our advice could be followed, we would have an independent, non-partisan convention of respectable property owners to place decent and honest men in nomination for office. We would take up the convention business where the Bulletin dropped it, before it was bitten by the Spring Valley tarantula, and before the virus of its hate toward that company began to run as poison through its fevered veins, and crazed it toward everybody that does not agree with the Bulletin upon the subject of free municipal water. Whether the County Committee shall appoint men to select a nominating convention, or shall itself appoint a nominating convention, we care not. Regularity, precedent, or party rule has no weight with us; we do not care how a convention is brought together. It may come from the County Committee, or the editorial-room of the Bulletin, and we will judge of it by the character of the men who compose it, and not by the regularity of the machinery that convened it. We think very well of the majority of this County Committee; it has endeavored to do good work. We think well of the present Board of Supervisors; it has given us low taxes; it has reduced water-rates; it has economized in gas sixty thousand dollars during the year; it has destroyed an infamous street-cleaning ring, and saved forty thousand dollars a year in that direction. The same board would, if continued in office for two years more, accomplish results of intelligent and practical reform. If Mayor Blake would meet with the supervisors in more friendly and confidential communication, and consult with them oftener, he would do more good than he accomplishes by his vetoes. The suspicion occasionally dawns upon us that he is quite as intent upon gaining personal popularity through the exercise of his veto power as he is to accomplish a beneficent result. In our judgment, the city and its people would be a gainer if Mayor Blake would more frequently consult with individual supervisors, with a view to make his resort to a veto less indispensable than he seems to regard it, and less frequent than we think municipal interests require. Concert and harmony of action ought to exist between the thirteen gentlemen who compose our city government; and if the one would go to the twelve occasionally, and not always demand that the twelve should come to the one, there would exist a more friendly intercourse, and out of it would come better results. We hope this unholy alliance between the Bulletin and the machine will come to grief. We wish the Bulletin would come back from its wanderings—from its association with swine, and its fodder of husks—to its old associations with the honest men who own San Francisco, and who, by virtue of that ownership, have the right to control its politics, without the interference of the wretched vagabonds who compose its party machines.

The nominations of Henry Edgerton and W. W. Morrow as members of Congress at large are most respectable; that of Henry Edgerton for his eloquence and speaking talent, and that of Mr. Morrow for his ability, industry, and those general qualities which will make him useful in the House of Representatives. Edgerton is a brilliant orator. He is eloquent beyond most men whom we have ever heard address an audience. Morrow, lacking the phenomenal gifts of Edgerton, possesses qualities that will make him more serviceable than his eloquent colleague in accomplishing results through earnest, untiring, and conscientious work. Edgerton will adorn the position, and California will have occasion to be justly proud of him whenever he comes into forensic conflict with the best debaters of the House. Morrow will be reliable at all times, with enough of talking talent to make himself felt, enough of force to make himself of practical use in the accomplishment of results, and enough of ability and respectability to take a position of leading influence as a national legislator.

A Republican said to us: "I will not vote for Mr. Estee, because of his course in bolting the ticket, as he did in Dolly Varden times for Greeley, and I make this distinction between him and the non-office-seeking Republicans: A man who wants no office and asks no party favor may be excused if he bolts a party ticket; but the man who lives upon office as Estee does, who seeks position as persistently as he does, who demands the kind of party discipline that gives him nomination, should himself be true to the party." Mr. Estee bolted the Gorham ticket when he ran for Governor. He bolted Timothy Guy Phelps when Bidwell ran against him. He bolted Grant and voted for Greeley. Thus has he been three times a bolter. He can not therefore complain if any Republican exercises the same privilege of private judgment that he has himself so freely exercised.

Weil, candidate for State Treasurer, is a German, renominated after four years of faithful service. Charles Clayton, for Railroad Commissioner, is of English birth, a merchant in San Francisco, and formerly member of Congress. William Minto, for Surveyor-General, is a Scotchman. Paul Neumann, candidate for Congress from the San Francisco district, is a Prussian by birth. The only Irishman before the convention withdrew before the roll-call was half finished. The members of the convention, outside of San Francisco, with two or three exceptions, were native-born. There were no Pope's Irish in the convention, in the lobby, or in candidacy. They did not apply. We shall see how it will be for city offices in the municipal convention.

Mr. Conklin, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, said, in his speech at the Palace Hotel, that Mr. Estee is "a man in whom there is no guile," and that "the platform is one which Republicans have struggled and prayed for for years." We do not question the Hon. Roscoe's cousin's opinion of Estee's guilelessness; but we desire to inform him that Republicans in conventions assembled did for long years before he came to this country, struggle and pray for, first a wagon-road over the plains, then for a transcontinental railroad, and then for a southern railroad, and that it was not till these struggles were won and these prayers were answered that a set of younger politicians and later immigrants endeavored to attain office by such utterly absurd resolutions upon railroads as disgrace this Republican platform.

The railroad portion of the Republican platform was drawn up by Judge Lattimer of San Francisco. When it was challenged by able lawyers, James McM. Shafter, and others in the convention, as embodying illegal provisions, he had not the courage to attempt its defense. The ablest lawyer upon the committee admitted to the writer, after the discussion, that the railroad resolutions are utterly indefensible upon any principle of law or of common sense. They were passed for buncombe, to out-clamor the San José Convention in a bid for votes. It is an act of demagoguery, unworthy of an intelligent Republican convention, and does not express the sentiment or the honest opinion of any respectable minority of the Republican party.

An ill-natured sneer is being circulated that the editor of the Argonaut had difficulty in procuring a platform for the State Convention. The truth is, he was offered one from fifteen different counties.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Bill Nye on Bards.

"I want to get a position for my wife on your paper if I could," said a meek man with a slight tinge of reproach, as he came into the Boomerang office yesterday, and sat down on the desk with his coat-tails in the cold, calm depths of the paste fountain.

"She is really one of the literati, although people who has known her only by her washin' and ironin' don't suspect it. I, however, know her great mental scope. I've been married to her twenty-one years next frost, and I've been thrown more or less in contact with her. My soul and hers has communed together time and again, and we have discussed questions of considerable depth off and on.

"She writes a good legible hand, and is quick in figures. Whether you want some one to make out bills for pay-locals, or write a eulogy on a paid-up subscriber, she's your huckleberry. She's a perfect lady, and you might have her on your corps for years and the forked tongue of scandal would never touch you. She's plain, of course, in feature, and has an impediment in one limb, it being shorter than the other by four inches. This gives her an eccentric movement when she walks, like a self-rake reaper; but Lord! you never'd notice that after you come to know and love her.

"She can trill a stanza of poetry occasionally, too, if you give her time to think of a few hard words. She has wrote some as fine things as I have ever saw in the English language. She is better, however, on death than anything else. She loves to turn loose and mourn in easy rhyme at so much per stanza and found.

"She wrote a short poem on the death of a young man in our neighborhood, who was drowned while in a-swimming in the Stinking Water Creek. It run something like this:

"O treacherous, treacherous tide,
Young William got to drown—
To madly yank him off his base
And whirl him round and round.

"We found him in the twilight hour,
Freed from his earthly woes;
His calm face upward turning,
And alkali up his nose.

"His person was sunk in the shifting sand,
His mouth was open wide,
The pollywogs nestled in his ears,
Beneath the fragrant tide.

"His open-hack shirt lay on the shore,
And the balance of his trousseau,
While his soul went scooting up the flume,
Out through the ether blue.

"Twas down around the Coyote Point
We found him when evening fell,
And we planted him under the cactus vines,
In the shaft of the Mountain Bell.

"Good-bye, William, far away
On the edge of a large, damp cloud,
Though you're among the angel gang,
You needn't feel so doggon proud.

"I will also leave with you a few sonnets which are the work of her pen. You can look them over, and let me know in a day or two what salary you feel like paying a woman of her strength of intellect and grip of genius. Till then, adieu. I will call again Friday and complete the trade." Without another word he was gone, and he has not been seen since. Later on, however, when we want to double up the subscription of the paper, we will publish another one of these poems. With our present facilities we do not dare to do it.—Laramie Boomerang.

The Poetry Market.

A timid hut really rather pretty young man came stepping softly into the sanctum yesterday afternoon, when nobody was in hut the advertisement solicitor. "What is poetry worth?" he asked.

"Forty cents a line," said the advertising man, promptly, and rather tenderly, "and you can't do better anywhere in America. The advantages we offer for the publication of poetry are unsurpassed on either side of the Mississippi. Our circulation, standing in five figures the first year, has steadily increased three times an hour ever since, and poetry published in this paper is placed in the hands of one hundred and fifty thousand families before night. How much have you?"

"Perhaps," said the timid young man, fairly reeling with delight, "it is a little too long."

"Makes no difference," said the ad. man, heaving upon him kindly; "we'll put it all in, if we have to issue a supplement. And everything over three thousand lines goes at thirty-five cents."

The timid young man looked disappointed. "It isn't so much, then," he said, "when it's long?"

"Never," replied the ad. man, magnanimously. "Never; less room, more pay; that's the way you make a living. Got your copy with you?"

"Yes, sir," replied the young man, joyfully; "would you like to read it, sir, or shall I read it?"

"No, don't care to read it just now. Sit down and we'll count it."

So they sat down and counted it.

"My heart, my heart in throbbing numbers tells," read the ad. man. "Heart medicine, young man?"

he asked, in the patrolling way of a man who knows everything.

"No, sir," replied the young man, in amazed tones, while the ad. man counted away for dear life. "No, sir; a rhapsody, sir."

"Oh, yes; yes, of course," said the ad. man, in reassuring tones. "Hundred nine, hundred ten, hundred eleven—course, hundred fourteen—hain't done much in rhapsodies since Helmholtz failed—hundred twenty-three—good things, though; we took a gross of 'em last spring on Pad & Lotion's column—hundred forty-two—and I wore one myself two weeks, and it made—hundred fifty-four—man of me. One hundred and sixty-eight lines, sir, and we'll throw in a four-line head and won't count the odd half line—$67.20; call it an even $65 cash down. Just step down to the business office and I'll give you a receipt."

We don't know what happened immediately after that. We only know that when the footman opened the door of the carriage to let us out at the marble steps of the Hawkeye office, the ad. man was leaning on the heavy bronze balusters, gazing wonderingly at the figure of a young man, walking unsteadily down the street, holding a fluttering manuscript in one hand, and in the other clasp his pallid brow.

"You may take my double-column head for a foot-hall, sir," said the ad. man, respectfully raising his hat, and standing uncovered as we ascended the broad stairway, "if that young fellow going down street isn't a three-square lunatic from Crazyville. Wanted me to pay him sixty-five dollars for a long rhyming puff without a line of business in it, sir."—Burdette.

THE SOUL OF THE SUNFLOWER.

By Sara Jewett.

The warm sun kissed the earth
To consecrate thy birth,
And from his close embrace
Thy radiant face
Sprang into sight,
A blossoming delight.

Through the long summer days
Thy lover's burning rays
Shone hot upon thy heart.
Thy life was part
Of his desire,
Thou passion-flower of fire!

And, turning toward his love,
Lifting thy head above
The earth that nurtured thee,
Thy majesty
And stately mien
Proclaims thee sun-crowned queen.

On earth, thy gorgeous bloom
Bears record of thy to-morrow,
And to transcendent light
Thy soul takes flight
Till thou art one.
O sunflower, with the sun!

The Primrose.

Ask me why I send you here
This sweet Infanta of the yeere?
Ask me why I send to you
This Primrose, thus bearded with dew?
I will whisper to your eares,
The sweets of love are mixt with tears.
Ask me why this flower does show
So yellow-green and sickly too?
Ask me why the stalk is weak
And bending, yet it doth not break?
I will answer, these discover
What fainting hopes are in a lover.

—Robert Herrick.

The Rosebud.

Oh, touch that rosebud! It will bloom,
My lady fair,
A passionate red in dim green gloom,
A joy, a splendor, a perfume
That sleeps in air.
You touched my heart; it gave a thrill
Just like a rose
That opens at a lady's will;
Its bloom is always yours until
You hid it close. —Mortimer Collins.

Flora.

Oh, for that afternoon, that lane
Where I picked flowers. Never again
Will common wild flowers look so well—
So freshly bluish the pimpernel,
And modest blue and simple white
Stand in the grass to such delight!
I picked my flowers for Flora's sake,
Happy to have a chance to make
A nosegay she might chance to see
And know that it was made by me.
I found a baby oak-leaf, too,
So I had green, white, red, and blue.

—Henry Patmore.

THE INNER MAN.

History, says the London Globe, tells the story of the famous colette de mouton en papillote, which reconciled Louis the Fourteenth to the Duke of Burgundy, when the latter returned from the campaign in Flanders in 1708, preceded by the news of defeat. The duke was expected at court, and on his arrival he hastened to the apartment of Madame de Maintenon, where the king was in the midst of his supper. Madame de Maintenon had eaten her cabbage soup, picked a few crayfish from the Bievre, and was drinking her favorite Hermitage wine. The king got up, and to the great surprise of every one kissed the duke most affectionately, pressed him warmly by the hand, and, seconded by the hostess, made him sit down and share their supper. "Chamarande," said the king, addressing his valet de chambre, "has not the Mayor of Rheims sent me some of the best vintage of champagne, and some of the famous Rousset pears?" These good things were placed on the table, and Chamarande read the letter from the hurgesses, saying that they had sent their king their wine, their pears, and their hearts—in fact, the best of everything they had in their city. "Sire," exclaimed Madame de Maintenon, "this trifling sape will not be enough for our guests and for us, so that you will please let me offer you a dish invented by my father, Baron de Surineau d'Aubigne, who was reputed a gourmand." The favorite explained that the plat in question was a mutton, lamb, or veal cutlet, strewn with parsley and savory herbs, placed in a sheet of thin, well-buttered paper, and then grilled. "Why," said the king, "that is wrapping a chop in curl-papers!" "Precisely," replied the lady. The king seemed to enjoy the joke immensely, and declared he would have one of these cutlets on the following evening for supper, inviting the gentlemen and courtiers present to partake of the meal. On the following day the mutton cutlets en papillote were eaten by the guests, who drank the choicest of Rhine wines, and declared that they had never sat down to such an excellent dish before.

CCXLV.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday, September 11.

Okra Soup.
Cantaloupe.
Boiled Turbot, Egg Sauce.
Calf's Brains on Toast.
Succotash. Young Beets.
Roast Turkey. Sweet Potatoes.
French Vegetable Salad.
Charlotte Russe.

Pears, Peaches, Nectarines, Plums, Apricots, Gages, Figs, Apples, and Grapes.
FRIED BRAINS ON TOAST.—Soak the brains fifteen minutes; free from skin and fibre; then drop them into boiling water into which you have put a little salt and a teaspoonful of vinegar. Boil hard for ten minutes, then throw the brains into ice-cold water. When well cooled, break them up with a wooden or silver spoon, and stir in three well-beaten eggs, seasoned with salt, pepper, and chopped parsley. Have ready two tablespoonfuls of butter in a very hot frying-pan, pour in the mixture, and stir rapidly for ten minutes, or until it is a soft mass like scrambled eggs. Have six or eight rounds of fried bread; lay these upon a hot dish, and heap the brains upon them, and if you have some well-seasoned gravy, pour it over the mounds of brains and toast.

FRENCH VEGETABLE SALAD.—Take one can of French peas, one of string beans; drain, and lay upon a towel to dry; skin two tomatoes and crush them well; mix one tablespoonful of capers with these ingredients, and dress with mayonnaise sauce. This salad has been pronounced delicious by one well competent to judge.

COMPARATIVE STRENGTH OF BAKING POWDERS.

NOTE.—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative strength of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. SCHEDLER. A one-pound can of each Powder was taken, the total leavening power of volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated in the above diagram. This practical test for strength by Prof. SCHEDLER only proves what every observant consumer of the ROYAL BAKING POWDER knows by experience, that while it costs a few cents per pound more than the ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work.

A SINGLE TRIAL OF THE ROYAL BAKING POWDER WILL CONVINCE ANY FAIR-MINDED PERSON OF THESE FACTS.

* While this Diagram shows some of the alum Powders to be of a higher degree of strength than ordinary Powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum Baking Powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS, DRS. LOVE AND MOTT.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I have purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a Cream of Tartar Powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum, or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph. D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or other injurious substances. H. A. MOTT, Ph. D."

"HENRY MORTON, M. D., President Stevens Institute of Technology."

"S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Massachusetts."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. I find it to be a Cream of Tartar Powder of the highest degree of strength, containing nothing but pure, wholesome, and useful ingredients. JUAN H. WRIGHT, M. D., Analytical Chemist, formerly Wright & Merrill, St. Louis."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, and at State Fairs throughout the country. No other article of human food has received such high, emphatic, and universal indorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and boards of health all over the world.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER COMPANY, 106 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.
WILLIAM T. COLEMAN & CO., SOLE AGENTS.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A Yankee, guiltless of any tongue but his own, was haranguing on a German railway-platform a porter who was in the same predicament. An Englishman, seeing the expenditure of words with no corresponding result, offered his services as interpreter. "No, thank you, stranger," said the gentleman hailing from the land of the Stars and the Stripes; "I guess English is the language of the future, and he's got to understand it."

When Colonel Ramsay was traveling in Spain he fell in with Mr. Fillmore, ex-President of the United States, and on one occasion they were talking with the American consul at Barcelona. "I was much amused," says Colonel Ramsay, "by the consul turning round abruptly to me, apropos of nothing in particular, and asking me if I knew why our army ran away at Bull Run? Of course I said no; and looked properly grave in the presence of a distinguished ex-president and an official of the United States. He then informed me that a telegram had been received at the headquarters of the army, to the effect that a valuable appointment in the post-office was then vacant at New York, and that every one holted to try and secure it."

One day, while approaching Paris in a diligence, after a visit to England, Paganini had the mortification of seeing his beloved, generous father from the roof of a coach. "The delicate instrument received a palpable injury, and had to be taken," said Vuillaume, the famous maker, and repairer of violins established in the French capital. Vuillaume not only mended it—as the story goes—but made an exact fac simile of it, taking both to the Italian virtuoso with the remark that the two instruments, lying side by side in his laboratory, had puzzled him as to their identity. The dismayed musician seized first one and then the other, played upon both, and carefully examined them, together and apart, and ended by exclaiming in distress that he could not decide which was his own. He strode about the room wild, ecstatic, and in tears, faith and fury alike struggling for the mastery in him, till the honest Parisian, overcome by the sight of a grief and a bewilderment so genuine, and never from the first intending to deceive his client, asked him to keep both violins as a pledge of his esteem and admiration, at the same time pointing out the sham Guarnerius, for which he begged an honorable place in Paganini's household. Who can doubt after this that new violins may be made to look, and speak, as well as old ones?

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Tie the Dog.
 " Tie the dog, for I am coming
 To the house at eight."
 Wave the answer back to Rupert :
 " Myrtle's at the gate."
 —Chicago Tribune.

For stratagems he is not fit,
Nor yet for treason's rôle ;
For he who like a ghost doth flit,
And in the pew doth silent sit,
Hath music in his sole.

Arabi, Pshaw !
One night Arabi went to rest,
And slammed the door behind him ;
Soon he was snuggled in his nest,
Where ne'er a loe could find him.
" I slam a door," quoth Arabi,
" Yes, now adore Islam " —
Bang went the sound across the floors,
And loud the echoes rang.
—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Debbhe he chase me roun' de stump,
Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'!
He give me a cut fur ev'ry jump,
Honor de dyin' Lam'!

Bake dem batter cakes brown en' brown,
Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'!
Turn dem johnny-cakes roun' en' roun',
Honor de dyin' Lam'!

Heah I stan' wid a Bible in my han',
Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'l
Ef I don't preach I'se gwine ter be dam',
Honor de dvin' Lam'l

Ef you git ter heaven 'fo' I do,
 Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'!
 Tell my Lawd I'm comin' too,
 Honor de divin' Lam'!

I'se gotter new kervat, and I'se gwine ter put it on,
Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'!
Want ter go ter heaven wid my fine cloze on,
Honor de dyin' Lam'!

I'm gwine ter put on my golden shoes,
Honor de Lam', oh, honor de Lam'!
I want ter go ter heaven ter tell de news,
Honor de dyin' Lam'!

Willie's in the Well.
Oh, mother, you had better be a git, git, gitting,
For Willie's in the deep, deep well;
So you had better chuck aside your knit, knit, knitting;
He was drowning of the cat when in he fell.
—Obituary Bard

Rejected Addresses.
Puck ne'er returns had manuscript to essayist or pote ;
 He gives them to the office-boy, who feeds them to the goat.

Poetry and the Poet.

(Found on the Poet's desk.)

Weary, I open wide the antique pane,
I ope to the air
I ope to
I open to the air the antique pane,

And gaze { beyond? } the thrift-sown fields of { across } wheat { commonplace? }

A-shimmering green in breezes born of heat ;
And lo !
And high

And my soul's eyes behold { a ? } billowy main
 { the } strain
Whose further shore is Greece

[Arcadia — mythological allusion. Mem : — Lemprière.]
I see thee, Atalanta, vestal fleet,
And look! with doves low-fluttering round her feet

(Heard by the Poet's neighbor.)
Venus he bothered : it's Virginia Dix !

(Found on the Poet's door.)

.....
•
Out on important business—hack at 6.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

KINGSFORD'S OSWEGO STARCH

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S
CHOCOLATE.

SMITH
BROTHERS'
PACKAGE
BORAX.

PRIVATE ASYLUM,
For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION
called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal.
ASA CLARK, M. D.
References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Shurtleff, Stockton,
Sup't State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.
(Established 1854.)

HAY, GRAIN, AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

39 Clay Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO.
Commission Merchants,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street
Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP,
581 and 583 Market Street, S. F.,
Manufacturers
Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture
Frames, and Bric-a-Brac.
IMPORTERS of GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHRO-
MOS. PHOTOGRAPHS. ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY.
OFFICE, - - - 325 Market St.
WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts.
 C. SPRECKELS, President,
 J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President,
 A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO.
San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of
RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON
Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered
Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel,
and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts,
Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting Rods, etc., etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron.
202 MARKET STREET.

THE
AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY
SAN FRANCISCO,
MANUFACTURERS OF ALL
Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugars
for export.
C. ADOLPHE LOW, President.
Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON

PACIFIC IRON WORKS
RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO.,
127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco.

Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines—
both Marine and Stationary. Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL Order for House or Office by Telephone 308
Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company.
118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants
204 and 206 California Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.

PAYOT, UPHAM & CO
STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS
Commercial Printers.
and Blank Book Manufacturers
204 Sansome Street, near Pine.

TABER, HARKER & Co.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLE
GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San

I am often reminded of that brilliant young Englishman who went to hear Mark Twain lecture, and said that "while it was awfully funny, Twain had really said no more than any one else could have said, if they had only thought of it." I fancy that the mere name, "The Lights o' London," could have made almost any play go which had any relevance at all; but since it remained for Mr. George Sims to find out its euphonic ring, why, then, honor to whom honor is due. I wonder if he himself ever sat by the roadside, a country boy, with a beating heart, pausing on the threshold of big London before he plunged into its seethe and whirl to wrest fortune and fame out of the vortex. Hé may have been born within sound of Bowbells, but it is generally the country boys who do succeed in the race of ambition, and one is apt to think of every rising man in London as a new Whittington, in his own line.

Like a greater man, Sims woke one morning and found himself famous; and though that fame is likely to be an evanescent one, he has had all the sweetness of its flavor, and he wrote truly enough when he said:

"O gleaming lamps of London,
That gem the city's crown,
What fortunes lie within you,
O lights o' London Town."

The odd part of it all is, after one has gotten up a tremendous amount of sentiment, in response to the meaningful phrase which makes the title of the play, that one does not see, after all, so very much of the cruel lamps of London. And yet one is sufficiently harrowed, for when Bess and Harold come to their own at last, the sigh of relief which goes up from the floor to the ceiling of the California is something stupendous.

"My dear," spoke Jack, as we seated ourselves, "you do not seem to be approaching 'The Lights o' London' in that farcical spirit with which you usually assist at the performance of melodrama. What does the unusual glare in your eye portend?"

"My dear Jack," I reply, "I find that to get any enjoyment out of a play, you must enter thoroughly into the spirit of it. Nothing is easier than to doubt and to scoff, nothing more comfortable than unquestioning faith. The melodrama is an appeal to the feelings and the understanding of the gallery boy. For the nonce I will be a gallery boy. Some one mentioned the doctrine of 'obsession' the other day. The unfamiliar word and the unfamiliar idea caught my fancy. Since I may not sit on high Olympus, owing to certain conventional scruples on your part, I will permit the soul of a gallery boy to come down and obsess me. If I cry out 'Hi yi yi,' or 'Hist the rag,' at unexpected moments, or emit a shrill whistle through my fingers which may strike your acute ear as an echo from Tar Flat, do not mind my unusual interjections, and do not sit upon me, for I shall not be myself, and the gallery boy may resent your interference in unexpected terms."

Jack glared at me as if he could have clapped me into a lunatic asylum on the spur of the moment without a pang, but undismayed I passed out of myself. I had a night of unalloyed dramatic enjoyment. I cast all ideas of unities and sequences to the winds. It did not at all matter that the "Lights o' London" is a most disjointed series of tableaux. I took my tableaux one at a time, and, as they are all played very much better than they deserve—and I took everything in dire and literal earnest—I had a very good time. Not so, Jack, who has been mounting a metaphysical scaffolding since Rochat came to town. He has become hypercritical, and kept up a running fire of objections throughout the eleven acts. The author calls them scenes, but as each one is perfectly independent of the other it is just as well to call them what they are.

"Pray, tell me," said Jack, as we talked it over afterward, "pray, tell me, what have the Jarvises to do with the plot, or little Tim, or Percy de Vere, or the philosopher, or—"

"Never mind going through them all, Jack," I interrupt. "It is alter all but a gallery of portraits, and you will at least acknowledge that they are cleverly done."

"Well, yes," said Jack, "too cleverly by far if one may say so, for it seems an abasement of talent for an artist like Sara Jewett to be put into a colorless part like that of Bess Marks, where she who can do so much has absolutely nothing to do but be hapless and pathetic."

"True, Jack; but since some one must be hapless and pathetic, would you not rather it were Sara Jewett than some one else?"

"My love," says Jack, quite grandly—he always calls me "my love" when he would like to slap me—

"my love, I am arguing from an artistic standpoint, and the tables are indeed turned when such a state of things can come about. I am perhaps of an extravagant turn of mind, but I do not like to see brains and talent go to waste. One may enjoy the 'Lights o' London' very thoroughly, and yet regret to see such people put to the playing of it. There is Maud Harrison, the archest and sprightliest of comedienues, who has nothing to do but stand about and look interesting. Upon my word, I feel like writing in some lines for her myself, as she stands there helpless with her hands in her pockets."

"And yet, Jack," I say, "would you not rather see her stand there with her hands in her pockets than any one else?"

"Your arguments, madam," cries Jack, "are irrefutable, but utterly absurd." And he retreats into silence. After all, Jack is right. Next to seeing a poor player overweighted, there is nothing so unsatisfactory as seeing an artist undertaxed. "The Lights o' London" in lesser hands would still be an interesting melodrama, it is so skillfully wrought up; but in the hands of the present company it is full of delicious bits in which the artists owe nothing more to the author than suggestion. What could be better than Eva French's Tim, a waif of the streets, pinched, hungry, and morally oblivious. It is not a five-minute scene, but it is thoroughly finished and artistic. What an unctuous old Jarvis Parselle makes, good nature radiating from every lap of his wrinkles, and an aroma of Dickens in every fold of his peculiarities. There is a faint suggestion of the Crummles ménage in the Jarvis household, and an indescribable atmosphere of comfort surrounding them. Mrs. Phillips has not quite the Cockney flavor, as no one has for the matter of that in all the cast, but she drops, as usual, as easily and naturally into her place as if she had been fitted to it. Mr. Clinton Stuart, as the decayed fop, makes another of the happy little hits which make one remember "The Lights o' London" in fragments rather than as a whole. Indeed, perhaps Mr. Fawcett is the only one in the long cast who does not leave the imprint of an especial talent upon a small part where any opportunity for character drawing is given. Miss Jewett, Mr. Ramsay, and Mr. De Belleville are mere figureheads of traditional sentiment. Nothing more is asked of them. Mr. Ramsay has perhaps more active misery to bear than all the rest, and bears it well. It is not a pleasant part he has to play, but he gives it with vigor and feeling, and plays quite skillfully upon the sympathies.

Of course, Stoddard's Seth Preen, who can originally have been but a minor part, is, par excellence, the hit of the drama. His strong, peculiar face has much to do with the effect of these masterful drawings of his, but he has a quick eye for detail, and there are many of Seth Preen's tricks which seem to have been copied from life. He makes the part stand out with lurid vividness, and there is something really horrible in the interview between father and daughter. He makes one to feel the difference between the stormy undercurrent of feeling in the bosom of the loutish countryman and the flippant, frivolous soul of the diamond-decked daughter. Miss Cary is at her best in this scene, which is a brief flash of brilliance amid all the squalor, but does not seem to mean anything in particular. In point of fact, nothing means anything in particular. It is all a grand combination of nothings in particular. The scenery is satisfactory without being great. True, in the first act, the Mark's lodge is perched upon the very doopstep of Arnytage Hall, but the stage is not as elastic as the fancy, and that goes for nothing. There are some extraordinary moonlight effects in Regent's Park, but they are entirely counteracted by the realistic splash when Seth Preen takes an involuntary dip, and Harold Arnytage goes after him with a very good "header." "The borough" on Saturday night is noisily effective; the patrol of the police squad the admired of the gallery, and the filing in of the wretches to Marylebone Workhouse not picturesque, but very appealing. Perhaps this sort of play does set one a-thinking, and incline the heart to softer pity for a week or two. We all get into a grave mood now and then, and tell each other in a rush of pity that one-half the world does not know how the other is getting on; and perhaps some people are subject to an impulse of charity under such circumstances. Even Sims's philanthropy is not purely dramatic; for I read in a London paper the other day that while his Romany Rye was playing to a tremendous matinee house in one theatre, and Bella Pateman at a charitable benefit was bringing tears to the eyes of an audience of three thousand with her touching recitation of his Dagonet or Billy's Rose at another, Sims himself was entertaining three hundred workhouse children with a real country picnic, giving them an abundance of sandwiches, sweet cakes, and tea, fresh air, green grass and blue sky, and pure human kindness. And so easily is one's judgment biased, I have thought better of "The Lights o' London" ever since.

"Where can the people come from?" people were saying the other night, for "The Lights o' London" filled the California to its utmost capacity, Emerson's Minstrels opened to a crowded house, there was a rumor that the entire population was at the Fair, and Hazel Kirke was repeating her mimic woes to a weeping crowd. Poor Hazel! Her plurality of husbands is getting to be somewhat confusing; for, whereas everything else seems to remain as it was in the beginning, there is a new Lord Travers with each new season, till Hazel begins to seem like an approved bigamist. The bills say that this is the end of "Hazel Kirke," perhaps forever. Let us devoutly hope so. It was a most enjoyable little play, but we have certainly had enough of it. A fresh, clean theatre, a bric-à-brac stage setting, a couple of new dresses, and a last fiftful flicker of interest, are sustaining it just now. The play has firmly established Effie Ellsler, Frank Weston Coudock, Bowser, and all the rest of them indeed, as favorites; and a further taste of their mettle, if such be the programme, will be anticipated with pleasure. People like to know how much their favorite players can do.

At the benefit of Mr. Palmer, the Union Square manager, to take place on next Thursday afternoon, the bill has been so ingeniously arranged that it brings out the entire strength of the company, not only in point of numbers, but their individual excellent talent as well. The necessarily chopped character of a benefit bill does not always turn out so happily.

As for Hazel, she is sadly burlesqued at the Minstrels in that comical but unsatisfactory way in which minstrels always do a burlesque. This one is better, perhaps, than usual. It seems to be a combination of "Hazel," "Boccaccio," and "The Mascott," but as the excellent talent of the new company lies in the musical line, the innovation is not misplaced. The theatre has been quite thoroughly renovated, the new chairs are exceedingly comfortable, and the new company well enough. The ventilation remains unchanged, but the new decorations are very handsome.

BETSY B.

We do not know how far the following extract, taken from the Indianapolis Saturday Review, is true; but it is nevertheless interesting: "Now that young Lytton Sothorn is to make a tour of this country next year, theatrical papers have begun the pleasant duty of exhibiting the skeleton in the house of Sothorn. Lytton Sothorn was not even mentioned in his father's will. Years before the latter died the two were open enemies. According to the Dramatic World, the rupture between father and son came about through a fellow named Frederick Lyster, (the degenerate hrother of an accomplished and honorable gentleman,) who had married a young woman whose stage name was Minnie Walton. She died, poor creature, some time ago, and perhaps the memory of her death, and the reproachful face of her early youth occasionally afflicts the man who sold her, and bartered her, and chartered her like a chattel. The first to buy this poor beautiful outlaw of her proprietor was Edward A. Sothorn, the elder. He paid cash for her with contemptuous liberality. Then he carried her around in his train as if this were Morocco, and she a mere pet slave, purchased in open market. All of a sudden the sordid wretch whose intimacy with the younger Sothorn overshadowed him like an upas tree, persuaded the boy—eager, rash, thoughtless as he was—to profit by his father's supineness. Lytton Sothorn fled with Minnie Walton, his father's mistress, bought and paid for, his father's printing, his father's reputation, his father's very name—and opened in Australia as the Sothorn, at the instigation of the infamous creature, who to all the qualities of Sir Pandarus added only the subtlety of Mephistopheles. That is why Edward A. Sothorn discarded Lytton, his son, and refused to see him as he lay in the embrace of death. Thus came it that he passed under the cold and despotic influence of the one surviving member of his own family—his sister. A most extraordinary woman is this sister, Mrs. Cowan; a heartless, icy, calculating woman. The lawyer of the widow and children accepted her offer to compromise, and she produced, as the amount to be divided, sixteen thousand pounds. Mrs. Cowan has no child, no sister, no brother, no husband. All that she retains of the property she got from her brother will go to her only intimate and companion, a street waif picked up in the wards of a London workhouse. It is certainly a grim and striking picture—the nameless parish orphan, horn in a gutter, and bred in a kitchen, waiting with graceless and servile patience for half the leavings of the witty, the polished, the fastidious, and unhappy being who was Edward Askew Sothorn."

At the Baldwin Theatre, during the past week, "Hazel Kirke" has been playing to crowded houses. It will continue until further notice. On Sunday night at this theatre, the treasurer, Charles Goodwin, will receive a benefit from the profession in this city. Haverly's California Theatre has scored a great success in "Lights o' London," which will continue through next week. Emerson's Minstrels, at the Standard Theatre, have also called forth good audiences, and the new sketches introduced have made a hit.

—THE VERY ATTRACTIVE PROGRAMME WHICH has been arranged for Mr. W. R. Palmer's benefit, at the California Theatre on Thursday afternoon next, will be found in another column. The curiosity to see Miss Jewett, Miss Carey, Miss Harrison, Mrs. Phillips, and Messrs. Ramsey, Stoddard, and Fawcett, in parts which they will assume for this occasion only, will doubtless be great. Sale of seats opens to-day.

A LANGTRY REHEARSAL.

How the Jersey Lily Played at Twickenham Villa.

A correspondent of the New York Times recently spent an afternoon at Mr. Labouchere's Twickenham Villa, on the Thames, where Mrs. Langtry, under the tutelage of Mrs. Labouchere, (formerly the well-known comedy actress Henrietta Hodson,) was rehearsing the part of Rosalind in "As You Like It." He says: I know of no more exquisitely placed villa on the Thames than the modern representative of Pope's villa of the past, with its lawns overhanging the river in front, and its quaint retreat of verdant grounds and gardens at the back. It was our humor on this summer afternoon to consider a certain green space, bounded by tall elms, a stage, the forest scene in "As You Like It," and to have Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Labouchere rehearse some passages of Shakespeare's delightful comedy. Near by was a side-table with fruit and iced wine, and the actors were in ordinary morning dress—Mrs. Langtry in a pretty muslin delaine, with a sailor's hat; Mrs. Labouchere in blue serge—the one taking the rôle of Rosalind, the other that of Celia. This is the first rehearsal with an audience. The leading artist is slightly nervous—an excellent sign, and one which gives one hope of her; for in the first days of her engagement at the Haymarket I thought her too self-conscious, and in a conversation with her on Sunday I found her fully sensible of the ordeal she had passed through. "I have only understood the magnitude of what I undertook since the event has passed," she said. "Had I been so fully aware of the difficulties that belong to a reasonably successful appearance on the stage as I am now, I should not have had sufficient courage to risk so great a venture. I was not nervous then; I am now." "Which argues," I observed, "that you are making progress." She looked her part. There was a tired expression about her eyes, those liquid eyes about which poets have sung, and which great painters have striven to realize on canvas. Her study has given her face an intellectual expression, which adds somewhat of poetry to the pensiveness that is a notable characteristic of her beauty. There are possibly handsomer women than Mrs. Langtry to be seen after church on Fifth Avenue any Sunday, but none with greater charm of manner. Her features are singularly perfect, her eyes have "a languishing power of tenderness." It is not her fault if poets, painters, and society have made her the belle of more than one London season, and it is a laudable ambition, surely, that prompts her to seek approval for intellectual acquisitions beyond those of personal beauty. All the leading critics in the provincial journals say she is greatly improved, her Hester Grazebrook, in "An Unequal Match," being highly praised, more particularly in the last act. "You like the profession?" "Immensely." "It is quite a new life?" "Entirely. One has to eat at different hours, to go to bed, to get up, to change one's habits. But I like it; the occupation opens up to me a new world; the more one learns in it, the more one discovers one's ignorance." "They have been very good to you in the provinces?" "Too good. The Edinburgh students came to the theatre nightly four hundred strong, and my carriage was drawn by the crowd from the theatre to the hotel." "What shall you open with in New York?" "An Unequal Match," and I shall play Rosalind in "As You Like It." That is a bold thing to do, is it not? But what a part it is! It is a dream. I have experienced more real intellectual happiness in reading it than I have felt all my life." Mrs. Langtry has two qualifications for an actress, a fine appearance and a sympathetic voice. I think it will be said of her in the United States that she is not weighed with what is called the English accent. She speaks plainly, gives full value to her vowels, and does not underestimate the importance of her consonants. For some years past her instructor, Mrs. Labouchere, has been off the stage, appearing only occasionally for charitable and other objects. It was an event of this kind that brought out Mrs. Langtry. A theatrical entertainment had been arranged for the benefit of a public institution at Twickenham. One of the leading ladies falling sick, Mrs. Labouchere invited Mrs. Langtry to take her place. Mrs. Langtry had never acted or dreamed of acting, though her father was famous both as a reciter and a preacher. No doubt Mrs. Labouchere thought more at that time of Mrs. Langtry's name as "a draw" for her charitable enterprise than as strengthening the acting powers of her company. On the understanding that she would teach her the part, Mrs. Langtry gave a tardy consent, and the moment it was announced that she was to appear, the tickets went up to a premium, and half fashionable London went to Twickenham to see Mrs. Langtry's debut. The "society beauty" astonished friends and foes, and the necessity for profitable occupation arising, Mrs. Labouchere encouraged the amateur to study for the profession. The result was the engagement at the Haymarket. Mrs. Langtry is credited with being a clever woman of business. The truth is, she had a clever friend at her elbow, who had mastered all the ropes of her profession both as actress and manager. The Bancrofts, through Mrs. Labouchere, offered Mrs. Langtry twenty pounds sterling a week; at the end of the negotiation they gave her eighty pounds.

Obscure Intimations.

"Yuba Dam."—Declined.
 "Episode on the Steam Cars," A. J.—Declined.
 "Santa Monica," L. V. N.—Declined.
 "Corn Davis," J. B. G.—Declined.
 "Connecticut Letter," M. C. W.—Declined.
 "The Chase," A. W. S.—Declined.
 "The Old Coat," F. E. T.—Declined.
 "Bessie," L. L. P.—Accepted; will appear shortly.
 "Du Chien," N. C. K.—Accepted; will appear shortly.

Marcus M. Henry has been appointed Pacific Coast manager and correspondent of the "American Musical Review," whose headquarters are at 30 East Fourteenth Street, New York. His office is at Sherman & Clay's music store.

AYER'S AGUE CURE IS THE ONLY MEDICINE in existence which may be considered an antidote for fever and ague, and kindred diseases. It not only affords immediate relief, but it eradicates the malarial poison which produces the disease, without leaving any enervating or injurious effect, as is the case with many of the ague medicines advertised.

THE GREAT DISTINGUISHING FEATURE OF Redding's Russia Salve is its power to reduce inflammation.

IN ANOTHER COLUMN OF THIS PAPER IS THE card of James Paine, addressed to SPORTSMEN, in which he informs all duck-hunters that he has sold out his lease, ark, boats, etc. at TEAL STATION, to a private club, and that for the future it will be impossible to get either accommodations or shooting there. We happen to know that the club referred to consists of a number of wealthy gentlemen of this city, who have incurred a large outlay, and are determined to preserve the ponds and sloughs from the invasion of pot-hunters and other unwelcome intruders, and to this end have procured the appointment of two constables, whose duty it will be to patrol the premises in boats, and impartially arrest all trespassers.

THE COUNTRY AROUND DUNCAN'S MILLS is still green and spring-like, although other localities have become brown and dusty. For hotel accommodations apply to Queen & Goode, Duncan's Mills, N. P. C. R. R., Sonoma County.

HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Dr. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET, cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL REMEMBER that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

BALDWIN THEATRE.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN.....Lessee.
 E. M. ROBERTS.....Acting Manager.

A BRILLIANT SUCCESS!

HAZEL KIRKE

Proves to be as great a success with the San Francisco public as in the past.

A TRIUMPHANT OVATION!

Second week commences on Monday. Popular Farewell Prices.
 Matinees—Wednesday and Saturday.

The Madison Square Theatre Company does not play on Sunday night.

NOTICE TO SPORTSMEN.

The undersigned having sold his lease to the CHAMBERLAIN TRACT, in the Suisun Marshes, together with his ark, boats, etc., to a private club of gentlemen, who will hereafter strictly preserve all the premises for their own shooting only, hereby notifies his former patrons, and all persons who have been in the habit of visiting TEAL STATION, that it will be IMPOSSIBLE to accommodate them, or in any way afford them shooting facilities there, and they are therefore respectfully requested not to stop at that station.

JAMES PAINE, late of Teal Station.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

WILL INTRODUCE THEIR

FALL-STYLE HATS
THIS DAY!

Call and examine their immense Stock at

336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 310 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

HAVERLY'S CALIFORNIA THEATRE.

J. H. HAVERLY.....Proprietor
 FRED'K W. BERT.....Manager

BENEFIT

....TENDERED TO....

W. R. PALMER, ESQ.

BY MANY PROMINENT CITIZENS,

The management of the California Theatre, and the entire UNION SQUARE THEATRE COMPANY.

SPECIAL EXTRA MATINEE,

Thursday, September 14th, at 2 o'clock.

NOTE.—As the performance will commence precisely at 2 o'clock, it is particularly requested that all seats be occupied before that hour.

PROGRAMME.

DANIEL ROCHAT,

Fourth Act. (Boudoir Scene). Miss Sara Jewett, Mrs. E. J. Phillips, Messrs. J. de Belleville, J. H. Stoddard, John Parselle, Clinton Stuart, and W. S. Quigley.

LADY OF LYONS,

Third Act. Miss Eleanor Cary, Miss Nellie Wetherell, and Mr. Walden Ramsey.

THE HUNCHBACK,

Scenes of Helen and Modus. Miss Maud Harrison and Mr. Owen Fawcett.

MACBETH,

(Sleep-walking Scene). Mrs. E. J. Phillips, Miss Eloise Willis, and Mr. Elberts.

ROMEO AND JULIET,

(Balcony Scene). Miss Sara Jewett and Mr. Walden Ramsey.

THE LONG STRIKE,

(Money-penny Scene). Mr. J. H. Stoddard, Misses Maud Harrison, Nellie Wetherell, Eva French, and Messrs. Julian Magnus and W. E. Morse.

Stage Manager.....Mr. BEN EAKER
 Conductor.....Mr. LOUIS HOMER

The usual matinee prices will be retained. Sale of seats opens to-day.

RUPTURE

Cured. Greatest Invention of the age. FIERCE & SONS, 704 S. St., San Francisco.

CHAS. GOFFRIE,

SOLO VIOLINIST. FROM LONDON.

For many years Musical Instructor to

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES:

Le Duc de Penthièvre.

The Duchess of Hamilton,

(nee Princess Marie de Baden).

La Duchesse de Chartres.

(nee Princesse Françoise d'Orleans).

La Princesse Marguerite de Nemours.

La Princesse Isabelle de Montpensier, etc.,

Gives to advanced piano pupils instruction in the works of Mozart, Beethoven, etc., with violin accompaniment.

Address 807 BUSH STREET.

JOHN TAYLOR & CO.

118 and 120 Market Street, and 15 and 17 California Street

ASAYERS MATERIALS, MINE

Mill Supplies; also Druggists' Glassware.

FINE

Suits, TAILORING Suits.

$25, $30, $35, $40, $45, $50, $55, $60, $65, $70, $75, $80, $85, $90, $95, $100.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Suits, TAILORING Suits, $40, $45, $50, $55, $60, $65, $70, $75, $80, $85, $90, $95, $100.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Suits, TAILORING Suits, $60, $65, $70, $75, $80, $85, $90, $95, $100.

Merchant Tailor and Clothier, J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

dealers in Old London Dock Brandies, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple Jack, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liqueurs, etc. 127 MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—OFFICE OF

the Silver King Mining Company, San Francisco, Sept. 5, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above-named Company held this day, a Dividend (No. 33) of Twenty-five Cents (25c) per share was declared, payable on Friday, September 15, 1882, at the office of the Company, Room 19, 328 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California. Transfer books will close Sept. 9, 1882, at 3 P. M.

THE "Dress Reform" CORSET.

Specialty for Stout Figures, (worn with or without Straps,) by mail, $3.00. Send waist, hip, and bust measure. Also, Shoulder Braces, Union Under Flannels, Ladies' and Children's Comfort Waists, Bustles, Hose Supporters, etc. Send for Circular. The only Depot for these goods.

MRS. M. H. OBER & CO.
 Boston Dress Reform,
 336 Sutter Street,
 SAN FRANCISCO.

An Elegant Corset to Order for $1.

NOTICE.

Messrs. FRANK J. SYMMES and VANDERLYNN STOW, having purchased the entire Stock and good will of the business as formerly conducted by me at

122 & 124 SUTTER STREET

The patronage of all my friends is hereby respectfully solicited for them in the future.

THOMAS DAY.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 14, 1882.

The undersigned will continue the above-mentioned business in the name of

THOMAS DAY
& CO.,

And the patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

FRANK J. SYMMES,
 VANDERLYNN STOW.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANOS, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,

As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with

J. H. MOTT & CO.,

647 Market St.,

Nucleus Block, Second Floor. Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns—Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.

AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

J. R. COWEN.	J. W. PORTER.
COWEN & PORTER,
FUNERAL DIRECTORS,
118 Geary Street,	San Francisco.
OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

C. N. WEST'S ELECTRO-MEDICAL BELT	WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-Medical Belts always have excelled all other electrical appliances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs. This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States. Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco.
--------------------------------------	--

DANICHEFF KID GLOVE FACTORY

REMOVED TO 119 DUPONT ST.
 Between Post and Geary.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF
 FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET

YOUNG MEN.

Mr. Thistlepod's Disgrace at their Absurd Dress.

Old Mr. Thistlepod climbed up the broad stairway of marble and rosewood leading to the high-backed, Queen-Anne editorial rooms of the Hawkeye, (the best advertising medium west of the Mississippi, and the most popular paper in the world, now is the time to make up clubs,) yesterday morning. His heavy tread fell noiselessly upon the Pompadour velvet carpets, and, as he sank into a costly escrivoire, the perfumed light fell through the stained glass tant-mieux at the facade of the managing editor's ebournelement-de-cœur, and touched the old man's face with a softened ormolu, that seemed like an echo from the stately renaissance that looked down upon the walls. Carefully moving the elegant Louis Quinze passerol where the old man could not tip it over with his feet, if after his usual habit he should choose to rest them on the carved marivaults-sujet, the editor asked the honest tiller of the soil how were crops in the Flint River country.

"Crops?" echoed the old man. "Well, now I want to tell you about crops. Corn's all right, an' oats was better'n usual, an' wheat just boomed; but you've got a crop of fools in Burlington that'll just lay over 'any other green thing that ever drewed the cows in the State of Iowa."

The managing editor was surprised, and said he hadn't heard such intemperate talk since the prohibition canvass. He added that there were some fools in Burlington, he had heard, but as they were not subscribers to the Hawkeye, he didn't know much about them, and felt very little interest in them.

"Why, the town is full of 'em," shouted Mr. Thistlepod, who labors under the impression that he can't be heard unless he talks very loud.

"How can you tell they're fools?" asked the society editor.

"By their clothes," waved the old man, and the society editor slid as far as he could under the table, and then laid his face flat on his arm in order to write more easily. "By their clothes," repeated the sturdy old agriculturist. "Y'gaul, if a boy of mine 'uz to dress like the young fellers I see in this town, I'd beat some sense into him with a neck-yoke. Why, it's redik'us, I tell ye it's redik'us. I see a young chap down in the countin' room with a pair o' trousers on him tighter'n candle moulds—I hope to die I didn't think he'd stuck his laigs into a couple o' snake-skins. 'N' his coat—by jockies, it wasn't hardly long enough to cover his suspenders; it wasn't, I swanny. 'N' it fit him closer than his undershirt, and his shirt collar sawed his years every time he turned his head, 'n' he wore his watch-chain outside his coat. An' he wore a flat hat, with a round top, about as big as a cooky. An' his shoes! P'inted, do ye know, p'inted like tip-topicks, 'n' they was long as pickaxes. To see him skippin' around in that git-up, lookin' more like a monkey nor a white man, 'y'gaul, it made me mad. 'I swan I wanted to lick him. I declare I did. They's no sense in a Christian man makin' such an outlandish spectacle of himself, an' if I ever ketch my boy dressed up in any such a dog-gone, redik'us, absurd, disgustin' fashion, I'll be gaul-swizzled if I—hello, Jasper, are ye waitin' for me?"

And saying good-bye, Mr. Thistlepod accompanied his son down stairs to the wagon. As the old man turned to go, he did not in the least degree resemble the "young feller" down in the counting-room. The big felt hat he wore had originally been of some color, but that was years ago. The blue merino band, sewed on with black thread, was too loose, and a twine string tied tightly around it caused the hat to bulge out above the band like the dome of a mosque. The hickory shirt, fastened at the collar in severe simplicity with a big horn button, scorned a collar of any kind. The roomy brown vest had four white bone buttons and a black shawl-pin, and through the irregular reticulations of its much-abraded back the solitary suspender showed, resolutely clinging to a button aft and a nail forward. The baggy blue trousers swelled out below the flapping vest into an ample dome, strangely creased and tearfully wrinkled, breaking, as the old man walked, into awful billowy bulges and humps, while one long, deep, diagonal crease showed where the trusty suspender, halted taunt from port to starboard, held everything fast on the quarter. Farther down they bagged in great, curving billows at the knees, and a wrinkled behind; they were brief, and came to an untimely end about four inches before they reached the top of the shoe, and they ended abruptly; same size all the way down, and sawed square off across the ends. The shoes were not exactly pointed at the toes, and when the old man's feet were not in them you couldn't bet which way the shoes were pointed. Jasper was attired in like manner as his father, only being a much taller man, his trousers were correspondingly shorter. As they passed through the aesthetic decorations of the counting-room, the man in the lean pants laughed sneeringly, and Mr. Thistlepod laughed tauntingly. The managing editor sank back in his ermine-cushioned fleur-de-terre.

"I am afraid," he sighed, wearily, "those two people are laughing at each other's clothes."—Burlington Hawkeye.

Scene—Piazza of a rural hotel. At one end of it a group of women talking vigorously; at the other end a group of men smoking.

Voice from the group of women—"I wish you to understand, madam, that my children have just as much right to the parlor as you have."

Response—"I don't care a snap for you or your children; you're low, common trash!"

Voice from the group of men—"There's going to be a fence fight; let's take a walk."

Response [all speaking together]—"Let's."

The bi-centennial anniversary of the landing of William Penn is to be celebrated in Philadelphia next week. Mr. Penn will be remembered as an affable gentleman, now dead, who traded sixteen dozen jack-knives and some glass beads for what is now the State of Pennsylvania.—Chicago Tribune.

It is the girl with plump, ivory arms that has no sleeves on her bathing-dress. And it is the lady who lies on the sand in the gaudiest tights that won't show her ankle in a hammock. Dearly beloved, why is it thus?—Puck.

At every station on the Russian railroads is a grievance book, in which the traveler may inscribe his wrongs in any language he likes, and which is periodically read by the authorities.

"Does moonlight soothe?" asks the New York Herald. If she doesn't, paregoric will, and ten cents buys a heap of it this year.

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chills, Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, etc., and Indeed of all affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

Has been widely used during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such uniformly successful results, that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return, until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery, or Debility follow the cure. Indeed, where Disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them, and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm, has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either require or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG AND MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,

Or W. H. PARKER, 3...

4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

BONESTELL
BURLINGTON
ALLEN & CO.
PAPER WAREHOUSE
411 413 & 415 SANSOME ST. S.F.
Importers of All Kinds of Paper.

COMPOUND OXYGEN
NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION, for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders. Prepared by DR. STARKER & PALLEN, Philadelphia, Pa. Packages of Compound Oxygen easily sent by express, ready for USE AT HOME. H. E. MATHEWS, Forwarding Agent, 608 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlets.

WILLIAMS, DIMOND & CO.,
SHIPPING AND
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
Union Building, Junction Market and Pine Streets, San Francisco.

AGENTS FOR PACIFIC MAIL S. S. Co.
Pacific Steam Navigation Co.; The Cunard Royal Mail S. S. Co.; The Hawaiian Line; The China Traders' Insurance Co., Limited; The Marine Insurance Co. of London; The Baldwin Locomotive Works; The Glasgow Iron Co.; Nich. Ashton & Son's Salt.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 5) of Twenty (20) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 23, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday, the 10th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. P. GORDON, Secretary.
Office—Room 21, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

SIERRA NEVADA SILVER MINING

Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California—Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 17th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 74) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, 309 Montgomery Street, Room 37, Nevada Block, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twentieth day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

E. L. PARKER, Secretary.
Office—Room 37, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OF

the Thunder Powder Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Alameda County, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 1) of Forty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room No. 5, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 9th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. M. OAKLEY, Secretary.
Office Thunder Powder Company, 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINING

Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, State of Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees held on the tenth day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 18) of Thirty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 16th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 14th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Trustees.

A. W. HAVENS, Secretary.
Office—Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

DIVIDEND NOTICE—OFFICE OF

the Standard Consolidated Mining Company, San Francisco, Sept. 2, 1882. At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above named Company, held this day, dividend No. 45, of Twenty-five cents per share was declared, payable on Tuesday, September 12, 1882, at the office in this city, or at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in New York.

WM. WILLIS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 29, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

ALASKA
COMMERCIAL CO.
No. 310 SANSOME STREET,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

C. P. SHEFFIELD, N. W. SPAULDING, J. PATTERSON

PACIFIC SAW MANUFACTURING COMPANY
17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, AUCTIONEER.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
Stock, Real Estate, and General

AUCTIONEERS.

116 Montgomery Street,
Occidental Hotel Block, SAN FRANCISCO

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

CATHARINE TOEDTER, formerly CATHARINE ROBERT, her husband, Plaintiff, vs. DAVID FOGARTY, Defendant.

Superior Court. Department No. 1. Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 1, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Catharine Toedter, formerly Catharine Robert, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against David Fogarty, defendant, on the 14th day of August, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 15th day of August, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book Two of said Court, at page 187, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Larkin Street, distant seventy-three feet southerly from the southerly line of Ellis Street, running thence southerly along said line of Larkin Street forty-seven feet to the northerly line of Willow Avenue; thence at right angles westerly along said line of Willow Avenue eighty-seven feet and six inches; thence at right angles northerly forty-seven feet, and thence at right angles easterly eighty-seven feet and six inches, to the point of commencement. Being a portion of Western Addition Block Number Eight, as by the map of said City and County.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 12th day of September, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder, for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, August 19, 1882.
JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
LOUGHBOROUGH & NEWALL, Attorneys for Plaintiffs.
August 19, 26, September 2, 9.

[Department No. 7.]
IN THE SUPERIOR COURT,
City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRBAIRN, Plaintiff, vs. NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after this service on you of this Summons is served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days of judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 2d day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

DAVID WILDER, Clerk.
By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

[Department No. 7.]

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff, vs. JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

Superior Court. (Late 4th District Court.) EXECUTION.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly issued, on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a Judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 1st day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,327 97-100 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 1st day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 165 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, running thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27 6-12 feet; thence at right-angles northerly 120 feet; thence at right-angles easterly 27 6-12 feet; and thence at right-angles southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement. Together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the first day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.
JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.
August 5, 12, 19, 26.

NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 11th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

JOHN SEDGWICK,
Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated San Francisco, August 28, 1882.

SUMMER RECREATION.

RUSSIAN RIVER HOTEL, DUNcan's Mills—A favorite resort for tourists. Bathing, fishing, hunting, boating. QUEEN & GOOD, Proprietors.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.

We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due from Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	131 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND
BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker.
428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,
10 POST STREET,
AND
718 SANSOME STREET.

Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris
"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"Tonic, Restorative, and Enlivening."

Dr. Thilenius.

"Exhilarating, good for Loss of Appetite."

Peter Squire, Chemist to the Queen.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS.

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,
522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,
HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,
GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,
TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,
Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.
PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President. WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.
ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President. E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED
OIL CLOTHING
WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.
MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,
ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,
RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING
BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,
Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

DECKER BROS.

IS NOW THE BEST.

KOHLER & CHASE,
137 POST STREET, NEAR DUPONT.

General Agents for Pacific States.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free | $72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine

ICHI BAN,

22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,
LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,
AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,
At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:
210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:
Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf, Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

When ordering wine, don't call for "California Champagne" merely, but state the brand, "EXTRA DRY," Extra Dry, or the brand's name. We are the only producers of NATURAL SPARKLING WINES in this country.

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

PACIFIC BUREAU OF EDUCATION
Supplies (1) Teachers with desirable positions; (2) Colleges with Professors and Tutors; (3) Academies, Seminaries and Public Schools of every grade, and families, with competent Principals and Teachers; (4) Colleges, Seminaries, Teachers' Institutes, and Lyceums with Lecturers. Circulars and forms of application sent free by MYRON H. SAVAGE, Manager, 19 New Montgomery Street, S. F.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.
110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 12.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 16, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE HAUNTED ENGINEER.

How Bessie's Ghost Warned her Maddened Lover from Shadow Land.

When I was a boy I had a consuming desire to become a railroad engineer. As I trudged along in the furrow behind a plow on hot summer days no political thoughts of fertile glebe, golden harvest, or garnered sheaves filled my brain, for every few hours long trains of cars sped their swift way along a line of railroad that cleft a neighbor's field diagonally, as usual. Almost as far as the eye could reach I could see the great clouds of black coal-smoke trailing in mid-air, as it were, along the sinuous course of the track. I would watch it with eager eye as it approached, gaze with boyish adoration upon the mighty train as it swept by me, and follow the line of smoke until every vestige of it had disappeared beyond the horizon of the broad and fertile Illinois prairies. To me a locomotive was a thing of life, and to be the master-spirit that should control the monster seemed to me then to be the ultimatum of existence.

At last my heart's great desire was about to be realized. Through the influence of a friend I secured a position as fireman on a freight train, on the main trunk of the Chicago and Alton railroad. I repaired to Bloomington with all possible dispatch to accept the position, which I considered, however, only as a stepping-stone to the one desire of my heart. The next morning after my arrival I reported to the master mechanic for duty. Engine Number 128 was brought out of the round-house, and I was told to mount the foot-board. I ascended the steps on the fireman's side, so that I could be able to get a good view of my engineer as I entered the cab. As I stepped upon the foot-board a smiling face greeted me, and I was saluted with the words: "Hello, are you the new boy that I have got to break in?" The look and tone reassured me, and I stepped boldly into the cab, and soon after entered upon my duties. I soon learned that the name by which my engineer was generally known was "Scotty," but it was not until several days afterward that I found his full name to be John Scott. But he was so genial, pleasant, jolly, and whole-souled, that everybody who knew him delighted to indulge in the liberty of calling him Scotty, as a sort of pet name.

Scotty and I soon became fast friends. I was frank with him, and told him boldly what my ambitions were, and as he had worked up over the same road he was more than willing to lend a helping hand to me. In a very short time, under his careful training, I acquired sufficient knowledge of the workings of the engine to drive it myself. Days and weeks went by rapidly, and, to tell the truth, after the novelty had worn off, and I was brought face to face with the long years of weary work that lay before me, I began to realize that there was about as much monotony in shoveling coal into a red-hot furnace all night, as there had been in following a plow all day. The sameness of our lives was seldom broken except for a moment, sometimes, at a station of considerable importance.

There was, however, one exception to this rule. At a small way-station there was something which always served to break the monotony of the run; for Scotty and I soon became so much interested, through a sort of brotherly feeling for him, that I, too, looked forward to that event as the only one of pleasure during the whole trip. The name of the little station was Plainview—evidently so named from the fact that it was situated on a small, open plateau that lay between belts of timber; one following the sinuous windings of Coop's Creek on the south, and the other the Macoupin Creek on the north. Very near the depot stood the large residence of a rich old farmer, upon whose land the station had been located, in consideration of his granting the company the right of way through his estate.

His only daughter, Bessie, was, when I first saw her, a perfect ideal of beautiful womanhood. Cheeks rosy as an apple, hair black as a raven, and eyes bright and sparkling as diamonds, and a figure symmetrically molded. Truly she was the belle of the country round about, and would have vied with the veriest queen of beauty. I soon discovered that a strong attachment existed between Scotty and Bessie. From him I learned that when he was firing, in the days gone by, when both were much younger, an innocent sort of flirtation sprang up between them, which had gradually ripened into honorable and thoroughly reciprocated love. Every day, as we passed up, soon as the engine stopped, Bessie would bound up the steps, and, after planting a warm kiss of love on Scotty's lips, would seat herself by his side, and remain there till all the side-tracking of cars was done, and we were ready to proceed on our way. She always brought us a generous supply of fruit, and not infrequently cakes and other table delicacies, as we had to eat our lunch out on the run. Thus it was that Plainview, although an insignificant place, came to have so much attraction for us both.

And so matters continued to move on in a pretty even tenor until late in the fall. An accident happened one night by which an engineer on one of the passenger trains was killed. This occasioned some changes, and, among others, Scotty was put in charge of Engine Number 153, and ordered to take the run of the Lightning Express, which left St. Louis for Chicago at 8:30 P.M. Scotty took me with him, much to my delight, as the work would be lighter, and life not quite so dreary as on a freight-engine. The time-schedule brought us to Plainview at 9:45, and, as our train made only five stoppages between St. Louis and Chicago—competition between our line and the Illinois Central being so very close—of course we did not stop at Plainview, and saw no more of Bessie at the station. Every night, however, as we went rushing through the place at the rate of forty miles an hour, we caught sight of a light at an upper window of the old farmer's mansion, and a glimpse of a sweet face pressed against the pane. A sharp shriek of the whistle was Scotty's signal of acknowledgment.

At length, one night we passed up, and there was no light at the window, though we could see that there was a light in the room. Scotty gave his customary salute, but no response came. Again and again we passed up on our regular run, and still nothing was seen of Bessie's face at the window. Scotty began to be sadly worried; for he knew that sickness alone would prevent Bessie from responding to his signals. On the fourth night, as we passed through the station, we noticed many people moving about with lanterns, and far up the track we passed a party of a half-dozen or more. Of course, at our rate of speed we dashed by them like a flash, and could not divine their mission. Soon after we passed them we came to the grade, which was very steep, leading from the plateau on which the town was situated to the bottom lands, as they were called, through which the Macoupin Creek meandered on its way to the "Father of Waters"—the majestic Mississippi. Usually Scotty closed the throttle, threw the reverse lever up to the centre, and allowed the momentum of the train to carry us down the grade. The train, which was a heavy one—consisting of baggage and express cars, three coaches, and two Pullman sleepers—usually made our regular rate of speed over this span of road, impelled by that force alone. But to-night Scotty was seemingly absent-minded; for when we started down the grade, he neglected to shut the steam off. Soon we had attained a fearful rate of speed; but it was not my place to make suggestions, and so I caught hold of the cab-races, and clung to them for dear life; for the engine seemed to be bounding through the air several rods at a time, instead of running smoothly on the rails. Near the foot of the grade was a sharp curve, and beyond that a straight and level stretch of track for about two miles, when the up-grade on the other side of the stream was encountered. My only fear was that when we came upon the curve, the engine would jump the track, and probably land us in eternity. When we struck the curve, we were certainly running at the rate of sixty miles an hour. I was straining every nerve of eyesight peering into the darkness beyond, and in following the two lines of bright steel rails as fast as they were revealed by the rays of the head-light. I turned to look across the cab at Scotty for a moment. He sat there like a statue, one hand on the throttle and the other on the lever of the Westinghouse air-brake. He was looking ahead along the track; but only in a mechanical sort of way, evidently not giving much thought to the immediate surroundings. I again fixed my eyes upon the track, and just as I looked, about fifty yards ahead of the engine, and from out of the darkness on the inner side of the curve, a woman, clothed in white, stepped upon the track. Quicker than thought Scotty applied the full power of the air-brake, and, without closing the throttle, threw the reverse lever over, and thus held the drivers stationary as they passed over the sanded track. But it was all in vain; for the momentum of that ponderous train drove the engine on at a fearful rate of speed. I grasped the whistle-cord, and sounded the danger-signal, but the woman seemed oblivious to it all. The full glare of the head-light fell upon her just for a moment before the cruel pilot struck her, and she was crushed under the pitiless wheels. But, O God! what did that moment reveal to us in that cab? It was our own dear Bessie! Seeming to realize, when it was too late to prevent it, the fate that awaited her, just as the full light fell upon her, she clasped her hands across her bosom, and turned her face toward heaven, as if imploring God and his good angels to receive her spirit, which would so soon be ruthlessly set free from the body. Scotty fell upon the foot-board as one struck dead, when the full realization of what must be the only result flashed through his brain. He was spared the heart-rending sensation of seeing his idol crushed beneath the grinding wheels; but not so with me. As the pilot struck her, she fell to the left, and thus I saw the mangled form as I passed over it being crushed into an unrecognizable mass. The train came to a stand-still within three lengths of itself, and as it did so I closed the throttle, and turned my attention to Scotty.

He rallied in a moment, and, seeming to comprehend the whole situation, bounded out of the cab, and ran back along the track at his utmost speed. I followed close behind him. He met the conductor, and without a word of explanation, snatched the lantern from his hand and sped on. A short distance from the rear end of the train he came to all that remained of the earthly form of her, to save whose life Scotty would gladly have died. May God in his goodness spare me from witnessing such a scene as that again in all the days of my earthly pilgrimage. I then had some conception of that agony of soul and heart whereof it is written that drops of blood were sweat by the sufferer. In a few minutes the entire body of passengers were standing aghast, viewing the scene with deep compassion. The moans and sobs of poor, stricken Scotty were truly distressing, and the once sweet face of Bessie, now revealed in the glimmer of the lantern, bore an expression of such unmitigated horror that to see it once was to have it haunt one to the grave.

At last Scotty's first burst of grief subsided, and, rising from where he had been kneeling beside the prone and mangled form of Bessie, he turned to me with a look of mute appeal in his eyes. I stepped to the front and stated in a few words who the dead girl was, and the relation that had existed between her and Scotty. When this was all known, a deep groan went out upon the midnight stillness, which came from hearts full of the deepest sympathy. The remains of the dead Bessie were taken up by gentle hands and placed in a herth of the rear sleeper. Scotty remained by them, while I went forward and took charge of the engine. We hacked up to the station, and were there met by a large and anxious throng, for our approach had been seen, and it was known that we must have the missing girl on board, either dead or alive. It was hoped that she was alive, for it was thought that possibly Scotty had seen her and had stopped the train, and taken her on board. At the depot another scene of anguish transpired. The loved one was lost. "Dead!" was the only word uttered, and that was spoken with hated breath and amid sobs. Time was very precious to us now, and we only tarried long enough for the remains to be removed, but while there I learned that Bessie had been very sick with a fever, and, becoming delirious, she had escaped from her watchers, and sped along the railroad track, outstripping her pursuers, and thus had met her death.

Taking a man on board with me as fireman, I took the train through the remainder of the run without further accident, leaving poor sorrow-stricken Scotty with his dead.

At the end of a week he came back again and took his old post, but he was sadly changed, and appeared to be only a wreck of his former self. That night we started out on our run, and in time came to the town of Brighton, where the St. Louis branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad crosses the Chicago and Alton main line, where we should have come to a stop, according to railroad regulations. But what was my surprise when Scotty failed to even shut off the throttle. I spoke to him about it, and he said:

"I am not in any condition to run her to-night; you take her and I'll fire for you."

We exchanged places and sped along. When we came to Plainview I saw Scotty take one long look at the house where the signal-light of love used always to be burning brightly in the window for him, and then he buried his face against the cushion of the window-rail of the cab. We soon came to the grade, and the train went whirling down it without a pound of steam. Presently, as we neared the fatal curve, Scotty looked up and his eyes seemed to be riveted into the darkness ahead. Suddenly I saw him start, and with one bound he was over on my side of the cab, and had closed the throttle and thrown the air-brakes on. The train was soon brought to a standstill, and I asked him what was the occasion of this extraordinary proceeding. As he looked up at me his eyes were starting out of their sockets almost, and they had the glare of a maniac in them.

It all flashed upon me in a moment. Poor Scotty had lost his mind from grief, and now, when passing over the scene of the fearful tragedy, it was again enacted in his distorted imagination. The horror of spending the night alone in the cab with a maniac came upon me in its full realization. In answer to my inquiry, why he had stopped the train, he replied, with bated breath:

"Why, didn't you see her? We've run over Bessie again, sure; for I saw her standing on the track just as I jumped for the lever."

"Come, come, Scotty," I replied; "Bessie is dead, and I hope in heaven. You did not see her there."

"But she was there," he answered.

"But we didn't kill her this time; so go ahead."

I moved on, and, much to my relief, Scotty was perfectly rational during the remainder of the run. Our runs south, or from Bloomington to St. Louis, were made in the early morning; hence, of course, he did not imagine that he saw Bessie as we passed the place of her death. He continued me in charge of the engine, however, and said that he should do so till his mind got clear and his nerves steady again.

On our up trip the next night I expected a repetition of the former proceedings, and was prepared to prevent him from causing his hallucinations to interfere with the running of the train. As we approached the curve I saw him gazing intently ahead, and then I saw him start, then stop, and stare into the darkness, and then fix his eyes seemingly upon some object and watch it with intense earnestness, following it with his eyes till he passed it apparently and lost sight of it. He turned to me, his face all wreathed in smiles and aglow with pleasure, and said:

"Didn't you see Bessie then?"

"No."

"Why, I did. And she looked so sweet, and perfect, and pure, and happy, that the very thought of her as I saw her makes me happy also. And as I passed her she threw a kiss to me. I wish you could have seen her."

"Poor Scotty!" I mused; "will he ever be free from these vagaries?"

And so matters finally settled down to their old, and Scotty again took charge of his engine, and I went to shoveling coal, after a few weeks of realization.

boyish hopes—having charge of an engine. We never, however, passed over the curve that Scotty did not lean far out of the cab window, and toss a kiss into what seemed to me to be empty darkness, and when he turned his face to me again, it was always radiant with happiness. I became deeply interested, and began to wonder if it were purely imagination, after all, with him. But from the fact that I could see nothing I argued that he could not.

One morning in the following March, as we passed over the large iron bridge which spans the Macoupin Creek, on our southward run, we noticed that the stream was swollen till the water was overleaping its banks, but as this had occurred once or twice previously we gave it no afterthought. But a deep snow lay on the ground when the rain began the day previous, and this was melting very fast, and served materially to augment the volume of water which was being poured into the stream. All day long the rain fell in sheets and torrents, and the great banks of snow were melting like salt. The telegraph brought in news of swollen streams all along the line, and as we pulled out of East St. Louis, for this was before the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi at that place, the last orders we received were to run with caution. All freight trains were taken off the line, and we had the track to ourselves. At first we were very careful, coming almost to a stop upon approaching a bridge or trestle, but as we found them all in good order we soon began to speed up, and ran along about at our usual rate, making the different stations about on schedule time. The night was as dark as it is possible to imagine, and torrents of rain fell in blinding dashes. The whole line of the track seemed almost flooded. When we came to the grade leading down to the Macoupin Creek I asked Scotty if he intended to "slow up" at the bridge.

"No," he replied; "that is an open iron structure, and has great stone buttresses. It won't go down till the water is ten feet over the top of the track."

I mounted my seat preparatory to the run down the grade, during which I was not required to fire any, as no steam was used. I fell to musing, my eyes mechanically following the line of rails stretching far away into the darkness of the dismal and dreary night. Unconscious of the fact, we came upon the curve where Bessie had been killed. Suddenly the day of the month flashed into my mind, and I remembered that it was just three months to a day—yea, to an hour—since she had met her sad fate. All this passed through my brain in a moment. I noticed that we were near the place where Scotty always leaned out of the cab window to throw his kiss, and I looked to see if he would open his window to-night, and lean out into the drenching storm. I saw him reach for the sash, then stop and gaze down the track in front of us. Naturally I, too, looked in the same direction. My complete and utter surprise can be better imagined than described, when I fully comprehended what my eyes rested upon. There in front of us stood Bessie, just as natural as I had ever seen her in earthly life, only she was now more beautiful, if that were possible. The full glare of the headlight fell upon her, and she seemed to be not more than one hundred feet ahead of the engine. Every feature and lineament of her countenance were plainly visible. On her sweet, pure face there was an expression of mute appeal. In her right hand she held a red light, which she moved up and down, thus giving the regulation danger signal. As the train advanced she seemed to recede, moving swiftly up the track with a gliding motion, and always keeping the same distance ahead of the engine. I looked across the cab at Scotty. He was looking at me intently, with an expression such as I had never seen on mortal face before. I was the first to break the silence.

"Do you see Bessie?" said I.

"Do you?" was his reply.

"Yes; and she is waving a danger signal."

"Shall I stop the train?"

"Yes, at the bridge," I replied. "That is where the trouble is."

Scotty let the train run along till within two hundred yards of the bridge, when he applied the brakes, and at the distance of one hundred feet from it we came to a standstill. Bessie and her danger signal had continued in advance of us, and now she seemed to be standing in the portal of the bridge which spanned the swollen stream. The rays of the headlight revealed the bridge standing in seeming security, while on all sides there was a foaming sea of seething waters rushing madly against the embankment of the railroad and under the bridge.

"Shall we try to cross?" said Scotty.

It was now my turn to be superstitious. "No," I replied; "it will be certain death. Do you not still see Bessie standing at the entrance of the bridge with her danger signal in hand?"

"Yes."

Just as he uttered that monosyllable we heard a crash, and looking quickly ahead, saw the massive structure go dashing into the foaming torrent below.

But neither Bessie nor her light were there when we looked again. She had performed her mission. She had come back from the other world to save her lover's life.

* * * * *

Years have passed by since that memorable year of my apprenticeship, but the events of those few short months are indelibly stamped upon the tablets of my memory. I am now at liberty to reveal them to the world, for Scotty has crossed that silver bridge called Death, which spans from mortal life to life immortal, and who shall say that he and his beloved Bessie are not again united in that purer, holier, and far more blessed existence which we all hope to find among the Islands of the Blessed, in the Summer Land of Eternal Love!

NAPA, August, 1882.

Doctor Siemens calculates that the present annual yield of all the coal mines of the earth would suffice to keep up the fire of the sun, at its present intensity of light and heat, for about the forty millionth part of a second.

Upon a house at the corner of the Rue des Jardins, St. Paul, and the Quais des Celestins, Paris, has just been placed a marble tablet, with the inscription: "François Abelais est mort dans cette maison en 1553."

THE MADDENED QUILL-DRIVER.

A Nocturne in B Flat, by Burdette.

Night brooded over the scene—a habit that night has between the hours of sunset and sunrise. During those hours the sun rarely shines in our latitude, and night has everything its own way, with a clear field to itself.

Godfrey Stiehlpen sat at his table in the sanctum of the Morning Jamboree, his idle pencil in his listless fingers, and his aching head resting upon one weary hand. The solitary bell in a distant steeple had just tolled 1:00 A. M. There was a famine of copy on the hook, and the echoes of the clamors of inappreciable compositors came nimbly in ghostly cadences down the speaking-tube, and once the sarcastic tones of the foreman's voice penetrated the dismal sanctum, conveying to Mr. Stiehlpen the entirely superfluous information that this "was not an afternoon paper," and furthermore that he "would like to go to press before the men went to dinner." Mr. Stiehlpen sighed heavily, and in an abstracted manner turned over the closely written pages of his note-book.

For twenty-two years he had sat at that table and praised everything that ever came within fifty miles of Shawneetown. Horses, bird-dogs, new houses, minstrel troupes, new goods, lectures, eminent citizens, big radishes, tall corn, long jumps, speeches, brass bands, imported cows, fine waltzers, new road-wagons, fancy gates, concerts, fairs, hops, and debating societies. He had noted the uprising of the eminent citizen, and observed his lying down; he watched his coming and going, and to-night he was weary. He had written up two speeches, a social hop, a nine-hundred-dollar horse, an imported pig, a new fence, a big egg, a seventeen-pound tumor, a lecture, and here was a concert to be written up. He knew what a delicate matter this was. He knew that were waited upon his footsteps if he failed to notice each performer at length and in perfect detail. Wrath and denunciations hovered above his head, ready to fall in one destroying deluge if he said anybody sang or played better than anybody else. How could he meet the father of the young lady who wore the most expensive dress on the stage, and yet get a notice four lines shorter than the shoemaker's daughter, who had nothing in the world but her voice to commend her at all to public notice? How could he look Miss Upperceca in the face when in his description of her exquisite rendition of "Monastery Bells" he forgot, or perhaps with malice aforethought intentionally omitted, to mention the cost of her diamonds? He sighed as he remembered how often he had been through all this, and here it was one o'clock in the morning, his hand was tired and his head ached, and the notes of his one hundred and eleventh concert were still echoing in his brain, and were waiting on the pages of his own note-book for his own transcription.

He rose, and dragged from its dusty shelf an old bound volume of the Jamboree, looked over some of his old reports, with a view of changing the dates and names, and using them over, to save time and trouble, as he had often done before. But his head was heavy, and the concert of the previous evening differed in so many respects from all its predecessors that he was forced to abandon his labor-saving scheme, so dear to the heart of the ambitious and painstaking reporter.

"I have praised people for twenty-two years," he muttered, again seating himself at his table, "and I am tired of it. I am not in the praising humor to-night, I sigh for something new. My longing soul aspires to originality. I had rather abuse a man a column than puff him ten lines. I will write up these notes in a style that will have, at least, the merit of originality, and will please everybody who doesn't find his name in the paper to-morrow."

His pencil flew over the sheets of paper like a walking match; the sarcastic utterance of the foreman ceased, the distant clamor of the intelligent compositors was hushed, and only now and then the muffled groans that came sadly down the speaking-tube told that some printer was endeavoring to decide whether a blot, a long waving line, two dots, and a dash was "commencement," "community," "incineration," or "emancipation." Mr. Stiehlpen laughed boarsely as he heard the groans.

"How for copy, will you?" he chuckled defiantly. "I'll give you copy that will make your hearts ache."

And he wrote more wildly than ever, and only said, "Ha, ha!" when word came that the distracted proof-reader in the next room had hanged himself.

* * * * *

Next morning, while Godfrey Stiehlpen slept, the Jamboree was opened at a thousand happy breakfast tables, and joy was turned into mourning as, amid weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, the first thing the subscribers read was as follows:

A PHANTOM HOSS.—Ben Harrigan came all the way to our office last evening to tell us that he had just received an imported invertebrate thoroughbred from England, a magnificent stepper, with a record of 2:25, that cost him nine hundred dollars. Warnock, at whose stables this matchless wonder is housed, informs us that it is a Maxall County horse, seventeen years old, and worth about twenty dollars for lady's driving. It seems to us Harrigan lies worse as he draws nearer the grave.

After this came the annexed paragraph:

CHEAP PIG.—Farmer Thistlepod dragged us seven blocks through the scorching sun yesterday down to a freight depot to see his new two-hundred-dollar imported pig. Marshall Henry afterward told us that it was a pig that had been in pound for three weeks, and Thistlepod only paid two dollars for it. It is of the genuine prairie-schooner breed, with a snout thirty-eight inches long, and can jump a stake-and-rider fence without touching a hoof. Thistlepod has always been notorious for keeping miserable stock.

The usual eulogistic "personal" paragraph was supplanted by the following:

PERSONAL.—Old Archie McIntosh left town last evening to the great delight of all his acquaintances—he has no friends—for a trip to Mud Lake. He left a note for us, stating that he was going for his health. This means a two-weeks' drunk. We wonder who lent him enough money to get out of town?

But the crowning glory of the Morning Jamboree was the concert notice. It read as follows:

GRAND CONCERT.—The regular annual exhibition of good clothes and bad music, that has grown to be a feature of the musical world in Shawneetown, came off last evening at the Opera House. Every seat in the hall was taken, for our patient community has become accustomed to this affliction, and submits to it without a murmur four or five times a year, very much as they take quinine in the spring.

Those people who came stamping in late, as usual, after the Shawneetown style, are to be congratulated this time, as they escaped hearing the "Arion Quartette" sing "Here in Cool Grot." It is due to the "Arion Quartette," however, to say this was not the worst singing of the evening. The audience thought it certainly would be the worst; and so, indeed, it was, until later in the evening the same quartette butchered "Come Where my Love Lies Dreaming." It was dreadful beyond description, and the deafening applause which followed it only testified the great joy of the audience, on being assured that the "Arion Quartette" would sing no more that evening.

Miss Abigail McGinness rendered a recitative and aria, by Cappel, in the manner that has long ago become so sadly familiar to our suffering people, and is always a source of profound embarrassment to the accompanist, who floundered along last night in the patient but vain hope of getting even with the singer somewhere by scrambling across lots, and heading her off in some unusually prolonged run. But this was impossible, and singer and accompanist were never within six bars of each other during the whole of the alleged performance. Mr. Poundaway, the time-honored accompanist in all these affairs, by the way, did even worse than usual last evening. We are pained to notice that his habit of playing on the edge of the piano, two inches away from his keys, grows upon him, and he should either change his drinks or his vocation.

Mrs. Bangalon played "Monastery Bells," as usual. It was disguised under a French name in the programme; but every one knows what is coming after Mrs. Bangalon finally gets the piano moved into precisely the right place—which is always just where it stood before she had it moved the first time—and, after seating herself for the fiftieth time, finally concludes to remain seated. Mrs. Bangalon's unvarying habit of wearing her gloves to the piano, and occupying seven minutes in removing them, is not an affection. It is an act of mercy, and gives the people nearest the door an opportunity to slip out before she begins to play. The reporters of the city press used to go out at this time; but since Bangalon has taken to standing at the door to watch the refugees, they have, with excellent taste and better judgment, abandoned the custom, and silently swallowed their full cup of misery. As Mrs. Bangalon left the stage, Joab Grabey, who was asleep in the gallery, fell off his chair, and, mistaking the need for an encore, Mrs. Bangalon returned, and pounded out the "Maiden's Prayer." Somebody ought to kill that man Grabey.

"Professor" Sownpost played a violin solo—De Beriot's "Seventh Air." Everybody was grateful that he didn't try the eighth. The professor dresses like a waiter, and handles a fiddle like a graduate from a side-show. He is in great demand at all the dances down at Wyseker's Branch and the Sassafras Bottoms, and it is believed, in fact, that all his musical education was acquired at Dan Boleman's store, at the old ford, on Clymer's Creek. He is trying to get up a class in this city, and if this man attempts to teach our boys to play the fiddle as he does, he ought to be lynched. And he will be, if the Jamboree has any influence in musical circles.

It was as good as a circus to hear Madame Parapluie sing "Robert, toi que j'aime." If the old lady's lungs were as big as her feet she might sing more and wheeze less. As it is, candor compels us to say that a case of asthma weighing two hundred and seventeen pounds is no artistic addition to a concert.

Miss Upperceca played the same old "Improvisation" she began playing in these concerts eighteen years ago. It lasts about as well as her diamonds, and changes about as little. It is time she had it published, and improvised something new.

Jim Thurlow came out and sang his unchanging "Ah, so fair." The agony of the audience during this time of trial was fairly insupportable. His high notes are greatly admired, because his voice always breaks into a thin falsetto squeak on them, and he can't make so much noise as he can on his chest tones. If Jim had been born dumb, or his audience deaf, the world would be that much happier. Some time he will go away from home and sing, and the judge will give him sixty days for it. Still this would not be at all extravagant. His singing is worth it; every day of it.

The only excuse for putting Miss Maltby on the programme every time there is a concert in Shawneetown is that her father is worth eighty thousand dollars and owns the biggest brewery in Lowell County. With a voice, musical education, and general ability about up to the grade of "Baby Mine," she sang her old stand-by last night, the "Spinning-wheel Song" from "Faust." If Marguerite could have sung it as Miss Maltby sang it, it would have saved the poor child a world of trouble. It would have scared Faust, Mephistopheles, and the whole gang of them out of the country. There is more music in Mr. Maltby's bung-starters than there is in his daughter. Much has heretofore been said in these columns about Miss Maltby's beauty. While the spirit of truth is upon us we are free to admit that she is pretty—in the dark.

Mr. Bellows sang "Oh, ye Tears." Mr. Bellows has a rich baritone voice—a wheelbarrow tone, that is. Unfortunately for his effort last evening, nobody knew he was singing until he finished the butchery of Art and bowed himself off the stage. Everybody thought he was just trying his voice. If ever his voice is tried, it will be convicted on its own evidence.

James H. Blowson and Elbert Hafut sang "Larboard Watch." It is a great pity these young men are not aware that their mouths were made to catch flies with rather than for singing. Hafut's voice is so like a fog-horn that he may be pardoned for a tendency to sing marine songs; but aside from a plea of natural depravity and fiendish misanthropy there is no excuse whatever for Blowson's attempting to sing in public. These misguided young men were down on the programme for a second atrocity, but it was omitted at the urgent request of the audience.

The piano used at this massacre was the same jingling old harpsichord from the music store of Jingle & Co. that has appeared for a free puff at all local outrages of a musical nature for the past twenty years. Last winter this enterprising house traded off the old dulcimer for a silver watch; but the man who got the alleged piano dulcimer back, paid seven dollars forfeit, and got his watch, and we suppose all future concerts in Shawneetown will be haunted by this venerable nightmare until the police interfere.

Our readers will be delighted to learn that this is the last concert of the season, and a man can go to the Opera House in safety for the next six months.

The receipts of the pandemonium were four hundred and thirty dollars, and old Hardwick, proprietor of the hall, with his accustomed rapacity, gobbled nearly one-fourth of that sum for the use of an old barn that looks shabby in comparison with a second-rate market-house. Six of the thickest-skinned young men in Shawneetown, in borrowed dress-coats, acted as ushers, and acted most wretchedly at that. Taken altogether, it was the dreariest occasion that has bored a long-suffering community since the concert that preceded it.

* * * * *

At the office of the Jamboree people waited for Mr. Stiehlpen, but he did not come. As the day wore away men sought him at his lodgings, but he was not there. All that the ticket-agent at the railway station could tell was that when he bought his ticket for San Antonio, Texas, Mr. Stiehlpen stated that he had been appointed United States Minister to that port, and had been ordered to proceed thither and enter upon his duties at once, and that in all likelihood he would not return to this country until the Peruvian troubles were all settled.

They never saw him again. But long, long after he disappeared, mocking but anonymous postal-cards used to come to the members of the "Mendelssohn Chorus Society of Shawneetown," asking them to sing him something easy. And oft as they read them, the vocalists checked a rising sigh, and as they thought of the absent reporter wished that, wherever he was, the earth might open and swallow him up.

—Hawkeye.

THE PRINCE AT THE SEASIDE.

Our English Correspondent Describes a Royal Merry-making.

Among the various places which, after the London season is over, claim the presence of fashionable society, Cowes is perhaps entitled to the post of honor. Its season of gaiety is, however, but short-lived. It begins with the first days of August and lasts just two weeks. Thus can those who wish to be potting the grouse on the twelfth manage to snatch ten days of sea breeze aboard their own or their friends' yachts, before planting their feet among the Scotch heather. Of course, lots of people stay here longer, but the swing and dash of August's first fortnight fly away with the yachts that take wing for Trouville, Deauville, Cberbourg, and other French ports. The Prince and Princess of Wales always "do" Cowes, as a regular thing, every year, and not infrequently remain longer than many others of lesser rank, notwithstanding that Birkhall, his own shooting quarters in Scotland, as well as those of Aberfeldie and Balmoral, await the prince's coming with many an impatient gun of his own set. I may as well say just here, for every body may not know it, that Cowes is the chief town of the Isle of Wight, situated (about three hours and a half from London by rail and boat) on the banks of Southampton Water, at the mouth of the Medina River, and eleven miles from Southampton. It is noted, industrially, for its yacht building, and, fashionably, as the marine residence of the Queen, and the headquarters of the Royal Yacht Squadron, of which the Prince of Wales is commodore. Osborne House, the royal abode, is at East Cowes, and the club-house of the Yacht Squadron at West Cowes, the river dividing the two parts. The sheltered water between the East and West points, dotted as it is when the season is on by dozens of yachts, from a ten-tonner yawl up to a two-hundred-ton steam yacht, is a sight to behold.

This year the Prince of Wales, with the princess, and his two sons, who have just got home from their two-years' cruise round the world, has been staying on board his yacht, the Alix, and the attendance of yachts during his stay has been very large. The Cornelia, belonging to the Marquis of Londonderry, who is the vice-commodore of the squadron; the Ellida, Sir George Stanley; the Northumbria, which was built for the scapegrace Earl of Lonsdale, but now belongs to the Duke of Bedford; the Heralda, owned by the Marquis of Stafford (the Duke of Sutherland's eldest son); and the Petrel, Lord Richard Grosvenor, are the most noticeable among the swell element, while the snobs have been represented by the Shiela of Mr. Taylor-Blump, and the Norman of Sir Thomas Brassy. However, the snobs are usually in the minority at Cowes, to its credit be it spoken. The honor of keeping them within bounds naturally devolves upon the members of the yacht club, who of late have been doing such an unmerciful amount of black-balling that the Brown-Joneses and the Jones-Browns are beginning to realize in a small way—that they seem of late to have forgotten—that money isn't everything, and that because a man happens to own a yacht, which in nine cases out of ten he doesn't in the least know how to sail, it is no reason that he is a fit associate for gentlemen.

But the snobs are not always rebuffed; for, if they can not get into society themselves, they endeavor to work their sons in, by sending them to either Eton or Harrow. Of those two great public schools, it is difficult to decide which may take the higher rank. I do not mean in a scholastic sense, for both have sent great men into the world of literature, politics, and arms—Eton boasting of the Duke of Wellington, Gladstone, and Swinburne, while Harrow claims Byron and Lord Palmerston—but in a fashionable aspect. Harrow is unquestionably the most "gentleman-like" school, and Eton the "swellest." The boys at Harrow are more generally the sons of dignified non-political noblemen and quiet country squires of large estates, old family, and exclusive ways; while to Eton, with a goodly admixture of young dukes, marquises, and earls, either in presenti or futuro, go the offspring of the wealthy snobs and parvenus, whose fathers think more of the titled acquaintance their sons will make than anything else, and keep them handsomely supplied with the requisite cash to make a show, and buy the good-will of their blue-blooded school-fellows. Baron Reuter, the great telegraph cable potentate, whose hereditary rights of castle and demesne in England are about as aerial as those constructed by the most persistent day-dreamer, allows his son at Eton a thousand pounds a year for pocket-money. It is a dreadful pity that things should be so, and the purity and freshness of youth be thus sullied by the sordid influences of gold; but old Etonians, whose time goes back to the days of "Montem," though loth to admit the fact, will tell you that the snobs and nouveaux riches have spoiled the old school with their vulgarity and money. That the snobs get on, there is no doubt; as an illustration of which, it may be remarked that the last "eleven," which included the young Lords Throwby and Curzon and the sons of the Earl of Harewood and Lord Brabourne, had for its captain the son of a wealthy Bond Street pastrycook named Smith, who, however, for obvious reasons adopted during his scholastic course the more high-sounding cognomen of De Paravicini.

People are supposed to come to Cowes to recuperate after the wear and tear of the season in town, but those who are in the swim don't get much chance to rest, save and except by a sail over to Netley Hospital, or past Calshot Castle, and out to the Needles and back, now and then. What with dinner parties, boat races, regattas, and balls, one is just as much on the go, mentally and physically, from morning till night and night till morning, as if in town at the top of the season, and all one can claim in a hygienic sense is the saline tonic of the atmosphere. So, whoever wants yachting pure and simple, let him keep away from Cowes until after the middle of August. Among the foreign nationalities represented here this season, the palm seems to have been carried off by America—Miss Chamberlain and Mrs. George Ben-tinck (whose sister is, I believe, married to Mr. Mills, of San Francisco) being among those who have attracted the most attention, the two ladies during their stay having, in the opinion of on-lookers, been running neck and neck as regards dress.

One of the chief events of the Cowes season is the hall given by the Royal Yacht Squadron. The club-house not being large enough for an entertainment of the sort, the ball was given this year at Northwood House, the residence of Mr. Ward, one of the members of the club. Of course the Hungarian Band played, and the decorations of flowers, flags, and colored lights mingled gayly with the toilettes of the ladies, and the blue coats, white waistcoats, and R. Y. S. monogrammed brass buttons of the yacht club members, the latter being the style of dress introduced by the Prince of Wales. A large marquee, above which floated the royal standard, covered the eastern terrace, and was the favorite resort of heated dancers in quest of ices and champagne cup, the night being more than usually warm. The Prince and Princess of Wales came early (about eleven) and stayed late—that is to say, the Prince did, letting his wife go home alone (not an unusual thing with His Royal Highness). It is curious how fond he still is of dancing. He never, by any possible chance, misses a valse, that being his favorite dance; for which reason does it always predominate on London ball programmes in the ratio of at least three to one of all the other dances combined. With all the practice he has had—for he has been out since he was seventeen—it is strange that he should be a bad dancer. Yet he is. A little, short, hoppy-skippy step he has, that sends him spinning round like a badly balanced teetotum, with a velocity that would make one's head swim to merely look at. He likewise gets very hot and out of breath, and his collars grow limp early in the evening. As to his "steering" powers, it is quite impossible to judge, for when he dances everybody gets carefully out of his way, and lets him have the floor to himself. One mustn't jostle royalty, you know, even in a dance. He danced with Miss Chamberlain, and seemed to like it so much that he asked her two or three times more. The last time, it is said, she unconsciously committed a breach of court etiquette in telling him her programme was full, for no engagement ever holds good against the Prince. He was greatly amused at it, I hear. Aside from the honor, I dare say she didn't fancy him overmuch as a partner, for, besides his other deficiencies, he never reverses, and I can imagine what that must be to an American girl. Miss Chamberlain was dressed in white, and many were the inquiries as to her dot—that, I am afraid, being a greater recommendation than beauty, accomplishments, dress, or vivacious manners, in the eyes of the "titles," among whom, it is more than evident, her mamma and her friend and chaperon, Mrs. Minnie Stevens Paget, are desirous of finding her a husband.

Miss Worke, of New York, is another reputed American beirress at Cowes. She was in England the year before last, where her beauty was much raved over as second only to that of Mrs. Langtry, and where rumor had her engaged to Lord Foley's brother. She seems, however, to be still "in maiden meditation, fancy free." The fortnight's gaiety has not been unruffled by the usual matrimonial scandal so often incident to the gatherings of the haut ton. A certain young gentleman, the happy possessor of large estates, productive mines, and some of the best shooting in Wales, and upon whose person and possessions more than one daughter-hampered mamma had cast hopeful glances, has gone and eloped with a lady of title, whose beauty and position are, however, rather unfortunately handicapped by the fact that she is another man's wife. COCKAIGNE.

COWES, ISLE OF WIGHT, August 21, 1882.

There are now, says a writer in the Century, twelve first-class lines of steam-packets plying between New York and Europe, beside a number of lines running to Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New Orleans, and not including a number of inferior lines whose name is legion, nor the other American coasting steamers extending as far as the Gulf of Mexico. Although the majority of these vessels are foreign in construction and ownership, the American who has seen no other part of the seas but the North Atlantic may be led to the conclusion that the steamship traffic of the world centres on the great circle between Queenstown and New York, and that no other fine steamers exist elsewhere. He could not make a greater mistake. Starting either from London or Liverpool and proceeding southward toward Gibraltar, one is astonished at the number of steamers he encounters. Across the Bay of Biscay they reach to the West Indies and Brazil, down the coast of Africa to the Cape of Good Hope or around the Horn, among the islands of the South Sea; or plowing through the Straits of Gibraltar and Suez, they reach to Mauritius and Bombay, Calcutta and Hongkong. Never has there been any such ownership of shipping in the United States like that of these English, French, and Italian lines. The Peninsular and Oriental Company, (the first line to adopt the screw,) Lamport and Holt's line to South America, the Wilson line from Hull, the Cunard and Anchor lines, (whose North Atlantic service is but a tithe of the vast trade they carry on with the Mediterranean and the East Indies), the Moss Steamship Company, the Rubattino line, the Messageries Maritimes—these are but a few of the host of lines which own ships by the score and the hundred. The imagination is further bewildered in considering the vast lines plying in distant seas, and never heard of in this country. There is the British India Steam Navigation Company, owning over fifty steamers, which ply between Singapore, Persia, and Zanzibar, and are manned by tawny lascars; and the Netherlands Steam Navigation Company, which maintains thirty steamers in the Indian Archipelago. Then there is a Chinese line, succeeding one established by an American company, and a Japanese company, whose steamships ply exclusively among the Japanese islands. Running from San Francisco are the Pacific Mail, the Occidental and Oriental, the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, the Goodall, Nelson & Perkins coast line, and the new Sandwich Islands line.

Doctor Gaetano Pini, of Milan, has been recently engaged in cremating the body of a Frenchman, Monsieur St. Cyr Julien, whose brother is a Consul in England. The cremating process in the Milan furnace took two hours, and four hours more were necessary for cooling the ashes; among them could be still discerned some fragments of bone and the teeth. The whole of these remains were placed in an urn of large dimensions, which was immediately packed and sent, per rail, to the widow in Paris. The cost of the cremating process came to fifty dollars. The expense for the conveyance of the body from Paris to Milan amounted to twelve hundred dollars.

THE LITTLE DAUPHIN'S DEATH.

By Alphonse Daudet.

The little dauphin is sick, the little dauphin is about to die. In all the churches of the kingdom the holy sacrament is exposed night and day, and great wax candles are being burned for the recovery of the royal child. The streets of the old residence are silent and sad; the bells do not ring; passing carriages move slowly—the coachmen keep their horses at a walk; outside the palace curious citizens watch from behind the railings the great Swiss guards with gold-laced paunches in the court-yards, talking together with a most serious mien.

The château is all emotion. Chamberlains and majordomos ascend and descend the marble stairways at a run. The galleries are thronged with pages and courtiers in silken attire, who go by turns from one whispering group to another, asking for news in an undertone. Upon the broad steps the forlorn ladies of honor make low courtesies, wiping their eyes with prettily embroidered handkerchiefs.

In the orangerie there is a large meeting of robed physicians. Through the windows they can be seen extending and moving their long, black sleeves, and doctorally nodding their periwigs. Before the door the little dauphin's tutor and riding-master walk slowly to and fro, waiting for the decision of the faculty. Scullions pass by without saluting them. Monsieur the ring-master swears like a pagan; monsieur the tutor quotes verses from Horace; and from the direction of the stables, far off, comes a long, melancholy neigh. It is the dauphin's chestnut pony, forgotten by the grooms, calling plaintively from before his empty manger.

And the king? Where is the king? The king has shut himself up alone in his rooms, at the other end of the château. Their majesties do not like to be seen weeping. As for the queen, it is quite another matter. Seated beside the pillow of the little dauphin, she weeps so that her beautiful face is bathed in tears; and she sobs aloud before everybody, like a common draper's wife.

On his couch of lace the little dauphin, whiter than the cushions upon which he lies, reposes with closed eyes. They think he slumbers; but no, the little dauphin does not slumber. He turns toward his mother, and, seeing that she weeps, he says to her: "Madame the Queen, why do you cry? Do you really believe, like the rest, that I am going to die?" The queen would answer, but her sobs prevent her from speaking.

"Now, do not weep, Madame the Queen; you forget that I am a dauphin, and that a dauphin does not die thus." But the queen sobs more passionately than ever; and the little dauphin becomes really afraid for the first time. "Ho! there!" he cries; "I will not permit Death to take me away; and I know well how to prevent his coming hither. Order forty very strong lansquenets to come here at once, to mount guard about my bed. Let a hundred heavy cannon be rolled into the court under our windows; and let the gunners stand by them, night and day, with matches lighted! And woe to Death if he dare to come near us!"

Then, in order to please the royal child, the queen makes a sign. And in a moment is heard the rumbling of the heavy cannon rolling into the vast court, and forty tall lansquenets, armed with partisans, range themselves all about the room. They are all veteran troopers, with gray moustaches. The little dauphin clasps his hands when he sees them. He recognizes one, and calls him, "Lorrain! Lorrain!" The veteran makes one stride toward the bed. "I love you very much, my dear old Lorrain. Show me your great big sword. If Death tries to take me he must be killed, must he not?" Lorrain answers, "Yes, Monseigneur." But two large tears trickle down his bronzed cheeks.

Suddenly the chaplain approaches the little dauphin's bedside, and commences to talk to him in a very, very low voice, and shows him a crucifix. The little dauphin listens to him a while with a very astonished look; then, suddenly interrupting him, exclaims: "I understand very well all that you tell me, Monsieur l'Abbé; but pray inform me could not my little friend Beppo be induced to die in my place, supposing they give him plenty of money?" The chaplain continues to speak in a very low voice, and the little dauphin looks more astonished than before.

When the chaplain has finished, the little dauphin responds with a deep sigh: "All this that you have told me is very sad, indeed, Monsieur l'Abbé; but one thing consoles me. I know that on high, in the paradise of the stars, I shall still be the dauphin. I know that the good God is my cousin, and that He can not fail to treat me according to my rank." Then, turning to his mother, he says: "Order them to bring me my finest clothes—my doublet of ermine, and my velvet shoes; I wish to appear bravely dressed before the angels, and enter Paradise in the costume of the dauphin." Yet a third time the chaplain bends forward, and, leaning over the little dauphin, whispers to him for a long time. In the midst of his discourse the royal child interrupts him with a cry of anger: "Why, then, to be dauphin is nothing at all!" And, refusing to listen any more, the little dauphin turns his face to the wall.

But he does not turn away from the wall. For the little dauphin is dead.—Translated from the French by Lafcadio Hearn.

"The weather in Paris," says the correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, "has been very warm for the past few days, culminating in a thunderstorm of unwonted magnitude. A lofty tree in the garden of the Palace of the Ellysée was struck and completely stripped of its bark. I am told that the guardian of the Column Vendôme recently discovered half-a-dozen penknives and pairs of scissors stuck about the railings around the summit, and artfully disseminated behind the bars. The intent of the unknown perpetrator of this very odd deed is supposed to have been to attract the lightning to that monument to the fame of Napoleon."

"Is your master in?" asks a visitor of the servant man about town, a treasure of honesty and truthfulness from the country. "He is, but he can not see any of 'em." "Ah! Is he sick? Nothing serious, I hope?" "He's drunk!"

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We remember the Reverend H. Cummings in the early days of the Republican party. "Father Cummings of Butte," we called him in those olden times. He was of the old guard, contemporary with Tracey, Tingley, E. B. Crocker, Frank Folger, Leland Stanford, and Rod Matherson; before Colonel Baker came into the party, before Starr King came to the State, before Estee was heard of, or the machine had been invented. We hear of him again in consultation with the reverend clergy of San Francisco, in consultation over the Sunday law. He is still a Republican. At the assembling were the Reverends H. L. Chamberlain, Edward Kimball, J. H. Warren, Aaron Williams, M. Ballard, Doctor Beckwith, Professor Burton, Colonel Babcock, Doctor McDonald, J. W. Mason, and Mr. Van Larcum. The Reverend Mr. Cummings, with the approval of these clergymen and laymen, said:

All important questions should be decided by the dictates of one's conscience. I consider that if Christian people should vote the Republican ticket they would cast their ballots in favor of making the Sabbath a day of recreation, which means a day of amusement, of dancing, of base-ball playing, and not of worship to God. The Republican Convention evidently meant that Sunday should be spent in that way, and we should encourage the desecration of God's day if we voted for candidates who have pledged themselves to make the Sabbath a day of recreation. We can be true to our country and to God at all times, but we can not at all times be true to God and political parties. I have been a Republican for forty years, and I do not wish to abandon the party, but I have been forced from its ranks and crowded from the party because the party has truckled to corrupt men and made room for recreants and recreation. How can we hereafter appeal to the masses to keep holy the Sabbath day if we deliberately endorse this platform which bids them go to the billiard and dance-hall on the Sabbath and seek enjoyment. Will they not respond that we have sanctioned the course they pursue; that by our votes we declared Sunday to be no better day than any other in the week? Like Samson, we will be shorn of our strength, we shall be powerless and dumb. We must cease to do evil and learn to do well. As we can not vote the Democratic ticket without voting to sweep from our statute books all Sunday laws to protect ourselves, our homes, and our churches, at the behest of the League of Freedom, alias the liquor-dealers, alias the foreign whisky-bloats and beer-guzzlers; as we can not vote the Republican ticket giving unhindered license to Sunday desecration, we have but one course to pursue—to unite with the Home Protectionists and temperance organizations, call a State convention, make a platform, stand upon it, unfurl our banner, and rally around it until the needed reform is accomplished.

Colonel Babcock expressed great disappointment at the action of the convention in totally ignoring the temperance question. He considered that the Sunday-law plank, in making the Sabbath-day one of recreation, and favoring the suspension of all but necessary business, virtually threw open the doors of saloons and dance-houses, as the courts would undoubtedly declare that these places were necessary to provide amusement. Reverend Doctor Beckwith said that the convention was asked for bread and gave a stone. He thought it might be a good thing to defeat the Republican party at the coming election, as there was no real moral question now at issue between the two parties, as they had refused to accept the Sunday and temperance questions as momentous. The only issue seems to be, How can they obtain votes?

Doctor May exhibits colossal cheek when, in his Sixth Ward Club, he protests against the machine in the County Committee. If the machine has, or ever had, a subservient, pliant, willing, and unscrupulous tool, it is this same Doctor May. For him to call the majority of the County Committee the machine, and stigmatize it because it refuses to subject honest Republicans to a dishonest primary, will deceive nobody. The County Committee has taken an honest and manly course in appointing a municipal convention in such a manner and so large in numbers that all the presumptions will favor honest work. It will be sustained by every citizen who desires good government.

Some time since the Argonaut endeavored to give the true standard by which the gentleman could be measured. It is not birth, for there are well-born vagabonds. It is not brains, for there are talented rascals. It is not education, for there are bad specimens who come from learned universities. It is not money, for there are very many vulgar rich men. It is not in vocation, for neither pulpit nor bar are exempt from the morally ragged. Our definition of a gentleman was one who owned one or more Jersey cows. To own and breed Jerseys of pure blood presumes taste, ownership of land, independence, a good liver, good birth, education, and breeding. We quote from Harper's Weekly in support of our position:

To be unappreciative of the beauty of a pure Jersey cow is to be entirely wanting in bovine aesthetics. What peculiar characteristics are engendered by an over-familiarity with horses no one is exactly prepared to state, but a thorough acquaintance with a herd of Jerseys—to borrow from a well-known saying—is to have quite the equivalent to a liberal education. In what animal—the doe not excepted—can you find such deep, quiet, placid eyes as in a Jersey cow? There is not an angular line about her. Her clean, trim head shows her blood, and altogether she is to another cow what the sculptured steed on the Parthenon is to the common horse. Then nature has given to this breed soft, subdued tints of fawn, which fade away into a creamy white. The general appreciation of the cow, to which is approvingly added in our horn-books the term of "useful," generally conveys the idea of a certain ungainliness and awkwardness, but in the Jerseys there is suppleness of movement with elegance of gait. When Erotas, Bomba, Lille Bonne, or Phyllis walks, you see at once the aristocracy of race. But beyond grace, elegance, gentleness, docility, and rapid growth, there are other important attributes. Jersey cows are the most marvelous of those animal converters which, taking in the succulent materials in the grasses and grains, the sugars and the starches, change these into fats. There may be wonderful cows which will give a larger fluid measure of milk, but it is the lacteal secretion of the Jersey that literally "runs butter."

The Camerons—father and son—have cursed the politics of Pennsylvania for twenty years. Like the Old Man of the Mountain, they had fastened themselves upon the neck of the Republican party. There was no office, no honor, no contract within the party gift, that the Camerons did not make merchandise of. We have had a similar, but smaller and dirtier, machine in San Francisco for the last twenty years. The Bulletin compares the Cameron ring in Pennsylvania to that class in San Francisco which is endeavoring to break up our machine. The Bulletin is like Mrs. Gamp with an imaginary Mrs. Harris, and continually writes of "bosses" who are in opposition to the only bosses we have; writes of "cliques" in opposition to the machine; writes of primaries as expressing the will of Republicans in opposition to fraud; writes of the seventy-three delegates to the State Convention, who went for Estee, as representing decency and civilization. The length, breadth, depth, thickness, and circumference of all this journalistic rot is the fact that Higgins and his machine are at outs with Spring Valley. The Bulletin is at outs with Sharon and Hayward, and the Bulletin and the machine have become as thick as thieves. They are sleeping in the same bed. They are working together for another primary, for more pledges against free water, and for another opportunity to "cinch" the water company. Both machine and journal are engaged in a knavish business; but the machine is the more respectable bandit of the two, because it does not claim to be respectable. The Bulletin is embarrassed by its traditions.

Kearney gets in upon the silver-tongued Thomas of Arizona a very palpable hit. The Honorable Tom "accepted a retainer" to stump the State for Estee. He opened at Platt's Hall against Stanford, Crocker, and Huntington as the "moss-covered triumvirate of latter-day tyrants," and roundly abused them for extravagant freights in transporting early strawberries and other fruits from Arizona to Los Angeles, and for refusing him a free pass, and because the road did not employ him as its attorney. Dennis reminds the Honorable Tom of the time when, at Tucson, he gave Crocker a banquet, and sat in smiling sycophancy at his feet, while over his silver tongue in gushing melody of adulation fulsome compliments rippled. Kearney quotes where the eloquent Thomas declared "that of all men he most 'envied Charles Crocker, not for his wealth of millions, but 'for the consciousness which he must ever carry with him 'that he has been one of the most efficient, useful, and important benefactors of humanity in the time in which he 'has lived. I envy him the consciousness that to-day over 'thousands of miles of area tens of thousands of happy and 'contented homes exist because of the great industrial enterprises he has directed and controlled. . . . I envy him 'the thoughts that crowd upon him at this hour, when he 'pauses for one brief retrospective glance across the deserts 'and mountains he has conquered before ordering his iron 'horses—the black cavalry of commerce—to rush forward 'with steam-flecked flanks until they pause panting by the 'side of the Mexican gulf. . . . Our backs are still sore 'from contact with the buck-board and bucking mustangs. 'Our pockets are still depleted from the freight rate of mule 'teamsters and steam navigation companies, and we hail 'with delight the new freight tariffs and the opportunity to 'ride to San Francisco in two days instead of consuming 'ten days by stage and steamer." The Hon. Thomas Fitch of the silver tongue had better hitch one of his black horses of the cavalry of commerce to a buck-board wagon and start for Arizona, carrying his own grip-sack back with him. A good, long, dusty ride across the Colorado Desert, and across the desert of the trans-Colorado, will again put him in a frame of mind to envy the men who brought him here in a palace car, and make him contrast the fares, freights, and comforts of buck-board wagons, bucking horses, steamboats, and stages with the accommodations of railroads, without which Arizona would forever remain an uninhabited and uninhabited desert.

If, through a primary election, there could be obtained an honest expression of Republican voters, nothing would justify a departure from that mode of choosing conventions. If the primary is to be controlled by force and violence, in the interest of dishonest politicians, and for the purpose of dishonest government, then nothing justifies a resort to it. The County Committee is the tribunal to which the discussion of such matters is properly entrusted. It has called one primary, which has proved disastrous; another would be equally unsatisfactory. The committee has acted wisely and well in the mode proposed by it. It will be sustained by all good Republicans. The Bulletin is wrong in this business, and we are sorry that Mr. Higgins has acquired such influence over Mr. Fitch as enables him to direct the politics of that journal in this wrong direction. Ever since the Bulletin opposed Blake for Mayor, favored the machine, and advocated primaries, it has been in the woods. We account for it because we think it has water on the brain. The County Committee is doing brave work, and we applaud its manly independence.

The Evening Bulletin of Wednesday contained the announcement of the death of Miss Clara Fitch as follows:

A private dispatch conveys the sad intelligence of the death of Miss Clara Fitch, the eldest daughter of George K. Fitch, one of the proprietors of the Bulletin, at half-past eight o'clock this morning, at Hotel del Monte, Monterey. Her death was the result of the accidental overturning of a carriage in which she and some friends were riding along the Light House road at Monterey, eight weeks ago. During this long period she has borne the intensest suffering with Christian fortitude. There were times when it seemed reasonable to hope for her ultimate recovery, but within the last forty-eight hours a great change for the worse took place, giving unmistakable evidence of approaching dissolution. She died on the threshold of a promising womanhood, being about twenty-three years of age. She was one of the most amiable, sprightly, and intelligent young women in the city, of a remarkably sweet disposition and bright mind, and one whom none knew except to respect. For a great many years she had been an active worker in the interest of charity, and was prominently identified with several worthy institutions engaged in the relief of the poor and the alleviation of the sufferings of the sick and distressed. A wide circle of friends and acquaintances grieve over her early death, and sympathize with the bereaved parents in their deep affliction.

To-day there will be music in Golden Gate Park. Not merely the twitter of the birds, the sighing of the pines, the merry laughter of visiting children, but the music of a "real, regular band." Gustave Fuchs will conduct twelve pieces through a programme of three parts and sixteen selections. This band has been secured by the exertions of certain music-loving people, who believe they can secure enough money by subscription to have the concerts a regular feature of park pleasure-giving. The Commissioners, while thoroughly in sympathy with the movement, are, unhappily, unable to render substantial pecuniary assistance, save in the purchase of stands for holding music, and in the arrangement and regulation of the building and grounds. It remains to be proved whether the concerts will be "good," both in the artistic and in the popular sense.

SOCIETY.

The Olarovsky Reception.

On Wednesday evening Baron Olarovsky, the Consul-General for Russia, gave a large party at his beautiful Menlo Park house. The guests arrived at the depot about quarter-past eight o'clock, and as they descended from the train, found carriages waiting to bear them to the host's house. When they arrived at their destination they found the large grounds one blaze of brilliancy. Over the portals were the Russian and United States coats-of-arms, above which were draped in union the respective flags of the two countries. Thousands of gay Japanese lanterns decked the spacious grounds. The large carriage-drive which circles the park for three-quarters of a mile, resembled a huge serpent of light, and all the little by-paths and walks in the vicinity of the house were similarly decorated. From the front door down to the carriage drive was erected a tented awning, through which the guests passed into the house. The interior was canvased throughout, above and below, the rooms were tastefully hung with luxurious festoons of smilax, ivy, and other creepers. Ballenberg's band discoursed inviting waltzes from an alcove in the large centre hall, so that the music was easy to be heard throughout the parlors, sitting-room, billiard-room and the other apartments in which the guests danced. Notwithstanding the large number of guests, there was ample space for dancing, owing to the extensive capacity of the rooms. Among those present were: Mrs. and Miss Flood, Miss Felton, Mrs. and Miss Low, Mrs. and Miss Eyre, the Misses Thornton, Madame Niebaum, Miss Spreckels, Miss Couch, Miss Greene, Miss Hughey, Miss Kohler, Miss Thorne, and Messrs. Flood, Hermann, Ackerman, Spreckels, Miner, Hughey, Platt, and Captain Niebaum, Baron Schroeder, and Prince Menschennoff. At half-past eleven o'clock the large banquet hall was thrown open and the guests ushered in. They immediately proceeded to partake of the delicious viands served by the Maison Dorée. After that, dancing was resumed and prolonged to a very late hour—four o'clock witnessing the closing waltz. Those of the guests whom the host was unable to accommodate were received by two or three of his immediate neighbors.

The Vice-Regal Party.

The Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise were received on Wednesday morning at the Sixteenth Street (Oakland) depot by General McDowell, Consul W. L. Booker, Commander Gast, of H. M. S. Comus, Colonel Graniss, General Kelton, and Messrs. Goodman, Pratt, and Wilder, of the C. P. R. R. On their arrival in this city they were borne to the Palace Hotel, where breakfast was served. They remained in retirement for the remainder of the day. On Thursday morning a delegation of British residents presented an address of welcome, which was answered by the Marquis of Lorne in a short speech. In the afternoon General McDowell conveyed the party around the harbor in the McPherson; the princess being indisposed, remained in the hotel. A governor-general's salute was fired from the different military posts in the harbor as the party passed. At Black Point, upon the arrival of the party, the usual salute was fired, and the troops paraded. The distinguished guests were afterward handsomely entertained by General McDowell with a lunch at his quarters. The following persons were present: His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne, Captain Gast of H. M. S. Comus, Consul Booker and Mrs. Booker, Captain and Mrs. Bagot, Colonel Tourtelotte, General Kelton, U. S. A., and Major Darling, the post commander. The princess and her husband were entertained at dinner by General McDowell yesterday evening. The affair was informal. The party was received at the post with the honors due a member of the royal family. Yesterday was spent in retirement, and this morning the party leave on the Comus for British Columbia. On their return the party will accept several invitations from our prominent citizens. Governor Stanford is, it is said, already making preparations for a grand reception. On their visit to Yosemite, they will occupy the dwelling of Albert Bierstadt, the artist, who tendered it to them in the East.

Notes and Gossip.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Stanwood leave to-day for the East, extending their trip as far as New Hampshire, and returning in about six weeks. Miss Nina Platt has been spending a few days at Monterey. General and Mrs. Stoneman have returned to San Gabriel. Colonel Hedges, U. S. A., arrived here from the East on Thursday, the fourteenth instant. Miss Daisy Parrott, accompanied by her mother, leaves on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Judge Hayne, who has been in Colorado for some time, early in October; from that State they will go to New York, and later to Europe. General Williams and his daughter, of Oakland, who have been staying a short time at Monterey, have returned. Mrs. Tewksbury has returned to the city and taken up her residence at the Palace. Justice and Mrs. Field did not leave for Washington last week as was announced. Mrs. George Hearst leaves to-day for Boston with her son, who is about to enter Harvard. Mrs. J. Lugsdin and her daughter, Miss F. E. Lugsdin, and Miss Nellie Wood, are at Monterey. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Barron are also spending a few days at Monterey. Miss Amy Crocker has returned to Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Wilshire and Mrs. Walter Turnbull have been to Monterey during the week. A. P. Hotaling has gone East with his family. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Curry are in Sacramento. Mrs. William Norris will accompany her son, Fritz King, on his return to Harvard College next Monday. Squire P. Dewey and wife are in New York. Judge Messick has returned from his southern trip. Mr. Neville Castle returned to Yale College last week; his cousin, Albert Castle, is visiting Wiesbaden, Germany, for the benefit of the waters. Commodore Shufeldt is still in the city; his health is much improved. Mrs. F. B. Reynolds and her daughter, Miss Jeannette, have returned from Litton Springs, and resumed their Thursday receptions.

Governor Perkins has appointed ex-Governor Leland Stanford Regent of the State University, and Senator W. W. Traylor Fish-Commissioner, both vice B. B. Redding, ceased.

THE MUNICIPAL CONVENTION.

The conflict now going on in the Republican party is big with important results. It is a contest between the very worst element of society and its best. Upon the issue depends good government in San Francisco for the next two years. The question at issue is, whether the criminal element of society and the mercenary element in politics are to climb to the top?—are to rule in office, and hold sway in our municipal affairs? The fight lies between the County Committee and the machine. The machine is something more than Higgins, Gannon, and Chute; it is a wide-spread and compact organization, that embraces in its numbers able, shrewd intellects, and subtle-minded, scheming, ambitious, and altogether unscrupulous men. The treasury of State and city is a great grab-bag, with four million dollars in it; and this machine is an organized conspiracy to steal as much of it as can be spared from the actual and indispensable demands of government. The County Committee is an honest body of respectable Republicans, in which, after years of contest, the machine has hut six unworthy members. The County Committee has proposed a mode of calling together a convention that shall represent Republicans of intelligence, property, and integrity. The machine demands another primary, with all its disgraceful scenes to be reenacted, its shameful results to be accomplished. Every Republican in this city who owns property, who is engaged in a legitimate business, who is intelligent, who is honest, who wants no office for self or friend, no job, nor contract, nor opportunity to steal, and who has taken the pains to investigate the contest between the machine and the County Committee, upholds the sixteen majority. Every daily and weekly, journal, except the Call, (which knows nothing about it, and is a Democratic paper), and the Bulletin, (which is, for some mysterious and to us inexplicable reason, in alliance with the machine, and in continual secret consultation with its leaders,) opposes the machine programme, and favors the more popular and honorable plan of the County Committee. The ward clubs which are now playing the game of bluff in this business are the utensils of the machine. The State Central Committee, with Cornwall, Chute, Hardenbergh, Byington, Dargie, and others, are secretly intriguing in the same direction, and thereby impudently meddling with what does not concern them. These men are all machinists, having served their full terms of apprenticeship under the bosses. These men and their prompters would rather destroy the party in San Francisco than not control it. They are mercenaries who follow the Republican army for plunder. We quote from the Post an editorial well expressing the real condition of affairs, and giving the relation of certain men to the machine and to the city government that it is well to know.

"The action of the County Committee in determining to select a convention of Republicans, all of whom shall be taxpayers, none of whom shall be seekers for office, or pledged in the interests of any candidate, or themselves occupying official positions, or interested in any corporation which might influence their action, is universally commended by the respectable element of the Republican party. The bosses are unalterably opposed to it. The Republican administration during the past year has been free from the control of Higgins, Gannon, and Chute. We all know how oppressive it was during the previous two years, during which time Stuart's extravagant expenditures, the street-sweeping swindle, the Lake Merced fraud, and other outrageous schemes were perpetrated. It is well to consider whence this opposition comes, and to trace it directly to the action of Higgins, Gannon, and Chute, and their small army of official retainers, ward-strikers, and hummers. The plan was carried by a vote of sixteen to five in the County Committee. The five who opposed it were Lewis, Dyer, Perry, Deveny, and Weed. These men are all known to be under the control of the machine. They come, for the most part, from the lower wards of the Tenth district, which has been controlled for years by Higgins, Gannon, and Chute, through the votes of the wards lying near the water front, and composed of a very low element in the community. It is this district which has sent to the Legislature a band of plunderers, who have been associated with every stealing scheme that has appeared in the Legislature. A search of the record of the last Legislature will show that the Débris Bill, and every other scheme in which the lobby was interested was supported by the district named. Mr. Weed is the contractor, under the old Board of Supervisors, for the street-sweeping of San Francisco. He was merely a dummy, and represented Higgins, Gannon, and Chute. The contract-price for sweeping the streets was sixty-three dollars a mile. This has been reduced by the present board to twenty-one dollars a mile, resulting in a saving of between fifty and sixty thousand dollars annually. The street-sweeping is equally well done, if not better. Higgins, Gannon, and Chute are aiming again toward the control of the office of Superintendent of Streets, and Mr. Weed's object is apparent. Certain clubs took action in opposition to the primary last night, which might indicate to the uninitiated that a portion of the Republican party was opposed to the plan adopted by the County Committee; but even here the tracks of the machine are evident. We can plainly see that whenever any opposition has been displayed, whether in the clubs or the County Committee, it originated from the bosses who have so long oppressed and misruled San Francisco, and who were driven out of the Republican party at the last election, and who endeavored to revenge themselves by throwing their entire weight with the Democratic party. They are an incubus to any party, retarding its progress and imperiling its success. Where one vote will be lost to the party through their influence a hundred will be secured from the better element of the opposing party, when it is announced that the policy of the Republican party is against bossism in politics."

It is a pity that the writer of the article could not have been bold enough to have named Dr. May, David McClure, Colonel J. H. Dickinson, Ira C. Hoyt, and their connection with the machine in the last Legislature. The resolutions in the Fifth Ward Club were introduced by David McClure, author of the McClure charter, gotten up in the interest of the machine. The resolution offered by Dr. May provided: "We approve the action of W. H. Weed, the vigilant representative of the Sixth Ward, in opposing the machine movement." Oh, deep and subtle, cute and cunning Dr. May! This good man is opposed to the machine. He is the hopper into which is poured half the unclean grists that are ground out in it. He is the smut-mill, while the Honorable David McClure is the turbine under-shot wheel that drives the machinery. The action of the State Central Committee is also significant. Now we quote from a communication sent us for publication:

"Mr. P. B. Cornwall is the Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Dick Chute is the Chairman of the Campaign Committee. These two worthies have been for years identified with the machine—P. B. Cornwall being the pliant tool, and Dick Chute the active manager. They called together a meeting of certain ward presidents, who were entirely in their own interests, together with a small portion of the County Committee, to pass a resolution condemning the system adopted by the County Committee. We thus see that wherever any opposition has been displayed, whether in the clubs, or in the County Committee, it originated from the bosses, who have so long oppressed and misruled San Francisco, and who were driven out of the Republican party at the last election, and who endeavored to revenge themselves by throwing their entire weight with the Democratic party. They are an incubus to any party, retarding its progress and imperiling its success. Where one vote will be lost to the party through their influence, a hundred will be secured from the better element of the opposing parties, when it is announced that the policy of the Republican party is against bossism in politics."

The machine is on its last legs in San Francisco. It has not even power to harm the party. Let the County Committee go resolutely forward, give us representative, property-owning delegates to a municipal convention. At the convention give us a good ticket, and it will command the support of all reputable and honorable citizens of both parties, and it will drive the Bulletin to its support, or to the alternative of supporting a straight-out Democratic ticket.

One Day.

I sunned myself in happiness all day;
The very earth seemed glad, and smiled to me:
The world, rejoicing, taught my heart to say,
Love, life, and light are all in harmony.

And oh, my love, the glory of that day
Made me forget the setting of the sun,
And, even when the twilight passed away,
I still looked back to when the day begun.

And oh, my sweet, in shadows of the night
I feel a radiance that I can not see;
I still translate the darkness into light,
And in my dreams my day is still with thee.

September, 1882.

SARA JEWETT.

The "click" which some writers have noted as a curiosity in the speech of Cetewayo and his suite, says the Pall Mall Gazette, is not peculiar to the Zulu tongue. It is a characteristic of many barbarous languages, though the clicking of the Hottentots seems to be the most elaborate, or at all events the best known. Mr. Cust, in a paper published by the Society of Arts, says: "The great feature of the [Hottentot] language is the existence of four clicks, formed by different positions of the tongue; the dental click is almost identical with the sound of indignation not unfrequently uttered by Europeans; the lateral click is the sound with which horses are stimulated to action; the guttural click is not unlike the popping of a champagne cork; and the palatal click is compared to the cracking of a whip." He adds that the Bushman, in addition to the four clicks of the Hottentot language, has a fifth, sixth, and sometimes a seventh and an eighth click. It is interesting to note that philological authorities declare that the Hottentot is entirely distinct from other languages spoken by black races, and is of kin to the Hamitic languages of white races of North Africa. For instance, the Kabyles, or Berbers, of Algeria click. Mr. Barclay (in his "Mountain Life in Algeria") was, we believe, the first to remark this elocutionary habit among them. He understood their "click" to express assent, and when several Kahyles "assented" together, he says it was "like so many pistols being cocked."

A letter from Rome to the New York Sun says: "One of the most difficult features of the examination of young graduates is the translation from Greek. Every year the professors have to be on the watch for new tricks devised by the students. They used to bribe the janitor, and give him the Greek text, which was conveyed by a messenger to a good scholar, then translated and copied on to a piece of paper, which was wrapped around a steak for the young candidate's breakfast. Very soon, however, these and similar tricks were detected, and this year such rigor was displayed in every college and academy that it was almost impossible to cheat. The boys of Genoa found a very queer way to get out of trouble. During the examination, while the boys were struggling with their grammars and dictionaries, a lady's voice was heard in the street, singing very loudly and beautifully the popular song, 'La Stella Confidente.' As soon as the song began, the boys were noticed writing very quickly. Why? Instead of the well known words, 'Stella del mio pensiero,' and so forth, the lady of the street sang the literal translation of a very hard passage of Plato's dialogue, 'Timæus,' and the boys thus got the translation in good Italian. The scholastic authorities got wind of it, and have refused to accept the Greek examination of the Lyceum Cristoforo Colombo, at Genoa."

We understand that Colonel Andrews has most generously tendered to the veterans of the Mexican war and the Grand Army of the Republic, for their Home in Napa, a benefit. This is to be a grand hall, such as only Colonel Andrews can give, at the Mechanics' Pavilion after the election—perhaps on Thanksgiving Eve. This information comes too late for us to more than say that we hope he will have every encouragement for his effort, as we are sure it will be a grand success, and put money in the treasury of a most noble charity.

THE FAMOUS DIAMOND WEDDING.

The telegraph has briefly spoken of the second marriage of Madame Frances Amelia Bartlett-Oviedo, whose diamond wedding with Don Esteban Santa Cruz Oviedo in 1859 caused a social sensation. She was married again September 6th in Trinity Church, New York, to Colonel Bodo von Glümer, of the Mexican Army. The ceremony was very quiet. The bride is a handsome blonde of fine presence. Colonel von Glümer is a fine-looking German, thirty-nine years old, compactly built, of florid complexion, with a fierce black moustache. He was dressed in the Mexican uniform.

The bride has lived in Havana for nearly twenty years. Mrs. von Glümer, who is forty-three years of age, has still a large landed property in Cuba, left her by her first husband. Her parents are dead, and she has no children. Colonel von Glümer left Germany in his youth and came to America.

There are many persons in New York to whom the memory of the former nuptials of Madame Bartlett-Oviedo, twenty-three years ago, with its lavish splendor, will be recalled to mind by the modest wedding yesterday. The incidents of that social episode, and the hostile correspondence that passed between the father of the bride and E. C. Stedman, because of the publication in the Tribune of Mr. Stedman's poem, "The Diamond Wedding," were published far and wide. Francis Amelia Bartlett was the daughter of Lieutenant W. A. Bartlett, of the United States Navy, who was also the first American alcalde of San Francisco. Miss Bartlett was very beautiful, and reigned, at eighteen years, the undisputed belle of New York. Tall and dignified, with a fair complexion and light blue eyes, her friends and relatives proudly pointed out her resemblance to the Empress Eugénie, of France. In January, 1859, Miss Bartlett met a Cuban gentleman, Don Esteban Santa Cruz de Oviedo. He was fifty-five years old, swarthy as a mulatto, with black eyes that set off a countenance of resolute earnestness. Wherever he went the story of his vast possessions, his plantations of sugar and tobacco, and his countless slaves, preceded him.

Don Esteban's visits were most frequent at the house of Lieutenant Bartlett. The beautiful American had captured the heart of the wealthy Cuban. The course of their love was smooth and serene until the Cuban Don was stricken down with fever and ague at the St. Nicholas Hotel. Through a wearying illness she faithfully nursed him back to health. After his convalescence the minds of the affianced pair were absorbed in the preparations for their wedding. The daily papers teemed with minute details of the fabulous amounts expended. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were disbursed by the Cuban with lavish prodigality. The trousseau at A. T. Stewart's was said to have cost fifty thousand dollars. As much was expended at Genin's, and at Ball & Black's. The wedding dress cost six thousand dollars, and was brought from Paris. Tiffany's coffers were swelled to the extent of fifty thousand dollars also. The climax was reached when, on October 13, 1859, Don Esteban was married to Miss Bartlett. The bride had previously adopted the Roman Catholic faith of her husband, and the ceremony was performed by Archbishop Hughes, in St. Patrick's Cathedral. Crowds gathered in the cathedral hours before the ceremony, until finally five thousand persons were present, and double that number filled the streets outside. Ladies fainted in the crush and had to be carried away. The hishop's voice could not be heard in the confusion. The bride's dress was of white satin, and an elegant veil of point lace extended from her head to her feet, and beyond. Her fan was of polonaise, adorned with pearls and diamonds, and four rows of orient pearls encircled her throat, and were held in front by a clasp of diamonds. Her earrings were two immense pearls, and her brooch of diamonds and pearls matched the same. The police had to guard the house. The gifts of the groom to the bride were of extraordinary value, among them being eighty different dresses.

Elaborate accounts of the young bride's jewels were published all over the country, but the most marked attention was directed to them by the poem of Mr. Stedman, which appeared in the Tribune of October 18, 1859. A stanza of the poem runs thus:

"In they swept, all riches and grace,
Silks and satins and Honiton lace:
In they swept from the dazzled sun:
And soon in the church the deed was done.
Three prelates stood on the chancel high—
A knot, that gold and silver can buy,
Gold and silver may yet untie,
Unless it is tightly fastened;
What's worth doing at all's worth doing well,
And the sale of a young Manhattan belle
Is not to be pushed or hastened.
So two Very-Reverends graced the scene,
And the tall Archbishop stood between,
By prayer and fasting chastened:
The Pope himself would have come from Rome.
But urgent matters kept him at home.
Haply these robed prelates thought
Their words were the power that tied the knot;
But another power that love-knot tied,
And I saw the chain round the neck of the bride—
A glistening, priceless, and marvelous chain,
Coiled with diamonds again and again,
As befits a diamond-wedding;
Yet still 'twas a chain—I thought she knew it,
And half way longed for the will to undo it,
By the secret tears she was shedding."

Lieutenant Bartlett sent a challenge to the author. But for the intervention of friends a duel would probably have been the immediate result of the poem. As it was, considerable bitterness was felt by the family of the bride toward the poet for many years. Eventually good feeling was established, and it was at the intercession of Mr. Stedman that Secretary Stanton had Lieutenant Bartlett afterward transferred to a comfortable post at Fortress Monroe. Madame Oviedo did not so soon forgive the poet. With her husband she traveled in Europe for a year after her marriage and then they lived on his plantations in Cuba. Twelve years ago Don Esteban died, leaving his immense estate to his wife. They had no children. Two years ago she requested E. C. Benedict, the Broad Street hanker, to bring about an introduction to Mr. Stedman. This was done by Mr. Benedict, and all asperities of the past were forgotten. The author and the heroine of "The Diamond Wedding" have remained, ever since, constant friends.

VANITY FAIR.

The Austrian empress, while on a little country excursion with her usual retinue, stopped at an inn for refreshments. Being heated, she took off her bonnet and hung it on the back of a chair, where a playful puppy made such mischief with it before anybody's attention was attracted as to render it unfit for further wear. Of course, every lady in the party offered her own hat in the place of the one that was damaged, but the empress took the whim to finish the excursion without any other head-covering than that supplied by nature. Being observed in this fashion by some ladies of the stylish world, who are eager to imitate anything that royalty does, the practice of appearing in public without hat or bonnet came into general vogue. The morning promenades became marked by the presence of numerous elegantly arranged heads of hair devoid of any covering, and on Sunday the same fashion was followed in church. To such extent was this becoming the rage, says the Vienna Tageblatt, that milliners grew alarmed, and clamored at court about it, whereupon an explanation of the cause of the empress's hatless excursion was issued from official sources, and published to the social world. This put an end to the new fashion, hat-makers were happy once more, and fashionable circles were again at peace.

An American lady, who was invited to a country house in England for three days, and who took one large trunk with her, felt very much ashamed of its size, considering the shortness of her visit. While she was taking her tea she apologized for this to her hostess, who later said to her, quite anxiously, "My dear, all your things can't have come. Betts tells me there was only one trunk." After that Mrs. never thought it necessary to explain her reasons for her portmanteaus and boxes when she went visiting.

A little incident recently happened at a prominent fashionable summer resort near the Hub, which has caused quite a breeze (which is still blowing.) It seems that a very handsome and accomplished young lady has, since her arrival a few weeks ago, been captivating the hearts of several society gentlemen, an engagement being reported to have already taken place, the fortunate gentleman being well known in New York society. A few days after the engagement, so the story goes, the young lady had the pleasure of receiving from her lover a present of a beautiful pair of garters, which she accepted as all right and proper under the circumstances. This present is what has caused the breeze. The young lady indiscreetly, but naturally, displayed to several of her most intimate lady friends the garters which had been presented to her, and which she was wearing. They were much admired, particularly the clasps, which were brilliantly set with jewels. A jealous rival of the young lady soon made the particulars of this little incident known among the principal gossips (or Mrs. Grundys) at the hotels, who soon were discussing the matter of the impropriety of any gentleman giving, or any lady accepting, garters as a present. The young couple have been very freely criticised.

Etiquette in Germany forbids the carrying of parcels, no matter how small, by a gentleman. Under immense pressure of necessity, a lady may take home in her own hands a small purchase, or carry a book or roll of music to the house of a friend. When a dressmaker comes to try on a little walking jacket, a small hoy must needs walk behind, bearing the garment on his arm. An officer can not under any circumstances carry anything when in uniform.

The styles of dress for ceremonial occasions have undergone several marked changes within a few years. The aristocracy and people of family in England—for no other reason, that we can see, than because Mrs. Mushroom Shoddy, and Mrs. Greengrocer, and Mrs. Tallow Chandler had as much money to spend as they, and could imitate them in costly attire and ornament—introduced a marked innovation upon the style of dress for weddings and parties. Gloves were omitted, the fair white hand of the "real lady and gentleman" thereby making a noticeable contrast to the stubby red member of the plebeian parties who imitated them. The plainest morning suits were chosen, instead of full dress, that the difference in manner and carriage might be the more strongly marked. This fashion was soon adopted here. In the most elegant circles, gentlemen appeared without gloves, carried opera-hats to parties and halls, wore frock-coats, red cravats, and lavender-colored trousers to full-dress parties and receptions, and many stylish weddings were celebrated where the lady, in full bridal attire, had bare hands, and the groom was dressed as if he were just going to the races. At halls the same fashion was introduced, and we have seen the full imprint of many a hare, sweaty hand on the back of a light silk of exquisite hue, where the lady had received this mark from the gentleman who had been her partner in the waltz. The first to rebel against this custom was society at Washington. The wives and daughters of the senators and judges put their heads together, and voted the fashion vulgar and unbecoming. Since then there has been a decided reaction against it everywhere; and, although it is adhered to by some, the more dignified and sensible of those who give tone to society throughout the country have gone back to nearly the full dress of the previous order. At the same time, the stiff rule having once been broken, there is more independence than formerly in attire on ceremonial occasions, and people of standing are allowed, without severe criticism, to consult their own tastes and preferences as to style and detail.

"I have just returned," says a Paris correspondent, "from a visit to half a dozen of the Norman watering-places—Dieppe, Trouville, Havre, Etretat, Cabourg, Paramé. He who has seen one of them has seen them all. The only difference is that at Trouville the beach is of sand, while at Havre it is of pebbles; at Trouville the ladies must display at least five toilettes a day, whereas at Etretat three suffice. Otherwise there is little difference to note. Everywhere you find big hotels, big tables d'hôte, Anglo-Saxon colonies, the pale ale, a contingent of the demi-monde, half a dozen elegant card-sharpers, a mixed odor of seaweed, patchouli, corylopsis, ylang-ylang, and mutton-cutlets, and everywhere a casino. At a French watering-place the casino is the centre around which all the life gravitates. On the terrace of the casino the visitors promenade and show off their fixings, triumphs of the Parisian milliner's art; in the hall-room of the casino the ladies display their shoulders; in the card-room écarté, haccarat, and chouette rage as fiercely as in any Paris club; in the reading-room are all the Paris papers; in the café may be found all the deleterious drinks with which civilization is cursed; in the restaurant you may have dinners as dear as at Paris; in the little theatre are held interminable concerts and dramatic performances by Parisian stars. You even have Parisian bric-à-brac dealers, with curiosities imported direct from Paris. In short, life at a French watering-place is simply a combination of Parisian life with its excitement, its late hours, its frivolity, its wearing tyranny, and with the addition of the fatigue of sea-bathing, and the elaborate toilet connected therewith."

The New York Sun's correspondent, describing a party at Marlborough House, which closed the Prince of Wales's share in the hospitalities of the London season, says: "His Royal Highness did not care to hide his growing partiality for the Hebraic race, as represented by a lovely Belgian, Madame Lambert. The tribute of admiration he so lavishly poured at her feet was, perhaps, not unmixed with gratitude, the favorite of the day being a Rothschild; and it is well known that the prince is indebted to that house for the loan of not inconsiderable sums. Their coffers are the inexhaustible mint which is ever coining fresh supplies for the extravagance or impecuniousness of crowned heads."

The desire to adorn themselves with something approaching jewelry without unlocking the jewel-cases, which are supposed to be securely closed for the summer months, has induced ladies to adopt all kinds of odd ornaments in the shape of platina and silver brooches. Caterpillars, with eyes of red and green enamel, and bristles of colored silk protruding from their sides—the latest and most ingenious device of the Parisian jeweler—parrots in every color of the rainbow; portly pigs and clumsy elephants, are used to fasten knots of ribbon and lace, to attach the bouquet of flowers which not infrequently adorns the parasol, and to confirm the position of a drooping plume on a Gainsborough hat. Chatelaines are also more than admissible. Summer life makes the wearing of a watch almost an imperative necessity, and in no form can a lady carry a watch with grace but when attached to a chatelaine. A small watch of dull Pompeian red, encircled with tiny diamonds, was worn with great effect from the waist of a white cashmere dress, accompanied with a flacon of silver wrought in a Moorish design, and surmounted with an owl's head carved in lapis lazuli. A small mirror set in tortoise-shell and gilt was another ornament on this original chatelaine.

At a recent London garden party short costumes were universally adopted, and the Embassadress of Austria scored a triumph by the exquisite smallness and delicacy of her feet. As she was seen ascending the steps leading to the terrace, those fairy shoes twinkled in seeming derision of the very different ones belonging to the two royal princesses of England, between whom the noble foreigner was walking. Their skirts might advantageously and becomingly have been lengthened. Two bystanders were irresistibly reminded of the remark uttered by a hurly Flemish burgher, on seeing in Brussels a little dame stepping into her carriage: "Thunder and lightning! there is the Countess A. going out with my feet."

The present craving for the beautiful, says the Boston Gazette, is shown in the painted fans which have been brought out for the fall and winter season. White satin fans, in all the tints of ivory, cream, and pearl, display the most exquisite floral decorations. Bunches and trailing sprays of roses, passion-flowers, nasturtiums, lilies of every description are painted on the satin mounts, and so natural are they you are tempted to pluck them. The designs are often carried down on the sticks, which are generally of ivory or pearl, either carved or inlaid. For instance, a large white satin fan mounted on ivory has a gorgeous trail of nasturtiums crossing its shining surface and drooping over the sticks, inlaid with metals corresponding in color to the flower represented. The flower painting seen on "a frivolous fan" of this year of grace is an effort of real art and deserving of a name. One wonders who the unknown artist can be, and if in the future some great painter may not father these love children of his brush, and remember the days when he was glad to make the pot boil by painting milady's fan. Whoever the artist, his work is thoroughly charming and worthy of all praise.

Egyptian designs are now all the rage for novelties. A happy young married countess in Paris heads her writing-paper with the symbol of the Egyptian priesthood for happy marriage—two partridges on a tuft of greensward—and the celebrated Madame Edouard Adam has hers inscribed with an ibis beneath a crescent.

This is called a season of "nobby shoes," says an Eastern journal. No man wears hoots nowadays, except when he goes a-fishing. Patent-leather shoes with silk tops are the finest in the market, and cost from twelve to eighteen dollars. A great many of the cloth-top shoes are in demand, and the custom shoemakers have abundance of work. More than ever is there a demand for neatly fitting shoes, not only for the full-pursed buyers, but every person who gives any thought to personal appearance will have a neat and trim shoe, and such a shoe may be obtained for considerably less than the prices given, else some would go barefoot. It is said that unmarried men wear shoes a size too small on all important occasions, and a shoe one or two sizes too large later in life. Shoemaking has become as delicate and difficult as watchmaking. In the large cities shoemakers are gathered from other countries—from Paris, London, and Berlin.

THE REGULAR ARMY.

By an Army Officer.

Owing to a prolonged peace the army of the United States has been almost forgotten. Many worthy people, especially at the Eastern States, scarcely realize that there is one, or the necessity for any, while its condition and efficiency seem to be of little interest, even to the better informed. In the course of events, however, the time must return when the military arm will again become prominent. History teaches that wars are inevitable; that they are periodical and unavoidable in the experience of all governments of whatever form; and not more than other nations can it be hoped that we may escape.

European powers continue their armies on a war footing; our Indian difficulties continue; the Mormon question is still a problem, and our domestic affairs in other directions are certainly not satisfactory—the latter owing to the elements of social discord so rapidly increasing among the unemployed classes of nearly all the large cities, recruited from an unprecedented foreign immigration. As the Argonaut has already so forcibly expressed it: "We are becoming the penal settlement for the world's criminals, the asylum for the destitute, the house of refuge for the devilish." Vicious outgrowths of an overcrowded European civilization are strong, aggressive, and defiant, and must finally necessitate the presence of force to preserve the national integrity. These are important facts.

A superficial writer (John Roach, in the North American Review, last year) made the following statement: "The policy of the government has always been opposed to the maintenance of a large standing army and navy, to eat up the substance and place a heavy tax on the prosperity of the people, but has been to maintain the nucleus of an army, and to rely for defense upon the militia. Soldiers can be called out, volunteers enlisted, and march away in a day." The fallacy and absurdity of the latter portion of this are too apparent to an intelligent mind to merit discussion, and it is surprising that the lesson taught by the rebellion should be so soon forgotten. None are better qualified to judge the comparative value of raw and undisciplined troops in the presence of the enemy than those who will read this—who, as officers of volunteers, were hurried to the front without preparation in the early days of the rebellion. Nor will the citizens of Pittsburgh, Chicago, or St. Louis soon forget what it was to rely upon the local militia for protection from their own rioters, and the feeling of security which followed the advent of the small detachments of United States troops called in from the frontier to their assistance. The logic of events seems to indicate that society and the people will eventually demand from the general government that protection and absolute security of life and property which an adequate and available armed body can only afford.

It is, however, useless to suggest the necessity for a larger army, either by an array of significant facts or strength of argument. Public sentiment can not yet be reconciled to the idea of a standing army. The sound of the words is distasteful from historical association, and prejudice can not be answered with reason. At present, then, it is only necessary to consider the small army, or "nucleus," which is authorized. This consists of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, (or would, if fully recruited, which it is not,) including Indian scouts, and excepting the signal service, (though numerous details from the army proper are regularly performing signal duty, both as officers and soldiers,) and two thousand one hundred and fifty-five commissioned officers, including all branches of the service. To which is to be added the retired list, limited to four hundred, excepting as provided by the last session of Congress, for officers who are sixty-four years old, or have served forty years. Of this number twenty-three thousand two hundred and twenty enlisted men and fourteen hundred and eighty-nine commissioned officers compose the line, or fighting strength—this being divided into ten regiments of cavalry, five of artillery, and twenty-five of infantry. (Included in these figures are the four remaining colored regiments—two of cavalry and two of infantry.) From the officers of these forty regiments, in the event of another war, must be largely drawn the organizers of new troops, as well as many who would hold high rank, and command volunteer soldiers in the field.

It will be admitted, in this connection, that the officer is the most important element for consideration—his degree of efficiency, and promise for the future; for without competent officers there can not be good soldiers or a good army. The questions then naturally arise: Are our officers competent? And will they fill the requirements? To which it may be replied, that prominent American generals who have visited Europe since the close of the war, with a special view to the observation of its armies, have reported that the officers of the United States army compare favorably with any who came under their notice; that none are superior. This seems quite satisfactory; and it is only necessary that the standard of efficiency continue, in order that American officers may meet the expectation of the nation when future occasion renders the army conspicuous.

To preserve the ambition of any class or profession, a stimulus is necessary. That stimulus to an army officer is the hope of promotion. In the nature of a military life there can be, and there is, no other. Remove this prospect, particularly among younger officers, and what remains to encourage that zeal for the profession which is indispensable, and without which the choicest material will rapidly deteriorate? Since the organization of our army, promotion has never been so slow as at present, with a prospect, unless a vigorous remedy is speedily applied, of even a more gloomy condition of affairs in this respect in the immediate future. The military service offers but little encouragement to officers of the lower grades who have already served from ten to twenty years, while for the younger men now graduating from the military academy and joining their regiments it seems almost hopeless. The number of years passed in each subordinate grade is simply discouraging. In the "old army" (previous to the rebellion) promotion in the artillery was, even then, comparatively slow; but in the cavalry and infantry regiments, officers who entered between the ages of twenty-two and twenty-five usually served from three to four years only as second lieutenants, reaching the first step several years before the age of thirty, and a captaincy within ten years from the original entry into the service. A very remarkable difference in the rate of advancement is now the case, as will appear.

The official army register for January, 1882, affords the following information: In the artillery—always the slowest—the five second lieutenants next for promotion in their regiments have an average length of service in that grade of more than seven years. The five first lieutenants of artillery next for promotion, an average of more than seven years service. In the infantry, the twenty-five second lieutenants next for promotion have an average service of about eight years; and the twenty-five first lieutenants, an average of over fifteen years. In the cavalry some improvement may be observed. The ten second lieutenants next for promotion have an average service of about six years; and the ten first lieutenants, an average of more than eleven. It must not be forgotten that these years have been served in each of the grades mentioned, and do not include the total length of service of these officers. The latter, however, may be easily seen by combining the averages of the separate grades in each arm of the service.

The causes which have produced this unfortunate condition are well known and easily understood by those who may feel a sufficient interest to examine the subject. They may be briefly stated as having partially grown out of the promotion which occurred early in the war, which left many comparatively young men high in rank; but more especially to the reorganization of the regular army at the close of the war, and its establishment on a "peace footing"—twenty-nine regiments being added, the officers of which, to a large extent, having been appointed from those who had served as volunteers; and a very large reduction and consolidation of regiments which was made by Congress in 1870, by which the natural and uniform plan of promoting through the subordinate grades was, and still continues to be, prevented.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Baronets seem to be often at a low ebb nowadays. Sir Somebody Wrasell has worked in a store at Brighton, and Sir Richard Emanuele Moore, who died lately, was at one time a third-class turnkey at Spike Island, Cork harbor. A final effort to open a coal store in his son's name, failed for want of capital.

SYBIL SARTORYS'S PERIL.

The Pits that Line the Pathway of Life in London Town.

One evening (I think that it was the first night of the revival of "Romeo and Juliet" at the Lyceum) Jack Sartorys and his wife occupied a box there, which, after much difficulty, as he averred, Colonel Dunkirk, of the "Heavies," had been fortunate enough to secure. As a general rule, Colonel Dunkirk was not in the habit of presenting first-night boxes to his friends unless he had some object to gain. People suggested that it was a ruse on his part to win Jack's good graces—especially the smiles of Jack's wife; but then people might have lied—they frequently do in such matters—and yet for once they were right.

Dunkirk was a notorious Lovelace, as handsome a man as you would see anywhere—a man whose appearance was hailed with inward tribulation and groaning by poor devils who had not the pluck to kick him out of their houses when his attentions grew too pronounced. It was rumored, too, that his doings lately had been very shady—so shady that his friends (he had many friends) all predicted that he would speedily have to bolt from the impending clutches of those ministering fiends, Messrs. Shylock & Co.

Sybil Sartorys was a very handsome woman—dangerously handsome. She had masses of golden hair, which did not owe its sunny tints to some vile wash, arched red lips, sweet blue eyes, a soft white neck, and a complexion of dazzling fairness. In addition to these charms, she possessed a knack of pleasing people when she chose to take the trouble, and was also very popular in her own immediate circle. Jack had fallen in love with her in his usual impulsive, headlong manner; but, for my own part, I always thought her a trifle hard and unsympathetic. There was sometimes a look in her sweet eyes not entirely acquiescent when Jack had intimated something of which she disapproved. Having said what he wanted, Jack generally left her have her own way, and so the impending storm always blew over—for a time. She demanded absolute slavery from him, and accepted his devotion as a matter of course. Club friends, amusements, all had to give way to this little autocrat's imperious mandates; and poor Jack was spoiled for us.

Yet he was very happy. In her softer moments, prejudiced as I was, I could but admit the charm of her sweet, low voice, and the winning eyes which could have lured a babe from its mother's arms. But I often imagined that her thoughtlessness would one day bring her to grief. She had such a superb contempt for the conventionalities. You and I, gentle reader, know better. We bow down to and worship Mrs. Grundy as if we liked her; but do we? I think not.

Dunkirk did despise the conventionalities and decencies of life—nay, he outraged them persistently. He had always some confidante to whom he unbosomed himself of his troubles with those free-lances, the money-lenders. Dipped as he was, he contrived to get through as much money as of old. His horses and dinners were the best in town—men eagerly sought to ride the one and to eat the other. I think Sybil Sartorys alone knew how soon there would be neither—how quickly the bubble must burst, and Dunkirk hide his diminished head for the rest of his days in some little, fifth-rate continental town. And yet she fancied that she loved him. Had he been prosperous, happy, gay, she would not have done so; but as he was going to the dogs, it seemed to her as if she had no alternative but to accompany him.

Who is it says that women always wreck themselves with their best impulses?

In person Dunkirk was tall and well built, but there was an indefinable something in his face which betrayed that he had not long to live. All the Dunkirks had died of consumption before their fortieth year, and the colonel was thirty-five. With this sword hanging over him, it was impossible not to feel sorry—at least the women thought so—for his misspent life. Men were inclined to believe that he made the most of the situation, and posed for that effect. But then men are such unfeeling beings; they have none of the finer sympathies of their wives—their mission is to pay bills and he generally useful.

That evening things seemed to be approaching a climax—a deuced unpleasant one, too, for poor Jack. When Capulet said to the maskers,

"I have seen the day
That I have worn a visor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please."

Mrs. Sartorys's eyes met Dunkirk's, and drooped in a half-shamefaced but still tender way. It was not a look I should have liked to see on the face of my wife when talking with another man; though, having provided Jack with his first pony, and piloted him across country at the early age of seven, I am looked upon as an old fogey who is not entitled to express any direct opinion. Perhaps my ideas are rather old-fashioned—wholesomely so.

Jack did not notice what was going on. He loved his wife too dearly even to dream of such infamy. It was a delightful experience to him to listen to the balcony scene, and to follow the hapless fortunes of the star-crossed lovers, although he could not help wishing that the Romeo would be a little less intellectual and a trifle more impressive with the lovely Juliet. Practically, his wife and Dunkirk were alone—Jack told me all this long afterward without attaching any importance to it, and I linked the fragments together.

Half an hour later I stepped in. Jack whispered to me not to speak, and I was greeted by Mrs. Sartorys with the usual polite indifference a wife reserves for her husband's friends. In short, it was not ten minutes before I had seen enough of the situation, and concluded to step outside for a lounge in the corridor. The glamour of the scene had failed to touch my jaded senses. I could not help seeing a grimy stage-carpenter up in the flies, and this naturally did away with all illusion. What an awful bore if the man had dropped his old wide-awake upon the passionate lovers.

The door opened (I was leaning against the next box); out came Mrs. Sartorys and Dunkirk, she shivering—in the hot atmosphere—and a trifle pale. Her eyes were a frightened look; and—yes, she certainly did seem inclined to cry.

"We shall be just in time for the last train," she nervously whispered. "I told Jack that you should see me to my carriage, and he—he—is going to his club."

"So much the better," said Dunkirk, hurriedly. "We shall not be missed until we are across the Channel."

I hate scenes; but it was necessary to do something. A little fellow whom I had dandled on my knee, and loved like a son, must not be duped in this shameful way.

Dunkirk hurried past me; but I reached the staircase before Mrs. Sartorys reappeared, hooded and cloaked. God knows I never acted so promptly before in my life, and yet I have been in one or two tight places. There was— But never mind. Let the "old man garrulous" continue his story.

When Colonel Dunkirk's carriage was called the coachman drove up with his fur tippet nearly over his ears. The night was cold, and Mrs. Sartorys trembled, half-turned for a moment, then stepped in. She had crossed the Rubicon—and was lost!

I wonder if she thought at that moment of the little hands that were folded before her night and morn, and the little sleepy eyes were raised to hers, and Jack's children lisped out their usual prayer: "God bless papa and mamma, and make us all dood. Amen!" I do not believe that she could have thought of them, or else she never would have been there.

"Viaduct Station!" called out the colonel, flinging the fellow one of his few remaining half-crowns—it was the last desperate flight of the butterfly in the sunshine. Afterward he would have time to repent or to die in a gutter unshriven. In the madness of the moment he did not care which.

The horses dashed forward into the darkness, pulling well up to their collars, but—they did not go the Viaduct Station!

Half an hour later, when they drew up, the colonel jumped out to assist Mrs. Sartorys to alight. She was trembling still, and half inclined to return. Already the dark shadows of the weary years to come were lengthened out before her. And the man whose love she was about to betray! Well, it was now too late to recede. God knows she was sorry—most women are—when they are found out.

"Sold!" hissed the colonel, in his rage kicking a poor crossing-sweeper who had rushed up to open the carriage door.

"I was only a-openin' the door," whined the old mendicant.

"D—n you!" foamed the colonel, "you're always opening doors when you're not wanted. What the devil's the meaning of this? But it is not too late."

"Not so fast, Dunkirk," I said, swinging down from the box, the fur tippet still upon my shoulders. "Wait a moment. Mrs. Sartorys—for the benefit of the servants—" I have won my wager. The colonel betted I would never drive him anywhere without his knowing it. Let me take you into the house."

Mrs. Sartorys took my arm, and I led her up the steps. She did not speak, but smiled strangely and touched my hand.

Then I returned to Dunkirk.

"You are an infernal scoundrel!" I said, taking him on one side. "If you choose to make a scene I'll knock you down, old as I am. No; I shall not give you satisfaction. Before you are off, let me warn you to beware of Scotland Yard. That bill of Lavington's has been placed in their hands, and the forgery traced to you."

This time he really went to the Viaduct Station, caught the last train, and was seen no more.

Then I returned to the house.

"You have acted like a—hero," sobbed Mrs. Sartorys. "I can never repay you."

There stood Jack smiling in the doorway. She did not see him. He must never know.

"It was only a trifling service, and one which I was only too happy to render," I said, bowing low. "You overrate it. A drunken servant is always dangerous."

"You have saved—my—honor," she was beginning.

"Hush!" I said. "Jack must never know." Then aloud: "You are hysterical; let me ring for your maid."

Between us we got her out of the room.

"What is it all about, old fellow?" asked the irreverent Jack, when Mrs. Sartorys had been safely disposed of in her room.

"Jarvis—drunk—again—as usual," I murmured, laconically (the lie cost me five hundred pounds, and a free passage to the colonies for the irreproachable Jarvis and his family; but it was not a dear price to pay for the happiness of one's dearest friend). "I've discharged the brute for you."

"All right," said easy-going Jack; "I'll get another."

And poor Jarvis was discharged.

I do not think that Mrs. Sartorys slept much that night. Jack told me that she cried a good deal. "She seems to think that she has had a narrow escape, old fellow," Jack said, unsuspiciously.

"Yes, I answered, 'very.'"

But he never knew how narrow.

Those who remember the lark which a certain British baronet, aided by some prominent young San Franciscans, conducted in a Sutter Street beer-garden, about three years ago, will be forcibly struck with the following description of how a fellow-nobleman did the thing at home. It is taken from an English society journal: An incident in the reckless career of the Marquis of Hastings is related by a traveler who chanced to be staying in the chief hotel in Sheffield, one evening, when he and a few companions resolved on what they termed a "lark." Their frolic took the turn of demolishing all the mirrors, chandeliers, pictures, and furniture of two large drawing-rooms. "If ever I saw a madman," says the narrator, "it was the marquis that night, as, with the butt-end of a heavy riding-whip, he frantically dashed out windows, ruined statuettes and vases, and defaced bookcases and sideboards, shrieking the while like an incarnate demon. Then, when he had done, he drew forth his check-book, signed a bank-draft, and, with an oath, ordered the manager to pay himself for the damage done, which I have no doubt the manager did, without omitting a single item."

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Chicago Tribune Novelettes.

"Shall you miss me, sweetheart?"

Pizarro McGinness was going away, far away to the trackless solitudes of St. Louis, and when he had told Daphne McCarthy of his intended journey the girl had spoken not a word, but laid her head gently on his shoulder, and wept as if her heart was breaking.

But when he asked her the question with which this chapter opens, the little head, with its coronal of fluffy brown hair, had risen slowly, and the pansy-brown eyes of the girl had looked into his and gleamed with the holy light of a love that could never die.

"Shall I miss you?" she cried, despairingly. "Ah, yes, sorely enough. But you can not understand this. No man can feel the loss of kisses and love-words as a woman can. No man can feel the deadly hunger in time of famine that a woman feels when love, that always beckons and allures her, is out of reach of her longing hands and loving lips."

"But I shall not be gone so very long, darling," whispered Pizarro, "and I have told the candy man to let you have whatever you want on my account."

"You have done this?" asks the girl.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Then," said Daphne, the wistful look gone from her face, "you can not start too soon."—From "Sackcloth and Ashes," by Joseph Medill.

"Why are you sad, Beryl?"

The girl turned her head slightly as these words were spoken, and as her lissome figure with its rounded curves and beautiful flesh-tints stood sharply outlined, clear and perfect as a cameo, in the moonbeams that were falling in a silver spray through the branches of the linden trees, the sight was indeed a pretty one. George W. Simpson looked at her earnestly a moment, and saw that tears were welling up in the dusky brown eyes, and sobs that could not be restrained convulsing the girlish form.

"Why should I not be sad?" she said. "The sweet summer is dying. There are hollows in her fair cheeks; a pathetic droop about the ripe red lips, dark shadows beneath the lovely eyes. And already across the hazy hills autumn peers, berry-stains on her brown, slim fingers, purple vines trailing about her, scarlet buds and golden-rod for the coronal. Already the hollows are brimmed with amber haze and the hilltops crowned with blue smoke. The sun looks languidly through dream-clouds; a yellow leaf falls here and there, and some prudent birds fly southward ere yet the first frost makes the fruit ruddy and ripens the hazelnuts in the hedges, ere yet the sumac catches some blood-droops from the heart-wound of fainting summer, and the aster looks with blue and wistful eyes from the woodland path."

"It is indeed a time fraught with suggestions that are mournful," said George, "but surely there is one gleam of hope, one little ray of golden sunshine, amid all the mists and clouds." And, bending over the girl in a loving fashion, he whispered a word in her ear.

A smile chased away the despondent look, and the tears that dimmed the starry eyes were quickly dashed away. Putting her arms around George's neck, Beryl murmured:

"You are right, sweetheart; I had forgotten the oysters."—From "Nip and Tuck," by Joseph Medill.

A War Incident.

"Mr. Hoffenstein," said Herman, as he folded up a pair of pants, and placed them on a pile, "if you don't haf any objections I would like to get from de store away von efening, und go mit de soldiers to de Spanisb Fort?" "Vell, Herman, I dinks you had better keep away from de soldiers," replied Hoffenstein, "und stay mit de store, because, you know, you don't can put any dependence mit de soldiers. I vill tell you why. Von day vile I vas in Vicksburg, during de var, a cock-eyed soldier came in my store mit an old bugle in his hand, und he looks around. I asks him vat he wants, und he buys a couple of undershirts, den he tells me to keep his bundle und de bugle behind de counter until he comes back. After de cock-eyed soldier vent de store out, some more soldiers come in und walk around, vile dey look at de goods. 'Shentlemen,' I says, 'do you vant anyting?' 'Ve are shust looking to see vot you haf,' said one uf dem, und after avile anodder says: 'Bill, shust look dere at de bugle; de very ding de captain told us to get. You know ve don't haf any bugle in de company for dree months. How much you ask for dot bugle?' I dells dem dot I can't sell de bugle because it belongs to a man vot shust vent out. 'I will gif you fifty dollars for it,' says the soldier, pulling his money out. I dells him I don't can sell it, because it vasn't mine. 'I vill gif you a hundred dollars,' he said. Den he offers me von hundred und twenty-five dollars. My g-r-racious, Herman, I wants to sell de bugle so bad dat I vistles. De soldier dells me vile dey vos leaving de store dot if I buy de bugle from de man vot owns it dey vill gif me one hundred und twenty-five dollars for it. I dell dem I vill do it. I sees a chance, you know, Herman, to make some money by de operation. Ven de cock-eyed soldier comes in he says, 'Git me my bundle und bugle; I got to go to de camp.' I says, 'My frent, don't you vant to sell your bugle?' He dells me no, und I says 'My little boy Leopold, vot plays in de store, sees de bugle und he goes all around crying shust as loud as he can, because he don't can get it. Six times I dakes him in de yard und vips him, und he comes right back und cries for de bugle. It shows, you know, how much drouble a man vill haf mit a family. I vill gif you den dollars for it shust to please little Leopold.' De soldier vont dake it, und at last I offers him fifty dollars und he says, 'Vell, I vill dake fifty because I can't vaste any more time, I haf to go to de camp.' After he goes away I goes to de door und vatches for de soldiers vat wanted de bugle. I sees dem passing along de street, und I says, 'My frents, I have got de bugle,' and dey say, 'Vell, dat it, vy don't you blow it?' My g-r-racious, Herman, vat you dink? All dem soldiers belong to de same crowd, und dey make de trick to svindle me. Levi Cohen, across de street, he finds it out, und efery day he gets boys to blow horns in front of my store, so as to make me dink how I vas svindled. Herman, I dink you had better stay mit de store."—Joe C.

New Orleans Times-Democrat.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.
 Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by Carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.
 News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 413 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.
 The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.
 Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.
 No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.
 Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.
 Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."
 A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY - - - - - Editor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1882.

CONTENTS:

EDITORIALS:	Page.	EDITORIAL NOTES:	Page.
Can Loyalty to the Republican Party be Looked for in an Honest Man?—How the Machine Thieves Managed it—The Short-sighted Policy of Californians in Regard to the Chinese Treaty—How Tom Fitch Changed his Mind.....	8-9	How a Reverend Nestor Regards his Party—The Standard by which to Measure a Gentleman—Doctor May and his Brass Cheek—The Political Curse of Pennsylvania—Poor Mr. Pickering and his Wanderings in By-paths.....	4
A HAUNTED ENGINEER.....	1-2	THE MUNICIPAL CONVENTION.....	5
THE MADDENED QUILL-DRIVER.....	2	THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.....	7
THE PRINCE AT THE SEASIDE.....	2	SIBYL SARTORY'S PERIL.....	7
THE DAUPHIN'S DEATH.....	3	INDIVIDUALITIES.....	10
SOCIETY NOTES AND GOSSIP.....	4	OLD FAVORITES.....	10
SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS.....	5	LITERARY NOTES.....	10
A DIAMOND WEDDING.....	5	INNER MAN.....	11
VANITY FAIR.....	6	DRAMA:
THE REGULAR ARMY.....	6	Betsy B.'s Letter.....	12
		STORYETTES.....	14

We have been considering this thing of loyalty to party. Loyalty is a grand and significant word. Loyalty to the good, the pure, and the right is a noble sentiment. Loyalty to crime, to the ignoble, the vulgar, and the criminal is abhorrent to every proud and honest mind. To be loyal to one's political party and to party leaders, is commendable —is, in truth, endurable—only when that party is organized and maintained for high and noble purposes, and its leaders are controlled by patriotic and honorable motives. Allegiance to an unworthy cause, and fidelity to the unconscionable knaves who by intrigue have made themselves representatives and leaders, are evidences of criminal complicity with the bad, and of cowardice in not daring to oppose it. There was a time when to be true and loyal to the Republican party demanded the exercise of highest courage and the possession of highest virtue. Loyalty to the party meant loyalty to the country, and its expression on the battle-field or at the ballot-box evidenced the highest patriotism. It was then a party of principle. Its leaders were men of high resolve. Its aims were patriotic. Its object was to preserve inviolable the union of States, to lift a race from slavery to freedom, to give free lands as a home for the heritage of a free people, to relieve speech and the press from the thralldom of fear, and to lift the conscience of the American people up from out the shadow of oppression. A national party, composed of such men, formed for such a purpose, whose history has been so grand in its accomplishments, may well have commanded the love and loyalty of all who love their country and love their fellow-men. This party has not yet fulfilled its mission, has not yet finished its task, and has not yet ended its career. The country that owes to it the preservation of its national life is hut upon the threshold of its national existence. Its future bears with it the hopes or disappointments of the world's highest ideal of government. The race emancipated from slavery looks to it for protection and elevation to a higher place in the human family. The school-house has not yet escaped beyond the danger of sectarian assault. Conscience has not yet attained the impregnable position from which it may not be assailed. The Republican party has yet a noble mission that demands time for its fulfillment. It yet demands the loyal devotion of its best minds. It yet claims the service of its best men. The time has not yet come when those who love it can afford to become indifferent to it, or turn it over to the mere place-hunter and office-seeker, who would make merchandise of traditions and trade upon its achievements. Men did lay down their lives on the battle-field that party jackals might feed upon the slain, or political plunderers loot the dead. Early party victories, hardly won, are not yet forgotten, nor ought the services of those who won them to be ignored, or the cowardice and treachery of the skulkers and traitors to be rewarded with all the fruits of those costly triumphs. Conspicuous for their early labors were the Republicans of California. Those early contests on this coast demanded great personal sacrifice, demanded physical and moral courage, demanded the best years of the best men who lived within our borders. Some of them have gone to their graves, and nearly every one of them unhonored by the party they served. Some linger still, to become the targets of insult if they would continue in the field of active politics. The kindest treatment the old Republicans may hope to receive at the hands of the new men who have taken their places is indifference and neglect. This applies not alone to ambitious leaders, but to the brave rank and file that came into the party in early days from principle. The patronage of office, that by all rules of honorable party conduct rightly belongs to the old Republican guard, is given to the party adventurer for services he may render the machine. The Republican party in California has fallen from its high estate. It has degenerated. It has no longer a high and honorable purpose to achieve. Its most influential and active leaders are men who make of politics a profession, who seek offices for the money that is in them, or because of the opportunity for plunder. Within the Republican party there has been organized a ring of professional politicians, who make of politics a money-getting industry. This we call the machine. It has its hordes and its gang of workers. It organizes office-seeking. Its headquarters are in San Francisco. It looks out for contracts. It has its look-outs for the game at Mare Island Navy Yard. It contracts for supplies of hospitals, asylums, and the House of Refuge. It is at the State prisons and all other public institutions. It is a street-sweeper in San Francisco. It steals offices and divides salaries. It has its friends among the police, and it runs the fire department, and demands percentages from appointees. It is the lobby in the Board of Supervisors. In that hoard, when opportunity offers, it forms a ring, every act of which it sells. It is the lobby at Sacramento. It blackmails corporations. Its headquarters are in a whisky saloon or bunko room. Its chiefs are men of brains. Its dupes are the men of small ambitions. Its deputies are always in subordinate positions. Its working forces are the thieves and criminal element. It bribes, coaxes, begs, and bullies. It is an organized political conspiracy to steal. One of its tricks is to put up a prominent, popular, and respectable man to lead the ticket, that it may make merchandise of the balance. It endeavors to choose for such leading candidate a man whom it can use, who will promise official appointments and patronage to the machine; or else some man of easy morals and further ambition, whom it can surround, and use, and influence. Such a thing is the San Francisco machine. Its instrument is Morris M. Estee. He was nominated by fraud, violence, and pollution of the primary ballot-box. He was nominated by men who were acting with the Democrats at the last municipal election in San Francisco. He is the nominee by count of fraudulent votes cast by Democrats. All this he knows. He met in Peter Hopkins's bar-room for weeks in advance of election day, and, in consultation with the machine, prearranged the plan to secure his nomination in defiance of the wishes of a majority of honest Republican voters. He went to Sacramento with a fraudulent delegation, through his friends Hayward, hydraulic miner; Hamilton Smith, a Democrat; John W. Shaeffer, a whisky agent, and the machine. By double-dealing, false promises, misrepresentations, and lies, he stole the nomination. And now come the questions: Is loyalty due to this man under the circumstances as we have faithfully narrated them? Is loyalty due to the machine and its bosses? Is it loyalty to the Republican party and to its principles to aid in thus prostituting a patriotic organization, and subordinating it to party thieves? Is it brave, manly, or honest to submit to such a disgraceful condition of things without an attempt to reform them? Is it not the best thing, under the circumstances, to let the machine, the whisky-ring, the gravel-sluciers, the court-house cliques, the office-holders, the office-seekers, the pimps, lovers, and hunko sharps, the shoulder-hitters, bullies, and blacklegs, and the candidates and their bired orators, make this campaign their own way, and see what comes of it? Republicans who have been true to the party in the past are happily relieved from the reproach of being called holters. The Chronicle, which is the organ of the machine, will not regard "bolting" as a serious crime in memory of its own bucking career. Messrs. Higgins, Gannon, and Chute will recall their opposition to the election of John Sedgwick for Sheriff, and he silent. Governor Booth and Mr. Swift will review their political histories, and, in modesty, swing small. Mr. Estee will assuredly remember that loyalty to the Republican party has not been his most distinguishing virtue.

"Betsy and I are out." That is a very touching story told by Will Carleton, where the old couple, grown gray and prosperous together, after many years of wedded love, agreed to a divorce over an unimportant misunderstanding. Injudicious friends made trouble between them; little faults grew to be considered great wrongs; hut when the point of separation came, and the kindly old man would surrender everything, and go forth from their home, there came a throng of memories that made separation impossible. The Republican party and the railroad are "out." To one who has been a member of every Republican State Convention in California the resolutions of the last convention seem strange. To one who recalls the political history of the party, and the connection of Leland Stanford, E. B. and Charles Crocker, C. P. Huntington, and Mark Hopkins with it, its early struggles, and its history, it seems as though these gentlemen must have done something rarely wicked to deserve the strictures embodied in the resolutions and the personal denunciation they received from Mr. Estee, the candidate for Governor. We recall those early times when, to all of us upon this distant shore, the hope of a transcontinental railroad was only a dream of the over-sanguine; when our mails, our merchandise, and ourselves dared the perils of two oceans and a tropical isthmus, and when three weeks was a short voyage. We recall the sensation of an incoming steamer, as we saw the skeleton arms throw out their signal from Telegraph Hill. We remember when first the fleet-footed ponies brought us letters in eight days from the Eastern frontier. We remember when, in State Convention, we resolved to ask the Government to give us a wagon-road across the plains, and when we sent a monster petition with three hundred thousand signatures asking this boon from the Government. When the war broke out and Sumter was fired upon, we recall the intense anxiety for news, as it came by pony express. Then the Republican party in conventions asked a railroad as a reward for its loyalty, and that our State might be held within the union of States. During all those early conventions of the Republican party, next to the emancipation of the slaves and the preservation of the Union, a transcontinental railroad was the dominant idea. It was the local question that overshadowed all others. It remained the one leading idea in business, political, and social circles, till the little band of Republicans at Sacramento seized upon it for a practical realization. We recall the time when the corporation was formed. It seemed a desperate venture. It was ridiculed as impracticable, and the motives of its originators were questioned. Its stock went begging for subscribers. Banks and moneyed men gave it no encouragement. War existed, and the Government recognized it as a political expedient, to bind together its broad domain. It was aided as a war measure. It was demanded as a war necessity, for the transportation of troops. Its government aid came from a Republican Congress. Its State aid came from a Republican Legislature. It county aid, from San Francisco, Sacramento, and Placer—three Republican counties. It was a great national measure. It was one of those grand achievements of which the Republican party is, and has a right to be, justly proud. It has served a splendid purpose. It has given us transcontinental intercourse important to the United States Government, and it has worked with us a miracle of progress. It has proved for us a social revolution. Under the magic influence of this system of railroads, we have seen our city and our State spring into new life. Our port has become the receiving harbor of a splendid and growing commerce. Our city, then of one hundred thousand inhabitants, has now grown to three hundred thousand. Our municipal wealth is increased by hundreds of millions. Great wastes of rich valley lands, that lay untouched for two decades, that no one would purchase at one dollar and a quarter per acre, that no one would preempt or take as homestead gifts, have, under the magic influence of the railway, become the home of busy and prosperous populations. Farms, houses, villages, cities, and splendid colonies of industrious people have sprung into life. The great, rich, fruitful valleys of Los Angeles and San Bernardino, in all their semi-tropical wealth of fruit, that were nearly tenantless and languishing, are now leaping forward like young giants, strengthened with rich wines of their own full vintages. To Nevada, whither we toiled over mountain and scoria with the patient mule, we now ride in coaches of luxurious ease. Without the railroads there would have been no State of Nevada. Arizona was a terra incognita, a land of deserts, tarantulas, and Apaches. Desolation ruled its broad mesa lands. Death lurked in its mountain recesses. Its wealth was hidden and unapproachable. Access to it was across measureless deserts, and danger lurked behind every hush and rock. It is now an accessible and prosperous Territory, and will shortly put on the robes of sovereignty. We are in quick and not expensive communication with our Eastern homes. We are part of the great, splendid family of Republican States. We are prosperous. There is no other land on all God's broad footstool so prosperous, or where so many of His gifts are showered. We recall our isolation at the time when Governor Stanford turned with the silver spade the first shovelful of earth at Sacramento, the time when the representative men of America met to celebrate the marriage of the Atlantic and the Pacific, by the driving of the last golden spike, with ceremonies more imposing than those with which the Doge of Venice wedded the Adriatic. Since the day when at Sacramento the first upturned sod kissed the sunlight, this work of railroad building has been pushed with unrelenting energy. A road now reaches almost to Oregon's border line. Far across the deserts of Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas the work has been pushed, and in a few days cards will issue inviting us to the wedding ceremony that unites our bay to the Gulf of Mexico—a second transcontinental railroad, opening up to us the intercourse of Mexico and our own South, a direct line for grain and emigrants to Liverpool, Havre, Hamburg, and Genoa. Our northern road is now under contract, connecting our valleys with the rich valley of the Willamette, Sacramento with the Columbia, our State with the rich and splendid north. Another road is being pushed eastward from Mojave, to open up a third continental highway; another is to be built in the Salinas, another along our coast. It is in the midst of these projected works, while on all sides the railroad builders are opening up to us the interior of the continent, when money is coming from Europe to give employment to labor, and while California is on the very highway of prosperity, that there comes up from all sides the hoarse cry of the demagogue, and the clamor of the politician, against the men who are doing these things. It comes from the Republican party, and from Republicans who are attempting to out-howl the Democracy in their denunciation of their own party friends and of a railroad system that is republican in its first suggestion and in its ultimate achievement.

It must not be considered strange that the recollections of an occasional Republican of the olden period restrain him from joining in this clamorous denunciation of old and honored Republicans, because they have achieved a Republican measure, and one that has done more good for California than anything that has ever been attempted in her behalf. We should be less willing to attempt to silence this noisy emptiness, or to resist this current of prejudices, if we believed that the railroad corporations had seriously abused the power attained by them. We do not believe that there are five men in California who would have administered their trust more generously, or exercised their power less tyrannically. That there have been perpetrated wrongs and exactions, that mistakes and oppressions have resulted from railroad management, no one doubts. That these wrongs have been remedied and unjust discriminations removed, when attention has been called to them, we have the authority of a hundred merchants to assert. That there is any system of business that is to disastrously affect the general prosperity of California, we do not believe; because it is for the interest of this corporation that California and San Francisco merchants and people should prosper. Their prosperity is our prosperity; their wealth our wealth; their progress is impossible, except as general progress keeps fully abreast with them. That the contract system is illegal and oppressive, and is enforced upon the mercantile community against its will and in injury to its business, we can not admit without attributing to our merchants a cowardice and subservience that is, in our opinion, no part of their character. These merchants are here at the very gate of the world's great ocean-highway. Their aggregate wealth out-values ten-fold all the railroad millions. Their brains, their courage, their conscience, and their self-interest would revolt against any commercial slavery that should be imposed upon them. We hear no complaints from their Board of Trade, their Chamber of Commerce, their Corn or Stock Exchange. We read no complaint in the leading commercial journals. We hear a querulous outcry from a hurt iron dealer, and a plaintive wail from a whiskey trafficker, at unjust charges. We hear no complaints from the Panama steamship line; none from Governor Perkins, and the coast lines; none from the great grain-buyers and warehouse men, or from men engaged in large transportation interests; none from the great grain-growers and landed proprietors; none from those parts of the State which have become prosperous through railroad facilities; none from those other parts of the State now destitute of railroad accommodations, and petitioning therefor; none from the general traveling public; and none from the real estate and property circles of San Francisco. There has not been a prominent business man who has made open issue with the railroad people upon whose sore spot we can not put our finger. The Sacramento Union quarreled over the railroad job-printing. The unfriendly feeling between the railroad and Booth & Co. occurred, as we have been informed, over business misunderstandings; Cohen's was over coal; Gorham and Carr, not till after they were dismissed from corporation employ; Haggis, not till he was denied discriminations in his Kern County business; John Doyle, not till he had revised a friendly report at the dictation of party interests, and was turned out of office therefor; Judge North, not till the company refused to sell him lands cheaper than to his neighbors; Harrison, over an excessive charge for bringing Milwaukee beer; Gibbs, over iron freights; Tom Fitch, for aid withheld to build a road from Benson to Tombstone; and so on to the end of a long chapter. Take from the railroad's enemies those with whom its business has brought them into unpleasant personal collision; those to whom it has denied favors solicited; those whom it has had no opportunity to reward for favors rendered; those lawyers whom it has not hired; those politicians whom it has not employed; those journals whom it has refused to subsidize; those blackmailers for whom it has found no use around legislatures, supervisors, courts, and hallot-boxes, and the railroad companies would be as fairly popular as anybody could be when doing their business, wielding their powers, and holding their patronage of employment. When we consider these things, and contemplate the personal character and the motives of the prominent anti-railroad men, who figure in conventions and air their grievances in the press and on the stump, we are amazed that so few men, and such small men, can raise so great a din. We are amazed that such men as sat in the recent Sacramento Convention allowed demagoguery and empty declaration to so overawe and subdue them that they assented to a platform of resolutions that is altogether indefensible. With the small politicians and impecunious demagogues, who are blowing their fish-horns around the walls of the railroad Jericho, we have but scant sympathy. With the oratorical denunciation of those old Republicans by this new generation of office-seeking and place-hunting adventurers, we have but little in common. When the business men of the State shall give utterance to their complaints; when hoards of trade, chambers of commerce, mechanics' institutes, agricultural associations, and men of wealth and property, shall give voice to their accusations of unfair treatment, or whenever it shall appear that injustice is being done to any class for which there is not an adequate remedy at law, the Argonaut will become the volunteer organ and the unbought champion of their rights. Our readers will, we pray, excuse us from thinking that the San Francisco ward politicians, the duplex political machine, the San Francisco Chronicle, Mr. Estee, W. W. Foote, Tom Fitch, "Charley" Sumner, and the loud-mouthed and blatant stump orators, can convince us that it was wise or politic for the Republican party to pass the railroad resolutions embraced in its platform, or that this class of propertyless politicians express public opinion in reference to the railroad system and its management in California.

What possible hope of success can there be for the Republican party under the present conditions? Let us pass the long plottings before the primaries in San Francisco. Let us pass that disgraceful day when Republicans were dragged from the polls and beaten, that Democrats might take their places with false certificates of registry, and come down to the convention. It was composed, taken as a whole, of as intelligent and honorable a body of gentlemen as was ever gathered in State Convention. They were honest men, who came together for an honest purpose. They were Americans—temperance men and farmers. They favored the Sunday law, and on the Sabbath would have the saloons closed. They favor the law, and would not be willing that the gravel miner should sluice his debris over home, orchard, and farm. They were not enemies of the railroads, and would not willingly see injustice done them. And yet by arts and intrigues known only to the politician, these delegates from the country brought away from that convention no single declaration of principle, and gained no point—had, in fact, no say. They were played; played by Hamilton Smith, a Democrat; played by Alvinza Hayward, a stock sharp; played by the League of Freedom, by the machine, by Dick Chute, and Drury Melone. And now—well, what now? Nobody is satisfied. Nobody ever is satisfied at the result of intrigue and duplicity. Success is not success that comes from lies and misrepresentations. Neither Estee, nor Estee's friends, nor any single candidate, nor any candidate's friend is content with the present condition of affairs. The eight anti-slickens counties are discontented, and will take action. The rum people are not satisfied, and will organize against the Republican ticket. The railroad company is driven out of the Republican party; the convention, by its resolutions, and Estee by his speech, have made it impossible that it should give either money aid or voting support to the Republican party. The temperance people are outraged, and will call another convention. The Christian community believes that Estee has agreed to veto any practical legislation that will interfere with the Sunday traffic in alcohol. There is apathy, discontent, discouragement, and demoralization throughout the whole Republican party. The Republican press is cold and apathetic. Republican orators, except hirelings and candidates, are refusing to campaign, and it is said that the liquor interests and League of Freedom are refusing to advance funds. It looks very much as though the Republican party of California had met a Waterloo. Neither night nor Blucher can save it if the present feeling continues.

The Chinese question is not, as yet, definitely settled. It is, as yet, an experiment. For the first time within the history of modern civilization a nation has undertaken to exclude by legislation the immigration to its country of the people of another nationality. It is a new departure, and for the United States of America it is a departure in contravention of a principle that underlies our traditions. We have undertaken in the interest of our own labor class to declare that laborers from China shall not be permitted to come among us as laborers. At the same time we have reserved to the scholars, the travelers, the merchants, and indeed to all classes of Chinese except the common laborers, the same right of immigration and the same freedom of intercourse that we accord to the citizens of all other countries. Our Pacific Coast was the first to feel the evils of unlimited invasion of Chinese laborers. The law of Congress prohibiting this invasion was a concession to our demands. It was on the part of the Eastern law-makers a graceful and generous concession. It has been acquiesced in by an intelligent Eastern public opinion. Statesmen, legislators, and thinkers are everywhere watching the operations of this law with intelligent interest. These reflections are preliminary to the suggestion that the success of this experiment, and the continuation of this law will depend largely upon its interpretation by the courts, the conduct of its advocates, and the commercial, transportation, and business interests affected by it. If it shall be so narrowly interpreted and so harshly enforced as to work injury to trade and hardship to individuals other than the working class, it will deserve to be modified or repealed. The effort of injudicious friends or over-zealous demagogues to harass and annoy merchants or travelers will result in its abrogation. To prevent the Chinese sailor shipping at an American port from being returned to and discharged in the port of his shipment; to deny to a European traveler the passage through the country of his servant; to refuse laborers from Cuba a passage across our continent to their homes in China; to refuse a Chinese railroad passenger from San Francisco to New York the right to pass through Canada; to be over-zealous in investigating the occupation of individual Chinese travelers from Australia or elsewhere when they come to our shores, and to annoy and harass Chinese by small and vexatious hindrances, is not wise, nor generous, nor politic. It has so far been fortunate for us that the adjudication of these questions has fallen to Judges Field, Sawyer, and Hoffman, and not to the politically elected members of our State judiciary. It is unfortunate that there exists an official class that has in it some dunder-headed idiots, who think to emphasize their personal importance by placing absurd restrictions upon the landing of Chinese. It is unfortunate that the Irish will not dishand their leagues of deliverance, and mind their own business. It is unfortunate that certain newspapers will pander to this narrow and bigoted prejudice. It is unfortunate that any one should not allow this law to have a legal and generous interpretation, in order that our coast may continue to enjoy practical immunity from the invasion of Chinese laborers.

There may be among our readers those who would have preferred another Congressional nominee than the Hon. Paul Neumann. Mr. Neumann is, however, the nominee. He is an able lawyer. He is an accomplished scholar. He is a respectable citizen. He was fairly nominated. He will, if elected, be no man's man. He will not discredit his position in the House of Representatives, and he will prove more than the equal of average members in learning, industry, and legislative experience. He has been most shamefully, and we believe falsely, assaulted. He prints in another column his defense. He substantiates it by proof. If there is any Republican who has been influenced by the whispered malice of his accusers, it is their duty to read this defense. It is our opinion that such attacks always help a man with those who in their actions allow generous emotions to have influence over them. We hope Paul Neumann may be elected.

When so good a man as Mr. Pickering gets wrong, and allows the Call to get on the unpopular side of a question, we know that he has been imposed upon by artful and designing persons. If the good Mr. Pickering will impose upon himself the burden of reading his own most excellent journal, and will give careful perusal to the detailed account of the last primary election, he will deeply reproach himself for advising the County Committee to allow the same scenes to be enacted. In the most friendly spirit we take the liberty of informing Mr. Pickering that the sixteen members of the County Committee who compose the majority are anti-machine, and the six minority belong to Mr. Higgins and his associates, and that we who are posted designate Mr. Higgins and his "pals" as the "machine."

A paragraph in last week's Argonaut was so carelessly phrased that it may be interpreted to imply the charge of intemperance against Mr. S. D. Waterman, the Republican candidate for Superintendent of Schools. Nothing was farther from our intention. Nothing would be more unjust, if we had intended it. Mr. Waterman is not only entirely free from the intemperate habit, but is qualified in all respects for the office. In point of learning, experience, mental and moral training, deportment, and industry, he will adorn the position, if elected—as we hope he may be—to his duties.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Cardinal Newman was a skillful violin-player in his earlier years, and even now, when he is more than eighty years old, he sometimes draws the bow.

A rumor comes from across the water that Robert Browning, the distinguished poet, is about to marry an American lady of wealth and position.

Mount Stuart, the new palace of the Marquis of Bute, which will cost at least one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, is to be ready for habitation next summer.

Baron Wilhelm Rothschild, of Frankfurt, returned his last year's income at $1,192,000, while his brother, Baron Meyer Carl, confessed to $1,140,000. The amount of their income tax exceeded $70,000.

Cardinal Howard when he comes to London makes it a point to visit his old regiment, the Second Life Guards. There is not, however, a single officer now in the corps who was a comrade of his eminence.

The King of Holland sometimes walks all night in the populous parts of the Hague. When he reaches home, he personally supervises the trying of his potatoes, which he takes with several glasses of beer.

A brother of President Garfield has lived for many years in Northern Michigan on a small and sterile farm. The Grand Haven papers say that he is now building a fine house and barn with money given him by Mrs. Garfield.

Somebody who lately saw Charles Reade describes him as tall, slender, and wearing glasses. His hair is gray, and sparse on top of his head. He has a short, full beard, which is also gray; a face that is pleasant in conversation, but stern in repose, and a general air of determination and strong will.

Lovers of tobacco have found an apostle in Prince Charles, the brother of the Emperor William of Germany, who consumes from a dozen and a half to two dozen strong Havanas daily, and is eighty-one years old. Smoking has been his inveterate habit from early manhood. He reads without glasses, and often joins in the hunt, besides doing his professional work of military supervision.

Gilbert, of "Pinafore" fame, wanted to become a sure-enough yachtsman, like Lester Wallack. His Royal Highness, Duke of Edinburgh, Knight of the Garter, who is also rear-admiral of the Royal Yacht Club at Cowes, not to mention that he plays the fiddle wittingly, proposed the composer. The Marquis of Londonderry seconded the nomination. Notwithstanding a royal duke and a marquis, the club buried Mr. Gilbert in blackbills.

When Sir Reginald Graham took possession of his ancestral estate at Norton Conyers, near Ripon, England, re-acquired after an alienation of twenty-eight years, he was received with almost royal honors. Triumphal arches were erected at the entrance to the park, and the village bells of Wath rang merry peals. The oldest tenant on the estate presented an address of congratulation; and a number of the tenants drew the carriage containing Sir Reginald and Lady Graham from the park gates to the house.

Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, cares nothing for splendor. He rides in an ordinary black coach, usually drawn by six mules, and followed by twelve cavalrmen, mostly negroes, whose discipline is not too strict to permit them to smoke cigarettes while escorting his majesty. The coachman and footmen are shabby in worn suits and silver lace. The emperor wears the plainest of black clothes, and is very courteous to all who approach him. He has aged rapidly since his visit to the United States six years ago.

Prince Louis of Battenburg, who is with the Duke of Connaught, in Egypt, was some years ago in Canada, and on one occasion, a holiday intervening, it became impossible to get the cards of invitation for a ball on board the flagship. Prince Louis found the proprietor of one of the printing offices went to the case, took off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, and set up the card, afterward printing it. In accordance with a good German custom, he had been regularly instructed in the art, trade, and mystery of a printer.

Baron Rothschild, of Vienna, evidently does not care to spend money merely for the sake of spending, and he gave the rapacious Bonifaces of Bayreuth a good lesson when he went there to attend the performance of "Parsifal." The hotel-keepers had laid themselves out to bleed every visitor mercilessly, in a Niagara-Falls-hackman sort of a way, and they especially expected to fatten on the plethoric purse of Rothschild. But lo! he came in his own private railway car, attended by servants and a cook. The car was shunted on to a siding, provisions "in the rough" were brought by express, and prepared, and cooked, and eaten in the car. And there the millionaire baron dined and lodged during his stay in Bayreuth, and smiled with pitying disdain upon the baffled pirates of the inns.

A sharp disciplinarian is General Gallifet. While directing the manoeuvres of the French army on review at Chalons recently he noticed some error in the movements of a dragoon parade under the command of General Clermont-Tonnerre, one of the oldest officers in the service. Quickly he directed the latter to repeat the movement. The veteran complied, after consulting with members of his staff, and all through the evolution constantly received suggestions from them. At last, "Retire, gentlemen," cried Gallifet, "you annoy the general." "No," said the other, "they assist me. I do not understand these manoeuvres, and have asked these gentlemen to refresh my memory, so that I may not seem ignorant before the troops." "You don't understand the drill?" cried Gallifet, pale with emotion. "How can you expect it?" was the response; "I am in garrison with two small squadrons, and a miserably insufficient drill-ground. But I can learn the drill in eight days." "In eight days," said Gallifet; "it will be too late. I am obliged to ask you to resign. Place your command in the hands of the oldest of your colonels."

Marshal MacMahon's eldest son, Lieutenant Patrick, emulates the heroes of Lever's novels. He is at Falaise with his regiment, and the soul of all the garrison sports. Some weeks since he was victor in a steeple-chase, at which, as a handicap, three breakneck leaps were imposed on him only. Lieutenant MacMahon is no gambler, but is fond of winning eccentric bets. A few weeks ago a military chum laid a small wager that Mac would not smash, in the broad daylight, a convent window with a bad egg. The sacrilegious nature of the prank staggered him, nevertheless he resolved to win the bet. He was to fling the egg as he was riding by the convent with some brother officers. When the foul missile went through the pane, Lieutenant Patrick dismounted, rang the convent bell, asked to see the reverend mother, told her what he had done, and begged her to inflict a penance. She refusing, he took his watch and chain, and a ring that was on his finger, and asked her if she would allow him to dedicate them to the poor, whom she habitually relieved. As she could not reject a gift offered to her in trust for them, she accepted the atonement. The ring was of considerable value.

Verdi possesses a handsome and extensive estate in the vicinity of Parma, that he has named the Villa Agata, after his first wife. He there passes the summer months. In winter he occupies a wing of the magnificent palace of the Dorias at Genoa. The present representative of this ancient house is one of Verdi's most fervent admirers, and is rendered happy by the composer's acceptance of his hospitality. The palace is surrounded by a lofty gilded paling. This passed, a splendid garden is entered that extends to the shore of the blue sea. From a lofty terrace an enchanting view of the surrounding country is obtained. A gravel path leads through shrubbery to a high door of glass, that opens into the composer's palatial suite. The veneration with which he is treated is shown by the numerous floral designs that are here to be seen bearing the letters that form his name. Every day these are made fresh. A choice picture gallery, a well-selected library, musical instruments, and costly gifts from Egyptian nobles, presented at the first performance of "Aida," adorn these rooms. There is a rare Cairo lamp, a present from the Khedive, and rugs and costly tapestries cover floor and wall. The composer possesses one of the choicest luxuries that a private citizen can call his own.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Confessional.

[SPAIN.]

It is a lie—their Priests, their Pope,
Their Saints, their . . . all they fear or hope
Are lies, and lies—there! thro' my door
And ceiling, there! and walls and floor,
There, lies they lie, shall still be buried
Till spite of them I reach the world!
You think Priests just and holy men!
Before they put me in this den
I was a human creature, too,
With flesh and blood like one of you—
A girl that laughed in beauty's pride
Like lilacs in the world outside.
I had a lover—hush, avant!
This poor wretched body, grim and gaunt,
Was kissed all over till it burned,
By lips the truest love e'er turned His heart's own tint: one night they kissed
My soul out in a burning mist.
So, next day, when the accustomed train
Of things grew round my sense again,
"That is a sin," I said; and I go
With downcast eyes to church I slow,
And pass to the confessional-chair,
And tell the old mild father there.
But when I falter Beltran's name,
"Ha!" quoth the father; "much I blame
The sin; yet wherefore idly grieve?
Despair not—strenuously retrieve!
Nay, I will turn this love of thine
To lawful love, almost divine."
"For he is young, and led astray,
This Beltran, and he schemes, men say,
To change the laws of church and state.
So, thine shall be an angel's fate,
Who, ere the thunder breaks, should roll
Its cloud away and save his soul."
"For, when he lies upon thy breast,
Thou mayst demand and be possessed
Of all his plans, and next day steal
To me, and all those plans reveal."

The Immolation of Constance de Beverly.

A den which, chilling every sense
Of feeling, hearing, sight,
Was called the Vault of Penitence,
Excluding air and light
But though, in the monastic pile,
Did of this penitential aisle
Some vague tradition go,
Few knew, save the Abbot, knew
Where the place lay; and still more few
Were those who had from him the clue
To that dread vault to go.
Victim and executioner
Were blindfold when transported there.
In low, dark rounds the arches hung,
From the rusted rock the side-walls
sprung;
The grave-stones rudely sculptured o'er,
Half sunk in earth, by time half worn,
Were all the pavement of the floor;
The mildew-drops fell one by one,
With tinkling splash, upon the stone;
A cresset, in an iron chain,
Which served to light this drear domain,
With damp and darkness seemed to strive
As if it scarce might keep alive.
And yet it dimly seemed to show
The awful conclave met below.
There, met to doom in secrecy,
Were placed the heads of convents three;
All servants of Saint Benedict,
The statutes of whose order strict
On iron table lay;
In long black robes, on seats of stone,
Behind were three judges shown
By the pale cresset's ray;
Before them stood a guilty pair;
But, though an equal fate they share,
Yet one alone deserves our care.
Her sex a pagan's blood belied;
The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
Obscured her charms, but could not hide.
Her cap down o'er her face she drew;
And, on her doublet breast,
She tried to hide the badge of blue,
Lord Marmion's falcon's tress.
But at the Prior's command,
A monk undid the silken band,
That tied her tresses fair,
And raised the bonnet from her head,
And down her slender form they spread
In ringlets rich and rare.
Constance de Beverly they knew,
Sister professed of Fontevraud,
Whom the church numbered with the dead,
For broken vows and convent fled.
When thus her face was given to view,
Although no pallid was her hue,
It did a ghastly contrast bear
To those bright ringlets glistening fair.
Her look composed and steady eye
Bespoke a matchless constancy;
And there she stood so calm and pale
That, but her breathing did not fail,
And motion slight aye and head
And of her bosom warranted
That neither sense nor pulse she lacks,
You might have thought a form of wax,
Wrought to the very life, was there,
So still she was, so pale, so fair.
Her comrade was the sordid soul,
Such as does murder for a meed,
Who, but for fear, knows no control,
Because his conscience, seared and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed;
One whose brute feeling ne'er aspires
Beyond his own base, feeble desires.
Such tools the tempter ever needs
To do the savagest of deeds;
For them no visioned terrors daunt,
Their rights no fancied spectres haunt;
One fear with them, of all most base—
The fear of death—alone finds place.
This wretch was clad in frock and cowl,
And shamed not loud to mourn and howl,
His body on the floor to dash,
And crouch, like hound beneath the lash;
While his mute partner, standing near,
Waited her doom without a tear.
Yet well the luckless wretch might shriek,
Well might her paleness terror speak!
For there was seen, in that dark wall,
Two niches, narrow, deep, and tall.
Who enters at such crisis door
Shall ne'er, I ween, and exit more.
In each a slender meal was laid
Of roots, of water, and of bread;
By each, in Benedictine dress,
Two haggard monks stood motionless,
With hands joined down beside the hind,
Sho'—"the grim entrance of the porch;
Reckless back the smoky beam,
The dark-red walls and arches gleam;

That I and every priest, to purge
His soul, may fast and use the scourge."
That father's beard was long and white,
With love and truth his brow seemed bright
I went back, all on fire with joy,
And that same evening bade the boy
Tell me, as lovers should, heart-free,
Something to prove his love of me.
He told me what he would not tell
For hope of Heaven or fear of Hell;
And I lay listening in such pride,
Zephyr soon, he had left my side,
Tripped to the church by morning light
To save his soul in his despite.
I told the father all his schemes,
Who were his comrades, what their dreams;
"And now make haste," I said, "to kiss
The one spot from his soul away.
To-night he comes, but not the same
Will look!" At night he never came.
Nor next night. On the after-morn
I went forth with a strength new-born.
The church was empty. Something drew
My steps into the street. I knew
It led me to the market-place—
Where, lo!—on high—the father's face!
That horrible black scaffold dress—
The staped block . . . God sink the rest
That head strapped back, that blinding vest,
Those knotted hands and naked breast,
Till near one busy hangman pressed—
And on the neck these arms caressed—
No part in aught they hope or fear!
No Heaven with them, no Hell—and here
No Earth, not so much space as pens
My body in their worst of dens
But shall bear God and Man my cry—
Lies—lies, again—and still, they lie!
—Robert Browning.

Hewn stones and cement were displayed,
And building tools in order laid.
And now that blind old Abbot rose,
To speak the Chapter's doom
On those the wall was to inclose
Alive within the tomb;
But stopped, because that woful maid,
Gathering her powers to speechlessyad:
"I speak not to improve your grace;
Well know I for one minute's space
Successful might I sue.
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain
For if a death of lingering pain
To cleanse my soul be penance vain,
Vain are your masses too.
I listened to a traitor's tale,
I left the convent and the veil;
For three long years I bowed my pride,
A horse-boy in his train to ride;
And well my folly's need he gave,
Who forfeited to his slave,
All here and all beyond the grave.
He saw young Clara's face more fair,
He knew her of broad lands the heir,
Forgot his vows, his faith forswore,
And Constance was beloved no more.
His tale I told, and he agreed,
But did my fate and wish agree,
Ne'er had been read, in story old,
Of maiden true betrayed for gold.
That loved, or was avenged like me,
And now my tongue the secret tells,
Not that remorse my doom avails,
But to assure my soul that none
Shall ever wed with Marmion.
Had fortune my last hope betrayed,
This packet, to the king conveyed,
Had given him to the headsman's stroke.
Although my heart that instant broke—
Now, men of death, work forth your will,
For I can suffer, and be still;
And come he slow, or come he fast,
It is but death who comes at last.
Yet dread me, from my living tomb,
Ye vassal slaves of bloody Rome!
If Marmion's late remorse should wake,
Full soon such vengeance will he take
That you shall wish the fiery Dane
Had rather been your guest again.
Behind, a darker hour ascends!
The altars quake, the crosser bends,
The ire of a despotic king
Rides forth upon destruction's wing;
Then shall these vaults, so strong and deep,
Burst open to the sea-wind's sweep.
Some traveler then shall find my bones
Whitening amid disjunct stones,
And, ignorant of priests' cruelty,
Marvel such relics here should be."
Fixed was her look, and stern her air,
Back from her shoulders streamed her hair;
The looks that wont her brow to shade,
Stared up directly from her head;
Her figure seemed to rise more high;
Her voice, despair's wild energy
Had given a tone of prophecy;
Appalled the astonished conclave sate;
With stupid eyes the men of fate
Gazed on the light, inspired form,
And listened for the avenging storm.
The judges felt the victim's dread;
No hand was moved, no word was said,
Till thus the Abbot's doom was given,
Raising his sightless balls to heaven:
"Sister, let thy sorrow cease;
Sinful be thou, but not thy deed."
An hundred winding steps convey
That conclave to the upper day;
But ere they breathed the fresher air,
They heard the shriekings of despair,
And many a stifled groan;
With speed their upward way they take (Such speed as age and fear can make),
And crossed themselves for terror's sake,
As hurrying, tottering on;
Even in the vesper's heavenly tone
They seemed to hear a dying groan,
And bade the passing knell to toll
For welfare of a paring soul.
Slow o'er the midnight way it swung,
Northumbrian rocks in answer rung;
To Workworth cell the echoes rolled,
His beads the wakeful hermit told.
The Bamfborough peasant raised his head,
But slept ere half a prayer he said;
So far was heard the mighty knell,
The stag sprang up on Cheviot Fell,
Spread his broad nostril to the wind,
Listed before, aside, behind,
Then, lo! he leaped down beside the hind,
And quaked among the mountain fern,
To hear that sound so dull and stern.
—Sir Walter Scott.

LITERARY NOTES.

"A Manual of Elocution and Reading" is a volume of collected extracts from well-known authors, together with a treatise on the principles and practices of elocution. It is prepared by Edward Brooks, of Pennsylvania, and seems intended to serve as a sort of advance reader for school use. Published by Eldridge & Brothers, Philadelphia; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.50.

Mr. William Mallock is at least interesting and readable, if he is not infrequently untrustworthy and inartistic. His latest hobby is a defense of conservatism. Although it is more fitted for England and the other effete European monarchies, yet it treats of a question which is becoming more and more important every day in this country. Under the title of "Social Equality, a Short Study in a Missing Science," the author endeavors to show that the great builder-up of human society has ever been a desire in the individual to attain social distinction. Without this factor of civilization, society would have no security. The hope of progress which this condition of affairs gives to the poor man is one of its main benefits; the security which it warrants to the man who has attained wealth is a secondary, although important, consideration. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

"Hints and Remedies for the Treatment of Common Accidents and Diseases" is a little book which stands at the head of all similar productions. Since Dr. Turner first compiled its contents it has undergone numerous changes, and passed through many editions. Not long ago twenty eminent London physicians, representatives of the different hospitals, undertook its revision and enlargement. The result is that this work has now become the standard work for home and ship use, or in cases where a physician can not be procured at once. The volume is accompanied by a chapter on the rules of "Simple Hygiene," which it would be well for every one to read. The portion of the volume which treats of the care and preservation of the teeth, also a method of curing toothache, will prove highly interesting to the average household. Published by Macmillan & Co., London and New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, in paper, 25 cents; in cloth, 50 cents.

The public's desire for cheap literature in the form of the "Seaside" and "Franklin Square" publications has induced an Eastern publisher to try the experiment of issuing the best foreign works in a cheap, but more convenient form. He has chosen a volume duodecimo in size, and printed in large type, with thick paper covers. They are convenient, and possess in no degree the attributes or appearance of the old yellow-covered novels. They are issued weekly. "The Tricks of the Greeks Unveiled" is by Robert Houdin, the great French conjurer, who was unequaled by any of his contemporaries. It describes in an entertaining manner the methods by which gamblers and sharpers win at cards, their various tricks at shuffling, and their methods in marking cards. "L'Abbé Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy, is another translation of this clever novel. "Freckles" is a new story, by Rebecca F. Redcliff. "They were Married," by Besant and Rice, has already appeared in Harper's series. Published by J. W. Lovell & Co., 14 and 16 Vesey Street, New York; for sale by the booksellers; price of the first three, 20 cents each; of the fourth, 10 cents.

Announcements: Henri Dupin, the oldest of French authors and dramatists living, has just published a book under the title, "La Vieillesse de Mazarin." It is filled with interesting anecdotes, and is written with a vigor scarcely to be looked for in a man of his age—he is ninety-five. Mr. Frank R. Stockton has gone to Europe. He will spend a few weeks in London, and go thence to Paris, where he expects to remain until cold weather sets in. It is his intention to spend the winter in Italy, or the south of France. The result of this journey—whether it will give Mr. Stockton his first view of the Old World—will be seen in a new series of "Rudder-Grange" papers in the Century. On the first of September, Estes & Lauriat will issue "The Young Folks' History of London," by W. H. Ridenour. "Soliloquies in Song" is the title of a volume of poems, by Mr. Alfred Austin, which Macmillan & Co. will publish in the fall. Mr. George Saintsbury's "Short History of French Literature" will be published this September. The Academy says that the author aims at presenting a "complete but succinct history, with full biographical and historical details of the whole course of French literature, compiled from an examination of that literature itself."—Louis IX., "the Pious," appears as one of the youthful characters in a novel for young people, which Mr. Frank R. Stockton has left behind for publication in St. Nicholas. The serial will probably be begun in the November number. —Alexander H. Stephens has compiled his history of the United States. The final proof-sheets are revised and returned to the printer. It is a complete history of this country down to the time of Senator Hill's death. —A new serial by Mr. W. D. Howells will be begun in the February Century. It is called "A Sea Change," and is an international tale, the scene being laid in this country. Among other subjects treated is the problem of self-help among women, with certain tragic phases of New England life. "It might be noticed in this connection," says the Critic, "that the most of Mr. Howells's titles are taken from Shakespeare." Give us some examples. —"Hands of Justice" is the striking title of a new serial story by F. W. Robinson, which is shortly to appear in Harper's Weekly. —The latest "birthday-book" is one compiled from the speeches and letters of John Bright.

Miscellany: Mr. Browning is taking a holiday in the south of France. The manuscript works of the physician Galen, which were supposed to be lost, have been discovered in Salonica by a Monsieur Papageorgis. They date from the fifteenth century, and appear to have originally formed two hundred and forty-eight sheets—one hundred and forty-four are in good condition, twenty-four are mutilated or worm-eaten, and eighty are missing. —The October Harper will contain "Passages from the Journal of a Total Wreck," written by a young lady well known in New York society, and founded on the World's employment bureau circular, which is advertised as furnishing dancing young men for parties and receptions. —The sale of Miss Woolson's "Anne" has been extraordinary. Nine editions have been exhausted, and the presses are now at work upon another. —Peter the Great, of Russia, is made out a wilder barbarian than he is generally supposed to have been by some documents which Professor Kovalevsky has recently discovered among the Spanish State papers. These are reports of the Spanish ambassador concerning Peter's reception at the English court. At the Escurial the professor also found some reports from Spaniards who were in England with Philip during Bloody Mary's reign, describing the bitter feeling of the English against the Spanish alliance, and declaring how short a time Philip's influence would last. —The Wide-Awake Magazine for September contains, among other articles, an illustrated story, "The Castle of the Winds," by Mrs. Champney; the seventh number of Arthur Gilman's "Stories from the Dictionary," and another of Ezekiel Butterworth's delightful "Music Biographies." —Babyland for September is also out, and contains several charming little stories and poems for the smaller children. Published by D. Lothrop, Boston; for sale by J. H. Dorey, 527 Commercial Street. —Miss Virginia Johnson's "English Daisy Miller" is said to have been founded on fact, that lady having met during her travels abroad a young English girl whose manners she exactly reproduced. The dénouement was an actual occurrence. —A perfect copy of the third edition of Shakespeare's "Passionate Pilgrim" (date 1612) has lately been discovered in England. —"A Reverend Idol" has captured the market as well as the critics. It has gone into its seventh edition. —It has lately been suggested that the author of "An Earnest Trifler" is also the author of "Democracy." —A memorial tablet in recognition of the late Colonel Chester's services as editor and annotator of the "Westminster Abbey Register" is to be placed in the Abbey immediately. —Professor Max Müller is about to publish a volume containing the lectures which he lately delivered at Cambridge. —Monsieur Arsène Houssaye's recollections, furnishing a complete history of literary and artistic activity in France during the last thirty years, will shortly be published in Paris.

THE INNER MAN.

Warsaw society is still excited over an exhibition of fantastic extravagance with which a number of Russian officers have recently entertained themselves. Adjutant-General Count Pillar and Prince Mijanowicz, of the Hussars, conceived the idea of a Roman banquet in the style of Lucullus, and twenty-six other officers united in the novel diversion. The banquet hall was filled with roses and perfumed with all the odors of Arabia, and the feasters arrayed themselves in Roman togas, and wore garlands of roses on their heads. Swallows' nests from India, wild African pigeons, and a ragout of nightingales were among the costly viands with which they were served. The banquet lasted eight hours, and cost twenty-one thousand dollars, or seven hundred and fifty dollars apiece. This gastronomical extravagance has provoked bitter criticism in Warsaw, where it is denounced as a wicked imitation of the wanton luxury which preceded the fall of the Roman Empire, and where it has, at least, done nothing to make more agreeable the relations existing between the Polish population and the Russian garrison.

The New York Hotel Mail says: "I see that at one of the up-town hotels they serve cheese with the lettuce, which is the English, and by many people regarded as the proper style. But when I see men eat a huge bit of our American cheese in connection with a slice of pie, I expect to hear some one cry out: 'Time's up! All aboard!' Cheese with pie is more than proper—it is necessary. Cheese with lettuce, English or not, is acceptable—that is all. As for American cheese, the Mail of course knows that large quantities of it are eaten in England. I have had it in some of the best clubs. There is nothing exclusively English any more. I was promised one day, when about to dine en famille with an English gentleman, a real old-fashioned English plum-pudding. When it came to the table it was a little round affair, hardly bigger than and about the size of a croquette. It had come from America in a tin box. They thought it a joke. I knew it for a compliment. It was very appetizing with its fiery sauce, but I marvelled if there was a single English dish upon which we Americans were not giving them points.

Hippocrates (450 B. C.) states that the mode of preparing cheese from milk was discovered by the Scythians at a very early date, and was used by them, and also among the pastoral natives of Canaan and Asia Minor, as a common article of food. Virgil describes cheese as the common feed of the Roman shepherds. Jesse sent ten cheeses by the hand of David to the captain of the thousand in which the brethren of the latter served, (1 Samuel xvii, 18.) And "cheese of kine" were brought to David at Mahanaim, (2 Samuel xvii, 29.) Job complains in his anguish of his distemper: "Hast thou not poured me out like milk and curdled me like cheese?" Among the Romans it was a practice to flavor cheese with thyme and other sweet herbs, and the custom was continued during the Middle Ages. In Cheshire, Massachusetts, was made the famous mammoth cheese which was presented to President Jefferson, January 1, 1802. On a given day the dairy women sent their curds to one place. The quantity was too great to be pressed even in a cider mill, so that in addition to the intended present three additional cheeses were made, weighing seventy pounds each. The mammoth cheese weighed one thousand four hundred and fifty pounds. Mr. Jefferson sent back a piece of this to the inhabitants, to satisfy them of its excellence; and he also sent pieces of it, so it is said, to the Governors of the several States.

Briffault, the French gourmet, invented the most honorable Companionship of the Bell. The candidates for admission were taught how to swallow down champagne. One of the glass bells which are generally placed over cheese was filled to the brim with champagne, and the candidate had to drink it off at a draught, under pain of all kinds of fines. Briffault was a rare specimen of a gastronomist. He told a colleague, who said that two could sit down comfortably to a fowl, that he agreed with him, but that he thought he and the fowl were quite company enough to form the duo. Bequet was one of the shining lights of the Companions of the Bell. He drank deeply, and on the evening of the death of a very near relative, a friend found him discussing a partridge and some champagne. His visitor expressed surprise at seeing him in a public place on the evening of his uncle's death. "Ah, you know, my dear fellow," said Bequet, "what more can I do? You know that champagne is mourning." His last illness, described by his friends, was tortured by incessant thirst. He was craving for drink the whole time, and it is said that in one of his paroxysms of thirst he drank down the contents of the glass in which his night-light had been burning. Barthe, the friend of Brillat-Savarin, was punished for his love of good cheer with an affection of the stomach which made his life one of martyrdom. This malady did not cure his gourmandism, but rather increased it. One day he was invited to be present at a grand dinner at the Hotel de Lauraguais. The hour mentioned was four o'clock, but he was there at three o'clock, and before going up to pay his respects to his host, he went down into the kitchen to interview the chef, to whom he said: "You know I have been dieted by my doctors, and I must warn you to put no salt in your soup." Without waiting for a reply, he turned on his heel and walked off. At four o'clock precisely dinner was served. Barthe took his seat, and began his soup, but, horrible to relate, it had been more than usually salted. Pale with rage, he rose from his seat, withdrew discreetly, and taking his hat in his hand, went down to the kitchen, where he slapped the chef on either side of his face, and went off to dine with the Duc de Choiseul.

CCXLVI.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday.
September 17.
Ox-tail Soup.
Cantaloupe.
Broiled Chicken.
Potato Croquettes. Summer Squash.
Escalloped Onions.
Roast Beef.
Tomatoes, Spanish Dressing.
Frozen Peaches and Cream. Sponge Cake.
Pears, Nectarines, Plums, Gages, Figs, Peaches, Apples, and Grapes.

ESCALLOPED ONIONS.—Boil till tender six large onions. Take them up, drain, and separate them; put a layer of bread or cracker-crumbs in a pudding-dish, then a layer of onions alternately, until the dish is full. Season with pepper and salt, add a little butter, moisten with milk, and brown half an hour in the oven.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
STARCH.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S CHOCOLATE.

SMITH
BROTHERS'
PACKAGE
BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.

AGENTS,

121 and 123 Market Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM, For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION

called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal.

References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Shurtleff, Stockton,
Supt. State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.
(Established 1834.)

HAY, GRAIN, AND
COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

39 Clay Street,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Telephone No. 35.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO.
Commission Merchants,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street
Liberal advances made on consignments

S. & G. GUMP,
581 and 583 Market Street, S. F.,
Manufacturers

Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture
Frames, and Etc.-Etc.

IMPORTERS OF GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHRO-
MOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY.
OFFICE, - - 325 Market St.
WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts.

C. SPRECKELS, President,
J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President,
A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO.
San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of

RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON
Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered
Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel,
and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts,
Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting Rods, etc., etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron.
202 MARKET STREET.

THE
AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY
SAN FRANCISCO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ALL
Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar
for export.
C. ADOLPHE LOW, President.
Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON

PACIFIC IRON WORKS
RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO.,

127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco.
Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines—
both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN

Wholesale and Retail Order for House
Dealer in COAL or Office by Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company.
118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants

204 and 206 California Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.

PAYOT, UPHAM & CO

STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS,
Commercial Printers.

and Blank Book Manufacturers

204 Sansome Street, near Pine.

TABER, HARKER & Co.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE
GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San Francisco

BONESTELL
AND
ALLEN & CO.
PAPER WAREHOUSE
411 413 & 415 SANSOME ST. S. F.
Importers of All Kinds of Paper.

WILLIAMS, DIMOND & CO.,
SHIPPING AND
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Union Building, Junction Market and Pine Streets, San Francisco.

AGENTS FOR PACIFIC MAIL S. S.

Co.; Pacific Steam Navigation Co.; The Cunard
Royal Mail S. S. Co.; The Hawaiian Line; The China
Traders' Insurance Co., Limited; The Marine Insurance
Co. of London; The Baldwin Locomotive Works; The Glasgow Iron Co.; Nich. Asbton & Son's Salt.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALA-
tion, for Consumption, Asthma,
Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh,
Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic
and Nervous Disorders. Prepared by
DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, Philadelphia,
Pa. Package contains all directions, and is easily sent by express ready for USE AT HOME. H. E. MATHEWS, Forwarding
Agent, 606 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlets.

ALASKA
COMMERCIAL CO.

NO. 310 SANSOME STREET,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

NOTICE TO SPORTSMEN.

The undersigned having sold his lease to the CHAY-
BRAIN TRACT, in the Suisun Marches, together with his ark, boats, etc., to a private club of gentlemen, who will hereafter strictly preserve all the premises for their own shooting only, hereby notifies his former patrons, and all persons who have been in the habit of visiting TEAL STATION, that it will be IMPOSSIBLE to accommodate them, or in any way afford them shooting facilities there, and they are therefore respectfully requested not to stop at that station.

JAMES PAINE, late of Teal Station.

CHAS. GOFFRIE,
SOLO VIOLINIST, FROM LONDON,

For many years Musical Instructor to

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES:

Le Duc de Penthièvre.
The Duchess of Hamilton,
(nee Princess Marie de Baden).
La Duchesse de Chartres,
(nee Princess Françoise d'Orleans).
La Princesse Marguerite de Nemours.
La Princesse Isabella de Montpensier, etc.,

Gives to advanced piano pupils instruction in the works of Mozart, Beethoven, etc., with violin accompaniment.

Address 807 BUSH STREET.

C. P. SHEFFIELD. N. W. SPAULDING. J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

FINE

Snits, TAILORING $25.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Snits, TAILORING $40.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Snits, TAILORING $60.

Merchant Tailor and Clothier,
J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

PACIFIC BUREAU OF EDUCATION
Supplies (1) Teachers with desirable positions; (2) Colleges with Professors and Tutors; (3) Academies, Seminaries and Public Schools of every grade, and families, with competent Principals and Teachers; (4) Colleges, Seminaries,
Teachers' Institutes, and Lyceums with Lecturers. Circulars
and forms of application sent free by MYRON H. SAYage, Manager, 19 New Montgomery Street.

DRAMA.

"One touch of water makes the whole world kin," quotes old Jarvis in the play, and the house rises to the the quotation, malgre that it doesn't fit so very appositely when one comes to think of it—for, after all, what is the touch of "water" in the situation? An escaping convict, presumably with his red hand raised against his fellows, is perishing on the road for want of food. Reading of it in the newspaper, sitting calmly by the breakfast fire, one would not be apt to recognize the high moral duty of extending help to such a one, and would cry, "Give him up to the authorities; restore him to the jail, where he belongs." But old Jarvis having made his little quotation, points it by bringing out the brandy-flask. Perhaps the touch of nature is in the flask, for the every appearance of that portable article is hailed with the wildest manifestations of delight when it first appears between the curtains of the showman's van, again when the tender-hearted policeman extends its aid to Harold's starving wife, and later when the officer of the law fortifies himself against the chill night air with a vivifying pocket-pistol. It is these touches of nature which the skillful playwright seeks, and the literary playwright looks on with amazement, and wonders at the curious fancy of the public which is caught with a little every-day trick like this, but is enured with polished, rounded text, keeping company with situations with never a thrill in them. The real basis of every melodrama is the persecution of the weak, and it is human nature to give sympathy to the under dog in the fight—unless one be the upper dog. As a matter of fact, there has never been but one great melodrama written. In all others there is something of the impossible and the absurd. But in the "Two Orphans" there is warm human interest, and a chapter of incidents which might happen to any two helpless country girls who had fallen among the fangs of cruel Paris. The story is laid in a picturesque time, partly for the stage setting, and partly for the licensed darning of the men of pleasure of those times; but it might as easily be a story of to-day as yesterday. One may still find a Frochard den in the slums of Paris, or a later Bel Air in the environs. There is but a glimpse of the grande dame in the "Two Orphans," which is as it should be, for the grande dame does not belong in melodrama. If she does come in, she should be a sort of patent triple-white-plated article, not real metal. The skilled melodramatist recognizes this, hence the hero always marries with a maid of lowly degree. This is a favorite dodge with heroes in books and melodramas. The terrible afterglow of real life has nothing to do with them. There is no dreary track of time down which the stage Jude Jenkins looks and regrets:

"For had he wanted, he might have wed
Some maiden fair and thoroughbred."

"For there be women fair as she Whose words and nouns do more agree."

"Alas for maiden! Alas for judge!
And the sentimental that's one-half fudge."

No! The lowly maiden in the play never grows broad, and red, and stout, and she speaks with a very fine article of grammar, as witness Hazel Kirke, who is not out-done in well-rounded sentences by the tragie Lady Carrington herself, or Bess Marks, whose English is really quite choice.

In "The Lights of London" one is reminded forcibly of the sympathy of the masses for the weak by the fact that every time Harold and Bess reappear after a particularly strong bout with their difficulties, they are hailed with the wildest acclamations. After all, they have done nothing but suffer, for the author has treated his main personages very shabbily, and has given them nothing to do but one long monotonous whine. Yet the sympathies go with them, even when they do nothing more striking than sit around limply on rickety steps in the open street, or damp banks in the open park.

I asked a poet once, whose graceful verse has considerable reputation, why he had never written a novel, and he told me, in a confidence which I here unhesitatingly betray, that he had once acquitted himself of one. "I had a main idea," he said, "in approaching my work, and I resolved that, while I would permit other ideas to cluster about it like a garniture, it should stand out like a bold promontory of thought, to challenge the observation and discussion of a reading world. But fearing that I might slight my cluster of ideas, I worked upon them ceaselessly, and to my amazement, when my work was done, I found my promontory imbedded in them."

I fancy that Mr. George Sims, in writing "The Lights of London," stranded himself upon the same reef. The play hinges upon the wrongs and trials of Harold and Bess Marks, but his success lies in what he has clustered about them.

"And what sort of people did your book turn out?" I asked my poet. "Alas," said he, "they were worse than my ideas. They were all absolutely alike—even sexless, so far as my readers could have told—except where they were qualified by their proper pronouns, for I even named them unhappily. And, while they were all like each other, they were like nothing else that I know of, except those ghostly, unreal-looking things called spirit-pictures. I have never written any more novels," concluded my poet, with a sigh, and who will gainsay his judgment? In so much at least his book was not like "The Lights of London," for it is the characters standing out with vivid force from among clap-trap situations that make the strength of it.

Sims is evidently an ardent worshiper in the wake of Dickens, as greater writers than he have been. There is a flavor of him in every story of these London streets, in every one of these family stories, those of the Markses, the Jarvisses, and the Preenes. If Mr. Stoddard's Seth Preena has a fault, it is that he is too—what shall one say?—too gymnastic, perhaps, in his interview with his erring but unrepentant daughter, but so little a thing as the ceaseless knotting and unknotting of his dirty neckerchief in his moments of intense feeling, is a stroke of genius, and shows how well he has studied the points and ways of the boorish countryman moved to deeper feeling than should sweep across his simple horizon of life.

Nothing absolutely horrible in this episode of shame of father and daughter, but it is not an unfamiliar story, and Miss Cary plays extremely the part of this flippant, soulless creature, to whom the gleam of diamonds are the light of life, and the envy of her once companions its divinest essence. Somehow one recognizes that such things be, as one knows the portrait of an unknown to be like its model. She is the daring theme of Ouida, this beautiful young animal from the country, lured by the luxuries of the town, and as unfeeling as the silks she rustles and the stones she wears upon her neck; but she is unfamiliar upon the stage, fortunately. The sinner is well known upon the boards, but she has feeling, emotions, a distorted something which passes for a soul, and we all like her better.

The visit of the Union Square Company has been a singularly pleasant episode in the dull history of the theatrical year. Hitherto we have had the company in detachments. This time it may be said to have been here almost in its entirety, and they may hug to themselves the warm satisfaction of knowing that they have been appreciated to the uttermost, and that, as they were hailed with warm welcome, farewell is given with keen regret. The repertoire has not been all that could have been wished for—an intellectual feast, such as they are capable of furnishing forth—but the memory of "Daniel Rochat" will not easily die out, nor the "Banker's Daughter," for the matter of that; while the soothing touch of time will gloss over the delinquencies of "A False Friend." Perhaps, after all, people would not look forward so hopefully to their coming again if they had given us everything the first time. Mr. Palmer's benefit on Thursday gave us the only peep at their legitimate talent.

After all, the legitimate is a crucial test, even though it require not half the originality of the talent of the modern drama. Yet it is very much easier for a young, beautiful, and talented woman to play Juliet than Lea traditions. There are a hundred traditions to cling to, a score of standards to judge by. Miss Jewett's Juliet is the sentimental maiden with strong feelings, not the tropical child of impulse. The balcony scene is the most hackneyed of all, but she gives to its reading the charm of a thorough comprehension and a new twist or two to the familiar lines—things that one grows to watch for in a long succession of Juliets. Mr. Ramsay is not happy as Romeo, nor yet as Claude Melnotte—a brace of lovers too widely known to permit of a departure from the accepted pattern. Indeed, he will be wise to forsake the legitimate, for he is far a-field in it. Oddly enough, Mr. Owen Fawcett, who always seems to be the most modernized of comedians, quite outshone himself as Cousin Modus, in "The Hunchback." It is a part that is often badly played. They permit Modus usually to continue to be a miff to the end, and one is disgusted at his capturing the saucy Helen so easily. But Mr. Fawcett makes a bold enough wooer when he comes to his senses, or his courage, at last, and both he and Miss Harrison played this taking little scene with all the sparkle and comedy there is in it. The scene from the "Lady of Lyons" was irredeemably bad.

Mrs. Phillips's Lady Macbeth was traditional and impressive, but no one will wish to remember her longest as Lady Macbeth. Of a truth they are all exponents of the vastly more difficult art of modern acting, and are as truly the headhunts of its advancement in America, as the Bancrofts in England or the sociétaires of the Française in France. They have given us a season of enjoyment of what had almost come to be a lost art in San Francisco. They have restored the decaying taste, and hung the galleries of memory with new pictures. In short, we owe them a pleasant little debt of gratitude which makes every one glad to temper a regretful good-bye with a hopeful au revoir.

BETSY B.

"Hazel Kirke" has passed through another week at the Baldwin Theatre with undiminished success. There have been two changes in the caste—the substitution of Mr. C. B. Wells as Lord Travers, and Mrs. Charles as Lady Carrington. Everything proceeds with the same evenness of merit. Next Monday evening will be a souvenir night, (seventeen hundred and fiftieth performance,) at which charming little Russia leather and gold albums, containing portraits of the troupe, will be presented to each lady in the audience.

Strong, the artist, has just completed a portrait of John W. Taylor, which is now on exhibition at his studio. It is a half-length life-size, and one of the artist's best efforts in the portrait line.

THE MODISTE.

THE LEADER OF NEW AND BEAUTIFUL STYLES.

In to-day's Argonaut will be found, on page 13, a good likeness of Mrs. R. G. Lewis, a lady who stands at the head of her profession in the art of dress-making. The parlors, which are in Thurlow Block, Kearny Street, are always thronged with a fashionable number of customers, who find their orders promptly executed. Mrs. Lewis receives direct from Paris and London each week the latest styles, with a full and perfect description of what is being worn, or what promises to be worn in Europe. A specialty in this lady's line are bridal trousseaus, which, when completed, leave nothing to be wished for. Mourning goods are made up in her establishment at the very shortest notice, and a perfect fit guaranteed. There is a certain grace and elegance about the toilettes manufactured in Mrs. Lewis's work-rooms that distinguish them in any assembly where they are worn. At the same time the terms asked are as reasonable as one can possibly expect.

—HON. GEORGE BARSTOW WILL LECTURE BEFORE THE CHAUTAUQU LITERARY SOCIETY, at the hall of the Y. M. C. A., 232 Sutter Street, on Thursday evening, September 21. Subject, "Mexico." Seats free.

—"BUCHUPEIBA." QUICK, COMPLETE CURE, all annoying Kidney Diseases. $1. At Druggists.

—AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL IS MILD AND soothing in its immediate and apparent effects, and possesses far-reaching and powerful healing qualities which its persistent use will demonstrate in any case of coughs, colds, throat or lung troubles of any kind.

—"ROUGH ON RATS." CLEARS OUT RATS, MICE, flies, roaches, head-bugs, ants, vermin, chipmunks, etc.

—AN ELEGANT REVOLVER.—IN OUR ADVERTISING columns will be found the advertisement of E. G. Rideout & Co., New York, of a beautiful 32-calibre revolver for $3.50. This is said to be one of the greatest bargains ever offered in firearms, and the firm enjoy a first-class reputation for honesty and fair dealing.

THE TRUTH.

Comprehensive and Explicit Statement from Hon. Paul Neumann Regarding a False and Malicious Charge Against Him.

To Strangers:—I address this public communication to "strangers," because those who know me do not need it.

I abhor "cards." They are generally meaningless. You are falsely maligned, and you alone know that it is false. One vaulting lie, however, has "o'erleaped itself," and finds me with witnesses and facts, not only to establish its falseness, but its meanness. An obscure blackmailing sheet published the following:

"Yesterday there came to the.....office the following card, with the offer of an affidavit in support of it, if deemed necessary:

"To the Editor of the.....I, the undersigned, take this method of notifying the people of my treatment by Paul Neumann, attorney and ex-Senator.

"On the 31st of October, 1875, my husband's grocery store, corner of Pacific and Powell, was destroyed by fire. He was insured to the amount of $3,000 in Svea Fire Insurance Company. Eight days after the fire the company offered to pay him $2,700. As the stock burned amounted to over $4,000, he did not feel like taking any less than the policy called for. As Germans, we consulted Paul Neumann, and he advised us not to take it, but said he would make them pay all. Subsequently suit had to be brought. Anxious to know what that would cost, he said he would not in any case charge us more than $200, and believed he could make the company pay that. This was said in the presence of a witness. He, after much delay, obtained a judgment for $4,092.75, being principal, interest, and costs, and was paid that sum. As we owed money to creditors, we had to give them a lien. These Neumann has paid; but he charged us $779, costs and interest thereon, and the balance, amounting to over $1,200, he has stuck to. Urgent and oft-repeated inquiries have only elicited the answer that if we kept quiet he would pay us in time. If we did not, he would make his fee $1,200. I have received that answer from him again within the last few days. All this when we could at once have obtained within $300 of the sum due us; but we were over-persuaded through him. In consequence of all this, I and my five children are left destitute.

"(Signed) ANNA RASCHEKE.

"Some days before coming to the News Letter office Mrs. Rascheke was advised to go, with her five children, and camp on the Honorable (?) Paul Neumann's doorstep, and refuse to move until she was paid. This she proposed to do, but was assured, as she informs us, by Neumann, that 'she would be paid shortly if she kept quiet.' By her persistency, she has collected $150 of the sum she claims to be due. Inquiries made of Neumann himself brought out the answer that 'he considered the costs and a $1,200 fee not reasonable, but he meant to retain the whole.' When asked why, in that case, he had paid $150, he said: 'Oh, I made her present of that.' Mrs. Rascheke produces a witness to the agreement that the collection should not in any event cost her more than $200. Then the fact remains that he, for his own benefit, advised poor, confiding fellow-country people of his own to bring suit, and made his advice cost them nearly $2,000, when only $300 were at stake."

In October, 1875, Gustav Rascheke and one Reischuck had a grocery on Powell Street—the latter furnishing the money, the former the "experience," as will appear.

The store was insured in the Svea Company. It was destroyed by fire. The firm owed everybody, from the bread and milk men to Helbing & Straus. The policy was assigned to Helbing & Straus, and with it went an agreement that the last-named firm should collect the amount, settle with the creditors, and pay the balance, share and share alike, to Rascheke and Reischuck, upon their joint order.

These papers were all drawn by H. Lowenberg, Esq., attorney and notary public. Messrs. Helbing & Straus employed me to bring action, the Svea Company having not only declined to pay, but having said they would send the men to prison for arson. No compromise was ever offered. My fee was to be contingent upon my recovering judgment, Helbing & Straus agreeing to advance the costs. The amount fixed upon was one-third of what I recovered; in case of failure, nothing. The action was tried before the Hon. Samuel H. Dwinelle and a jury of twelve men, and lasted over two weeks. The Insurance Company fought the case at every step, and with a vehemence that showed they, at least, believed the building to have been criminally fired. The company's counsel, no less a man than the Hon. Joseph W. Winans, threw into the defense all the genius at his command.

Mr. D. Friederich, one of the most prominent attorneys in the city, was associated with me. We then believed in the justice of our clients' cause, and mindful of the threat of the company to have Rascheke and Reischuck indicted and punished for arson, strained every nerve to win the case, and did win it. A new trial was asked for by the company, which devolved upon Mr. Friederich and myself an amount of labor that only a lawyer can appreciate. The new trial was denied, and then the company, through Mr. Winans, appealed to the Supreme Court, where in the course of time and crowded calendars, the case was heard, argued, and decided. It was a long and bitter contest, and not until its very end was one cent paid for counsel fees.

The money was collected and paid over to Helbing & Straus, after the fee of $1,200 had been deducted, which was less than one-third of the amount recovered. There was no complaint at that time by any one as to the amount of the fee. None of them objected at that time; they were only too well satisfied with the "brand plucked from the burning."

I first heard of Rascheke denying the counsel that Rascheke was trying to cheat him out of his share of the rest of the money remaining in Helbing & Straus' hands after satisfying the creditors. Rascheke, it seems, had been deceiving Helbing & Straus, and drawing money in the firm-name instead upon "joint order," as agreed. Reischuck then employed his first counsel, Mr. Lowenberg, and Mr. John L. Love to protect him.

A notice and demand for an accounting were served on Messrs. Helbing & Straus by the counsel for Reischuck, and Messrs. Helbing & Straus properly refused to pay any more money until the matter was settled by the courts, which, by the way, was strictly in accord with the agreement between the former partners. Messrs. Lowenberg and Love sued Messrs. Helbing & Straus, as trustees, and Rascheke and Anna, his wife, to determine their right in the trust fund. The action was tried before the Hon. J. M. Allen, presiding Justice of the Superior Court. I appeared for Helbing & Straus, Love and Lowenberg appeared for Reischuck, and Mr. Murphy appeared for the man Rascheke and Anna, his wife. Rascheke then claimed, for the first time, that I agreed to take $200 for a fee, and introduced, as his witness, a man who has since been arrested for stealing spoons.

Suffice it to say, that the court found in favor of Mr. Lowenberg's client, ignoring Rascheke's story about the $200 agreement, and virtually decided that Rascheke, by his machinations, had received all that he was entitled to within twenty odd dollars, and the whole fund remaining was awarded to Reischuck, there being just enough left to save Helbing & Straus from loss. Every act of Rascheke in all these transactions showed the deep-laid plan of a rascal to cheat a simpleton who relied on him. This can be substantiated by Messrs. Love and Lowenberg, who are fully conversant with the facts.

When I took up this man Rascheke's cause, at the instance of Messrs. Helbing & Straus, in 1875, I believed him, as he represented himself, a wronged man, without friends or money, and that a rich corporation persecuted him because he was poor, and tried to browbeat him out of his rights. I espoused his cause and gained it. Since then I have had occasion to change my mind, and I do now believe that the Svea Insurance Company was justified in asserting that the fire on Powell Street was not accidental. My reasons for arriving at this conclusion are:

1st. Reischuck came very near not being a surviving partner. I learned this from a witness who saved him from cremation when the grocery burned.

2d. Rascheke is one of the witnesses who swore that six shots were fired, in the Kallioch trial, and is now under indictment for perjury, with Tony Weller's defense—"an alibi"—reversed; that is, he has to prove that he was there.

3d. Since the Svea Insurance case, Rascheke has been arrested for arson in burning an insured house occupied by him.

In the last case he escaped by the skin of his teeth; in the former—the perjury case—a jury of his countrymen have yet to determine his guilt or innocence.

For the corroboration of the facts here stated, I refer to the several gentlemen above named, and the representatives of the Svea Insurance Company.

The animus of this attack is misdirected blackmail, which I have neither the means nor the disposition to submit to. Prior to the assembling of the State Convention, an emissary of the obscure publication above mentioned waited on Mr. Sprackles, and exhibited to him an article against me, which, he said, was not an "editorial," (God save the mark,) but a communication, to publish or freely disposed, and would suppress it and write me up if he would give them one hundred dollars. Mr. Sprackles promptly declined. That sheet evidently supposed that Mr. Sprackles had a pecuniary interest in my election, and hoped to bleed him. I am a candidate for Representative, and not Senator. If Mr. Sprackles has any interest in national affairs, it may be—for I do not know of my own knowledge—in the Hawaiian Reciprocity Treaty. The lower House has nothing whatever to do or say with treaties. The power rests in the President and Senate alone. The Hawaiian Treaty is not an issue in this campaign. Senators Miller and Farley control that matter, so far as this State is concerned, and if I or any other Congressman should presume to interfere with this high prerogative of a Senator, I or he would probably receive a merited rebuke, and one not to be forgotten. The ignorance of these newspaper aliens of our form of government doubtless leads them to believe that there is money in this Congressional fight, and finding their mistake, they vent their spite on me, and, playing upon the cupidity of a vicious man and ignorant woman, prevail upon them to parade before my door, in order to force their own futile designs to a fruition.

A man who lets in a blackmailer lets in a perennial guest, from whose visitations he is never free. I do not propose to do it, and hope I shall be sustained in my purpose.

The "Morey Letter" drew ink from the pen of Garfield; but with it he announced his position as to lies and liars. I quote only the idea:

"At the opening of this campaign I resolved not to answer any personal attacks, knowing that my enemies could invent falsehoods faster than I could answer them, and that my time would be better spent in bending my energies to matters of more concern to the party than to myself." Following out this idea, I assure my fellow-citizens that no other calumny will get me into print again.

PAUL NEUMANN.

FREUD'S CORSET HOUSE.

The section on the north side of the gallery, just at the head of the front stairs, which is occupied by M. Freud & Sons, of 742 and 744 Market Street, and 10 and 12 Dupont Street, in the display of corsets, still continues to draw a crowd, and for ladies there is no greater attraction in the Pavilion. There are corsets in every style and quality, and in endless variety, and one can find the "Golden Gate" corset, the "Magnificent," "Can't Be Beat," "Sunbeam," "Venus," "Dora," "Pride of California," "Tahoe," "Ideal," "El Dorado," "Pacific," "Pride of America," "Yosemite," "Sierra," "Queen of the West," "Queen Victoria," "Victory," "Rosa," "Elsa," "Solid," "Eclipse," "Becky," "Sarah Bernhardt," the "C. P." of various grades, and many other styles, including those made especially for riding; also, the nursing corset, the "Patent Roman," where the hips are provided with side-laces, which can readily be adapted to any size or shape; and also every description of corset for misses and children. The leading factories of Europe are represented at the establishment of M. Freud & Sons, who have at all former exhibitions on this coast been awarded the first medal for superiority over all other corset-makers. Their establishment is the largest one of the kind in the United States, and from here they ship their goods to all parts of this coast.

—THE MECHANICS' FAIR IS STILL THE CENTRE of attraction, and the present season will probably be one of the most successful, in a pecuniary sense, ever held. So large is the attendance, that the managers have decided to continue it open for a week longer. On Wednesday night the Olympic Club gave a splendid athletic exhibition, which filled the building to repletion with spectators.

—REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE HAS GENUINE MERIT, as all who use it will testify. Price 25c. Try it.

— HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

— Dr. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET, cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

— MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

— LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL remember that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

— MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Block.

— Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

BALDWIN THEATRE.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN.....Lessee.
E. M. ROBERTS.....Acting Manager.

THE HAZEL KIRKE BOOM!!

This (Saturday) afternoon and evening, the Madison Square Theatre Company in the peerless play,

HAZEL KIRKE

Special attention is called to the SOUVENIR EVENT, Monday evening, Sept. 18, in commemoration of the 1750th consecutive performance of HAZEL KIRKE, and as a fitting memento of Hazel Kirke's farewell the management will present all ladies attending with a magnificent Russia Leather SOUVENIR ALBUM, which will exceed in beauty and value anything of the kind ever presented heretofore. The intrinsic value of the Souvenir will exceed the price of admission. It is earnestly requested of those desiring to attend that they purchase seats early, as the attendance promises to be the largest of the season.

No advance in prices.

THE "Dress Reform" CORSET.

Specially for Stout Figures, (worn with or without Straps) by mail, $3.00. Send waist, hip, and bust measure. Also, Shoulder Braces, Union Under Flannels, Ladies' and Children's Comfort Waists, Bustles, Hose Supporters, etc. Send for Circular. The only Depot for these goods.

MRS. M. H. OBER & CO.
Boston Dress Reform,
336 Sutter Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Elegant Corset to Order for $4.

A NOVELTY IN SAUCE! MONTSERRAT LIME FRUIT JUICE SAUCE.

FINEST TABLE SAUCE IN THE MARKET FOR ROAST MEATS, STEAKS, FISH, CURRIES, GAME, ETC., ETC.

We take great pleasure in recommending the above Sauce to the public for not only its wholesomeness, being made from pure MONTSERRAT (V. I. Island) Lime Fruit Juice, but for its delicacy of flavor, which makes it superior to any Sauce ever offered in this market.

LOWENTHAL, LIVINGSTON & CO., Importers and Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.
FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

A Course of Lectures on PHYSIOLOGY, by M. O. STANTON, will be given at the St. Cloud, No. 418 Sutter Street, commencing Monday, Sept. 18, at 8 o'clock P. M.

A Class for Teachers will meet at Miss Marwedel's Kindergarten, No. 1810 Sacramento Street, Sept. 22, at 4 o'clock P. M.

OLIVE OIL

PUREST AND BEST.

MOTTET'S PRIZE MEDAL.

Insist on getting this genuine and warranted pure article.

For sale in lots to suit.

WHITTIER, FULLER & CO.,

Corner Pine and Front Streets.....San Francisco.

GASOLINE

87° GRAVITY,

FOR GAS MACHINES.

EASTERN--TO ARRIVE.

In cans and cases.....26 cents per gallon.
In bulk.....22 cents per gallon.

WHITTIER, FULLER & CO.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. COWEN. J. W. PORTER.
COWEN & PORTER,
FUNERAL DIRECTORS,
118 Geary Street, San Francisco.
OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns--- Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.
AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

HAVE INTRODUCED THE LARGEST STOCK OF

FALL-STYLE HATS

EVER SHOWN ON THIS COAST.

Call and examine them at

336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 330 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

The above cnt is a good portrait of MRS. R. G. LEWIS, the Modiste, whose Dress-making Parlors are in Thurlow Block, Kearny Street. See page 12.

REGULAR REPUBLICAN NOMINEE
FOR CONGRESS,

From the First District,

HON. PAUL NEUMANN.

ALLEN, MCGARY & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE
Liquor Dealers. 322-324 FRONT STREET

SAN FRANCISCO.

DANICHEFF KID GLOVE FACTORY REMOVED TO 119 DUPONT ST. Between Post and Geary.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO. FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

The Earl of Buchan was, to the end of his life, although eccentric, a great social favorite and "a terrible old flirt." On leaving a room he would take leave of the prettiest young lady in it with old-fashioned courtesy, and say: "Good-bye, my dear; and pray remember Margaret, Countess of Buchan, is not immortal."

Continental customs—The father of an elderly damsel to marriageable young man: "On the day that I give you my daughter Adele, I will deposit one hundred thousand francs with Monsieur Lafitte." Francois: "Thanks, dear sir, but suppose you give me the one hundred thousand francs, and deposit Mademoiselle Adele with Monsieur Lafitte."

A paper published in Congressman Parker's district tells a story that is a good deal at his expense. When a young man was proprietor of a livery-stable, and had a big sign painted representing himself holding a mule by the bridle. "Is that a good likeness of me?" he asked an admiring friend. "Yes; it is a perfect picture of you. But who is the fellow holding you by the bridle?"

He lisped, and his name was Mr. Carr, and one of his family being ill late in the night he ran to the drug store and rang the night-bell. A head appeared at the third-story window, and a voice demanded: "Who's there?" "Miss—ta—Car," was the reply. "I can't help that; take the next car!" and hang went the window. Repeated rings had no effect, and Miss—ta—Car can not be convinced of the sanity of that druggist.

Colonel Blank, while minister to Russia, spoke abominable French, with a worse Kentucky accent. Believing French to be his forte, he would answer in that language, with all the air of a diplomat, every question asked him in English. One day at a grand levee at the Winter Palace, one of the empress's ladies-in-waiting asked him in English how long he had been in Europe. He replied in French: "I was an ass in Paris, part of an ass in London, almost an ass in Germany, and I am two asses here." "And you will be an ass wherever you go," said the maid of honor, in French.

There is a difference in pronunciation between "an" and "ane."

They were sitting on a log near the rock spring. "And you love me?" he said. "Can you ask it?" she answered. "I like to hear you say the sweet words over and over again," he gurgled. "Then I do love you and love you," she twittered. "And I must leave you to-morrow." "Don't say it, dear heart, don't say it." "And what will my darling do when I am far away? What will she do in these lonely evening hours without me?" "Ahem!" said an old hachol, getting up from the dark end of the log, and starting off to the hotel; "I'll tell you what she'll do in these lonely hours without you; she'll be sitting right over here on this same log with another mash, making as big a fool of it as you are." Then he went out into the darkness.

It is related of John Stuart Blackie, who has just retired from the University of Edinburgh, that once, on the first day of the college year, he posted on his class-room door a notice that "Professor Blackie will meet his classes on the 4th instant, at the usual hours." A joker among the students erased the "c" in "classes," thus announcing that the professor would "meet his lasses," etc. As class-time drew near the young men gathered about to "see what Blackie would do." The professor came, glanced at the card, touched it with a pencil, and passed on to his desk, with a grim smile overspreading his features. And the students followed him into the room with mingled emotions of jollity and dismay, as they saw that his deft pencil-stroke had obliterated the "l," leaving the announcement that Professor Blackie would "meet his asses" at the usual hour.

Once Charles Matthews, crossing the stage between the acts, met a diminutive youth carrying a pewter pot—the myrmidon, in fact, of an adjoining tavern. "Where are you going, my boy?" "Please, it's for Mr. Frank Matthews," was the inconsequential reply. "Very good; I'll take it up to his dressing-room, and save you the trouble." Arriving at Frank's room, the deputy potboy, counterfeiting a childish treble, announced the refreshment. "All right, my boy," replied a cheery voice; "leave it at the door." "But, if you please," continued the impostor, "my master says I mustn't go away without the money." At this answer the wily Frank began to scent a practical joke, and also—by a kind of inspiration—scented the author of it. "If that's the case, my boy," was his meek reply to the insult, "you had better take it away. It's evidently intended for Mr. Charles Matthews."

"Are we most there, conductor?" asked a nervous man for the hundredth time; "remember, my wife is sick, and I am anxious." "We'll get there on time," replied the conductor, stolidly. Half an hour later the nervous man approached him again. "I guess she's dead now," said he, mournfully, "but I'd give you a little something extra if you could manage to catch up with the funeral. Maybe she won't be so decomposed but what I could recognize her." The conductor growled at him, and the man subsided. "Conductor," said he, after an hour's silence; "conductor, if the wind isn't dead ahead, I wish you would put on some steam. I'd like to see where my wife is buried before the tombstone crumbles to pieces. Put yourself in my place for a moment." The conductor shook him off, and the man relapsed into profound melancholy. "I say, conductor," said he, after a long pause, "I've got a note coming due in three months. Can't you fix it so as to rattle along a little?" "If you come near me again I'll knock you down!" snorted the conductor, savagely. The nervous man regarded him sadly, and went to his seat. Two hours later the conductor saw him chatting gayly, and laughing heartily with a brother victim, and approached him. "Don't feel so badly about your wife's death?" "Time heals all wounds," said the nervous man. "And you are not so particular about the note," sneered the conductor, now. That's all right. Don't worry. I've gurgled up, and I find that the note has been paid since I spoke to you last."

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words, among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, and Consumption that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their painful effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely defense. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not keep it by you for the protection it affords by its early use in sudden attacks.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It! Everybody Needs It!

The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility. Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any of which, by worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in a beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $2, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either require or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG AND MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,
Or W. H. PARKER, M. D.,
4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

SUMMER RECREATION.

RUSSIAN RIVER HOTEL, DUNcan's Mills—A favorite resort for tourists. Bathing, fishing, hunting, boating. QUEEN & GOODE, Props.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 5th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 5) of Twenty (20) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 23, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 13th day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday, the 10th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. P. GORDON, Secretary.
Office—Room 23, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

SIERRA NEVADA SILVER MINING

Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California—Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 17th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 72) of One Dollar per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, 309 Montgomery Street, Room 57, Nevada Block, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twentieth day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 6th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

E. L. PARKER, Secretary.
Office—Room 57, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—OF-

the of the Thunder Powder Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Alameda County, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 15th day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 1) of Forty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room No. 5, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 15th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 6th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. M. OAKLEY, Secretary.
Office—Thunder Powder Company, 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA MINing Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey County, State of Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees held on the tenth day of August, 1882, an assessment (No. 18) of Thirty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 16th day of September, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 14th day of October, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Trustees.

A. W. HAVENS, Secretary,
Office—Room 26, No. 309 Montgomery Street, Nevada Block, San Francisco, Cal.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—OFFICE OF

the Silver King Mining Company, San Francisco, Sept. 5, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above-named Company held this day, a Dividend (No. 33) of Twenty-five Cents (25c.) per share was declared, payable on Friday, September 15, 1882, at the office of the Company, Room 19, 328 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California. Transfer books will close Sept. 9, 1882, at 3 P. M.

JOSEPH NASH, Sec.
DIVIDEND NOTICE.—OFFICE OF

the Standard Consolidated Mining Company, San Francisco, Sept. 2, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above-named Company, held this day, a dividend of No. 45, of Twenty-five cents per share was declared, payable on Tuesday, September 12, 1882, at the office in this city, or at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in New York.

WM. WILLIS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 29, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

RUPTURE

Cured. Greatest Invention. of the age. FIERCE & SON, 704 Sac St., San Fran. Cal.

LEGAL NOTICES.

[Department No. 7.]

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT, City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRFAX, Plaintiff,
vs.
NICHOLAS H. FAIRFAX, Defendant.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIRFAX, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with common necessities of life; and awarding the custody and care of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 3d day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

DAVID WILDER, Clerk.
By I. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

[Department No. 7.]

SHERIFF'S SALE.—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested, on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a Judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 1st day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,327.97-100 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 1st day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereinafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 155 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, running thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27-6-12 feet; thence at right-angles northerly 120 feet; thence at right-angles easterly 27-6-12 feet; and thence at right-angles southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement. Together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the first day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.
JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff
J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.

August 5, 12, 19, 26.
NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 11th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

JOHN SEDGWICK,
Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated San Francisco, August 28, 1882.

NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 25th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

JOHN SEDGWICK,
Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated San Francisco, September 11, 1882.

JOHN TAYLOR & CO.

118 and 120 Market Street, and 15 and 17 California Street

ASSAYERS' MATERIALS, MINE

Mill Supplies; also Druggists' Glassware.

32 CALIBRE $10.00 REVOLVER FREE TO EVERY READER OF THIS PAPER.

THE WORLD RENOWNED BLUE JACKET

IVORY HANDLE GOLD PLATED CYLINDER ELEGANTLY ENGRAVED AND EMBELED WEIGHT 12 1/2 OZ

READ THIS!

The 32-Calibre BLUE JACKET is WITHOUT EXCEPTION THE MOST ELEGANT AND BEAUTIFUL FINISHED REVOLVER IN THE WORLD. Every Revolver Guaranteed Genuine. They are made of the finest steel. The barrel and frame are finest Nickel Silver-Plate and the Cylinder and Base Pin are of the finest Gold-plate. Every Revolver is BEAUTIFULLY ENGRAVED. The Engraving is BEAUTIFULLY ENAMELED in blue by a patent process, owned by us. The frame near the handle is set in imitation of Beautiful ROBBER, making a contrast of color with the ivory handle. We purchased these Revolvers at less than ONE-FOURTH their cost, and wish to give all who read this the benefit, and at the same time introduce our publication, THE HOUSEHOLD GUEST MAGAZINE. If you will send us $3.50 and FIFTEEN CENTS EXTRA to help pay postage, we will send you the BLUE JACKET REVOLVER FREE, and the HOUSEHOLD GUEST MAGAZINE. The HOUSEHOLD GUEST MAGAZINE contains 32 quarto pages, with the best and most beautiful Engraved Pictures, and is filled with choice illustrations from all parts of the world. Stories by the best authors; Poetry; Anecdotes; Sketches; Illustrated Fashion Department; useful Instruction; Statistics; Answers to Correspondents; Household Notes; The Kitchen; Ladies' Items; The Toilet Table; The Garden; Wit, Humor, etc. It is now in its fourth year, has a large circulation, and the regular price for a year's subscription has always been $1.50.

FREE TO YOU. If you will cut this advertisement out, show it to your friends, and get a CLUB of seven to join you, and send us $24.50 with $1.00 extra in stamps to help pay postage, we will send you the Revolver and Magazine free for your trouble. PLEASE BEAR IN MIND that each one in the club will also receive a Revolver and Magazine. Please send your order, we will put in a box of cartridges for each Revolver. Any one can sell these Revolvers at from $5.00 to $10.00, and they give perfect satisfaction. As they are reliable, we refer to any New York Publishers or Merchants, Commercial Agency or Express Company. Send Money by Registered Letter or Post Office Order at our risk.

The Revolver illustrated here was made with the Blue Jacket at 17 yards. Every shot being put in a bull's-eye one inch in diameter. Cut this out, it won't appear as

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.
Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30
LIABILITIES.	$3,752,099 09
Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda
NOTHING ELSE
Newton Bros. & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker.
428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,
10 POST STREET,
.....AND.....
718 SANSOME STREET.
Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"Pure, Wholesome, Pleasant, and Effervescent."

Prof. T. L. Brunton, M.D., F.R.S., London, Eng.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS.

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,
522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,
HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,
GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,
TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,
Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.
PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President. WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.
ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President. E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED OIL CLOTHING

WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.

MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,
ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,

RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING
BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,
Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

DECKER
BROS.

IS NOW THE BEST.

KOHLER & CHASE,
137 POST STREET, NEAR DUPONT.

General Agents for Pacific States.

$5 To $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free | $72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine

ICHI BAN, 22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,
LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,
AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,
At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:
210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:
Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

When ordering wine, don't call for "California Champagne" merely, but state the brand, "ECLIPSE," Extra Dry, or the brand's name. We are the only producers of NATURAL SPARKING WINES on this coast.

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.
N. B.—Examine the cork.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
dealers in Old London Dock Brandies, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple Jack, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liqueurs, etc. etc. MONTGOMERY, and 511 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.
110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 13.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 23, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

AN ABYSMAL EPISODE.

By Philip Shirley.

He had fallen from a star, but he had fallen on his feet. He sometimes looked up at the star from which he fell, as it pulsed serene in the large heaven, and lifted his hat to it ironically, and thought of the distance, and smiled.

He had an intellectual face, and eyes of powerful expression. An observer thought his countenance one of those palimpsest faces that Heine speaks of, where the tranquil air and inscrutable smile were written over the lines of strong passions and keen experiences undergone in his stellar days. Yet, withal, his look was kind, the weak and oppressed appealed to him instinctively, and he was the sworn ally of all the children. One of his friends—not a child—said to him one day:

"You're an odd fellow, Porphyrogene; you give one strange glimpses of things when he comes to know you better. You're a regular abyss. When I've been with you a while, I feel as if I'd been looking down the shaft of a mine—possibly precious things below, and that, you know."

"But none visible at the surface. Thanks," said the fallen one, with his peculiar smile. From that time his friend spoke of him as the Abyss, and the nickname clung to him.

When one falls from a star, the particular misstep that precipitates one does not usually give time to provide one's self with a budget of letters to the patricians of the particular planet where one may happen to strike. It was so with the Abyss. He did not know that the Earth would be his sojourning place; so, when he recovered from the shock of his arrival, he took his friends where he found them, and thought them all pretty much alike. Since they did not in any wise resemble the inhabitants of his starry home, he did not trouble himself with their differences from each other. They never could be Astrals, but in their own humble sphere they were well enough. So he took his friends where he found them, I repeat; and one of these was a clerk in a wholesale shoe-house. This youth, who had literary leanings, wildly worshiped the Abyss, fancying him like the heroes of his beloved novels in story-papers, and when his idol had printed one of his poems—which set forth the influence of prayers said at a mother's knee upon a man's later career—his enthusiasm knew no bounds, and the poor Abyss found his forbearance severely taxed by the incessant pursuit of his humble courtier. He had been able to put the young man's composition into type because he occupied the proud position of editor of a religious paper—which piece of good luck had fallen to him on the strength of his serious, somewhat sad face, low voice, and self-contained and gentle manner. In the star from which he fell these characteristics had not been regarded as indicative of sanctity; but the Earth-born thought differently, and his leaders in the Trumpet of Zion were said to be replete with Pauline ardor.

The young clerk, whose name was James Stirling, sang the praises of the abysmal editor in all the houses where he was "the life and soul of the party." He also sang the praises of his social circle to the Abyss, offering to introduce him; but the other put him off with vague thanks. One evening he said, rather sheepishly, to the Abyss:

"I wish you would come with me up to Blodgett's."

"Where's that?" asked the Abyss.

"My boss's house," said the ingenuous youth, with mild protestation; for he had frequently told the Abyss about his employer.

"Yes, yes, I remember," said the Abyss, hastily; "but the fact is I have so much work on hand that I've put off for so long that positively—"

"Miss Lacie—she—that is, I—she said," stammered Stirling, as his friend seemed on the verge of refusal. At this speech the Abyss wheeled round with a sudden smile and eager look.

"Are you sweet on your master's daughter? O Jimmy Stirling, Jimmy Stirling, O! Is she pretty?" he asked. The poor youth blushed scarlet, and looked as foolish as it is given to budding manhood to look, and something in the cool appreciation of the situation which radiated from the Abyss served to prolong his embarrassment. True to the vocabulary of his class, he said, at last:

"Miss Lacie Blodgett is a very fine young lady."

"Is she?" said the Abyss.

"She is so," responded the swain. "She said she didn't believe you were alive," he proceeded, "the last time I mentioned you up to her house; so I'd like her to see you, that's all. Any other evening will do, I suppose."

When Stirling had gone, the Abyss shrouded himself in a long outer coat, pulled his hat over his eyes, and walked rapidly to a resort known to the initiated as "Liberty Hall," where doubtless he transacted the business which had kept him from accompanying James to visit the object of his dearest wishes.

The proprietor of the Zion Trumpet was out of town.

One Sunday Stirling said to the Abyss:

"Where do you go to church?" His friend looked at him intently a minute, and then said, sighing:

"I am so tired—doing nothing (mental aside)—by the time Sunday comes that I'm afraid I make it altogether a day of rest."

"Will you go with me to-day?" asked Stirling.

"Certainly; I should be glad to," said the Abyss, groaning in spirit, and the two sat through the services together. When they were over, James said:

"Let's stand at the door, and see the people as they come out."

"Would that quite do?" said the Abyss, languidly.

"Of course; I always do it," said the ardent James.

"Oh, then, by all means let us conform to your usual custom," murmured the Abyss, and took up his station by the side of his young friend, who, with his broad, foolish face lifted, stared out of countenance every one who descended the church steps. The Abyss with his eyes dropped saw only the big or little, well or ill-shod, feet of the unconscious congregation as they stepped from the last stair, and wondered when Stirling would have had enough of it. Suddenly he beheld two little arched feet incased in such bewildering bottines that his eyes involuntarily sprang to the face of their owner. Oh, the little head "sunning over with curls;" the dazzling smile; the blue, starry eyes that he saw—and she was bowing to James! At least that gave him the chance to raise his hat, and he hoped the sapphire eyes would rest on him a moment. They did with the briefest glance in the world, and then James walked him off.

"That's her," Stirling vouchsafed. He was red, and smiling, and important.

"The deuce it is!" panted the Abyss. He was a shade paler than usual, if possible, and his heart knocked against his side.

"Ain't she pretty?" asked James, in a disappointed tone.

"Very pretty," said the Abyss, who had regained his tranquillity. The refrain to all his thoughts for several days was, "What a face!" and once, as he got up from his table and went to the window to see the dawn of publication day yellow the East, he emphasized the remark in a healthy fashion, saying:

"Gods and goddesses, what a face!"

Shortly after this he went to call at the house of Mr. Blodgett with James, and saw the fair damsel who had touched Mr. Stirling's susceptible heart perched jauntily on the arm of a chair, in which reclined a fat young man whose forehead she was tickling with a feather plucked from the marabout of her fan. The fat young man made an unexpected spring and caught the maiden's lily finger in his teeth, whereupon she called him a horrid thing.

"She makes it lively with the fellers," said James in the exuberance of his delight.

"When, when," thought the Abyss, "shall I be intimate enough to have my forehead tickled with a feather?"

Mrs. Blodgett had joined the choir invisible about four years before these events, and the honors of the salon were in the hands of the eldest daughter, whom James called Miss Elsie. She was two or three years older than the beauty of the church steps. The family was completed by a twelve-year-old girl named Tillie, to whom no one present ever gave the title "miss." The three sisters resumed in themselves the three kinds of blonde beauty, the elder two Doctor Holmes's type; Elsie, blonde through deficiency of coloring matter; Lacie, the leonine blonde, shot through with golden light; Tillie, with red hair, tawny freckles, and gray eyes, what the humorous press defines as a strawberry blonde.

When Miss Blodgett had been duly saluted, James walked his friend up to the arm-chair where was perched the fair Lacie.

"Are you going to believe in him now?" he asked; and—

"Mr. Stirling tells me that you think I am a myth of his invention," said the Abyss, at the same moment.

"I did think you were, but I don't think so now," said the young lady.

"Because I am not spiritual enough?" asked the Abyss.

"Because he couldn't invent anything so nice," said the young lady.

There was a great laugh, amid which the Abyss escaped into another room, from which, however, he rapidly retreated, for upon a sofa sat a stupid-looking young man solemnly holding the hand of an ugly young woman, both Daphnis and Chloe preserving absolute silence.

"Aba!" thought the Abyss, "this is the way they do it, is it? Will the time ever come when I shall be allowed to sit a whole evening holding the pretty one's hand—what's her name?—Lacie, in unproved and uninterrupted beatitude?"

Then he made friends with the little sister, and by the time James was ready to go, Tillie was sitting on a hassock at the editor's feet, listening with wide eyes and flushed cheeks to marvelous tales.

Stirling came in, accompanied by Lacie.

"Well, Tillie," he said, cheerfully, "you are beginning early. I should say you had a beau."

The expression grated on the nerves of the Abyss, especially as he observed the quick blush of the child, but he was not prepared for the irritable outburst from the beautiful Lacie.

"Don't dare to talk so to her, James Stirling!" she flashed angrily. "Tillie, you are very forward and provoking."

"I—what—" faltered Stirling, gazing at his queen; "you're mighty squeamish all of a sudden," he added, resentfully, rallying a little. The Abyss presided with a thoughtful smile; smiling, bowed good-night, and, smiling, went his way.

"He's just splendid," said Tillie, ecstatically, rebounding easily from her sister's reproval.

Their guests were all gone, and the three girls rustled tumultuously together.

"Yes, he is," said Elsie; "he's real elegant."

To which Lacie responded with the all-comprising, even ready shibboleth of her class,

"Is that so?"

The Abyss had made a favorable impression.

It has become customary briefly to resume the bold advance of the wooer, the coy retreat of the maiden, the subsequent triumph, and possible betrothal, all of a love affair up to marriage, as "the old, old story." Marriage itself seems not to be included in the old, old story, perhaps to leave a choice in the matter of ending. So, conforming to custom, let us say the old, old story ran through the usual number of chapters with the Abyss and his lady love. She was known to an envying world as "his young lady."

When he first heard this nomenclature he asked her, in some agitation, whether he ought not to resent it, but was informed that it was the regular thing, and respect itself. He lived to have his forehead tickled with a feather, and to hold the little flower-fingers in his teeth; he even caught the young lady with his hat on, and was taught what penalty it was in his power to exact; he asked papa, he commiserated James Stirling, and apologized, as it were, for supplanting him.

Now that he heard the vocabulary or dialect of his earthly friends on delicate lips that were dear to him, the Abyss took the greatest pains to variegate his once pure diction with strange rhetorical hues. When he had achieved the triumph of substituting the word "elegant" for "enjoyable," he rushed to his betrothed to tell her that on the preceding evening he had had "an elegant time," firmly expecting sympathy and approbation for the nervous idiom, but instead the young lady's brow clouded, and, rising in her wrath, she harangued thus:

"If I know myself, Porphyro, and I think I do, you will not have many more opportunities to make fun of me, for I won't stand it. I know perfectly well that you ridicule all we say and do; I haven't been deceived a minute, not when you pretended to be most wild about me. In your soul you regard me as your inferior. The fact that I am a girl helps me a little, but the boys who come here, my equals—yes, they are—you despise. You know you do. No, you needn't say that I look pretty when I'm angry; nobody does. I'm thoroughly in earnest, I'd have you know. You look on the ways we talk, and act, and think as vulgar and common, and you pick up our every-day phrases and make fun of them. I heard you talking to that artist the other night; you didn't laugh, but you both talked in a tone utterly different from your own, and you used all the words that we use. When you like me best you are sorry that I did not live in your star; you think nothing can be choice and refined but what came from that star; and all I say is, if you're not pleased with us, and are pleased with your star, why, for goodness' sake, don't you go back to it, and live and be happy there? Why have you pretended to like me, if you have only a kind of good-natured contempt for all my surroundings and my associations? Of course, some time you'll get tired of me—they all say you will—and after that you'll only notice that every other word I say, that all my ways of looking at things, jar on your ideas of what people should be."

The poor Abyss, during the first part of this tirade, had laughingly protested his innocence of the abominable sins against hospitality of which she accused him; but when she spoke of herself and his starry home, he fell into a moody reverie, through which his voice rang earnestly in gloomy prophecy about their future. He did not know how to tell her that her charm remained unimpaired by her strange speech; that to him it was a fascinating novelty to find a tender and tactful nature joined to the slang and manners of a schoolboy; that the homely phrases he ridiculed in others became piquantly transfigured in her mouth, and her very brusquerie was dear to him, as

"The Imperfect hath a charm the Perfect can not own."

Far from wishing her an Astral, or anything that she was not, his heart cried to her often, "Almost thou persuadest me to forget my star." He did not even try to say any of this to the indignant Lacie, but made a tragic exit R. U. E., and, seeing his beautiful betrothed at the play that evening with a suburban cad whom he loathed, was bitterly miserable.

Elsie explained her sister's unmeasured caprice and waywardness that evening by murmuring to members of the party that Lacie had had a "spat" with Porphyro. This meant a quarrel. The next day Lacie received a letter from her lover, so full of delicate tenderness that a reader of wider horizon than his correspondent would have known therefrom, not only the writer, but many generations of his ancestors. Something, indeed, in the letter, woke a new consciousness in the girl of an intangible grace and goodness which all her bright intuitions and gentle heart could never gain for her—the instinctive assimilation of what is gracious, and rejection of what is common and trivial, that she saw exemplified for the first time in this exiled Ad-Elsie found her in a tempest of tears over the sheets of a letter shed round her, and demanded the cause of so much grief.

"I never can change now," sobbed Lacie, forlornly, tried to do as he likes that would spoil him too much oh, Elsie, I wish, how I do wish, I had been born in his star!"

Elsie passed this all lightly by, as mere aberrations of mind incident to a heavy flirtation, but said, seriously: "He's all right, though, isn't he? He's behaving well, I mean."

Even in the midst of her grief, Lacie's reply was couched in the current slang phrase which signifies the acme of affirmation.

"It's his fault," she added, sadly; "he seems to have a character for me, in his mind, that's very gay, and frivolous, and silly; and when I am with him, before I know it I am trying to be like what he thinks I am, instead of like myself, and I intensify every bad trait and bad habit I have. I mean to try some day to make him understand that I am not such a little dunce and vulgarian, and that I can care for the things he cares for."

"He likes you just as you are," said Elsie, sagely; "everybody does. Eddie Chubb said he never saw anybody like you. If you go changing your style, you'll get melancholy and dowdy, and Porphyro would be the first one to scold, too. You mind what I say."

Bliss and rapture were introduced and overthrown half a dozen times after this episode, but in a moment of harmony the wedding-day was set, and arrangements were made toward that end. One day, as the Abyss was gathering together the next issue of the Zion Trumpet, he found the verse he had in hand of an unusually bad quality, and he had neither time nor inclination to furnish a little hymn of his own, though he wrote graceful verses sometimes. The proprietor liked the poet's corner in the Trumpet to be filled, and the Abyss suddenly remembered a little scrap that had been crowded out of more prosperous numbers, but which he had intended to use in time. He found it, named it "The Beyond," rewrote it in another metre, to the peril of its meaning, when it ran like this:

After life's joy and pain,
Made pure from every stain,
Receive us, fair Lord Christ, within thy heaven.
The road is perilous,
But Thou hast died for us,
And we have striven.

Thrilling with ecstasy,
Glowing with charity—
We nothing know of that golden bliss
In the world after death,
But trust to find, through faith,
What bere we miss.

But lest high joy's excess
Our pale, starved souls oppress,
Rest in the grave-bed grant us of thy grace;
Surcease of hopes and fears,
Of laughter and of tears,
An interspace.

Men full of happy days,
Sunned through with Fortune's rays,
The thought of endless sleep can not appal;
But what great sage even dare
Dream wretched men's despair,
If this is all!

The manuscript was in a cramped back-hand, and not signed, but it was religious, and the Abyss was glad to escape the agony of having to grind out a rhyme himself. The paper came out, but woeful were the consequences of the little poem.

The first intimation which the Abyss received that anything was wrong was the violent irruption of the proprietor into the office, squealing in his wily voice,

"What's all this Porphyrogene? I say, what in heaven's name have you allowed to appear in my paper? I'm ruined, that's all; it's your fault; everybody says the Trumpet can't hold together another month; it's something about the intermediate state—a poem. What have you permitted?"

"What are you talking about?" said the Abyss, angrily, getting up to possess himself of a copy of the paper. "There's the poem; see for yourself if there's anything in it to disturb the most bigoted old nightcap on the planet."

The proprietor, who couldn't construct a grammatical sentence under any pressure, found the poem solid Greek to his excited sense, and threw the paper across the room in a paroxysm of wrath and disquietude. He had heard that the poem was creating a breeze of comment and censure, and long-faced croakers had told him to prepare for the worst.

While other papers, religious and secular, were reprinting the lines as those that had "caused the downfall of the Zion Trumpet," the desk of the Abyss was creaking under an avalanche of snow-white paper, demanding explanations, withdrawing subscriptions, advertisements, and patronage. The editor wearied of the words, "the third verse of the poem in your issue of the twelfth," and blessed the wag who wrote of the obnoxious stanzas, "The Beyond! I should think so. They're away beyond me," just for varying the formula. At last, one day, the little proprietor dropped inertly into a chair, and said sorrowfully:

"I'm busted!" which was too true to be ludicrous, and the Abyss, drawing the Pons Asinorum on the blotting-paper, said gloomily:

"Day after to-morrow was to have been my wedding-day."

"By George!" said the impulsive proprietor, bouncing out of his chair, "it's a shame. I didn't know that when I was so mad with you. Now, that is too bad. Why, you relied on your position on the Trumpet, didn't you? There, there, something will turn up." This last, as the Abyss slowly raised his eyes, and the proprietor saw that they were dim. It made him feel dismal.

"I wish," said the Abyss, as he lay in bed the next morning, "that I could by some means discover the rogue that wrote those verses, who is probably laughing in his sleeve at the commotion he has made. I would cause him to spend one of the worst quarters of an hour he ever passed through."

Just then he heard a noise of voices outside his door—one hoarse and jovial voice saying: "I tell you I don't care whether he is in bed or not. I'm going to see him now. He'll be glad enough to see me, don't you fret."

The door unceremoniously opened, and there walked in a large, florid individual with thick, black hair, big black eyes, black moustache, and several double chins, beneath the set of which peeped the ends of a red silk handkerchief. He knew the charms of morning cocktails apparently; but was, after all, a bluff and laughter-loving stranger. He sat down comfortably on the foot of the bed, stared at the Abyss, who stared at him, and they both laughed.

"I've seen you at Liberty Hall. You're a nice healthy specimen to run a religious paper, ain't you?" said the stranger, beginning to choke. "Oh, you're such a good young man! There's my card. Nat. M. Bingham; that's my name, and colonel, that's my title. I'm the boss of The Turf, the Target, and the Tiller sporting paper. You've run your religious craft aground. Old Trumpeter told me himself; besides the papers are full of it, and do you know what I'm going to do? I'm going to enlarge the Target; I'm going to make it the size, and type, and heft of the Trumpet deceased. I've bought the presses and the whole outfit of your old man, and it's my private opinion that for the editor of a sporting paper, that's spicy while it's never low, that collects all news that interests its patrons while it never caters to a degraded taste, you are right on deck. Now, is it a whiz? No poetry, mind, except lines to Maud S., if you're wrought up extra," said Colonel Bingham, facetiously.

"Roll eastward, happy earth," said the Abyss, as he dressed after the worthy man's departure, "I'm tided along for the honeymoon any way."

* * * * *

"Are you just as well pleased as if I had remained on the Trumpet?" he said to Lacie that evening, when he told her his arrangement with Colonel Bingham.

"Oh, just as well," she said, quietly. "It's a bright little paper, every one says, and is to be much better; but, oh, Porphyro, when I think of to-morrow and what a wicked girl I am, I don't know what to do." Lacie spoke with wide, tragic eyes, and a low voice of horror. The heart of the Abyss stood still, his face grew paler.

"Tell me what you mean," he said, imperatively.

"Oh, I am so bad," she murmured, distractedly. "I don't know whether I can tell you or not; I don't know whether you ought to ask it, or whether you won't be happier not to know it." Her voice and expression were enough to throw the Abyss into an agony. He begged, he sued, he raved; she must tell him; such a mystery might spoil their whole lives; he never could endure it; her silence would drive him to suicide's grave. There was nothing too frightful to be dismissed from his imagination in the interval that succeeded his wild appeal. At last, after due summoning of her courage, Lacie confessed her crime in a low, trembling voice.

"Porphyro, it was I who wrote the poem that hurt the Trumpet of Zion. I didn't know it was so wicked when I wrote it, but it must be, or every one wouldn't be so horrified. If you ever printed it I meant to tell you long afterward that it was mine, just to show you that I do think sometimes, because I know you believe I can't."

The relief was immense. The Abyss laughed like a maniac. "Please consider me a radical convert to belief in your thinking powers, and don't let your future thinking be so unorthodox, I implore. Do you know the invariable rule of The Turf, the Target, and the Tiller? 'No communication printed which does not bear the full name of the author.'"

"Some of the American papers, alluding to the relations between the Sultan and the American Minister," says the Constantinople correspondent of the New York Tribune, "have been circulating an item to the effect that his majesty has presented his friend with a beautiful Circassian girl. For their benefit I should like to testify that my own eyes have seen this Circassian girl. She came from the Sultan's palace, and is truly of exquisite beauty. Two or three weeks ago, being in General Wallace's library, I was invited to take the general's own arm-chair that I might view her from a better standpoint, for she hangs from the wall over the general's writing table, and is one of those choice works of art which bind the eye as under a spell. The picture must have been painted some twenty-five or thirty years ago; for whom, none seems to know. In a wide arm-chair lolls a girl of eight or ten years, clad in oriental jacket and trousers—the one heavy with gold embroidery, the other flashing back the light from rich satin folds. Over her head, on the dark crimson background, is figured the imperial cipher of the present Turkish dynasty. The girl lolls, I said; she half reclines in the graceful but restful attitude which any Oriental instinctively assumes when cast among the cushions of the divan. She is perfectly, carelessly at rest in her home, and the flash of her jewels shows her to be no mean member of the household. But her face at once enchains you. The great languid eyes, the soft curve of the cheek, the full red of the lip, instantly storm the most rugged heart with a perfect childish beauty. Yet there is something in the swell of the nostrils, something in the curl of the mouth, that makes you feel your sudden sympathetic smile to be unappreciated. The girl looks you squarely in the face, without for a moment condescending to forget that she is a child of the house of Osman, and that four hundred years of conquest have fortified her baby throne of luxury against all disturbance. The child sits there upon a tiger skin among the velvet cushions, every inch a princess. And as at last your eyes leave the proud, bewitching face, and follow the pliant curve of the right arm, upon which she rests, you are thrilled to see for the first time that under the delicate hand the crumpled tiger skin bears the head of the tiger. Glaring eyes, snarling mouth, and cruel fangs, dispute your intrusion upon the repose of the little lady. It is the life-size portrait of a princess, but a princess of barbaric splendors. It is a picture of beauty and the beast, which once seen will never be forgotten. Such is General Wallace's slave girl. Upon this child of the harem the general's estimable wife is compelled to look. This picture was hanging in one of the disused palaces, and was admired by the general. His admiration produced the effect of the offer of the picture as a token of the Sultan's regard. The offer was politely refused, but the Sultan, learning that the general would enjoy seeing the picture again, sent it to the legation, with the request that it might remain there as a loan, for such time as might be agreeable."

It is stated that the state coffers of Italy now contain five hundred and fifty millions of coin laid up toward the abolition of the forced paper currency.

LOUISE AND LORNE.

The Trotting-Horse Reporter Discourses on their Precedence.

"I understand," said a rather subdued-looking man, who entered the editorial rooms yesterday afternoon, "that there is a gentleman here who answers all questions sent to the office. Is that the case?"

"He's out just now," replied a young reporter, whose principal occupation seemed to consist in placing his feet on a desk and telling stories of a not-at-all-doubtful nature to the other powerful minds who had quarters in the room. "He's gone out to find how many miles per day a vessel will be delayed by head-winds on a voyage from Liverpool to New York if Talmage is lecturing in Brooklyn and facing east. But if your question isn't too aerial in its nature, too high for us, perhaps we can find an answer for you without waiting for the idiotic-inquirer man to return."

"What I wished to ascertain," said the gentleman, "was in relation to the Queen."

"Oh, I know all about the queen," interrupted the trotting-horse reporter. "Was it in pedro or seven-up that they nipped you for a bet?"

"I never play cards," was the reply. "My question is in regard to the Queen of England, and the precedence which members of the royal family take over each other on state occasions. You remember when the Princess Louise married the Marquis of Lorne?"

"Yes," promptly responded the young man; "it was the year Goldsmith Maid trotted in two sixteen and a half. You bet I remember it."

"At that time," continued the visitor, "the statement was made that, in consequence of his not being of royal blood, the marquis would not be allowed, by the laws of court etiquette, to sit beside his wife at a state dinner. Is that so?"

"I should just twitter that it was," replied the young man whose recollections of Goldsmith Maid were so vivid. "There's no place in the world where a pedigree with five thoroughbred crosses in it is of more account than in England. Now, what you want to know, I suppose, is where Lorne would sit at, say, the queen's thanksgiving dinner?"

"That is exactly what I wish to ascertain," was the reply.

"Well," said the young man, "in the first place, the queen would be up at the head of the table, near the turkey—kind of have the pole on the rest of the field. Do you drop?"

"Yes," was the answer; "I think I catch your meaning."

"Next to the queen is the Prince of Wales—he's her eldest son, you know. Then comes his wife and five children. After they have been provided with seats the Duke of Edinburgh and his collection must be looked after. Then there is the Duke of Connaught and his wife, then Prince Leopold, the Princess Louise, the Princess Beatrice, the—"

"But, my dear sir," interrupted the seeker of information, "you have already mentioned more than enough people to fill an ordinary table."

"Oh, I haven't fairly begun yet. There are several of the folks not yet referred to, and then there are numerous installments of the queen's cousins who make it a point to come around Thanksgiving Day—at least twenty of 'em. On the whole, I should say that, if the head of the table were in the dining-room, and dinner began promptly at two o'clock, the Marquis of Lorne would be enjoying a piece of the turkey's neck and some celery tops out in the back yard about 8:30 P. M."

"I am very much obliged, indeed, for this information," said the gentleman. "Good day, sir."

"Bon jour," was the cordial reply. "Excuse my speaking French; but we are not allowed to use any other language around here after three o'clock. The literary editor comes in at that time."

When I was a little fellow, in Stuttgart, with yellow hair and wooden shoes, there came one day to the school which I attended an American boy named Jim Saunders, whose father was a New York broker. He was a quiet, simple-looking child, with great, soulful brown eyes, and an innocent look in his face that made all of us think he couldn't know much. We used to make fun of his peaked face and thin legs, because in Germany, you know, the children are all round-faced and fat. After little Jim had been in the school about six months, and could speak German pretty well, a circus came to town. One day we were discussing the matter, when Saunders, who had been sitting quietly in a corner of the room, said he should think a little boy might crowd in under the circus-tent and see the show that way. We all laughed heartily at this exhibition of ignorance, because we knew how closely the tent was watched, and more than one of us had been made temporarily delirious by having the boss canvasser's boot lean suddenly against the seat of our pants. So, when little Jimmy said this we laughed heartily, and Jacob Laudeneimer, who was the biggest boy in the school, said that nobody but a Yankee would talk so foolish. But Jimmy seemed to think he was right, and finally Jacob offered to bet him two marks that he couldn't get into the circus under the tent. Jimmy always had plenty of money, and he at once took the bet. Then several more of the boys began betting the little fellow until I felt sorry for him, and finally I concluded to go him six groschen myself, so that I could give the money back to him, when all the others had won theirs, and do a noble act. Little James took my bet, and after all the money had been put up with Mr. Niersteiner, one of the teachers, the whole crowd went over to the circus-ground to see James lose. He went right up to the ticket-wagon and bought a ticket. Then he said to the man: "I reckon there is no objection to my going under the canvas, as long as I have paid my way?" The man said certainly not; if anybody wanted to take that much trouble he had no objection. So Jimmy crawled under the tent and came out of the main entrance in a minute, looking just as solemn and innocent as ever. Of course Mr. Niersteiner had to give him the money, because he had won it fairly, and after he had put it in his pockets he winked at us, and said: "If you little tow-headed Dutchmen think I knocked around New York for eight years for nothing, you will get left." This sad incident came near blighting my otherwise happy boyhood.—From "The Pifalls of Youth," by Carl Schurz in the Chicago Tribune.

FROM "CHET" TO CHESTER.

Our Correspondent tells how the President Climbed the Social Hill.

The first society man of America is President Arthur. It is the wonder of the day and the topic everywhere. I returned to-day from Newport, where he has been fêted like a prince. It is not that he is handsome and agreeable—for he was both long ago—but it is his ease, polish, and perfect manner that make him the greatest society lion we have had in many years. He does not "slop over," but has just enough of the blase air of an old society man to render his presence a compliment, and he is never familiar with any one. Besides, he not only knows how to drive, but is an excellent judge of wine, and talks to women with the ease of a man of the world. Above all, he knows how to refuse invitations. We never before had a President with half the social accomplishments of President Arthur. Most of his predecessors have been remarkable for their failures in society matters. General Grant had the best manner; but he couldn't eat, and was anything but attractive in person. I remember at one of the Chamber of Commerce dinners, some years ago, his finger-nails were so atrociously ill-kept and dingy that it excited comment from people who usually let such things pass unnoticed; and, while writing of it now, I remember that when I saw him at Long Branch last year his nails were still in mourning. Whether it had anything to do with his disappointed hopes for '80 or not, I am unable to say; but certain it was that his hands needed attention—and perhaps soap and water. President Arthur's hands are as carefully kept as a woman's. They are white, and dimpled, and the nails are perfect. What would the vigorous and sturdy pioneer in the early days of the republic have said of a president whose nails were under the hands of a manicure—a woman whose profession it is to improve and beautify the hands. Every nail on the President's bands is trimmed to a point, and carefully polished. The skin at the base of the nails is pulled back just far enough to show the little white half-moon on each finger. I am in the habit of observing such little things as the condition of a man's hands. It tells more of character than many more prominent features. Again, the President can open a door, restore a handkerchief, or hand a chair to a lady without exhibiting a colossal amount of clumsy dignity, as did the eminent Rutherford B. Hayes, nor, on the other hand, does he effervesce with the effusive gallantry of men of distinction from the South.

It is always difficult to write about the manners of a man of refinement, because there are so many little things that can scarcely be noticed—how easily he bows before taking the hand of any one in an introduction; how well he gets out of a room without turning his back on it or going backward like a crab; how well he moves the spoon from, instead of toward, him in eating soup; and a thousand and one little things that are ridiculous on paper, but immensely effective when a man is the lion of a fashionable dinner party. Another amazing thing is the ease with which the President has captured the respect of the young society men. Of all critics they are the most severe, because the idol of their lives is "form." If a man is "proper," they are in with him for all they are worth; but if he is not, their contempt is as insultingly shown to a president as to a pauper. Believing only one thing, they ridicule everything else. They are enthusiastic admirers of the President. It was an odd sight to see them in the Casino a few days ago, surrounding and talking to him with the utmost respect. They were in all the agony of morning toilet, with the new wasp-waist English Prince Albert coats, and trousers strapped under their varnished boots. They sucked the ends of their sticks, and listened with respect to the fashionably dressed President, standing erect among them with an expression of reticent good-fellowship on his handsome face, and an air of easy familiarity in his bearing. Among the young society men about him were August Belmont Jr., Centre Hitchcock, James Kernochan, Freddie Gebhard, Count Fitz-James, Jack Rutherford, and John D. Cheever. I find it impossible to imagine these men talking to any other president than Chester A. Arthur.

I was at Newport during the whole of the President's stay and saw him a great many times. Somehow one constantly forgot that he was President of the United States, and wondered who he was. It was very touching, however, to notice the villagers and humbler residents of Newport when the President was visible. If they heard that he was to visit any one of the cottages, the Ocean House or the Casino, they would swarm in crowds to get a look at him, and carry their little children along so that they might say when they grew up that they had seen President Arthur. He was always careful to notice this homage to his office, and raised his hat when passing the crowds. His manner is, as I have said, irreproachable. You may say, what of it? Has he not always been a man of position and influence in New York, and was not his position in society in New York assured long before his election to the vice-presidency? That is just the point. I knew him for years before he became widely known, and it is that acquaintance with his former life—that causes me to wonder at his sudden and complete development. Less than four years ago it was a common sight to see Chester A. Arthur in company with Mike Cregan, Barney Biglin, and Johnny O'Brien, day after day and night after night, in the various political bar-rooms of the city. I presume you have the exact prototypes of Cregan, Biglin, and O'Brien in San Francisco—men who are of extremely low parentage, of vulgar habits, and common connections, who wield considerable power among the lower voting classes. With these three, and kindred men, was Chester A. Arthur a bosom friend, not only prior to but actually during the first months of his vice-presidency. When Garfield died, he dropped them like hot shot, and blossomed out into a refined and elegant society man.

The reception given him by Governor Morgan, Wednesday, is ranked as the most magnificent entertainment not only of this season, but of any other. Governor Morgan is not a petty entertainer. He does not give receptions often, but when he does they are the social sensation of the day. He is a man of good family, great wealth, and intense pride. He is tall and distingue-looking, with white hair and keen eyes. It would be silly to attempt a description of his magnificent house the day of the reception. It was banked with flowers, and the President moved among millions of dollars' worth of diamonds. The ladies wore short dresses, and bonnets, and all their jewels that could be carried. The most beautiful woman at the reception was "Mamie" Astor, the wife of William Waldorf Astor. He goes to Italy as minister, and we lose, in the departure of his charming wife, one of the most beautiful of the younger society women of New York. On Wednesday she was dressed in deep red, trimmed with ruffles of shaded material that merged into a delicate blue. Everybody was not at this reception. Those who were there were branded with the stamp of the very highest standing, and all below were left unasked. The President seemed amused and entertained, but not flattered. The next day he was entertained at the villa of Mr. Gardner Brewer, in great style. This was followed by Commodore Baldwin's ball. His villa is very large and superbly furnished, and it was decorated with a lavish hand. The entertainment is known as the "rosebud ball" because so many beautiful girls were present. Most of them dressed in red and wore their dresses very low. The display of diamonds was extraordinary, Mrs. Paran Stevens wearing nearly all of hers. Her detective took them from her hands when she emerged from the ladies dressing-rooms, and hurried home with them. It is an old thing now, Mrs. Stevens employing a detective to look after her jewels when she wears them all, but it created a great sensation the first time she appeared in public with him. She can no longer boast of having more expensive diamonds than any other woman in the world except royalty. The diamonds of the Miss Rothschild who was married a few months ago in Paris are more beautiful than those of Mrs. Stevens. But then the Parisienne hasn't any detectives. Mrs. Baldwin's morning-room was extensively commented on. It is on the ground floor, and very delicately furnished. The floor, walls, and ceiling are of brilliantly polished and artistically carved satinwood, the furniture, mirrors, and picture-frames being upholstered in delicate light blue plush. General Hancock was at the ball—which, by the way, was a ball only in name, as the crush was so great that dancing was impossible. The magnificent-looking soldier was a great favorite with the ladies. His good-nature is unbounded. There were many eminent army and navy people at the ball, and their costumes added to the brilliancy of the scene. It would be tiresome to go through the list of entertainments given to the President. They kept him busy night and day.

His sons were with him, but they added nothing to his lustre. Some things are better left unsaid. I don't mind saying something about young Chester A. Arthur Jr.'s engagement, however, in a strictly confidential way, as I know it will go no farther. The attempt to have his fiancée accepted in New York society has proved a failure. I am sorry for Miss Maude Crowley is in every sense a beautiful girl. But the family is not "up" enough to satisfy the craving for "blood," which the society leaders of to-day suffer from, and the Crowleys must stay out, at least for a while. Their history is not well known, but there is no reason why it should be shrouded in mystery. I have known all about them for years. The father of Miss Maude Crowley is Richard Crowley, who hopes that the engagement of his daughter to the president's son, and his own intimacy with the chief executive, will lead to a certain big thing. This thing is his appointment as Secretary of the Treasury in the event of Folger being elected Governor of the State of New York. He hungers for the secretaryship, and would give his ears to get it, as it would give him what he most desires—position. But to the history of the Crowleys. In Lockport, New York, lived a number of laborers in whitewashed shanties near the canal some years ago. They worked by the day at canal and cellar-digging. One of these laborers had a number of sons, among them Richard Crowley, who showed considerable shrewdness, and had enough push in him to leave digging for ninety cents a day, and strike for something higher. Another laborer had an extremely pretty daughter, whose beauty so attracted her uncle, an Irish priest, that he took her out of her father's hovel and put her in a convent. She emerged a graceful, beautiful, and brilliant woman, and disappointed all her friends by marrying Richard Crowley. He has succeeded in politics largely through his wife's tact and diplomacy. They are living at the Arlington in Washington now with their ten children, but in Lockport is a magnificent residence which they built a short time ago. Within eye-shot are the two hovels where Mr. and Mrs. Crowley were born. Richard Crowley has done heavy service for his leaders, and he has earned a reward. His wife is to-day one of the most influential politicians of the gentler sex in Washington, but the daughter, Maude, is not accepted in New York. As a peculiarly striking proof of what I said about the President's associates a year or so ago, I may say that the youngest two of Mrs. Crowley's children are named Thomas Murphy Crowley, and Chester Arthur Crowley. At the time of the christening Tom Murphy was one of the bosom friends of Mike Cregan, Chester A. Arthur, Barney Biglin, and Johnny O'Brien. But is he a bosom friend of the President? Perish the thought! cries the first society man of America.

September 15, 1882.

French woman, often stigmatized as the most frivolous of their kind, are, in reality, the most thrifty—a virtue that frequently degenerates into absolute parsimony. A Paris correspondent says that he saw a striking instance of making the best of unregarded trifles the other day, when dining with one who certainly has the reputation for prudence. A cherry-pie had been on the table, and the mistress gave strict injunctions that all the stones were to be scraped from the plates and placed in her store-room. He ventured to ask the reason, and was told that not only the cherry, but plum, peach, and all manner of stones, whether cooked or raw, were invariably saved, gently dried in the oven, and kept in a great jar. "Then," said madame, "in the winter, when the fire burns clear and bright in the evening, I fetch a handful and throw them among the glowing coals. They crack and splutter for a moment, send up a brilliant flame, and the whole room is filled with a delicious odor."

A very popular young Baltimore revivalist recently had to marry the girl.

SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS.

At present there is as much attention paid to the infant department by our merchants as to any other portion of their establishments. I spent several hours last week in looking over the pretty things now in fashion in that line. I found that the regulation length for infants' robes is forty inches. These robes have been gradually increasing in length for the last twenty years. I saw a couple of the garments just received from Paris, one marked at fifty dollars and the other at sixty. The first was made of fine French muslin. It had a tablier front, composed, from the neck down, of rows of valenciennes, fine French embroidery bands, and clusters of tucks, twelve in a group and as fine as it was possible to make them. At the bottom of all this work were three ruffles about one and a half inches in length and a half-inch in width of the muslin, edged with valenciennes lace put on sparingly—that is, not much ruffled. This tablier was joined to the bottom of the robe on each side by a jabot of the same ruffling as that at the base. Another jabot of the same work ran straight down the centre of the front, and all three of them were ornamented with jaunty little bows of narrow white satin ribbon. The back part of these robes are generally quite plain, a broad hem and a cluster of tucks being considered quite sufficient. The material was shirred into a yoke, not very deep. Long ends of the muslin, about four inches wide and hemmed, were made to tie in the back. Another one of these robes was made of Paris mull. Straight down the front was a strip of fine embroidery, on each side of which was a strip of valenciennes lace an inch wide. On each side of the lace was a puffing of the mull. The remainder of the front was finished by a mass of tucks and valenciennes insertion, and finished at the bottom with one wide flounce of French embroidery. It was edged up the sides with a piece of embroidery to match, only narrower. The back of this dress was made similar to the other just described, except that it was trimmed at the left side with long loops and ends of white satin ribbon two and a half inches wide. The arms and neck are not shown now as formerly, long sleeves and high-neck waists covering them. A pretty Mother Hubbard cloak for an infant can be made of white camel's hair exceedingly soft and fine, and lined throughout with white surah silk, shirred in at the neck, and tied together with white satin ribbon. Another can be made of a delicate shade of soft gray camel's hair, with three box-plaits, both front and back attached to a yoke, covered by a wide shirred collar, lined with white surah silk, and a bow of white surah silk ribbon. A cloak of this description can be made up for twenty or twenty-five dollars. Infants' white skirts are made thirty-six inches long, about one yard and a half wide, and finished off with a wide hem and tucks in clusters, or else with lace or a flounce of rich embroidery. They range from six to eight dollars, when made of nainsook or French cambric. Babies' flannel skirts are generally made of Gilbert flannel or Ballard veil. They come one yard in length, and a yard and a half in width, and are in most cases heavily embroidered, showing large designs in flowers, with long, waving stems and leaves. One which I saw had the waist also cut in the skirt; and where the seams were taken in appeared a herring-bone stitch in white embroidery silk. The square-cut neck and short sleeves were worked in small scallops; the bottom was finished with tucks, also herring-boned, and torchon lace insertion. Beneath this was a hem, the edge of the hem embroidered in small point, underneath which was a ruffle of torchon lace one inch wide. In fact, it is becoming quite the style to put any description of heavy lace on flannels for children, though valenciennes is universal for dresses and white or cotton skirts. Quite novel are the little hats now coming into vogue for children of a year or two old. One, which was shown me, was intended for a boy baby, and was sailor-shape, made of a pretty tint of light blue plush, which shaded down to pearl white: the inside of the rim was filled in with a full ruching of white lace, which formed a sort of cap in appearance. Another was of white plush, with the rolling rim lined with a shirring of cream-tinted satin, with a bow outside of narrow white satin ribbon of the same tint. The Tam O'Shanter are still worn by both little boys and girls from two to four years of age. They are crocheted and done in worsted, coming in all colors. There are also crocheted coats to match the caps, and these have large firemen's capes falling nearly to the waist. With these suits also come leggings to match. A pretty novelty in little bonnets is the "Kate Greenaway." One, I remember, was of the palest shade of blue plush, with a light shade of pink surah satin used as lining. There were others, of cream color, cardinal, and navy blue, all exceedingly pretty. One, for a girl from five years up to eight, was of dark blue plush, with a shirred rim of white satin. Another was of light blue lined with pink. Price of each, seven dollars. There is as much thought spent upon the aprons which these little folks wear as on any other part of their wardrobe. A favorite style of making the aprons is to have them of a rich shade of ecru nainsook, the waist formed with seven box-plaits that join on to a yoke. The waist is barred across by a band of the same material embroidered in a dark shade of brown, to which is joined on the lower edge of the band the skirt; part of this is also embroidered to correspond. The apron is open in the back, and tied together with wide strings of the same, ornamented on the ends with the same kind of embroidery. They are low in the neck, and sleeveless. The latest novelty in baby-carriage robes are those made of Angora wool. They come in different designs. For instance, one side is of a medium shade of blue, with a terra-cotta border of Grecian design, while the other side is of terra-cotta, with the border in blue. Another was of soft gray with a pink border; another of white with a border of scarlet; and still another of pink with a blue border. These robes are sold at three dollars each. The crib-blankets now shown are very pretty little affairs; especially a white one I saw with a wreath in the centre of wild roses, buds, and leaves, worked with shaded silk. A pale pink worked in pure white, and a blue worked in lemon color, were also shown. These blankets range in price from four to six dollars. It is not an unusual thing now to see baby-pillows—cases richly ornamented with fine lace embroidery.

September 21, 1882.

SOCIETY.

The Castillo-Hastings Engagement.

We are informed upon the best of authority that the engagement contracted, some months ago, between Doctor J. D. Castillo, U. S. N., and Miss Lillie Hastings, of this city, has been broken off. Doctor Castillo, it will be remembered, was connected with the Rodgers expedition for the relief of the Jeannette.

The Grace Church Entertainment.

On Friday evening next Saratoga Hall will no doubt be crowded by society people, who have been on the qui vive regarding the entertainment that is to be presented upon that occasion by the Choral Society of Grace Church and its friends, under the auspices and general management of Mrs. Leland Stanford, Mrs. Hutchinson, and Mrs. Gwin. This entertainment is to consist of tableaux, under the supervision of the Russian Consul-General, Colonel Olovovsky, and will include such pictures as "Blind Man's Buff," "School of Vestals," "Charlotte Corday," "Study of Scripture," "Love and Riches," "Judgment of Paris," "Marguerite Tempted," "Indiscreet Soubrette," "Flirtation," "Serenade," and the "Fountain of the Tuileries," and vocal and instrumental music under the direction of Messrs. Schultz and Ludovici. The young ladies and gentlemen who are to take part are the Misses Bessie Sedgwick, Carrie Gwin, Kate Hutchinson, Maggie Hutchinson, Belle Wallace, Lucille Thornton, Belle Brooks, Maggie Brooks, Nina Platt, Miss Maynard, Miss Chevers, and Miss Benjamin, and the Messrs. Platt, Greenway, Pinkard, Hutchinson, and Reuling.

Notes and Gossip.

We have ample authority for the statement that Major-General John M. Schofield will soon arrive here as commanding officer of the military division of the Pacific, vice Major-General Irwin McDowell, who is soon to be placed on the retired list. General McDowell is having a handsome residence built on Van Ness Avenue, which be and his family will soon occupy, and which is the most abundant proof that they propose to make California their future home. General Schofield and family, who will be accompanied by Colonel William M. Wherry and family, will take up their permanent residence at the Grand, where they formerly resided some ten or eleven years ago. At the same time, so we are informed, General August V. Kautz, Colonel of the Eighth Infantry, will be made a department commander, and will take up his residence at the Presidio, which, in a social sense, will be very satisfactory, as Mrs. Kautz is recognized as a very accomplished and agreeable society woman. Major F. A. Whitney and his charming bride, (née Miss Hattie Myrick,) whose brilliant wedding at Trinity Church a few weeks ago will be remembered, returned from their bridal tour, which took in Lake Tahoe and Virginia City, on Saturday last, and were given receptions on the 19th and 21st instant by Mr. and Mrs. Elliott. Mrs. Whitney is to be made the recipient of a reception by Mrs. General Kautz at Angel Island this afternoon. On Tuesday evening next Mrs. Whitney will be given a reception by Mrs. Godley, and shortly afterward will depart with her husband for San Diego, via Los Angeles. On Sunday morning last Mrs. Frank M. Clarke, wife of Paymaster Clarke of the navy, and Miss Gracie Taylor, left for the East. Mr. and Mrs. William Collier are contemplating an Eastern trip which shall take in New York and Washington and extend into the winter. Miss Carrie Pierce, of Santa Clara, is at Mare Island as the guest of Mrs. Brice. Miss Nellie Trowbridge, who has been visiting Miss Kate Felton, at Menlo, has returned to the Palace. Miss Elam has returned from Napa Soda Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Neff, who have been enjoying a short honeymoon at Monterey, returned on Thursday last and held a reception in the evening at the residence of the bride's parents, 728 Sutter Street. Miss Jeannette Reynolds and her mother have returned from Sonoma County. Major and Mrs. W. F. Furry, of Los Angeles, have been visiting their friends in this city during the week. The Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise departed by the Comus on Saturday last, and have arrived at Victoria. It is their intention to remain in British Columbia about a month, and to tarry a week or two here upon their return. General and Mrs. John F. Miller and Miss Dora Miller returned to this city from Washington on Thursday last, and are at the Palace. General Rosecrans also returned on Thursday last. Gordon Blanding, Miss Blanding, and Miss E. Blanding went to Monterey on Friday last. A large number of San Franciscans went to Monterey on Saturday last; among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Jewell, Mrs. G. H. Sisson, Miss N. O'Sullivan, Miss A. O'Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Cutting, J. T. Haviland, R. P. Hammond Jr., A. S. Tubbs, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Goad, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Meinecke and Miss Meinecke. C. N. Plum Jr. and the Misses Plum returned from their extended tour on Thursday last. Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Collier, and Mr. and Mrs. Tubbs and Miss Nettie Tubbs, have been spending a few days at Monterey. Mrs. Atherton, who is still having improvements made upon her California Street residence, will return from Menlo Park, accompanied by her daughter, in a few days, and Mrs. Rathbone will return in a short time afterward. Mrs. Colonel J. H. Withington, Mrs. Lugsdin, Miss F. E. Lugsdin, Miss Nellie Wood, Mrs. James G. Fair, and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Wilshire have returned from Monterey. General J. F. Houghton, who has been spending several months in the East, returned home on Saturday last. General Carr has again assumed command at Camp Lowell, near Tucson, Arizona. Mrs. Commander J. B. Coghlan, of the Navy Yard, has gone East. Mrs. J. F. Cowdery is visiting in Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Pomeroy, of Tucson, who have been spending the summer in Oakland and San Francisco, have returned to Arizona. Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid leave for New York to-day. The next social and literary at the Navy Yard will be given at the residence of Doctor Wood on Thursday evening next. Mr. and Mrs. Fred. G. Sanborn are enjoying their honeymoon at Lake Tahoe. On Tuesday evening next Mr. William F. Smith and Miss Mamie A. Smith, of this city, will be married, the relatives of the parties being invited to be present at the ceremony.

CENTURY BRIC-À-BRAC.

The Dead of Night.

In dull, dead heaviness of sleep,
The earth lies weak and worn.
The haggard night forgets to keep
Her weary watch for morn.
A numbness slowly seems to creep
On river, field, and bill.
The gloom falls momentarily more deep,
The stillness grows more still.

And over all there steals, intense,
A strangeness chill and gray,
A stolid, dull indifference.
The night's despair of day.

—Robertson Trowbridge.

Cophetua.

(IN THE NEW STYLE.)

Her arms were swathed in dainty kid,
She was less shy than I shall say,
With jaunty graces not all bid,
Before the king Cophetua.
In blushing maze the king did gaze
(A bashful monarch by the way),
She smiled so pertly up at him
From 'neath her plumed hat so gay.

She smiled, then laughed; she bent her head
With sidelong glance and bit her ring;
Advanced a step, then mimicked dread,
With airs as coy, as bold as spring.
The royal arms stretched royal palms;
She rushed between them with a fling,
And on his breast, with kisses, cried,
"You dear old Cophy, be my king!"

—Xenos Clarke.

The Statue.

There was a statue, only common clay,
Which in the sunshine stood one summer day,
And just through one brief magic hour—I'm told,
Because the sun shone so—seemed finest gold.

There was a hero—hero but to one—
Who had his gilded hour beneath Love's sun,
And then, ah me! the sunshine died away,
And left the hero—bare, dull, common clay.

L'ENVOI.

Are you the hero, or are you the sun?
A word, mon ami, and my fable's done:
If you must blame, be just, and blame the sun.
—Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Deaf.

As to a bird's song she were listening,
Her beautiful head is ever sidewise bent;
Her questioning eyes lift up their depths intent—
She, who will never bear the wild-birds' sing.
My words within her ears' cold chambers ring
Faint, with the city's numerous sub-tones blent,
Though with such sounds as suppliants may have sent
To high-throned goddesses my speech takes wing.

Not for the side-poised head's appealing grace
I gaze, nor hair where fire in shadow lies—
For her this world's unhallowed noises base
Melt into silence; not our groans, our cries,
Our curses reach that high-removed place
Where dwells her spirit, innocently wise.—H. C. Bunner.

A Child's Wisdom.

"Give us—ah! give us—but Yesterday!"—Austin Dobson.

Between the half-drawn curtains faintly gleamed
The early dawn's first pale and glimmering ray;
But through my heart rang ever, as I dreamed,
The poet's plaint: "Give me but Yesterday!"

Through swiftly-opening doors, with flying feet,
My little daughter with her curls of gold
Came eagerly the morning sun to greet:
The little maid whom yesterday we told

To-morrow, if the skies were not unkind,
Out into country meadows she should go,
With beating heart and shining eyes to find
The sweet, shy haunts of wild flowers, hiding low.

Flushed in the morning light, she danced and sang;
While I forgot the poet's murmuring lay,
As through the room her sweeter wisdom rang:
"Mamma! mamma! To-morrow is To-day!"
—Alice Wellington Rollins.

Her Fan.

So I am to keep you, little fan,
While she goes to waltz with the eighteenth man.

Well!—now that I have you, the question, sweet,
Is, whether to kiss you, or batter and beat?

That you've been her accomplice, in moments gone by,
In tricks to torment me, you can not deny.

How oft, from her side, I've been ordered to go,
To hunt for your fanship, high and low,

And been, for not finding you, frowned at and chid,
While, 'neath her own furbelows, basely you hid!

If you weren't just warm from her clasp, I fear
You'd have fluttered your last at soirées, my dear!

This, too, is the cord she cruelly twists,
In my envious sight, round her milk-white wrists;

And this, the edge she'd do nothing but bite,
When I prayed for one word in the soft starlight.

She's a flirt, wretched fan! from her head to her foot,
In its daintiness, supremely absurd little boot!

(Though one such wickedness wouldn't surmise,
From those tender lips, and shy, sweet eyes,

And she looks, to-night, in that white robe's flow,
Fair and pure as a lily in snow;)

But her heart, under all, may be deep and true—
The ocean has frivolous froth on its blue!

That she likes me a little, I can't help believing—
If I only were sure of that fact, all-retrieving!

* * * Here she comes back, at last, grown a rose, in the waltz!

Fanling! take her this kiss, and I'll pardon your faults!
—C. E. S.

From the Century for October.

VANITY FAIR.

It has been decreed that bonnets and hats are to be worn of portentous size, profusely trimmed with ostrich plumes, tropical birds, and variegated ribbons. The brims will be of the widest, and the crowns of the highest, while velvet and felt will be the favorite materials. Long-napped felt and plush will still be employed, but more rarely. Double-faced ribbons, either in velvet or silk and satin, will be almost exclusively used for bonnet-strings.

White has been more worn than usual, perhaps in imitation of the Princess of Wales, who has shown this year a decided predilection for white enlivened with a parure of diamonds. American ladies who possess any number of jewels, and have the faintest justification for their display, have combined them to great advantage with jackets of white satin, worn over skirts of puffed tulle caught up with innumerable bows of ribbon, or of plain surah also trimmed with Mechlin lace and ribbon.

Any more remarks anent the gaudy parasol of '82 are now off. It has lived a mad life for two months, and has shown itself with unblushing effrontery at all times and places where a parasol dared to be. But there is an end to all things, and its butterfly days are numbered. It has been decked with garlands of flowers, shrouded with laces, and even studded with precious stones. The wildest extravagance, the most intolerable vulgarity, have marked its career; yet it will probably be laid away with many regrets by fashionable women, who must then turn their thoughts to less conspicuous sources of personal expense.

"The thing that impresses me most in a walk on Broadway," says "Brunswick" in the Boston Courier, "is the fit of the women's clothes. I have never seen anything like it. Those who don't wear jerseys wear other material skin-tight. Not only do their arms look as though they had been melted and poured into the sleeves, but the entire waist fits in the same way; and I have seen skirts that seemed almost as tight-fitting. This is a becoming dress to some figures, but there are others whose peculiarities it only exaggerates. In the effort to get the compact look, ornament is dispensed with, and wraps are scorned. A high collar, fastened with a jeweled stud, is the only break in the monotony of this costume. The hat is a turban, made of the same material as the dress, and worn back on the head to show the thick bang. It is a picturesque costume, particularly with the long gloves drawn nearly to the elbow outside the sleeve. The great drawback to these tight sleeves is the fact that they are worn without cuffs, which gives an unfinished look to the costume in the house. But now I see that the old-fashioned turn-over cuff is coming in again. The cuffless sleeve does not look so bad when the wearer has a pretty hand and wrist, but when the hand is large and ugly, and the wrist flat and bony, cuffs are a great improvement."

This, from Clara Belle, the fashion writer of the Cincinnati Enquirer, will interest the ladies: "Some of the new autumn walking costumes are of tweed, showing a white vest, cutaway coat, fastened just below the chest with one button, a standing collar, with round gold collar-buttons, and linen cuffs held together by large links, or huge cuff-buttons, and, crowning all, a jaunty, low-crowned Derby hat, devoid of trimming of any sort. This style is from London, and a few who follow it go to the whole English extent of carrying canes. These are quite slender bits of ebony, not long enough to be used in walking, and are sometimes expensively mounted with gold. It is fashionable, too, to wear cropped hair with these costumes. Cutting off the hair is not considered a very serious matter by women who are bold enough to adopt such distinctive and conspicuous toilettes, for they almost invariably belong to the classes who commonly wear wigs, and, therefore, can put on long hair again at will. There are numerous women in New York, who, being scantily provided by nature with hair, hardly ever show it at all, but wear wigs on all occasions. This saves trouble, because they can be sent to a shop to be combed and arranged to order, and brought back ready to be pinned on. Moreover, a variety of colors can be gained; for no hesitation seems to be felt in appearing in the morning with raven tresses, in the afternoon with yellow frizzes, and in the evening with a hirsute revelation in red. Of course, it is an extremely artificial woman, not to say a brazen one, who resorts to wigs for choice. It is only a youthful and pretty face, however, that can stand cropped hair."

The latest English fashion is the painting of blue veins on ladies' temples, wrists, and arms.—It is to be a feather season, say the milliners, and winter bonnets are to be more elaborately ostrich than the bird itself.—It is not good taste to wear a slipper or very low-cut shoe on the street; but when it is done, the slipper should always be worn over black stockings. In this case the height of the shoe will hardly be observed.—The latest agony is to wear a diamond solitaire in one ear, and a ruby or sapphire, matching in size and setting, in 't'other.—Autumn traveling bonnets are extremely small, and ornamented by a pretty fancy bird, because it is less perishable than lace or ribbons.—Bridesmaids at autumn weddings are to wear short costumes, but the bills will be long.—The quaintest pokes have the back of the crown turned upward, with many loops of velvet ribbon and small feather tips stuck in the summit of the crown and falling downward, with perhaps some erect heron's feather directly on the top.—An Alexandrite ring is the latest freak. It is a beautiful gem, rich mossy green by day and ruby red by candle-light. This rare combination pleases the aesthetic taste that seeks color as well as brilliancy.—Newport young ladies wear gold bangles, from which every imaginable marine monster dangles and rattles in a way to make Neptune shiver. They ought to add poor Reynard's brush and a couple of pads to their wampum to be in character with the rest of the surroundings.—The Parisian shopkeeper shows his sympathy with Egypt by turning all his goods into Egyptian forms. Every sort of thing is designed in the peculiar art of that ancient land; and it is expected that even élégantes will adopt a style of dress which is said to be a Frenchman's idea of what Cleopatra's best gown ought to have been.

A REVIEW

The Republican Municipal Administration.

Party success in our municipal elections has always been more or less governed by the standing of the administration in power.

We are about to have a very important local election for officers who are to manage city affairs for the next two years. The Republican party has now the control of the city government, and its record is a fair subject of honest review before the people who are to be asked to continue it in power.

We assert that under the present municipal officers the affairs of San Francisco have been better and more economically administered than they have been for many years. There has been a direct departure from the sand-lot demoralization, from the boss rule and robbery, from the ring system of shameless defiance and corruption. The Republican incumbents went into office pledged to reform and to economy, and they may with pride challenge criticism as to the fulfillment of their promises.

In the County Clerk's office, under Wilder, the expenses have been reduced sixty thousand dollars per annum below the expenses under Stuart.

The Sheriff's office under Sedgwick has been conducted not only more economically than it was under Desmond, but in respect of intelligent and decent management the latter is so far beyond the former that comparison would be impossible.

The Board of School Directors has conducted its department with more ability and administrative capacity than any preceding board.

The Board of Supervisors, on which devolves the most weighty, responsible, and varied duties, has not taken a single step nor passed an ordinance against which suspicion or distrust could be raised, while the benefits it has conferred upon the public generally, by economic measures, entitle its members, and the Republican party, which elected them, to the approval of all good citizens, irrespective of party. It has been the best legislative body, taken as a whole, that this city has had since the days of the People's party, and has not been equalled by any other predecessor in its real service of the people. We say this emphatically, because just now there is an attempt, in one or two selfish directions, to malign that body, and to split the party into factions to gain personal and malignant ends.

It has made a material reduction in the rate of taxation, by reducing the expenses whenever practicable. In the street-sweeping contract, in which formerly Higgins, Gannon, and Chute were interested, it has cut down the annual outlay nearly fifty thousand dollars. Under the old contract, the cost of street sweeping went right on during the rainy season as during the summer; under the new, the Board of Supervisors has the right to dispend with the sweeping, and with the cost of it, when the weather makes it for the interest of tax-payers so to do. It has made a contract for street lighting which saves seventy thousand dollars annually to the city, and has secured a reduction of one-third in the price of gas to domestic consumers. It has materially reduced the cost of water to consumers, over one-half the rates having been cut down seventeen per cent., and the remainder between seven and seventeen per cent. All the outside interests in which, under former administrations, there has been money to be made, or in which the boss triplet of the primaries has been accustomed to dip its fingers, there has been a clean-cut determination to reduce expenses, to prevent plunder, and to scrutinize carefully all claims submitted. There has been no ring to fix up and force through legislation in defiance of a minority vote; but, on the contrary, nearly every important measure adopted has been by a vote nearly unanimous.

The Mayor has maintained the confidence of the community by a pure and dignified course of action, and by an independent, but not arrogant, course whenever he found his judgment at variance with that of the legislative department.

For these benefits to the public the Republican party has a right to claim just recognition as a party of the people and true to its pledges of reform. It is the more to be congratulated, because, in selecting the men whom the people endorsed by their votes, it repudiated the primary system, which had been only a machine of the three bosses by which they had run the government and bled its treasury, and in lieu of that rotten system substituted a nominating convention of tax-payers which selected the men whose good administration we have particularized.

Following out that method of selecting candidates, the party of the people has again ignored the plundering faction, and spiked the guns of the triumvirate by selecting a nominating convention of the best available men, men who are representative of all the industries, and whose standing and character give the highest assurance of a ticket which, if elected, will continue the good work of its predecessors.

As might be expected, the plunderers and those who have enmities to gratify have endeavored to create dissension in the party, so as to aid in its defeat, and to place in power a fresh set of men, who will be subservient to selfish interests, and treacherous to the people.

The Bulletin is the mouthpiece of these public enemies, and is the more strenuous in their service because it has its own personal animosities to gratify. It failed to bind or drive the Board of Supervisors to its dictation, or to consent to permit it to deplete the treasury of the city by the payment of its unjust and illegal demands against it for printing. Having an old grudge against certain members of the water company, and being desirous of damaging its financial standing, it sought to array the public against it, and to use the Board of Supervisors as a means to that end, and in defiance of the law and the constitution. The Republican board having refused to yield to its dictation, that paper now denounces it as the worst board that has ever cursed this city, and endeavors to make a pretext of argument by citing the Mayor's vetoes of some of its measures, vetoes which have been but an honest difference of opinion which each of the two branches of government might rightfully or properly exercise. In fact, the Mayor has taken pains in his veto messages to express this very idea. In one, relating to water bills, he said: "I never have in any case questioned the integrity of your motives; I am quite as likely to be mistaken as you are."

So, with regard to the contract with the gas company, by which seventy thousand dollars per annum was saved to the city. This was vetoed on the ground that, in the mayor's opinion, the reduction was not sufficient, considering the offer made by the Central Gaslight Company. But as this latter company has mains laid only in a limited district, and has no street-lamps anywhere erected, and only proposed to light a portion of the thickly settled part of the city, the board exercised a reasonable discretion and gave the contract on reduced terms to the old company, and required that charges to private consumers should be reduced from three dollars to two dollars, even where there is no competition.

In all their proceedings there has been such unanimity as to furnish the best evidence of intelligent action. The ordinances passed over the veto were almost unanimously passed. That on the water question was by a vote of ten to two. On the gas ordinance the vote was unanimous, and after its veto it was sustained by a vote of eleven to one.

Because of these honest differences of judgment, the Bulletin has the audacity and malice to parade them as proofs of dishonesty in the Board. What other board has done as much for economy as has this one? Heretofore we have been confronted with a fixed-up ring of the boss power, a seven-to-five imperium in imperio. Abuse and blackguardism have disgraced the council hall, and fraud and corruption have been openly charged by supervisors against each other.

We might have been at a loss to know what occasioned the hostility of the Bulletin and its malignant and ambitious attacks, did we not know that the Bulletin has pending before the Board bills for printing done without authority, and which it is and has been persistently pressing. Previous boards have always sought to placate and subsidize the Bulletin by passing any bills that were presented. This board, even at the risk of newspaper hostility, has stood upon the right, and has thus aroused its denunciation.

It will be a sad commentary upon the appreciation by the public of ability, and integrity, and efficiency of public men, if any importance is given to the slanders of the Bulletin.

It is unfortunate that any difference should have arisen between the Mayor and the Board of Supervisors early in the administration, to prevent them from acting conjointly in matters of public interest. Had they done so and exchanged views, there would have been little or no necessity for the vetoes which have been interposed. While we believe in the integrity and the ability of Mayor Blake, and think San Francisco is peculiarly fortunate in having him at the head of affairs, we are not disposed to think that everything that he is opposed to is wrong. The fact is, that Mayor Blake has been modest enough to discountenance any such impression himself, for upon every occasion he takes pains, while asserting his opinions, to say that he intends to cast no discredit upon the Board.

We claim for the Republican party, and for most of its official incumbents, the approval of the good citizens and tax-payers; and we do not hesitate to say that if the people shall be successful in getting as good and honest men to succeed them for the next two years, San Francisco will have taken a broad stride away from the corrupting influence of boss rule, and from the dictation of a selfish and malignant newspaper.

They have so little idea of luxury here in Germany, even in the best households, writes Margery Deane. In six months of living in private houses in Europe—and handsome houses, too, some of them belonging to the wealthiest of the nobility—I never saw a bath-room, and never made an evening toilet except by candle-light, two wax candles being considered sufficient. Imagine a Boston belle making a ball toilet by the light of two wax candles! It is with incredulous faces these people listen to my accounts of our daily use of the telephone. Only yesterday a somewhat pompous German said to us: "We invent these things, but you Americans apply them to your daily use." Under her breath, I heard one of the quartet say, "I should smile." She told me later that only politeness forbade her hurling steamboats and telegraph-poles at his head, and that she was surprised into a slang expression she had never been guilty of in her life before.

The October Harper contains an article entitled "Southern California," the illustrations to which are by J. D. Strong, the San Francisco artist, the text by W. H. Bishop. Among the sketches are views of Ralston's place at Belmont, Governor Stanford's farm at Palo Alto, the old fort at Monterey, the Hotel del Monte, the Chinese fishing quarters and the whaling beach at Monterey, General Naglee's brandy cellar at San José, and a number of others. The sketches are all from nature, done on large canvases in black and white, and reduced by photography for the block. While the engravers have in some instances failed to get the artist's idea, most of the cuts are well done. The sketches are spirited and artistic.

There is always a fashionable word; always some poor little scrap out of the wide desert of philology that is bounced about like a ball, and is used in season and out of season. To-day it is "smart;" not in the Yankee significance, but of the pure early English style of definition. Nowadays, everybody is smart, everything is smart, be it preacher, president, dress, or picture. To hear its many and various applications, one would fancy smart meant a condensed vocabulary, a sort of labor-saving word to express whatever anybody wanted particularly to admire or approve.

The subscriptions for the coming orchestral concerts of the Philharmonic Society have been very large. The attendance promises to be numerous and fashionable. Rehearsals have already begun, and the selections are said to be the best ever given in the city. Madame Zeiss-Dennis, who has just returned from the East and Europe, will make her first appearance since her arrival. She will sing, among other things, a recitative and aria from Mozart's "Titus," which has never been given in this city.

James L. Flood, son of James C. Flood, has been appointed cashier of the Nevada Bank.

THE DRAMA.

When "Davy Crockett" was first introduced to us it was simply an American play. Later it became an idyl of the backwoods, and now it is a "symphony in leaves and mosses." These poetical accumulations are becoming quite startling, and are apparently only to end with the utmost tension of our elastic language. But Davy himself and the play in which he is framed remain quite unchanged. Year after year he imports these companies, which are curiously alike in their dead monotony of inexcellence, and the only variation is a new Elinor Vaughan. The dramatic requirements are that she should be small, light, and supple. Think, then, of the millions of young women floating about these United States who are capable of playing Elinor Vaughan. But there is but one Davy Crockett, and he it is we go to see.

The frontier line is lessening day by day, the backwoodsmen growing fewer and fewer. Flannel-shirt chivalry is passing away, but grows picturesque with its passing. The farther it recedes into American history the more surely will "Davy Crockett" become an undying play—one of those which it will be our duty at regular intervals to see.

Who would have thought it would have had so long life, made as much of it is of somewhat stale material? For who has not read in the facetious column, or in "Harper's Drawer"—a drawer, by-the-way, which has become almost as dreary as London Fun—under its various forms, the story of the young man who borrows a fleet-limbed steed from the father with which to carry away the daughter. The union with which this bit of play is nightly received is testimony to the boundless digestion of the human animal for stale jokes. Perhaps, after all, we are growing like the English people, and are beginning to like the things to which we are accustomed. These enormous runs of plays bespeak such a growth of taste.

There are those who question the fidelity of the "symphony" as a true picture of American life of that type, and look upon the descent of such a one as Miss Elinor Vaughan upon the wilderness as a most unlikely episode. I can easily fancy that the descent of any one of Mr. Frank Mayo's series of Elinor Vaughans would have excited at least round-eyed amazement among these children of the wildwood, for they have one and all been afflicted with an artificial accent, and a curious elegance which would have a weird effect upon any community.

I could not help thinking what a funny world this would be on top of all the funny things in it already, if two people in a supreme moment should carry on a stiff-backed, copper-fastened conversation, such as passed between Elinor Vaughan and her helpless lover in Davy's crib. And yet Miss Clancey is, perhaps, the best of them, despite a too vivid make-up and the fact that she never employs a natural tone of voice under any accumulation of circumstances. But she has a lithe, pretty figure, a little dash of feeling now and then, and quite a grace in posing. Perhaps this is enough to account for Davy's sudden passion. After all, it is the situation itself and not the girl that makes the play, and the situation is not an uncommon one.

A rich and powerful man told me his love-story once, and it was not altogether unlike this: When he was a lad, delving at his trade in a remote part of the far West, and yearning often, as Davy did, for a glimpse of the big outside world, a little girl, the daughter of the big man of the settlement, whom he used to take upon his knee and tell stories to, whom he used to take berrying and nutting with him, who went coasting and sleighing with him, was sent East to be educated in a fashionable boarding-school, and came back a finished young lady. She awoke him with her grandeur, but he fell in love with her as promptly as if she had been a calico-clad, red-checked Phyllis, and let her see it, too, but determined to go away and seek his fortune before he tried to win her. By some subtle telegraphy she understood, and let him know that she would wait for him—for, like all women, she adored manly strength, and contemned the namby-pamby. As with Davy Crockett, a wink was as good as a nod to him, and he was determined, since she was willing, that none other should ever have her. "And so they were married," as runs the title of Besant and Rice's 1st story, and when I see them (as I often do) in the gilded halls of pleasure, the wife all a-glitter with diamonds, and one of the proudest ladies in the land, and the husband, with a glimmering idea still, perhaps, that the fashionable boarding-school keeps her yet a piece ahead of him, but showing still the strength of the man who conquered iron fortune for her, I think often of the humble, unpromising beginning of his love story.

So Elinor Vaughan's choice has never seemed an odd one, though I catch myself often wishing, as many others do, that at least he could read. It takes the romance out of a man for him not to know his a-b abs, and there is nothing exhilarating in a woman teaching her own husband his letters. By the way, what is the feeling in the gallery which prompts that invariable round of applause when Davy says—quite pathetically, I will admit—"I'm a backwoodsman, and can't read?" Even the author seems to have forecast the applause; for an odd little pause follows the announcement, disturbed by nothing but a little click of sympathy from Elinor.

There must be a certain amount of humbug in a play to make it go, and it is certainly humbug to cheer a man because he never learned his alphabet. But there are many pretty little touches of homely sentiment in "Davy Crockett;" it is far more sentiment than nature, in fact. Sentiment is appealing, and it is that which makes "Davy Crockett" as pretty a play as it is. Who is to gainsay it, when they tell us that the Crockett home, with its air of neatness and rude comfort, is a picture of frontier life as it is? A dear old dame Mrs. Judah makes of the old mother with the faithful light in the window for her son, and a brood of very Western looking youngsters running about her heels. There is a spice of the woods in the trampled pine tassels and fallen leaves, and Davy's crib does seem indeed a lodge in some vast wilderness. A pretty conceit that of reading young Lochinvar to this knight of the woods to while the time away while working up to the wolves. How its rhythm catches his ear and its spirit fires his heart! I read in a book the other day that the morbid fancies of modern poets were responsible for all the desecrated hearthstones of high life. If these droning, blasé, white-handed fellows, who make up "the world," are so affected by the reading of a poem as to make them lazily willing to run away with other fellow's wives—passion nowadays does not seem to run much higher up the gamut than a lazy willingness to be as wicked as is comfortable—what would not the swinging melody of a ballad like Scott's work upon the heart of a simple, brave backwoodsman, with an unwed girl to win? Miss Vaughan looks very comfortable in her furs, and Davy very picturesque in his buckskin, and the unhappy man in the corner very superfluous in his weakness, and the fire-light plays upon them very lovingly. It is a pretty picture very aptly made, terrible all in a moment by the howling of the wolves—a howling which would set the hearts a-beating more wildly were there not too many shrill soprano notes in the howl. But the ground looks very snowy, the wolf tongues very wolfy, and by the time the backwoodsman bolts the door with his strong right arm every one is wrought up to a very lively state of feeling.

The strong right arm of a man has come in for a great deal of poetical taffy of one sort and another. It has been the theme of woman's song from time immemorial, and man himself has placed it upon a pretty tall shrine; but it has never been so boldly dramatized before. It is a very effective bit of work, now; for inside a play or out of it there is nothing a woman so much applauds as physical sacrifice.

I know a man who is suave of manner and glib of tongue, who is a ready talker, as the times go, and has a very fair fund of information, the large physique which women like, and a face which would not disfigure a photograph. In a minor way he is a lady's man, yet ladies hate him with what sometimes becomes absolute intensity. "Isn't it strange?" they will say to one another, sometimes, "Isn't it strange that every one detests him so?" And I know he is a wonder in his heart when he sometimes rouses out of himself to wonder. But the secret of it all is that he has never in his life been sacrificed an atom of physical ease to any one around him. He is exactly unlike him that heroes are made, and a touch of never appeals in vain. One's sympathies are warm with Davy's moment that he draws his reeking arm from the lock. But

THE FIRE OF FIFTY-ONE.

How the inmates Escaped from Wells & Co.'s Burning Building.

[EDITORS ARGONAUT: In an address which I had the honor to deliver before the Society of California Pioneers, on the 9th instant, I found myself compelled, in order to avoid trespassing upon the kind indulgence of my audience, to omit the narration of several incidents of the early days; among which was the annexed sketch of the great fire of May, 1851, which may not be without interest to those of your readers who know only by hearsay of pioneer experiences. Yours, etc., SAN FRANCISCO, September 15, 1882. ALFRED WHEELER.]

It originated in a paint-shop on Clay Street, opposite Portsmouth Square, at about half-past nine P. M., and in less than fifteen minutes had engulfed that block, had leaped across Kearny Street, and, fanned by the northwest trade-wind of the season, had become a fiery hurricane, whose tongues of flame, a hundred yards in length, were licking up like chaff everything toward the east and south that was combustible.

Wells & Co.'s bank building, a large four-story brick structure, stood right in the line of destruction, at the south-west corner of Clay and Montgomery streets. The lower floor was the banking-room, with its entrance on Montgomery Street, and the upper stories were occupied as lawyers' offices, the access to which was by a doorway on Clay Street at the rear of the banking room. In the hallway, into which this Clay Street door opened, were gathered together, at the moment when the fire had almost reached that point, a dozen or more of the occupants, with Mr. Skinner, one of the banking firm, in their midst. All were undecided as to where to remove their books, furniture, and other property. Drays and wagons by the score, loading with goods from stores and dwellings that were now almost in the embrace of the flames, and hundreds of people staggering under similar burdens, came pouring down to Montgomery Street and deposited their loads upon the street to the leeward of the bank, raising a pile that reached to the second story. Mr. Skinner urged that the building was completely fire-proof; that to remove anything from it would be unnecessary labor, and that the lives and effects of the occupants would be as secure within as without.

"Let us all remain," said he, "and, after securely fastening all the iron doors and shutters, await the burning of Doctor Rabe's building"—a three-story wooden one adjoining on the west. "When that shall take fire, as it will within a few minutes, some sparks or cinders may fall down the chimney flues or blow through the chinks of the shutters. By remaining and watching, we may quench any spark which enters, and so preserve the building and its contents. Rabe's building will be quickly consumed; after which the flames will have got across Montgomery Street and leave us safe and sound in their rear."

Can anybody believe that we were sensible men and consented? We did. It was an impulse of the pioneer's pride mingled with courage, that was ready to fight even the elements. The purpose was not rash; it was heroic. We thought that we could save that building, and we felt that we ought to do it. We barred and bolted the entrance doors of bank and hall, and all the shutters, and, lighting our candles, took our positions at the windows, each in his respective room. Scarcely had we done so when a roar, as of Niagara, told us that the devouring flames had reached our neighbor. The deep thunder sound of that roar seemed, to my startled ears, like the voice of hell, howling at our resistance.

I placed my hand upon the brick wall that separated my office by only twelve inches from the dread fire that surrounded us, and felt the stove-like heat. Meeting with the impediment of that solid wall, the flames were carried by the wind along it, upward, and over the roof, pouring down each chimney flue, and through the fire-places into the rooms, burning cinders and inky streams of stifling smoke, like the black fumes coming through a steamboat smoke-stack from a bituminous coal furnace. Snatching the pillows from my bed, in an adjoining room, I stuffed them into the grate-flue of my office chimney, and stopped that channel. Through the open office door I saw that the hallways were filled with smoke, and prudent thoughts began to suggest themselves. I had but a moment of indecision, for as I turned my eyes toward the closed iron shutters I saw that they were red with the heat of the flames that shot past them.

Slowly they bent, curving outward, opening a space of half a foot, through which, in an instant, like the sea through a shattered hull, there rushed a stream of mingled flame and smoke. The glass of the windows crumbled into dust before the heat, and sash and casement formed a blazing framework around the smoky deluge that poured through and overwhelmed us with suffocation. The candles went out, smothered with carbon. There was a blackness like that of death, through which fantastic fiery forms darted like dancing demons. Through the windows of every room, from roof to sidewalk, and facing upon Clay Street, the merciless enemy poured in.

Unable to breathe, and almost asphyxiated, I thought instinctively of flight from the building. Under such circumstances thought is rapid. I knew that the plank sidewalks and roadways must be all ablaze; that in every direction the city must be in flames, through which was the only path of flight; that, once there, if I could be screened from the intense heat—being swift of foot—I might possibly reach the boundary of the burning district. With these thoughts I seized a pair of blankets, and, with them under my arm, leaped rather than ran down the two flights of stairs to the street floor, intending to rush through the bank and into Montgomery Street.

I was appalled, on entering the banking-room, to find its outer doors unapproachable owing to the heat, and the huge bar, which had kept it closed, bent and warped, and immovable. I thought of the huge pile of goods which had been placed upon the sidewalk in front of this door, and of the wooden buildings opposite extending down to the bay. Escape seemed impossible. I was choking for want of oxygen. Every inch of space was filled with the acrid smoke, which would have strangled me had I opened my mouth. I must breathe. I thought the smoke might not have penetrated to the cellar, and, throwing my blankets into the near corner of the dark and tomb-like bank, I darted below.

From the moment when the candles had gone out in my office until I reached the cellar, it had not been over sixty seconds. The air down there was still cool, and almost free from smoke. I filled my lungs with the precious oxygen, and my brain seemed electric with vivid flashes of thought. Death within the next five minutes seemed to be inevitable. The faces of a mother and of sisters, who hopefully and lovingly awaited my return to them, and the scenes and pleasant places of childhood, swept before me like a dream. My thoughts were all of this life—none of another. I espied a candle burning in a remote corner, and, upon going thither, found Mr. Strong, the bookkeeper of the bank, and the negro porter standing dazed with alarm. At sight of me, the colored man exclaimed: "My God, my God, we've got to be hurned alive!" I asked Strong if there was no exit from the cellar. He replied: "None."

"Then," said I, "if we remain here a minute we are lost. The building is on fire from top to bottom. The stairs are yet unburned. If we inflate our lungs and fly up through the smoke, we may reach the roof, and from there we can leap to the street."

"Go on!" said Strong; "I'll follow you." With two strides I leaped to the street floor. As I reached it I glanced into the bank, and saw that the outer iron door had burst from its fastenings, and stood half open, while out in the street the red glare looked like a fiery furnace.

Snatching my blankets from the corner where I had dropped them, I threw them around me and rushed out into the flame. Fate sent my flying feet northward toward Telegraph Hill. As I reached Washington Street, a thousand voices beyond cheered me, until I stood safe with the ocean of fire behind me. I had got through unharmed, though my boots were burned to a crisp, and my white blankets were scorched to the color of mahogany. In half an hour nothing remained of the building from which I had fled but its ghastly smoking walls.

All escaped from it, though none but myself unharmed; some running toward the bay, some southward, toward California Street. Two died from the effects of the terrible burns received in their flight, and all the others who lived bore permanent scars.

TENNYSON'S LATEST POEM.

Written at the Request of the Mantuans for the Nineteenth Centenary of Virgil's Death.

Roman Virgil, thou that singest Ilion's lofty temples robed in fire,
Ilion falling, Rome arising, wars, and filial faith, and Dido's pyre:

Landscape-lover, lord of language more than he that sang the Works and Days,

All the chosen coin of fancy flashing out from many a golden phrase;

Thou that singest wheat and woodland, tilth and vineyard, hive and horse and herd;

All the charm of all the Muses often flowering in a lonely world:

Poet of the happy Tityrus piping underneath his beechen howers;
Poet of the poet-satyr whom the laughing shepherd bound with flowers;

Chanter of the Pollio, glorying in the blissful years again to be,
Summers of the snakeless meadow, unlabourous earth, and oarless sea;

Thou that seest Universal Nature moved by Universal Mind;

Thou majestic in thy sadness at the doubtful doom of human kind;

Light among the vanished ages; star that gildeth yet this phantom shore;

Golden branch amid the shadows, kings and realms that pass to rise no more;

Now thy Forum roars no longer, fallen every purple Caesar's dome—
Though thine ocean-roll of rhythm sound forever of Imperial Rome—

Now the Rome of slaves hath perished, and the Rome of freemen holds her place.

I, from out the Northern Island sundered once from all the human race,

I salute thee, Mantovano; I that loved thee since my day began,
Wielder of the stateliest measure ever molded by the lips of man.

—Alfred Tennyson in Nineteenth Century for September.

For some time past the quaint old pagan fashion that bracelets should be worn by men as well as by women has been gaining ground upon the Continent, chiefly, it would seem, in countries where the prevalent creed is Roman Catholicism. The porte-bonheur is an old-fashioned institution in the Austrian and Italian cavalry, and, indeed, the majority of Austrian noblemen, being addicted to field sports, are accustomed to wear St. George's medals, set in silver bracelets, upon one or other arm, the subduer of the dragon being generally recognized by equestrians as their patron saint. Archduke Rudolph, the Austrian Crown Prince, wears upon his left wrist a bracelet of chain-mail, visible in a photograph taken immediately after his marriage, and representing him arm-in-arm with the Archduchess Stephanie. The late King Victor Emanuel, a mighty hunter in his day, always wore a massive bracelet containing a medallion of St. Hubert, the same that is now worn in memory of him by his son, Italy's actual sovereign. Austrian naval officers are addicted to the wearing of porte-bonheurs, in which are medals bearing the effigy of St. Peter, while the bracelets of imperial and royal artillery officers are invariably commemorative of St. Barbara's piety and personal attractions. Rossi and Salvini, the two great Italian tragedians, being also excellent horsemen, have caused broad bands of silver, framing medals of St. George, to be riveted upon their upper right arms. It is believed that this bracelet-wearing fashion has spread to England, and has been adopted by more than one distinguished personage.

Lady Waterford is about to let Ford Castle for the autumn, with the shooting and fishing over six thousand acres, says London Society. This would be a splendid opportunity for some parvenu American to gain distinction by leasing it. There are few historic castles in England in as good preservation, and its secret chambers and hidden stairways in the walls are musty with romance. It is in Northumberland, on the last of the Cheviot Hills. Near it is old Alnwick Castle, the famous seat of the Duke of Northumberland. Flodden Field lies just beneath the castle, where lived the fair Lady Heron, with whom James IV.'s dalliance proved so disastrous to him.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Opening a Car Window.

Maybe a man feels happy, and proud, and flattered, and envied, and blessed among men when he sees a pretty girl trying to raise a window of a railway car, and he jumps up and gets ahead of the other boys, and says: "Allow me?" oh, so courteously, and she says, "Oh, if you please; I would be so glad," and the other male passengers turn green with envy, and he leans over the back of the seat and tackles the window in a knowing way with one hand, if peradventure he may toss it airily with a simple turn of the wrist, but it kind of holds on, and he takes hold with both hands, but it sort of doesn't go to any alarming extent, and he pounds it with his fist, but it only seems to settle a little closer into place, and then he comes around, and she gets out of the seat to give him a fair chance, and he grapples that window, and bows up his back, and tugs, and pulls, and sweats, and grunts, and strains, and his hat falls off, and his suspender buttons fetch loose, and his vest-buckle parts, and his face gets red, and his feet slip, and people laugh, and irreverent young men in remote seats grunt and groan every time he lifts, and cry out, "Now, then, all together," as if in mockery, and he bursts his collar at the forward button, and the pretty young lady, vexed at being made so conspicuous, says, in her iciest manner, "Oh, never mind—thank you, it doesn't make any difference," and calmly goes away and sits down in another seat, and that wearied man gathers himself together and reads a paper upside down—oh, doesn't he feel good, just? Maybe he isn't happy, but if you think he isn't, don't be fool enough to extend any of your sympathy. He doesn't want it.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Western Previousness.

One of the old ordinances of the town of Laramie City, "for the prevention of immoderate driving" in the limits of the town, reads at the close: "Any one who shall immoderately ride or drive within the limits of said town shall be fined in any sum not less than one dollar for each and every offense." This is a good law. The immediate young man driving the immediate horse is a dangerous feature of our western civilization. It is all right to keep on with the procession, as Isaiah has it, but we should avoid abruptness so far as possible. Abruptness is one of the peculiarities of our beautiful climate. People get rich rapidly, bust simultaneously, get acquainted previously, and shoot immediately. They do not give that close and wearisome study to important questions that Eastern people do. They jam ahead and do what they have to do early, and repent afterward. It's a cold day when a man has to repent of a thing before he does it, and then afterward, too. We are like the Irishman who decided to go over into a pasture, catch a bull by the nose, and yank his head off. The idea was so fraught with mirth that he lay down in the sand and rolled over—it made him laugh so. After he had grabbed the bull by his aquiline nose, and the bull had, in a frolicsome mood, in return thrown the Irishman over the fence into the road, and driven his head into the ground, Pat said it was a d—d fine thing he did his laughing before he monkeyed with the bull. We have told that story a good many times, but we don't care if we have. When a man hasn't but one story, and can't tell that but once in his life, he can't have very much fun.—Laramie Boomerang.

Table Manners of Children.

Young children, who have to wait till older people have eaten all there is in the house, should not open the dining-room door during the meal and ask the host if he is going to eat all day. It makes the company feel ill at ease, and lays up wrath in the parent's heart. Children should not appear displeased with the regular courses at dinner, and then fill up on pie. Eat the less expensive food first, and then organize a panic in the preserves afterward. Do not close out the last of your soup by taking the plate in your mouth and pouring the liquid down your childish neck. You might spill it on your bosom, and it enlarges and distorts the mouth unnecessarily. When asked what part of the fowl you prefer, do not say you will take the part that goes over the fence last. This remark is very humorous, but the rising generation ought to originate some new table jokes that will be worthy of the age in which we live. Children should early learn the use of the fork and how to handle it. This knowledge can be acquired by allowing them to pry up the carpet tacks with this instrument, and other little exercises such as the parent mind may suggest. The child should be taught at once not to wave his bread around the table while in conversation, or to fill his mouth full of potatoes, and then converse in a rich tone of voice with some one out in the yard. He might get his dinner down his trachea, and cause his parents great anxiety. In picking up a plate or saucer filled with soup or with moist food, the child should be taught not to parboil his thumb in the contents of the dish, and to avoid swallowing soup-bones or other indigestible debris. Toothpicks are generally the last course, and children should not be permitted to pick their teeth and kick the table through the other exercises. While grace is being said at table, children should know that it is a breach of good breeding to smudge fruit cake, just because their parents' heads are bowed down, and their attention for the moment turned in another direction. Children ought not to be permitted to find fault with the dinner or fool with the cat while eating. Boys should, before going to the table, empty all the frogs and grasshoppers out of their pockets, or those insects might crawl out during the festivities and jump into the gravy. If a fly wades into your jelly up to his gambrels, do not mash him with your spoon before all the guests, as death is at all times depressing to those who are at dinner, and retards digestion. Take the fly out carefully with what naturally adheres to his person, and wipe him on the table-cloth. It will demonstrate your perfect command of yourself, and afford much amusement for the company. Do not stand up in your chair and try to spear a roll with your fork. It is not good manners to do so, and you might slip and bust your crust by so doing. Say "thank you," and "much obliged," and "beg pardon," whenever you can work in these remarks, as it throws people off their guard, and gives you an opportunity to get in your work on the pastry and other bric-à-brac at the time.—Bill Aye.

THE DEVIL'S REVENGE.

A Tragedy in which Satan Played the Leading Role.

It was toward the end of November; the Imperial Garden of Vienna was deserted; a sharp breeze was whirling the saffron-colored leaves, shrunk up by the early cold; the rose-hushes, tormented and broken by the wind, let their branches drag in the mud. Still, the grand alley, thanks to its covering of sand, was dry and passable. Although devastated by the approach of winter, the Imperial Garden was not without a certain melancholy charm. The long alley prolonged far away its reddening arcades; beyond, the view stretched over the Prater and Danube; it was such a promenade as a poet would have desired.

A young man was striding up and down this alley with visible signs of impatience; his costume, somewhat theatrical in its elegance, consisted of a frock-coat of black velvet, with gold facings and bordered with fur, gray woolen pantalons, top-boots, with tassels, coming half way up his legs. He might have been twenty-seven or twenty-eight years of age; his pale and regular features were full of finesse, and irony lurked in the creases around his eyes and the corners of his mouth. At the university, which he appeared to have quitted recently—for he still wore the student's cap with oak leaves—he must have plagued the Philistines, and shone in the front ranks of the burschen and the foxes.

The narrow limits within which he circumscribed his walk showed that he was waiting for some one—probably a lady; for the Imperial Garden of Vienna in the month of November is hardly propitious to business rendezvous. Soon a young girl appeared at the end of the avenue. A turban of black silk covered her rich blonde hair, whose ringlets had been slightly uncurled by the dampness of the evening; her complexion, ordinarily of waxen whiteness, had taken a rosy tint from the bite of the cold. Grouped and wrapped she was in a mantle trimmed with marten skin; a little terrier accompanied her—a convenient chaperon, on whose indulgence and discretion you could count.

"Imagine, Heinrich," said the pretty Viennese, taking the young man's arm, "I have been dressed and ready to go out for more than an hour, and my aunt kept on with her sermons on the dangers of waltzing, on recipes for Christmas cakes and carp with blue sauce. I went out on the pretext of buying some gray boots, of which I have no need whatever. It is for you, Heinrich, that I tell all these little lies which I am constantly regretting and constantly beginning over again. What an idea it was of yours to take to the stage! What was the good of studying theology so long at Heidelberg? My parents liked you, and we might have been married to-day but for that. Instead of meeting on the sly under the bare trees of the Imperial Garden, we should be seated side by side before a fine porcelain stove in a nice, warm room, talking of the future of our children. Would not that be a happy lot, Heinrich?"

"Yes, Katy, very happy," replied the young man, as he pressed, under the satin and fur, the dimpled arm of the pretty Viennese; "but I can not help it. The theatre attracts me invincibly; I dream of it by day, I think of it by night; I feel the desire to live in the creation of the poets; I seem to have twenty existences. Every rôle that I play makes me a new life; all those passions that I express I feel. I am Hamlet, Othello, Charles Moor. When one is all that, he can with difficulty resign himself to the humble condition of a village pastor."

"That is very noble. But you know that my parents never will have an actor for a son-in-law."

"No, certainly, not an obscure actor; a poor, ambulant artist, the puppet of managers and the public. But a great actor, covered with glory and applause, who earns more money than a minister, they will not refuse, however scrupulous they may be. When I shall come to ask your hand in a handsome yellow coach, the varnish of which will be able to serve as a looking-glass for the astonished neighbors, and a tall lackey covered with gold lace will let down the steps for me, do you think they will refuse me?"

"I do not think they will. But who says, Heinrich, that you will ever come to that? You have talent; but talent is not sufficient; you must have much good luck besides. By the time that you shall have become the grand actor of whom you speak, the best time of your youth will have passed, and then will you be ready to marry Katy, grown old, when you have at your disposal the loves of all those princesses of the theatre, who are so joyous and so gayly decked?"

"That future," replied Heinrich, "is nearer than you think. I have an advantageous engagement at the theatre of the Corinthian Gate, and the manager is so satisfied with the manner in which I played my last rôle that he has made me a present of two thousand thalers."

"Yes," replied the young girl, with a serious air, "that rôle of a demon in the new piece. I confess to you, Heinrich, that I do not like to see a Christian assume the mask of the enemy of the human race, and pronounce words of blasphemy. The other day I went to see you at the Corinthian Theatre, and at every moment I was afraid that a veritable hell-fire would issue from one of the traps where you were swallowed up in flames of spirits of wine. I returned home all confused, and I dreamed horrible dreams."

"My good Katy, that is all imagination; to-morrow, too, will take place the last performance, and I shall no longer put on the black and red costume which so much displeases you."

"So much the better; for my mind is a prey to a vague feeling of alarm, and I fear that the rôle which has been so profitable to your glory will not be profitable to your salvation. I am afraid, too, that you will contract bad habits in the company of those horrible comedians. I am sure that you no longer say your prayers; and I dare wager that you have lost the little cross I gave you."

Heinrich justified himself by showing the little cross, which was still shining on his breast.

While they were talking thus the two lovers had arrived at the Thabor Strasse, in the Leopoldstadt, in front of the shoemaker who was famous for the perfection of his gray boots. After chatting some time at the door, Katy entered, followed by her terrier, but not without having abandoned her pretty, slender fingers to the pressure of Heinrich's hand.

Heinrich tried once more to get a glimpse of his mistress between the dainty boots and shoes that were symmetrically arranged on the brass rods in the window; but the fog had silvered the glass with its moist breath, and he could only distinguish a confused silhouette; then, taking a heroic resolution, he turned on his heel and went, with deliberate step, to the inn of the Two-headed Eagle.

* * * * *

That night there was a numerous company at the Two-headed Eagle; the guests were of the most mixed description. The Two-headed Eagle was one of those blessed cellars celebrated by Hoffmann, with steps so worn, so greasy, so slippery, that you can not put your foot upon the first one without at once finding yourself at the bottom, with your elbows on the table, a pipe in your mouth, between a pot of beer and a measure of new wine.

Through the thick cloud of smoke that almost choked and blinded you at first, all sorts of strange figures appeared after a few minutes. There were Wallachians with their caftan and Astrakhan cap, Servians, Hungarians with long black moustaches, caparisoned with dolmans and embroidery; Bohemians with coppery complexions, narrow foreheads, and arched noses; honest Germans with laced coats; Tartars with eyes turned up like those of Chinese; all imaginable populations. The East was represented by a fat Turk coiled up in a corner and peacefully smoking a pipe of Moldavian cherry-wood, with a bowl of red clay and a mouth-piece of yellow amber.

Everybody was eating and drinking; the drink consisted of strong beer and a mixture of new red wine with old white wine; the food, of slices of cold veal, ham, or pastry.

Round the tables turned unceasingly one of those long German waltzes which produce upon northern imaginations the same effect as hashish and opium on the Orientals; the couples passed and repassed rapidly; the women, almost fainting with pleasure on the arms of their cavaliers, to the sounds of a waltz, swept away with their skirts the clouds of smoke and refreshed the faces of the drinkers. At the counter some Morlaccan improvisators, accompanied by a player upon the guzla, were reciting a sort of dramatic complaint which seemed greatly to divert a dozen strange figures, clothed in sheepskin and coifed with tarboukhs.

Heinrich went to the end of the cellar, and sat at a table where were already seated three or four personages of joyous mien and merry humor.

"Ah, Heinrich!" cried the eldest of the band; "mind yourself, my friends; fenum habet in cornu. You know you had a truly diabolical look the other night; you almost frightened me. Who would think that Heinrich, who drinks beer as we do, and who does not draw back before a slice of cold ham, could put on such venomous, wicked, and sardonic airs, and that with a single gesture he can make a whole theatre shudder?"

"Eh! why that is the reason Heinrich is a great artist, a sublime comedian. There is no glory in playing a rôle that is in your character; the triumph, for a coquette, is to excel in playing ingénues."

Heinrich sat down modestly, called for a large glass of mixed wine, and the conversation continued on the same subject. On all sides it was admiration and compliments.

"Ah! if the great Wolfgang Goethe had seen you!" said one.

"Show us your feet," said another; "I am sure you have a forked hoof."

The other drinkers, attracted by these exclamations, looked at Heinrich seriously, all happy to have the opportunity of examining closely so remarkable a man. The young men who had formerly known Heinrich at the university, and whose names he hardly knew, came up to him and shook him cordially by the hand, as if they had been his intimate friends. The prettiest valseses as they passed shot at him the tenderest glances of their blue and velvety eyes.

One man only seated at a neighboring table seemed to take no part in the general enthusiasm; his head thrown backward, he was thrumming distractedly with his fingers on the crown of his hat a military march, and from time to time he uttered a sort of humph, singularly dubious.

The aspect of this man was of the strangest, although he was dressed like an honest burgher of Vienna, enjoying a modest fortune; his gray eyes were shaded with green tints, and shot out phosphoric lights like the eyes of a cat. When his pale, flat lips parted, they showed two rows of teeth very white, very sharp, and very wide apart, of the most cannibal and ferocious aspect; his long nails, shining and curved, took a vague appearance of claws; but that physiognomy appeared only by rapid flashes; to the eye that watched him fixedly, his face rapidly resumed the bourgeois and debonaire appearance of a retired Viennese merchant, and you felt astonished that you could have suspected of villainy and devilry a face so vulgar and trivial.

Internally Heinrich was shocked at the indifference of the man. That disdainful silence took away their value from the panegyrics which his noisy companions lavished upon him. It was the silence of an old and experienced connoisseur, who does not allow himself to be deceived by appearances.

Atmayer, the youngest of the company, the warmest admirer of Heinrich, could not endure this coldness, and addressing the strange man, as if taking him to hear witness to an assertion that he advanced, he said:

"Is it not so, sir, no actor has ever played the rôle of Mephistopheles better than my comrade here?"

"Humph!" said the stranger, flashing his green eyes and cracking his sharp teeth. "Mr. Heinrich is a young man of talent, whom I esteem very highly; but he is wanting in many things necessary to play the rôle of the devil."

And suddenly drawing himself up: "Have you ever seen the devil, Mr. Heinrich?"

He put this question in such a strange and mocking tone that all the company felt a shudder run down their backs.

"That, however, would be necessary for the truthfulness of your play. The other evening I was at the theatre of the Corinthian Gate, and I was not satisfied with your laugh; it was, at the utmost, a sly laugh. My dear Mr. Heinrich, this is the way you ought to laugh."

And thereupon, as if to give him the example, he burst into a laugh so sharp, so strident, so sardonic, that the orchestra and the dancers stopped at that very instant, and the glass in the windows trembled. The stranger continued this pitiless and convulsive laugh for several minutes, and Heinrich and his companions, in spite of their terror, could not help imitating it.

When Heinrich had recovered himself, the vaults of the tavern were repeating, like a feeble echo, the last notes of that broken and terrible laugh, and the stranger was no longer there.

* * * * *

Some days after this strange incident, which he had almost forgotten, or which he remembered only as a joke of an ironical burgher, Heinrich was playing his part of the demon in the new piece. On the first row of seats in the orchestra was seated the stranger of the tavern, and at every word pronounced he shook his head, winked his eyes, smacked his tongue against his palate, and showed signs of the liveliest impatience.

"Bad, bad!" he murmured to himself.

His neighbors, astonished and shocked at his manners, applauded, and thought to themselves that the gentleman was very hard to please.

At the end of the first act the stranger rose, as if he had taken a sudden resolution, strode over the big drum, the cymbals, and trombone, and disappeared through the little door that leads from the orchestra to the stage. Heinrich, waiting until the curtain rose, was walking up and down in the wings, and when he came to the end of his short promenade, what was his terror to see, as he turned, standing in the middle of the narrow corridor, a mysterious personage clothed exactly as he was, and who looked at him with eyes whose greenish transparency had a strange profundity in the darkness; the white, sharp, wide-set teeth gave something ferocious to the sardonic smile.

Heinrich could not fail to recognize the stranger whom he had seen at the Two-headed Eagle, or rather the devil in person, for it was he.

"Ah, ah, my young friend! you wish to play the devil? You were very middling in the first act, and you would decidedly give a very poor idea of me to the good citizens of Vienna. You will allow me to replace you this evening; and, as you might interfere with me, I will send you to the cellar below the stage."

Heinrich recognized the Prince of Darkness, and felt himself lost. Putting his hand mechanically to the little cross that Katy had given him, he tried to call for help, and to murmur his formula of exorcism; but terror choked him; he could only utter a feeble rattle. The devil seized Heinrich with his hooked hands by the shoulders and pushed him by main force through the floor; then he entered upon the scene, when his cue came, like a perfect actor.

His incisive, biting, venomous, and truly diabolic acting at first surprised the spectators. What especially produced a great effect was that sharp titter like the grating of a saw, that laugh of the damned blaspheming the joys of Paradise. Never had an actor attained such power of sarcasm, such a depth of villainy; the audience laughed, but they trembled. All the audience was panting with emotion; phosphoric sparks glinted from the fingers of the terrible actor; trains of sparkling flame ran from his feet; the light of the lustres grew pale, the footlights shot out reddish and greenish flashes; a sort of sulphurous smell reigned in the theatre; the spectators were, as it were, delirious, and thunders of frantic applause greeted each phrase of the marvelous Mephistopheles, who often substituted verses of his own invention for the verses of the poet, and the substitution was always happy and accepted with transports.

Katy, who was in the theatre, was in a state of extraordinary alarm; she did not recognize her dear Heinrich; she presaged some misfortune with that spirit of divination which love gives.

The performance ended amidst indescribable enthusiasm. When the curtain fell the public called for Mephistopheles with loud cries. He was sought for in vain; but at last a scene-shifter came and told the manager that Heinrich had been found in the cellar, where he had probably fallen through a trap.

The hapless actor was taken up. His clothing was burned in places, and on his shoulders were deep scratches. They spoke to him, but he did not answer.

Heinrich Falkenstein was dead.—From the French of Theophile Gautier.—Boston Courier.

"Not content," says the Milwaukee Sun, "with offering repeated insults to our shipping on the high seas, the Spaniards are bound to get the best of the United States in some way, and break this country all up in business. Their latest ruse is sending several ship-loads of Spanish mules over to this country. It is said that those mules that kick in a foreign tongue are terribly fatal, and stutter so hard with their hind feet in attempting to master the dialect of this country that they are worse than the explosion of a powder-mill to turn loose among people. Uncle Sam should put his foot down on Spain, and stop such underhanded work that will undermine the liberties of our people, and kick folks all over the western hemisphere. They are treacherous fellows, those Spaniards."

A curious case has just been tried before a law court in one of the French provinces. The Dourday Town Council, after solemnly awarding a pecuniary reward of virtue to a charming blanchisseuse in the locality, reconsidered its decision, and on the interesting rosière applying for the money refused to give it to her, on the ground that since she had been declared the prize winner she had ceased, technically speaking, to deserve her reputation for virtue. The candid young thing replied that her virtue after she was crowned rosière concerned nobody but herself, and brought an action against the town council. Judgment, however, has just been given against her.

"More English is now spoken than French in the chief resorts of the French capital," says the New York World's correspondent, "and the comical laments in the Parisian papers over the Americanizing of the city and the driving of the native population out into remote suburbs do not seem so very much exaggerated."

Hans Makart, the Vienna painter, has selected a corps of ballet-girls.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.

Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by Carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.

News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 413 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.

The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.

Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.

No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.

Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.

Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."

A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY - - - - - Editor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1882.

CONTENTS:

EDITORIALS:	Page	SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS.	Page
The Merchants and their Railroad Contracts—A Fair Statement of the Case—Some Contracts which are not "Impositions"—The Two Parties and their False Issues—M. M. Estee in the role of "Jacob Smooth"—Registrar Tharp—A Catholic School Superintendent—The Bank and the Water Question.	8-9	SOCIETY.	3
A REVIEW OF THE REPUBLICAN MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATION.	5	CENTURY BRIC-A-BRAC.	4
AN ABYSMAL EPISODE.	1-2	BETSY B.'S LETTER.	5
LOUISE AND LORNE.	2	THE FIRE OF FIFTY-ONE.	6
FROM "CHET" TO CHESTER.	3	THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.	6
		TENNYSON'S LATEST POEM.	6
		THE DEVIL'S REVENGE.	7
		THE REGULAR ARMY.	10
		OLD FAVORITES.	10
		LITERARY NOTES.	10
		STORYETTES.	11
		THE LATEST VERSE.	11
		NEW YORK CRITICS ON "CHISPA"	12
		OBSCURE INTIMATIONS.	12
		THE TUNEFUL LIAR.	14

With very great emphasis the Republican party has declared against the policy of certain contracts made between the merchants and the railroad corporations. In the debate which occurred in the convention they were treated as against public policy, and therefore illegal and void. Mr. John F. Swift, an anti-railroad man and a good lawyer, took this position. James McM. Shafter, another good lawyer and an anti-railroad man, declared they were legal and of binding force. The Republican Convention declares the contract system "an attempt to enslave the commerce and trade of the coast;" "against public policy, because it destroys competition;" "unjust and oppressive, because it favors the rich and not the poor, and pledges itself to declare these contracts a "public offense." The Democratic Convention having overlooked these nefarious instruments of oppression and commercial enslavement, the Examiner calls upon its party in County Convention to pledge candidates for the Legislature to hostile legislation against them. Mr. Estee has already sounded his campaign hughle, and these dreadful contracts have become the key-note of his alarm. He says: "The railroad first fixes a schedule of freights that will bankrupt any man who ships by rail and pays those rates, and then turns upon the shipper, with its hand on his throat, and says: 'Sign this contract, agreeing to ship all your goods by our road, and agree not to ship any by sea, and agree, further, not to deal with any man who does ship his goods by sea, or we will compel you to pay such rates' of freight as will destroy your business, and drive you to ruin." A very serious charge, if true; but it is not true in any essential particular. "These contracts," Mr. Estee says, "are a new thing;" and this is not true, for they have been in existence for nearly three years. That the railroad has not fixed a schedule of fares and freights that leads to bankruptcy is indicated by the fact that our merchants are not on the road to bankruptcy. They were never more prosperous than now. There is no city in America in which there are less insolvents than in San Francisco. Our merchants will not thank the candidate for thus stigmatizing their condition, and thus aiming a blow at their credit. These contracts are for the purpose of securing the Eastern and Canada freights for the rail-car as against the ship. It is a legitimate effort on the part of certain lines of transportation to secure the carrying trade. This is the purpose for which railroads are built; and when Mr. Estee asserts "that such contracts have no parallel in modern times," he indulges in a hyperbolic expression characteristic rather of the demagogue than of the statesman. Such contracts have existed from the earliest dawn of the commercial period. They have been made by all commercial people in all countries and all ages. Such contracts are not only legal and usual, but are the very essence of commercial life. They are the soul and inspiration of the rivalry of trade that has built up great cities, and opened up new routes of travel. The transcontinental railroad was built to steal away the carrying trade of the ocean. It was intended to become the rival of God's highway. There is only one possible mode by which railroads can secure for themselves the monopoly of carrying goods across the continent, and that is by transporting with greater dispatch, greater safety, and at less cost than by sea. When Mr. Estee talks about the railroad company "taking the merchants by the throat," he uses a simile not complimentary to our merchants. The united wealth, strength, and power of combination is with the commercial community. The railroad is their servant, and not their master. The railroad company carries for them, and in a united effort the merchants would command the position. So far as the argument is made by Mr. Estee that the transportation of merchandise from eastern American ports to San Francisco will affect the coming of ships to our ports from foreign harbors, or in any way influence the rates of freight by sea, or increase the cost of carrying wheat to Liverpool, he is either ignorant or insincere. These contracts only concern transportation from Atlantic ports. They do not, in any sense, interfere with foreign commerce or with the wheat crop; nor is there any possible way for the Central Pacific or Southern Pacific railroads to drive the wheat fleet from our harbor except by carrying wheat cheaper by rail than ships can.

We had, at the time of the State Convention, never seen one of these contracts; nor did we have any accurate knowledge of their scope and effect, nor do we believe to-day that one politician in a hundred knows what they are, or by whom they are made. On Friday last the writer obtained from the mercantile firm of O. F. Willey & Co., carriage dealers, their original contract with the companies for the transportation of their carriages, harness, robes, leather, carriage equipments, material, etc., that enters into their large trade. Mr. Willey, as he gave the contract for examination, said it was of benefit to him, in giving him a fixed schedule of freights at a lower price than he could import by sea; that he entered into it willingly, and believed he expressed the opinion of a great majority of merchants in saying that the contracts are reasonable, just, and mutually beneficial. Our first surprise was in the fact that the parties to the contract were the Union Pacific Railway Company, the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé Railroad Company, the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, the St. Louis, Iron Mountain, and Southern Railway Company, the International and Great Northern Railroad Company, and the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, parties of the first part, and O. F. Willey & Co., parties of the second part. THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY AND STANFORD & CO. DO NOT APPEAR AS PARTIES TO THE AGREEMENT AT ALL. The first provision fixes a schedule of rates from all parts of the eastern country, of which New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, New Orleans, are shipping points, embracing New England and eastern Canada, and all parts of which Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Chicago are centres, providing for transportation on nearly all the railroad and steamship lines east of the meridian of Omaha. The parties of the first part agree that in case lower rates of tariff are fixed during the term of the contract, the parties of the second part shall have the benefit of it. If, by reason of competition, there shall be "cut" rates between any points by other roads, the parties of the second part are guaranteed the lowest charged rates between competing points. In event of active competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship line for the traffic between New York and San Francisco, the parties of the second part shall have the benefit of the lowest current rates. The first parties agree that the freight of the second party shall be transported without unfavorable discrimination in the matters of time and attention, as compared with goods of the same class consigned to other parties. This is an important provision, and prevents discrimination and favoritism, a means often resorted to to advance the interest of one shipper to the prejudice of another. The second party agrees to ship all his goods from east of the meridian of Omaha by rail during the term of the contract; in good faith to direct all the transportation that he may be able to control, and to be subject to penalty in default of his violation of the spirit of the agreement. It is also provided that he shall not allow the use of his name or his shipping-marks by other parties, and that he shall not supply goods to those who ship by sea. In other words, the merchant agrees to deal honestly and in good faith with the companies, to the end that they shall secure the transportation of all goods by rail from the meridian east of Omaha. It is provided that the books of the merchant may be examined when there is an accusation of violation of the agreement. This provision was inserted at the request and for the benefit of honest merchants, to protect themselves against the fraudulent practices of dishonest and tricky ones, who sought advantage by violating the spirit of the contract. Then follow certain details to prevent fraud in shipments, in order that the proper rates of tariff may be enforced; such as, that goods shipped are subject to certain rules in force by common carriers, are way-billed at special rates, and under certain modes of collecting, freight charges, etc. The contract expires by limitation December 31, 1882.

We see nothing in this kind of contract that is unusual, or a departure from legitimate rules of honorable business. The railroad managers say to the merchants, and all of them: If you will bring all of your merchandise by rail and none by ship, we will contract to bring it for less price, in quicker time, and in better condition than you can get it by sea; you will save interest and insurance; you can thereby carry a higher and better selected stock of goods; your groceries will be fresh, and your styles of later fashion; we will charge you such a tariff of freights on all your goods as will be to your advantage if you will contract to ship them all by us; in view of a larger business, we carry at less prices. This contract is an open one, made at a great port of commerce, between railroad companies and wealthy merchants. The Eastern shippers and the steamship lines offer their lowest freights. The railroads under-bid them for transportation, and thus the merchant secures the benefit of competition. It is all nonsense, demagoguery, drivel, and politicians' bosh, this talk of Messrs. Estee, John Doyle, Cohen, W. W. Foote, Tom Fitch, the Examiner, and the part demagogues, about merchants, through cowardice and fear, being compelled to consent to their own robbery, and that it enslaves commerce and subjugates merchants. The truth is, as we are informed by a leading importer, that, by reason of the railroads across the continent, California has saved two hundred millions of dollars in the difference between the cost of passenger fares and merchandise freights in the last twelve years. It is folly to declare that the commerce of this port is in any sense controlled by the railroads, except so far as they can secure the carrying of merchandise by doing it at less price than by sea. It is an insult to such men and merchants as Williams, Dimond & Co., Wm. T. Coleman & Co., John Rosenfeldt, Parrott & Babcock, Maccondray & Co., C. Adolphe Low & Co., Murphy, Grant & Co., L. & M. Sachs, and scores of other solvent, wealthy, brave, and honorable merchants, to say that they are so poor in credit or so cowardly of purpose that they are compelled to make contracts in defiance of their wishes and in peril of their interests. It is the empty talk of party demagogues altogether unworthy the candidates of two great bonored parties like the Republican and Democratic. The management of the railroads, the making of contracts, the transportation of merchandise by common carriers are all matters within the law, to be governed by the law, and to be disposed of in courts; and when such men as Governor Booth, Mr. Swift, or Mr. Estee undertake to place these instruments in the category of immoral contracts and contracts in violation of sound public policy, they offend the intelligent sense of every honest man.

It is to this narrow issue that the Republican party has come. The Democracy, having blazed the track and beaten the road, the Republican party, under the lead of Booth, Estee, Swift, and others, whose political records have been made in an endeavor to destroy the Republican party, ignoring all the issues that gave character to it, now follows the Democratic party on this new issue of anti-railroad and anti-monopoly. All the other questions of national character and national importance are ignored. All questions of general interest are subordinated to that of fares, and freights, and commercial contracts. We are weary of this shopkeepers' howl over two cents a pound on sugar, over fifty dollars a car-load on Milwaukee beer, and over fifty cents a ton on pig-iron. We are weary of the clamor over fares by men who never travel; over freights, by men who never transport a pound of merchandise; by the San Francisco machine, over the transportation of the grain crop of California; of the strikers, ward politicians, and court-house cliques. We are weary of hearing men who pay no taxes and do no work howl over the material interests of the coast, and lament through the tongue of hired orators lest California shall be imperiled in her great agricultural and commercial interests by the building of railroads and the establishment of ocean steam lines. There was a time when better men were at the front of the Republican party, and higher principles underlaid its organization. It is the party of historic remembrances; the party that emancipated slaves; that rescued an imperiled nationality; that preserved the Union; that reconstructed dismembered States, and that restored the broken links of the golden chain which held commonwealths in alliance. It is the party that redeemed the national credit and pays the national debt, and that at home and abroad upholds the national credit. Mr. Estee's party is the embodiment of a clamor that grows out of rival business interests, and is caught up by demagogues and politicians to secure office. It is this, and nothing more, and it is not even honest in this. It is not the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce that complain of the contracts we have analyzed. No disinterested merchant has complained of those contracts. No man has sought relief in the courts from their oppression. It is left for the politician to discover the evil, in order that he may suggest a remedy in elevating himself to place.

Morris M. Estee is the "Jacob Smooth" of the Republican party. He is unctuous from every political pore. It is a pity that so good a man should have been unwillingly dragged so near to the filthy pool that the wicked ones floundering therein should sometimes bespatter him. Some men are so innocent! Mr. Estee is so innocent! and yet, when we reflect upon his large experience in politics, and recall how often he has held office; how often he has sought office; how often he has been special counsel in political cases, and how near he came to being special counsel when John Lord Love was Attorney-General; his connection with the opening of Dupont Street; his speakership of the Assembly; the increase of the fees of associate counsel; his connection with the immigrant commissionership; his very intimate connection with the primary politics of San Francisco; his former connection with the State Central Committee; his agreements with and pledges to the gravel miners; his agreements with and pledges to the valley farmers; his intimate connection with the whisky interests and the League of Freedom; his deep veneration for the Sunday law, and his love for and devotion to the granger class; his sympathy with the labor element, when a member of the Constitutional Convention, and while he was at the same time employing Chinese upon his vineyard; his attitude toward Gorbam, when he holted a nomination that was "regular"—as regular as and not dissimilar to his own; when he joined the Dolly Varden movement, whose avowed object, as declared by its leaders, was to destroy the Republican party, because it had outlived its usefulness (to them?); when he bolted the nomination of General Grant, and gave his time and eloquence upon the stump to defeat him; when we reflect that in all these long years of his California life Mr. Estee's leading pursuit and leading occupation have been office-seeking and office-holding, we are surprised—genuinely surprised—that he is so innocent, so good, so ingenuous, so unconsciously, sweetly, and purely innocent. When we reflect upon his daily political associates, the men with whom he consorts, and the places where he consorts, our surprise mounts, and mounts, and soars away up to the very empyrean of political admiration; and when we hear him declare that he has "not sought the nomination by any other than honorable means," we wonder why it is that all the dirty rascals in San Francisco politics are so wedded to this good, virtuous, and altogether lovely man that they should toil for him, fight for him, spend their money for him, take Republicans—old and honored residents—by the throat and drag them away from primary polls for him, and hire red wagons, and fill them with Democrats with forged and stolen certificates to vote for him. Vice so seldom pays these compliments to virtue, and criminals so seldom engage in the service of honest men, that we wonder. We simply wonder, that is all; and we have a right to wonder. We only regret that in our founts of type there is no mechanical device that we can use to express our open-mouthed wonder at this anomaly in politics.

The water controversy is of so long continuance, and the Bulletin has given it such prominence, that all intelligent persons well understand it. We will not in this writing undertake to express any opinion upon the merits of the questions at issue. We will only say the contest on the part of the Bulletin has been persistent, acrimonious, and bitter. It has seemed as though the animus that gave it force was a personal hostility toward Mr. Sharon or some other of the stockholders, or toward Mr. Howard, its president and manager. The community, as consumers of water, at last bear all the expense growing out of this wrangle. If the company is compelled to expend money in the lobby of the Legislature, in the lobby of the Supervisors, to the machine, to blackmailing politicians, and for expenses in courts, it comes out of those who are compelled to use the water. The community is thus interested in such reasonable and fair adjustment of this business as will bring the matters in dispute to a determination. Water rates, fairly distributed to property and consumers, would not be felt as burdensome. The Board of Supervisors are required to "fix" rates annually. Thus we have an annual contest over the fixing of rates, and a bi-annual contest over the election of supervisors. With a view to the final settlement and adjustment of all the matters in dispute, Mr. Howard, president of the water company, has proposed a mode of settlement that seems at once fair and just. He recognizes in this proposition the editors of the Bulletin and Call as factors in the opposition. He asserts that the Bulletin is stirring up against the company an unfriendly public opinion by false statements; that it falsely declares that rates have not been reduced, when it knows to the contrary by reading its own monthly water-bills. The company offers to allow the Bulletin to print the water-bills for June and July in proof of a reduction along its entire line of water revenue. Mr. Howard asserts that the Bulletin falsely charges that the company is seeking a subsidy; that it is misrepresenting the company as to its legal proceedings; and, moreover, in answer to the charge of high rates and charges disproportioned to those of Eastern cities, he declares as the reason that nearly the entire burden is thrown upon the domestic rate-payers. The company then offers to SUBMIT THE FRAMING OF AN ORDINANCE for the regulation of water-rates for domestic and municipal purposes to either one of the following four bodies: First, a commission of three to be selected by the Board of Trade; second, a commission of three to be selected by the Chamber of Commerce; third, a commission of three to be selected by the Board of Underwriters; fourth, to a commission consisting of Mayor Blake and Auditor Brickwedel—they, in case of disagreement, to choose a third member of the commission. The proprietors of the Bulletin and Call may have the choice of either one of the four above-named commissions, provided that Messrs. George K. Fitch and Loring Pickering, and the proprietors of the other daily journals, will unite with the Spring Valley Water Company in good faith to maintain these rates so fixed by ordinance, the water company agreeing during that time not to accept increased rates, even if fixed by the Board of Supervisors. The company offer this in settlement of the whole business, to the end that it may have repose from the Bulletin's assaults, and the consumers of water be relieved from the added burdens of a continuous war of defense against newspaper, political, and personal blackmailing aggression. This proposition the Bulletin, with characteristic unfairness, first misrepresents, then flippantly "declines with thanks." In a half-column of irrelevant comment it then again goes over the ground of misstatement, and reproduces in part what has been again and again, and a hundred times over, refuted by the company to the satisfaction of tax-payers and water consumers. With this record of an opportunity lost to settle what on the part of the Bulletin has become a vendetta, we shall hope to see less of that kind of writing in the Bulletin that denounces supervisors by name as dishonest and dishonorable, and denounces by suggestion and most cowardly innuendo every journal, official, and individual that does not agree with it in judgment, over what is at least but a public question, and one upon which honest men may entertain honest differences of opinion. The Bulletin has warred with the Constitutional Convention, and found fault with it for its action on the water question; has found fault with the people for adopting the Constitution; with the Supreme Court of the State for giving it full force and effect; with the people who, at the last election, declared by a large majority in favor of property paying its just proportion of the water burden; with the Board of Supervisors for carrying into effect the popular will. It has alone been satisfied with Mayor Blake and Auditor Brickwedel, who have vetoed every action of the board upon the water question, opposed them last fall in their candidacy, and now declares that they alone represent the spirit of the old "People's party." The Spring Valley Water Works offer, if the Bulletin assents, to submit to Messrs. Blake and Brickwedel the entire water controversy, both as to domestic and municipal rates, and to submit to their decision. This is so eminently fair and reasonable on the part of the company, that its rejection by the Bulletin and Call proprietors is conclusive evidence of a desire on their part that this water war shall never be brought to a termination.

The County Committee deserves well of all honest Republicans. That it has in one sense usurped an authority which was not conferred upon it, is true. It is also true that the exigencies of the political situation demanded that it should do this thing. Less courageous and less honest men would have shrunk from the responsibility of fighting the machines of Higgins & Co., especially as the concern was backed up by the Bulletin and Call. These twin conspirators for the public good and twin guardians of the public welfare have affected to see water in the political distance. In our judgment it is only a mirage. We do not believe that Reuben Lloyd and Fred Elliott have become so suddenly transferred into Tweeds and Kellys that they can turn the Republican party in the interest of Spring Valley. We do not believe that Messrs. Carmany, Fisher, Torrens, Shirley, and the other supervisors are so altogether unmindful of their reputations as to have become totally depraved upon the question of water and gas. We are afraid that the Bulletin has water on the brain, and is getting dropsical; and when it denounces the County Committee, Board of Supervisors, and its associates of the press, it has become a monomaniac on the Spring Valley Water Company, with a suicidal tendency. We shall not be at all surprised to see in the Call, any morning, that Fitch, Upton, Bartlett, Hugh Burke, and the whole Bulletin litter have been found drowned in a Spring Valley reservoir, and in the Evening Bulletin to read that the Call editorial force were found in the same place with stones tied to their necks, cold, dead, and "demnition moist." The County Committee, in saving our city from the disgraceful scenes of a second Republican primary, have done a wise thing. We said once, and we again repeat, that it is the character of the convention that will determine whether it is entitled to support rather than the authority or regularity of its organization. The convention, as named by the County Committee, is composed of most excellent material. It has many of our very best citizens in it, and we have reason to expect a good ticket as the result of its deliberations, and one which all good citizens can unite to support.

In our advertising columns appears a call to the temperance people for a State Convention, to be held at the Young Men's Christian Association building in San Francisco on the twenty-eighth day of this month. We do not know what the temperance people propose doing, but if we were a member of that convention, believed in temperance, desired to make the question a political one and establish a national party, and thought there was a principle in the movement that was destined to live, we would advocate the declaration of an honest platform. We would nominate an entire straight-out ticket of temperance men. We would go to the people. We would remember that Christ left only twelve apostles to go out into the world and preach his gospel. We would remember Mohammed and his early struggles, Jo Smith and his beginnings, and the Republican party and its organization. We would raise the standard, trust in it, fight under it, and whether the ticket received one, ten, or fifty thousand votes, it would be the beginning of the end. It would enlist the respect of its enemies, the admiration of its friends, and in a brief time would command the attention of both the other political parties.

Governor Perkins, in a special message, took strong ground in favor of the valley farmers against the hydraulic miners. He favors Estee, and Estee favors the gravel sluicers against the farmers. The League of Freedom's ex-president, John W. Shaeffer, is in favor of selling whisky in saloons on Sunday. He is one of Mr. Estee's most active and earnest political managers. Mr. Estee is making Sunday-law speeches. The next time Mr. Estee speaks, let some reader of the Argonaut ask the question, and demand a categorical answer, "yes" or "no": "Are you in favor of a law closing all liquor, beer, and wine saloons on Sunday?" He dare not answer it without equivocation or explanation.

The Examiner is right when it declares that reforms are needed in the registration office. In our judgment, Mr. Tharp ought to be removed, and in his place there should be appointed a more competent and less partisan man. If there is any position where impartial and honest work is demanded, it is in the registration of voters. The kind of carelessness that allows certificates of registration to be stolen on the eve of a primary election is as reprehensible as any other crime. The official who will permit frauds in the interest of his own party will, if the temptation offer, sell out to the enemy. No more Tharp.

On Thursday of last week the Bulletin looked upon the presidents of the Republican clubs as honest men, fairly representative of the Republican party, and entitled to organize its nominating convention. On Friday of last week the Bulletin said: "The ward club presidents are striving to make the corporations take them into their employ, are no better than they should be, and represent the rump of the party of three thousand, leaving seventeen thousand respectable Republicans unrepresented." Oh, cruel, cruel Mr. Higgins, to make the Bulletin turn so short a corner!

Mr. Joseph O'Connor convenes his Irish Democratic graduates from Spring Valley School, and organizes them into a body to tease for him the candidacy of Superintendent of Schools. This is an Irish Roman Catholic ecclesiastical cat in the political meal-tub. Its tail and ears are out. If any Roman Catholic Irishman thinks he can be superintendent of our common schools, let him try it. If such a thing is possible, we may as well know it now as later. The common school management and superintendency of San Francisco is not for Joseph.

The law firm of ESTEE & BOAL is a prosperous concern, doing a large and increasing business. The political firm of Estee & Bolt is a shaky and not very respectable institution. It is fizzling out, and will retire from practice early in November.

In Mr. Estee's panegyric upon railroads he declares that no American lives outside the sound of the railroad whistle. How about the people in Alaska, and at the Farrallones, Alpine County, and the sea-coast of Santa Barbara?

Some illiberal people think the Roman Catholics ought not to vote for two reasons: First, because they are Roman Catholics; and, second, because they are

THE REGULAR ARMY.

By an Army Officer.

II.

Congress was compelled to retain the officers of the twenty-nine regiments which were added to the army at the end of the civil war. There was a general consolidation and reduction to a peace footing in 1870. The measures then adopted served to hamper and impede promotion. As a result, we now have a lot of captains ranging between the ages of, in very few instances less than, forty to over sixty years; first-lieutenants from thirty to over sixty, and second-lieutenants of irregular ages, mostly below thirty-five. It is by officers of these grades that the details of active military duty must be executed, and upon whose efficiency that of the rank and file depends. A captain who has passed the age of forty-five, or a lieutenant that of thirty-five, is not suited to, and is not the best material for, such grade. He is too old. Many officers already realize that they are beyond the period of life at which distinction has usually been gained, and are still subordinates, though all of their mature years have been given to the service of the government. They know, too, that in the event of a war they would probably be obliged to give way to younger men, having been debarred the benefit of that promotion which had been reasonably expected, and failed to attain such a rank as would enable them to satisfactorily retire. The effect of this stagnation upon younger men must soon become manifest if it is allowed to continue. The young officer joins his regiment full of energy and ambition; his youthful visions of military glory and reputation have not yet been dispelled. But in a few years he discovers that his early manhood is rapidly passing, in perhaps hard frontier service, though without its anticipated compensation, and that the age of thirty is probably passed before the first bar has been placed in his shoulder-strap; while from that to a captain, the length of time is too uncertain to estimate.

Under ordinary conditions the authorized retired list would do much to remedy this evil; but that has for a long time continued full—kept so principally by officers whose wounds and disabilities were incurred during the rebellion, or in Indian campaigns at a later period. At the present time there is a very considerable number of candidates for retirement throughout the various regiments, whose physical condition renders them positively unable to perform the duties which pertain to the commissions they hold. Some of these officers have continued on sick-leave with full pay, and are indefinitely absent from their regiments, while others remain at their stations in the performance of such "light duty" as they are capable of. Most of these would gladly retire and make room for others, but there are no vacancies on the retired list; and, in the meantime, their duty must be performed by juniors without the rank or pay which should accompany it. The younger officers, particularly those of the line, were greatly disappointed at the action recently taken by Congress in the defeat of that portion of the appropriation bill which made retirement compulsory for all officers at the age of sixty-two, thus placing the army upon the same footing with the navy as to retirement. A substitute was made for this, and became a law, by which retirement is compulsory at sixty-four, or voluntary after forty years' service—the limit of four hundred not to apply to such cases. The immediate operation of this law is a practical bar to the retirement of nearly all line officers but one having reached that age, and there being very few to reach it for some years to come. Under the construction which has been placed upon it, no officer can be retired for other causes (wounds, disability, etc.), so long as this list remains at or above four hundred. On the 30th of June last, under the provisions of this bill, the following retirements were made of officers over sixty-four: One colonel of artillery, two engineer officers, four officers of the medical department, two paymasters, five ordnance store-keepers with rank of captain, one military store-keeper Quartermaster's Department with rank of captain, one professor at West Point, and last, but not least, five chaplains, whose entire military service averaged but seventeen years each. The retired list is thus increased to considerably beyond the limit which would admit of retirement for other causes than old age, with a probability that the same class of officers will keep it so recruited, their relative ages being greater.

The abolition of the purchase system in the British army had caused a similar stagnation in promotion, and an almost identical condition of affairs in this particular that our army now anticipates. The junior grades were filled by an accumulation of officers of advanced ages; and it became evident that an outlet must be found, or the English officer would fall below the required standard. Parliament appointed a commission, which made a thorough examination of the matter, and returned an exhaustive report upon the subject of promotion and retirement. This resulted in the adoption of new regulations, which went into operation on the first of July, 1881, and were to govern thereafter. By these changes, no lieutenant or captain remains on the active list of his regiment after reaching the age of forty; no major after reaching forty-eight, or other field officer beyond the age of fifty-five.

The leading features of these regulations are substantially as follows: There shall be a limit to the age at which every officer shall retire. The number of field officers of the line is more than doubled; the number of captains reduced, and the rank of second-lieutenant abolished. But lieutenants for the first three years' service will have the former pay of second-lieutenants only. Any officer who is unfit for duty in any rank will be immediately retired. A lieutenant or captain who does not receive half-pay promotion must retire (except in the engineers) at forty. A major, (whose rank corresponds with a lieutenant-colonel in our service,) at forty-eight; a lieutenant-colonel, (colonel in our service,) at fifty-five; a major-general, (the English colonel corresponds with our brigadier-general,) at sixty-two; and a lieutenant-general, at sixty-seven. The only exception to the retirement of all field officers at fifty-five is in the case of an officer employed before the enemy, and while so employed he is eligible for promotion. Provision is also made for the employment of surplus field-officers with the staff, militia, etc., and, in addition to age, continuous non-employment of such officers will involve compulsory retirement after a limited number of years. To secure still further rapidity in promotion, and the command of troops by younger officers, certain pecuniary inducements are offered for voluntary retirements, such inducements being governed by the length of service.

The adoption of these regulations was necessarily the cause of great commotion in the British army. The immediate retirements following were fifty-five generals, sixty-six lieutenant-generals, and thirty-four major-generals, not mentioning those of inferior grades, to make room for younger and more available men. The government had recognized the fact, however, that the efficiency of the service was in danger, and that extreme means could no longer be postponed.

Measures so radical as these would be impracticable in our service; the greater portion of its officers would be retired at once. Various plans have been offered, and it remains to be seen what Congress will do next winter. Compulsory retirement at the age of sixty-two, even, while the limit of four hundred is continued, will not meet the situation. An unlimited retired list, compulsory retirement at sixty-two, with the continuance of other existing laws on this subject now on the statute books, would give relief, though plans are not wanting. Steps should be taken without further delay to check this increasing evil, which threatens the vitality of our small military establishment, and which, if allowed to continue, will leave it with a body of deserving but superannuated veterans in those grades where active and energetic young men are indispensable. To these will be supplemented the young men of the army, but with a lack of professional interest, and little hope or ambition for the future.

September 10, 1882.

For some reason the Queen is not fond of the Princess of Wales. It is said the dislike comes from the crisis in the affairs of her German kinsfolk when the British Parliament was on the verge of joining Denmark against the aggressions of Prussia and Austria. The Queen quarreled with Palmerston on the subject. The night after Parliament broke into cheers over a victory of the Danish fleet, the Queen indignantly told the minister that if such an affront were repeated, she would leave Germany, and remain during the war. To which Palmerston responded that if she did resolve to put such a mark of indignity upon the people, she would never be permitted to return, and reminding her of her predecessors, the Stuarts, the Queen said more about quitting her realm.

OLD FAVORITES.

Atalanta Victorious.

And there two runners did the sign abide
Foot set to foot—a young man, slim and fair,
Crisp-haired, well knit, with firm limbs often tried
In places where no man his strength may spare;
Daintily his thin coat was, and on his hair
A golden circlet of renown he wore.
And in his hand an olive garland bore.
But on this day with whom shall he contend?
A maid stood by him like Diana clad,
When in the woods she lists her bow to bend,
Too fair for one to look on and be glad,
Who scarcely yet has thirty summers had,
If he must still behold her from afar;
Too fair to let the world live free from war.
Now through the hush there broke the trumpet's clang
Just as the setting sun made eventide.
Then from light feet a spurt of dust there sprang,
And swiftly were they running side by side;
But silent did the thronging folk abide
Until the turning-post was reached at last,
And round about it still abreast they passed.
But when the people saw how close they ran,
When half way to the starting-point they were,
A cry of joy broke forth, whereat the man
Headed the white-foot runner, and drew near Unto the very end of all his fear;
And scarce his straining feet the ground could feel,
And bliss unhopd for o'er his heart 'gan steal.
But midst the loud victorious shouts he heard
Her footsteps drawing nearer, and the sound
Of fluttering raiment, and thereat afeard,
His flushed and eager face he turned around,
And even then he felt her past him bound
Fleet as the wind, but scarcely saw her there
Till on the goal she laid her fingers fair.
There stood she breathing like a little child
Amid some warlike clamor laid asleep,
For no victorious joy her red lips smiled,
Her cheek its wonted freshness did but keep;
No glance lit up her clear gray eyes and deep,
Though some divine thought softened all her face
As once more rang the trumpet through the place;
But her late foe stopped short amidst his course,
One moment gazed upon her piteously,
Then, with a groan, his lingering feet did force
To leave the spot whence he her eyes could see;
And, changed like one who knows his time must be
But short and bitter, without any word
He knelt before the bearer of the sword;
Then high rose up the gleaming, deadly blade,
Bared of its flowers, and through the crowded place
Was silence now, and midst of it the maid
Went by the poor wretch at a gentle pace,
And he to hers upturned his sad white face;
Nor did his eyes behold another sight
Ere on his soul there fell eternal night.

—William Morris.

Amazon.

I burn to tell my love; to call her mine;
To pour upon her heart the fiery tide
That fills my own; to open my soul's shrine,
And show her her own image defied.
Oh, you should see her! She is, of all queens
That drive their chariots over bleeding hearts,
The loveliest one! Not by her sex's means
She won her throne. She has no need of arts.
Born to enslave, she conquers with a glance;
All blandishments and subtle wiles disdains;
A heretic to the antique romance,
To know she is, is knowing that she reigns.
Like the phosphoric trees in forests dark,
She lights all hearts, and yet herself is cold;
And woe to him who, dazzled by the spark,
Hopes for a heat her heart can never hold.
But she is beautiful! No vocal dream
Warbled in slumber by the nightingale
Can match her voice's music. Sculptors seem,
When most inspired, to copy her—and fail!
To gaze on her is song unto the sight;
A harmony of vision, heaven-sent,
Where all the tones of human charms unite,
And are in one majestic woman blent.
But once I thought she loved me. Bitter hurt,
Whose mingled joy and torment haunt me still!
Her eyes look out from every starry flower;
I hear her mocking laugh in every rill.
'Twas in the autumn woods we rode one morn
To hunt the deer, with wild and willing steeds.
The young wind gayly blew his mellow horn,
And beat the tangled covers of the reeds.
The golden elms tossed high their lucid leaves,
While on their giant boles, so rough in form,
The rugged bark stood out in corded sheaves,
Like muscles swollen in wrestling with the storm.
A sudden, wayward fancy seized us here
To pause and act a leafy masquerade.
No idle tongues nor curious eyes were near,
And silent splendor filled the sunlit glade.
So, gathering armfuls of the autumn vines,
I wove their red ropes round the passive girl,
Looping the tendrils of the blushing vines
Round arms, and head, and each escaping curl.
Then through her horse's mane that blackly shone
I plaited mosses long and leaden-hued,
Until she seemed like some young Amazon,
Chained by the mighty monarch of the wood.
O mockery of conquest! Hidden sting!
O triumph treacherous as the sleeping seas!
She played the captive—I, the victor-king,
Threading triumphal arches through the trees.
Sudden, with one wild burst of regal night,
She flung her fluttering fetters to the wind;
She and her steed, with bound of fierce delight,
Dashed through the crashing boughs that closed behind—
And so she vanished. From the distance dim
Her scornful laughter floated to my ear;
A jest for her—for me a funeral hymn,
Sung o'er a love that froze upon its bier.
How shall I conquer her? Since that cursed day
Her image stands between me and the world;
Around my cup of life where flowers should lay, (sic)
Forbidden me, a poisoned snake is curled.
As heron chased by hawk I soar through space,
The fatal shafts of her disdain to shun,
And seek the clouds; but vain the dizzy race—
I find her still between me and the sun.
O queen! enthroned upon an icy height,
What holocaust does thy proud heart desire?
When will it flame like beacon through the night
With fiery answer to another's fire?
Ah! why so cold—so ever cold to me?
I chafe—I chafe all day from dawn to dark,
As chafes the wall of Adria's glowing sea
Against the pulseless marble of Saint Mark.

—Fitz-James O'Brien.

LITERARY NOTES.

"Thé Slaves of Paris" is one of Gaboriau's most exciting romances. As usual, the plot turns upon crime and its detection. The series in which a translation of this novel has just been made now contains nearly all of Gaboriau's stories, and the remainder will follow at short intervals. They are, as a rule, reasonably well translated. Published by Estes & Lauriat, Boston; for sale by Bancroft; price, 50 cents.

"The Fair Philosopher" is another novel by Henry Daugé, who wrote a book ("The Georgians") of ephemeral popular popularity. The present volume is not equal to the former in either material or management. It details the loves of two young girls; contains three threadbare "situations," one of which is a runaway incident, and another a fire rescue. The book continually displays the faults of a person struggling with a defective education and "Chautauqua" literary clubs. Published by G. W. Harlan & Co., New York; for sale by Billings, Harbourn & Co.

Miss Oakey (since become Mrs. T. W. Dewing) last year wrote a little book entitled "Beauty in Dress," which gained instant popularity. It was a book not alone for one season, but for all times and fashions. She has now devoted herself to the subject of home, and has just issued another little volume. It is called "Beauty in the Household," and displays as much good sense and good taste as did the former book. It is cleverly illustrated by pen-and-ink sketches. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

The latest number of Rolfe's series of Shakespeare's works is "Troilus and Cressida." As this play is unfit, through obvious reasons, for school use or social reading, the editors have refrained from the expurgation which has characterized the other volumes of this series. The comments by great authors, which are published in the introduction, are valuable and interesting. As in former instances, the notes are passable, although defective, and with too great an absence of word derivation. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, 50 cents.

Chase and Stuart's classical series have hitherto been popular in schools by reason of their compact form, typographical excellence, and good vocabularies. But the notes which accompany them show great incorrectness and inadequacy. These two editors have now published "A First Latin Book" and "A Latin Reader." Of the two the former is, of course, the more important; the latter is made up of twenty-five fables, as many anecdotes, and a few Homeric legends, all graded with regard to successive progress in increasing difficulties; the notes accompanying it are perhaps a slight improvement on those of the other works. But in "A First Latin Book" we find the same old faults exemplified. The book is a model as regards neatness and convenience; but that is all. It is, like the others, only the result of judicious hack work. The neatness of tables and paradigms is gratifying to the eye, but the entire system is old-fashioned and antiquated. The new methods, which philology has shown to be the only true ones, have swept away the cumbrous "declension" and "conjugation" system, so that they flourish only among pedagogues who know not the light of modern days. The division of verbs and substantives into their various vowel classes is a revolution which has done much to secure a more "royal road" to Latin than before existed. The present volume will prove useless in a short time, and will be relegated to the shelves which hold musty "Bullions," "Harknesses," and "Anthons." Published by Eldridge & Brother, Philadelphia; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1 each.

Announcements: G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish immediately "Spoiling the Egyptians; A Tale of Shame: Told from the British Blue-books," by J. Seymour Keay. J. B. Lippincott & Co. will soon publish a complete edition of the poetical works of T. Buchanan Read. O'Donovan's book on Central Asia is to be published this month by G. P. Putnam's Sons under the title of "Merv; a Journey from the Caspian Sea to Independent Turkistan, and Five Months' Residence in the Tekke Country." Captain Richard F. Burton's long-promised work on the sword will have for its full title, "The Book of the Sword; being a History of the Sword and its Use from the Earliest Times." It will be published this winter in small quarto, with about four hundred illustrations. A volume which promises to be a charming holiday gift is W. J. Linton's "Rare Poems of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries." Two editions—one in paper and one in cloth—of Mary Shelley's "Frankenstein" are to be brought out by J. W. Lovell & Co. A little volume on "Greek Wit" has lately been brought out in London by F. A. Paley. The next volume of the "No Name" novels is to bear the suggestive title of "Her Crime." The new Hawthorne romance is rapidly getting into type, and will, it is supposed, be of about the length of "Septimius Felton." A. R. Worthington is preparing a handsome new uniform edition of Hazlitt's works; also a fine standard edition of Lavater's "Physiognomy." He has ready a revised edition of Chambers' Etymological Dictionary. Susan Coolidge has translated Théophile Gautier's "Household of Pets," and it will be published soon by Roberts Brothers. This firm also announce "Art and Nature," a series of letters from Italy by Eugene Penon; "Wit and Wisdom of Don Quixote," volume uniform with the "Wit and Wisdom of George Eliot," and Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's first juvenile, "Hester Stanley at St. Marks."—Disputed by Mr. R. H. Shepard's announced intention to reprint Thackeray's earlier uncollected writings, Messrs. Smith & Elder have resolved to forestall him. They will soon publish with such editorial supervision as may seem advisable all of his writings they possess that they have never yet suffered to be reprinted, considering them written, for the most part, in an ephemeral style, or on topics of the moment, to be unsuitable for publication in a permanent form. Fords, Howard & Hulbert announce that on Saturday, October 14th they will resume the publication Plymouth Pulpit, the weekly pamphlet edition Henry Ward Beecher's sermons.

Miscellany: The late Dean Stanley commended Hawthorne's "Marble Faun" as the best hand-book to Rome ever published in the English language. Doctor P. Popoff has an article in the Critic of September 9, showing to what extent American literature is read in Russia. Longfellow heads the list of American poets whose works have been translated into the language. Cooper's Indian tales are better liked than any other foreign novels; and there are few educated Russians who have not read Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Bret Harte and Mark Twain also are popular among the subjects of the Czar. The Harpers have begun the publication of cheap novels in a new form of the Franklin Square Library. It has a two-column page the size of that of their former "Library of Select Novels," and a neat and ornamental cream-colored cover. Mr. W. E. Morris's "Heaps of Money" is the first volume in this series. Mr. James Simson, who is known as a writer on the Gypsies, has just published in England a pamphlet in support of the long-debated statement that the author of "The Pilgrim's Progress" belonged to the Gypsy race. Mr. Henry James is engaged in writing a play. As his work is usually as little dramatic as may be, the result of this effort will be looked for with much curiosity. The Rev. Thomas Mozley recently wrote of Herbert Spencer's system of philosophy as filling "several yards of shelf in most public libraries." The author, apparently shocked by the inaccuracy of the statement, wrote a note declaring that only two feet was the actual space covered by his thirty years of philosophical work. The sale of the late W. H. Ainsworth's library realized only twenty-three hundred dollars, most of the books bringing small prices. The lot consisting of Cruikshank's pencil drawing illustrative of Ainsworth's novels, with nineteen autograph letters explanatory of the drawings, brought the highest price obtained—one hundred and eighty dollars. In the second of "The Browning Society Papers"—a magazine of one hundred and forty pages, just published in London at the extraordinary price of 2s. 50—the Rev. J. Kirkman advises the student of Browning to begin not with the longer poems, but with "Rabbi Ben Eyyra," thence proceeding to "Prosperie," "Culde Roland," "Ab Vogler," and "Caliban." Mr. Kirkman claims for Browning "the distinction of being the greatest Christian poet we ever had."

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

"Send Mr. Bunyan out here," was the indignant demand of a Boston reporter, who was stopped at the door and told that his "professional" card was not equivalent to a complimentary ticket to a panorama of "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress."

While Cockburn was at the bar he defended a prisoner, who, in spite of all his efforts, was sentenced to be hanged on the 17th of the next month. The convict, after his condemnation, reproached his counsel for having failed to get justice done him. "Never mind that," said Cockburn; "have a little patience, and justice will be done you on the 17th."

Oscar Wilde, talking of Southern plantation life, says: "I was once sitting on the portico of a country-house, with a young lady, admiring the beauty of a limpid stream under the rays of the moon, and I said to the young lady: 'How beautiful is the moonlight falling on the water!' 'It is beautiful, indeed,' she replied; 'but ah, Mr. Wilde, you ought to have seen it before the war!'"

It was the not uncommon characteristic of two famous wits who belonged to the Punch set that they said the good thing that rose to their lips, without in the least considering who might be wounded thereby. The wit of one, however, was peculiarly waspish. On one occasion, "at the club," he was railing against the Roman Catholic religion, and sneering at its professors. At length his friend lost all patience with him, and protested: "Come, now, don't be unjust. For my part, I feel such a great respect for some of the members of that ancient church I have a good mind to become a Roman myself." "Do," replied the wasp, preparing for a personal sting, in which a portrait will be recognized, "do; and if you take my advice, you will begin with your nose."

The Rev. Mr. Blank was one of the most bashful men in the profession, and was constantly getting into scrapes through his nervous mistakes. At one time he rose in his pulpit to give out the hymn, "This world is all a fleeting show," and, after clearing his throat, he struck a high pitch of voice, and began solemnly: "This world is all a floating shoe." Everybody smiled except the deacons, and the minister was covered with confusion as he began again: "This world is all a shouting flow." This only made matters worse, and the unhappy man cleared his throat with tremendous force, and began once again: "This world is all a floating she." Then he slammed the hymn-book down, and wiping his clammy brow, said: "Brethren, for some reason I can not read that hymn as it should be read; we will omit it, and the choir will please sing the grand old lines beginning: 'Just as I am without one flea.'"

An old Scottish dame, rather too fond of "the mountain dew," was one day "unco drouthie," and without funds wherewith to provide "a drappie." She thought there was a chance of getting it on credit from a public house near; so, summoning her little granddaughter, she said: "Lassie, gang round to Donald MacCallum and bring me a gill. Tell him I'll pay him in the morning." Back came the damsel with a refusal. Donald declined to part with his whisky without cash. Eager and irritated, the old woman cast about for some means of "raising the wind," and her eye fell upon the family Bible. "Here, lassie," she said, "gie him this, and tell him to keep it until I bring the siller." Off went the little messenger, who soon returned, however, bearing the Bible. Donald was obdurate. "He says he maun hae the bawbees first, granny." With an angry snort, the old grandmother threw up her arms and exclaimed, "Losh! did onybody ever hear the like o' that? The man will neither tak my word nor the word o' God for a gill o' whusky!"

M. Parmentier, in 1783, introduced potatoes into France in a novel manner. Having planted a considerable breadth of potatoes at Montreuil, near Paris, he gained an audience of the unfortunate Louis XVI., in the course of which he inspired his majesty with ideas of the value of the potato. "But how are we to make people eat what they are prejudiced against?" inquired the king. "Sir, if your majesty will graciously afford me a little aid, that prejudice shall be removed," replied Parmentier. "To overcome prejudice is difficult; but bow can I aid you, M. Parmentier?" "If your majesty will graciously order that a soldier shall mount guard in my potato-field at Montreuil, potatoes shall be all the fashion in less than six months." The king laughed, and granted Parmentier's request. Thenceforward a military guard might be seen promenading with measured step the naturalist's potato-field. How precious must that blue-flowered plant be, thought the lookers-on. No more fear of leprosy—no more dread of poisoning. The highest people in France were proud to eat potatoes.

A devout Christian was once traveling in the Holy Land, and visited the Sea of Galilee. Approaching the boatman, he addressed him in his choicest Arabic, and, with Bible and commentary in hand, awaited an answer. "Ah! what smatter 'th yer? Why don't you talk United States?" asked the man, contemptuously. He was a real live Yankee, who was picking up a living by ferrying tourists across the sea. "So, this is the Sea of Galilee," devoutly murmured the searcher after knowledge. "Ya-a-s." "And this is where our Saviour walked upon the waters?" "Ya-a-s." "How much will you charge to take me to the exact spot?" "Wa-al, you look like a clergyman, an' I won't charge you nothin'." The devout one boarded the boat, and at last was pointed out where the miracle is said to have occurred. After gazing at the waters, and dividing his time between glances at his books and devout ejaculations of satisfaction, the searcher signified his willingness to return. "Charge you twenty dollars to take you back," said the speculative Yankee. "But you said you would charge nothing." "Naw, didn't. Nothin' to bring you out. Twenty dollars to git back." "And do you charge everybody twenty dollars to take them back?" asked the astonished searcher. "Ya-a-s. That's about the figger." "Well, then," said the devout one, as he went down into his clothes, "no wonder our Saviour got out and walked."

THE LATEST VERSE.

Mithras.

When his eyes upon her be
She trembles—for she is not fair—
And scarce she would that he should see
The absence of all beauty there.

When his lips ber fingers press,
Can she sigh with such a care?
Ah, no; for in that dear caress
She knows her blest and feels her fair.

When his arms about her meet,
Then she breathes diviner air;
With his heart her pulses beat,
Blooms her soul and makes her fair.
—Harriet Prescott Spofford in the Bazar.

Fallow.

I like these plants that you call weeds—
Sedge, hardhack, mullein, yarrow—
That knit their roots, and sift their seeds
Where any grassy wheel-track leads
Through country by-ways narrow.

They fringe the rugged hillside farms,
Grown old with cultivation,
With such wild wealth of rustic charms
As bloomed in Nature's matron arms
The first days of creation.

They show how Mother Earth loves best
To deck her tired-out places;
By flowery lips, in hours of rest,
Against hard work she will protest
With homely airs and graces.

You plow the arbutus from her hills;
Hew down her mountain-laurel;
Their place, as best she can, she fills
With humbler blossoms; so she wills
To close with you her quarrel.

She yielded to your axe, with pain,
Her free, primeval glory;
She brought you crops of golden grain;
You say, "How dull she grows! how plain!"
The old, mean, selfish story.

Her wildwood soil you may subdue,
Tortured by hoe and harrow;
But leave her for a year or two,
And see—she stands and laughs at you
With hardhack, mullein, yarrow.

Dear Earth, the world is hard to please!
Yet heaven's breath gently passes
Into the life of flowers like these;
And I lie down at blessed ease
Among thy weeds and grasses.

—Lucy Larcom in October Atlantic.

On a Picture at Dresden.

True, true, very true; but you see
It's no use to argue with me.
Ascetical scruples! Fiddle-de-dee!
She's there—in the Dresden gallery—
"A Girl with a Candle"—19 C.

And any one worthy to loosen her sandal
Would give, though a belted earl,
His total possessions to blow out her candle,
I tell you, and kiss that girl!
—Ernest Radford in New York Tribune.

What is Death?

Looking on a page where stood
Graven of old on old-world wood
Death, and by the grave's edge grim,
Pale, the young man facing him,
Asked my well-beloved of me
Once what strange thing this might be,
Gaunt and great of limb.

Death, I told him; and, surprise
Deepening more his wildwood eyes,
(Like some sweet fleet thing whose breath Speaks all spring, though naught it saith,)
Up he turned his rose-bright face,
Glorious with his seven years' grace,
Asking, What is death?
—Algernon Charles Swinburne.

Storm on Lake Asquam.

A cloud, like that the old-time Hebrew saw,
On Carmel, prophesying rain, began
To lift itself o'er wooded Cardigan,
Growing and blackening. Suddenly, a flaw
Of chill wind menaced; then a wild blast beat
Down the long valley's murmuring pines, and woke
The noon-dream of the sleeping lake, and broke
Its smooth steel mirror at the mountain's feet.

Thunderous and vast, a fire-veined darkness swept
Over the rough pine-bearded Asquam range;
A wraith of tempest, wonderful and strange,
From peak to peak the cloudy giant stepped.

One moment, as if challenging the storm,
Chocorua's tall, defiant sentinel
Looked from his watch-tower; then the shadow fell,
And the wild rain-drift blotted out his form.

And over all the still unhidden sun,
Weaving its light through slant-blown veils of rain,
Smiled on the trouble, as hope smiles on pain;
And, when the tumult and the strife were done,

With one foot on the lake and one on land,
Framing within his crescent's tinted streak
A far-off picture of the Melvin peak,
Spent broken clouds the rainbow's angel spanned.
—John Greenleaf Whittier in October Atlantic.

The Damsel of the Plain.

When Rowland found the damsel of the plain,
Her daffodil crown lit all her shining head;
He kissed her mouth, and through the world they sped—
The beauteous smiling world in sun and rain.
But, when long joys made love a golden chain,
He slew her by the sea; then, as he fled,
Voices of earth, and air, and ocean said:
"The maid was Truth; God bids you meet again."

Between the devil and the deep dark sea
He met a foe more soul-compelling still;
A feathered snake the monster seemed to be,
And wore a wreath o' the yellow daffodil.
Then spake the devil: "Rowland, fly to me;
When murdered Truth returns she comes to kill."
—Theodore Watts in London Athenaeum.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
STARCH.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO'S
CHOCOLATE.

SMITH
BROTHERS'
PACKAGE
BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.
AGENTS,
121 and 123 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM,
For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION
called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal. ASA CLARK, M. D.
References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco, Dr. G. A. Shurtliff, Stockton, Sup't State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO.
(Established 1854.)HAY, GRAIN, AND
COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

39 Clay Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Telephone No. 35.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO.
Commission Merchants,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street
Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP,
581 and 583 Market Street, S. F.,
Manufacturers
Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture
Frames, and Etc.-a-Etc.

IMPORTERS OF GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHROMOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY.
OFFICE, - - - 325 Market St.
WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts.
C. SPRECKELS, President,
J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President,
A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO.
San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of

RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON
Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered
Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel,
and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts,
Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting
Rods, etc., etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron.
202 MARKET STREET.

THE
AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY
SAN FRANCISCO,
MANUFACTURERS OF ALL
Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar
for export.
C. ADOLPHE LOW, President.
Office—208 California Street.IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON
PACIFIC IRON WORKS
RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO.,
127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco.
Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines—
both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.CHARLES R. ALLEN
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL or Office by
Telephone 308.
Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company.
118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.J. C. MERRILL & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants
204 and 206 California Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.
PAYOT, UPHAM & CO
STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS,
Commercial Printers,
and Blank Book Manufacturers
204 Sansome Street, near Pine.
TABER, HARKER
IMPORTERS AND
GROCERS, 108 and 110 California.

"CHISPA."

What the New York Critics Think of it.

Green & Thompson's new play was produced on September 4th, in Haverly's New York Theatre. A few extracts from the principal criticisms may interest California readers. Miss Elmore was in the title rôle and gained much commendation. The New York Sun observes: "'Chispa' is intended to be the means of displaying the capabilities of Miss Marion Elmore, a vivacious young woman who can talk slang, sing passably, and dance easily. The scenes in the four acts after a dismal prologue are laid in lumber-camps of California, and the scenery is not the least of the elements of the play. There are two villains—one with some signs of repentance and the other unrelenting—besides a crazy woman. The latter might be left out without doing harm. An entirely original character is that of Indian Jack, a Piute, who kills villains in the nick of time and is otherwise useful. Incidents follow one another quickly, but the situations might be strengthened in the last two acts. The play will probably be popular notwithstanding its weak points."

The World regards it as a comparative success, and thinks better of its merits. It says: "'The play is more interesting than the usual run of specialty plays. There is one entirely new character in it—Indian Jack, highly grotesque and comical, with a dash of sentiment in his attachment to Chispa. Doc Jones, the oracle of Bachelor's Gulch, is another amusing type of California life. Anastasia, the Doc's love, is also a funny character. Chispa, too, is very interesting—a wild, wayward girl, yet simple, trusting, and affectionate. Zeke is a brave, true-hearted fellow, but the dramatists might have made more of him. Chispa is a part which suits Miss Elmore exactly. The villains are not particularly interesting, but are necessary to the plot. Old Calamity, however, as the crazy widow of James Downey is known at Bachelor's Gulch, could be dispensed with. She might have died in the prologue unmentioned."

The Dramatic Times thinks that the authors have successfully suited the play to Miss Elmore's talents, and commends the humorous effects: "In two respects it is better than most of the recent attempts to deal with the bouncing barbarism of American life. It presents one entirely new character in the person of Indian Jack, and it deals with some fresh material in the shape of the American desert, prairie fever, etc. In writing it, Messrs. Greene and Thompson did not depart very far from the patent rule and the patent plot. The consequence is that Chispa [sic] (by the way, does this name owe its derivation to buffalo chips with which the heroine is surrounded in the first act?) is involved in a melodramatic difficulty from the start which rather overloads her. There is a substratum of emotion to the piece that if it had been more artistically handled by the playwrights would have made 'Chispa' a really stirring type of Western life. As it is, the interest reaches its height in the first half of the piece, and dies off in the last half—an almost fatal defect of construction, that is only saved from being fatal in representation by the amusing character of the principal personages, who are more strongly contrasted than is usual in this kind of play."

The Times compliments Miss Elmore, but savagely condemns the play: "This funeral work found favor, it is mentioned, in the climate of California, a fact which is thought to be in its favor. The authors of it, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Greene, are spoken of as persons who understand life in California. If the veracious play-bill of Mr. Haverly's theatre had not enlightened us upon this matter, we might have come to the conclusion that the authors of 'Chispa' concocted their drama in a fit of sulphurous melancholia. The play-bill declares, however, that 'Chispa' is a truthful and probable play, and that its virtues have been cordially recognized. This may be the case, though one is inclined to object to the excessive number of dying and murdered people exhibited, like a chamber of horrors, in its prologue and four acts. The strictness of its probability is also questionable. The lugubrious trash and commonplace which overload it are, moreover, undoubtedly too obvious. A backwoods drama ought to have a touch of the fine freshness and simplicity of nature in it. 'Davy Crockett' and 'The Danites' have something real, charming, primitive about them—though neither is a satisfactory play. But 'Chispa,' and trifles of its sort, reveal nothing but the barrenness of theatrical buncombe. They are peculiarly depressing when their purpose is to carry the merriment and lightness of an actress like Miss Elmore. Out of the character of Chispa—the only tolerable thing in the play—Miss Elmore extracts a good deal of frolic, spirit, and amusement."

The Tribune is more severe than all, and seems to allow not even the slightest grain of favor to its plot or construction: "It is a melodrama in six acts, and it tells a tiresome and highly improbable story, by means of forced incidents capriciously arranged and diffusive talk poured forth in prodigal monotony. It begins with starvation, death, robbery, madness, and a prayer which closely trenches upon blasphemy. It subsequently introduces other murders, and several hairbreadth escapes, and, in fact, is peppered to the last degree with the ginger of crime and gore. Its persons are mostly disagreeable laborers, who work in mines, and whose appearance is suggestive of the need of soap and water. Its language is all of one kind, being a verbose and ugly compound of platitude and slang. Its story, divested of much of the overwhelming triviality and commonness—which apparently are put forward as expressive traits of real life—relates to a simple, true-hearted, rough backwoodsman's love for a girl whom he has adopted and reared, and who is temporarily alienated from him by contact with new companions and social customs, but ultimately reconciled and restored to him. This silver thread of romance shines very dimly in the web of coarser strands with which it has been so needlessly and clumsily twisted. To discover it is a labor, and to follow it requires patience and a charitable disposition; for the piece is full of incidents and language that prompt derision. The drama is dreadful. All civilized persons must hope that California is not the place it has been represented to be in the plays concerning it that are so liberally and so resolutely inflicted upon the East. It is difficult to understand why that noble State should have thus been singled out for caricature, or why the American dramatist must needs suppose that people are interesting according to the ratio of their dirt, ignorance, turbulence, and slang. 'Chispa' has been brought forward with pretty scenery, and it will shortly be taken on the road with the rest of the rubbish that is now being shot through the dramatic sluice of the New York theatres."

The play, despite newspaper condemnation, seems to be drawing good houses.

Obscure Intimations.

"A."—The correspondent who wrote us some months ago concerning a certain French chanson is informed that it is called "La Romance de Margot." A correct rendering of the mutilated refrain sent us at the time is appended:

Pauvre fille,
Que je regrette
Le temps heureux qui n'est
O mon village!
O mon jeune âge!
O mes beaux jours, qu'étes vous devenus!
C'est sur l'herbage,
Dans un village,
Qu'il a p'tit Margot s' dépêcha d' grandir;
Du toit champêtre
Qui m'a vu naître
Je garderai toujours le souvenir.

The poem is somewhat long. It will be sent by mail if desired.

"Some Santa Cruz Subscribers."—We are still on the hunt for the poems you desire. Be patient.

"The Woman who Sang."—Accepted. Will appear shortly.

"Carrie's Love Story."—Declined.

"The Secret of a Murder."—Declined.

We have received the following:

EDITORS ARGONAUT: In search of matter your reason for publishing such stuff as fills a page of your otherwise interesting paper every other week, it do you really admire such stuff? But, no, I will not insult you by the question. I refer to the contributions of the person who styles himself "Zulano," and whose predominating characteristic seems to be overweening egotism and conceit, and an exaggerated idea of his superiority to the "common herd." Occasionally he succeeds in saying something rather witty, but one must wade through such a quantity of rubbish to discover it, that the result is not worth the effort. FULANO.

Dear Foolano, we have put you in "obscure intimations," lest from your guarded language Zulano should discover that you do not like him. We always told him not to be severe on the "common herd." But as we belong to the uncommon herd, our withers are unprung. Are yours, Foolano dear?

"B. G."—Your description of a steerage passage to Europe is most graphic. It is more—it is melodramatic and insectiferous. But the Argonaut is sometimes read at Sunday breakfast-tables. We would not willingly be instrumental in placing under the nose of a sensitive eater your account of that receptive barrel in the steerage.

By reason of going to press earlier than usual this week, we have been obliged to take "Betsy B's" letter from its usual place. It will be found on the fifth page.

CCLXVII.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday, September 24.

Tomato Soup.
Fried Tomatoes, Lyonnaise Potatoes.
Broiled Quail on Toast.
Spinach, Green Peas.
Roast Beefsteak.
Potato Salad.
Rose Soufflé, Strawberries.
Apples, Figs, Grapes, Apricots, Nectarines, Peaches, Pears, Gages, and Plums.

ROSE SOUFFLE.—Five eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately; two tablespoonfuls arrowroot, wet in four tablespoonfuls of cold water; four tablespoonfuls powdered sugar; rosewater flavoring. Beat the sugar into the whipped yolks, and into the whites mix in the arrowroot, very slowly, a little at a time; flavor, and whisk all together. Butter a meat mold, pour in the mixture, and bake away to the top, and bake half an hour. If quite firm, and if you have a steady hand, you may turn it out upon a hot dish, as it looks much nicer. It is much safer, however, to leave it in the mold. It must be served at once.

—IT IS ASTONISHING TO BOARD THE ALAMEDA trains on Saturday afternoon and Sunday, and see the immense crowds which are all bound for the popular Terrace Swimming Baths. The trade winds never reach Alameda, and consequently the locality of the baths offers the most salubrious temperature for swimming on the Pacific Coast. These beautiful autumn afternoons seem to especially invite a sea-bath, and scores of Oakland and San Francisco ladies take their children for a refreshing dip. Messrs. Haley & Edson have a great advantage over the proprietors of other establishments in the fact that they have for many years borne high reputations in this community as business men of integrity and worth. Their extensive capital has enabled them to fit out their baths in a style which is unequaled in the country. Expert swimming teachers are employed, the latest styles of bathing-suits are ever on hand, and everything conducive to a thoroughly furnished establishment.

—WE ADVERTED TO THE FACT IN OUR LAST issue that Colonel Andrews would give a grand ball at the Mechanics' Pavilion some time this fall, for the veterans of the late civil and Mexican wars. Colonel Andrews is himself a veteran of the Mexican war, having commanded a company during that conflict. He is now vice-president of the organization of its veterans, and takes a lively interest in securing the home and farm that is being so generously provided for such of these old soldiers as may need a refuge in their advancing years. There is no other man in San Francisco who can do this thing as well as he, or under whose management the affair would have such absolute guaranty of pecuniary success. So confident is the colonel of his ability in this line, that he guarantees the association from loss, and generously gives them the entire profit of the venture, leaving to proper committees the handling of the funds, the keeping of accounts, and all the disbursements of moneys—reserving to himself the direction and control of all details. The Mechanics' Pavilion is generously donated for this purpose, and affords not only a splendid dancing hall, but a magnificent gallery for those who may desire to witness the spectacle without participating in it. Colonel Andrews intends to excel himself in this effort, throwing his Grant reception and his various masquerades entirely into the shade, and producing an entertainment which, for spectacular display, brilliancy of dress and ornament, and in all the particulars that go to make a grand ball, excelling anything that has ever been heretofore attempted upon this coast. As the money to be realized will go to so grand a charity as the purchase and equipment of a home for aged, poor, and invalid soldiers, no one of our wealthy and generous people will withhold from it his encouragement. It will be an occasion that will bring to our city, from all parts of the coast, its best people, and thus, in a business point of view, contribute to our merchants, hotels, theatres, and other places of amusement, large profits in the trade and expenditure incident to such an affair. It would be a good thing for San Francisco if it had in it more men as alive and public-spirited as Colonel Andrews. We need stirring up occasionally, and there is no reason why we can't have an occasional lark that, like this, will combine business with pleasure, and out of the whole bring five or ten thousand dollars for charity. It was a wise policy on the part of Napoleon III. to make Paris the pleasure city of Europe. By making it beautiful and attractive he rendered it the resort of the money-spenders of the world, and Paris found its profit in the pleasure attractions afforded in it. When this scheme shall have been fairly inaugurated and shall have got well under way, we hope the Colonel will find every aid and encouragement that so praiseworthy an undertaking is entitled to, for we are quite certain that it will be an occasion which the pleasure-loving and sight-seeing part of our community will have occasion to long remember.

—SKINNY MEN, "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia. $1, at druggists.

—GOOD HEALTH IS IMPOSSIBLE WHEN THE blood is impure, or when it is thin and cold. Under such conditions one disease after another is developed. Boils, pimples, headaches, neuralgia, rheumatism, etc., are the result of impure blood, and the wisest course is to make the blood pure, rich, and warm by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

—TEACHER—WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY HAVING had several years' experience in public school teaching, a few pupils; children attending public school assisted after school hours. Address EDUCATOR, this office.

—WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT REDDING'S RUSSIA Salve, is the verdict of all who use it. Price 25c.

—DON'T DIE IN THE HOUSE. "Rough on Rats," Clears out rats, mice, flies, roaches, bedbugs. 15c.

—HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

—MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

—DR. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET cor. Stockton (over drug store). Office hours, 9 to 5.

—MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

—LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL remember that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

—GO TO Bradley & Rnfolson's, 429 Montgomery.

USE
SIBERIAN BALSAM
IT CURES
CATARRH AND ASTHMA.
.....ALSO.....
CROUP, COUGHS, AND COLDS, AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE BRONCHIAL TUBES AND PULMONARY ORGANS,
As well as the
DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS AND URINARY ORGANS.

The SIBERIAN BALSAM is a purely vegetable compound, and pronounced by all who have tried it to be the most effective for the diseases above enumerated ever used by them. It has never failed when taken according to directions to give immediate relief and effect a permanent cure. It reaches the disease through the blood and removes the cause. Coughs and Colds, Sore Throats, and Hoarseness relieved at once and cured in from one to two days.

CLERGYMEN, PUBLIC SPEAKERS, ACTORS, AND VOCALISTS,

Affected with HOARSENESS, or LOSS OF VOICE, will find almost instantaneous relief from a single dose of SIBERIAN BALSAM.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

DEPOT, 415 MONTGOMERY STREET, . . . SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE CALIFORNIA FURNITURE
MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Invite the public to visit their

WAREROOMS, 220 TO 226 BUSH STREET,

And inspect their

NEW GOODS

Which constitute

THE FINEST DISPLAY OF FURNITURE

Ever shown on this Coast, and which cannot be excelled for Variety and Beauty upon this Continent.

Bring your Friends along. The Rich can gratify their Tastes; the Poor can supply their Wants.

THE CALA. FURNITURE MFG CO., 220 TO 226 BUSH ST.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

"And 'a Babbled o' Green Fields."

"As the night wore on, it grew evident that his mind was wandering; for he rapped weakly on his bed's side, and feebly ejaculated: 'Two sours!' At two o'clock and ten minutes he smiled sweetly and beckoned to his friend, Mr. Theodore Everdy, the most assiduous of his watchers. Mr. Everdy bent quite close to the dying man, who whispered, brokenly: 'It's slow—Teddy—too slow: reach for the—wine-card.' And so, swan-like, the gentle spirit, etc., etc. —Memoir of William Waterproof, Esq.

"Reach for the wine-card, Teddy."

The pace becomes too slow;

The hours begone already

Are more than those to go.

As glum as ghosts that wander

Untried by the Styx,

We sit, while Chronos yonder

Marks out his two-by-six.

"Reach for the wine-card, Teddy;"

We've cracked a medley sort,

We've tapped the Burton heady,

Uncapped the heavy port;

Cliquet's coquettish matron

Lies deep as Dido's dux,

The shrine of our good patron

We've reached—kind Sanctus Crux.

"Reach for the wine-card, Teddy;"

With these twas always so,

While yet our legs were steady,

Askew'd your head-piece go.

For thee no fields Elysian,

No Heaven Islamabad,

No Paradise—a vision

Of bloodless anchorite.

But when the saga's ended,

And sit the warriors thrall'd,

Valhalla's heroes splendid

Will hear their newest skald.

The hours begone already,

Are more than those to go;

Reach for the wine-card, Teddy,

The pace becomes too slow.

—A. E. Watrous in Puck.

Nocturne

Out in the yard he hears the boom
Of the carpet that lay in the sitting-room.
And shrilly the wife of his bosom calls
For the calcimine for the kitchen walls.
Out in the wood-shed the old white hen
Mocketh the patience of gods and men
And she steadfastly sitteth in morn till night
With misplaced confidence in her might,
On a piece of brick, a broken cob,
A bottle-neck, and a bureau knob,
And she dreameth the day is near and sure
When she'll brood on a set of furniture.
So woe men have studied and brooded long,
Trying to hatch the right from the wrong.
And sage politicians have talked and talked,
And talked, and talked, and talked, and talked,
But it won't be, and isn't, and never was,
And the foolish hen and the man of brain
Have joined at last in the sad refrain:
"Your labor is lost, your argument wrecked,
If your major premise is incorrect."

—Hawkeye.

Warning to Women.

The human lungs reverberate sometimes with great velocity.
When windy individuals indulge in much verbosity
They have to twirl the glottis sixty thousand times a minute,
And push and punch the diaphragm as though the deuce were in it.

The pharynx now goes up;

The larynx, with a slam,

Ejects a note

From out the throat,

Pushed by the diaphragm.

Andante Pastorale.

AMYNAS.

I hear the sheep-bells from the folds, I watch the sparrows fluttering;
I hear the cricket chirp at noon, at eve the bullfrog muttering;
In swaying hammock softly wrapt, I doze through noontide's shimmering;
I sit with Phyllis on the stile at twilight's fading glimmering.

DAPHNIS.

To sit with Phyllis on the stile I am no wise particular,

New York is good enough for me, e'en in the days canicular.

When Phoebus drives far in the west his gold-fleeced fiery flock away,

I hie me to Manhattan Beach, or surge-beleaguered Rockaway.

Within the waves I plunge and prance with large antique simplicity

Till dinner comes, when Burgundy brims over my felicity.

AMYNAS.

I love the rustic sights and sounds, the atmosphere so tonic, O,

I love the homely rustic fare—

DAPHNIS.

And I prefer Delmonico.

AMYNAS.

O, sweet to hear on cottage roofs the gentle raindrops pattering!

DAPHNIS.

O, sweet to hear on Long Branch pier the gentle maidens chattering!

AMYNAS.

O, far from Newtown Creek and far from Hunter's Point pestiferous,

How sweet to lie upon the hay and watch the flies igniferous.

DAPHNIS.

O, far from fierce mosquitoes and from messes indigestible,

How sweet to sup at Coney Isle on all good things comestible!

AMYNAS.

I hate the heated, squalid town, the hawkers bawling frantically—

DAPHNIS.

But I contrive—my wife's away—to pass the time delightfully.

AMYNAS.

Well, I must to sun-screened dells and scented hedges flowery.

DAPHNIS.

Bye, and I, cigar in mouth, will saunter down the Bowery,

—E. M. Kingsbury,

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
For Purifying the Blood.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia, and Mandrake, with the Iodides of Potash and Iron, makes a most effectual cure of complaints affecting the blood. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruption on the skin are the appearance at the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disintegrate and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the Skin, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetters and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Kingworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any copy of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either require or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG and MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,

or W. H. PARKER, M. D.,

4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

ALASKA
COMMERCIAL CO.

No. 310 SANSOME STREET,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

FINE

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$25. $30.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$40. $50.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.
$60. $70.J. S. HAND, Merchant Tailor and Clothier,
314 KEARNY ST.

ALLEN, MCGARY & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE
Liquor Dealers, 322-324 FRONT STREET

SAN FRANCISCO.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

POTOSI MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 14th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 9), of twenty-five cents per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the Eighteenth day of October, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday, the 8th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 5th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 5) of Twenty (20) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 23, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 13th day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday, the 10th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. P. GORDON, Secretary.
Office—Room 23, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

UNIVERSALLY PRESCRIBED BY THE FACULTY

A Laxative and Refreshing Fruit Lozenge for

CONSTIPATION,
Hemorrhoids, Bile, Headache,

Cerebral Congestion, etc.
Prepared by

GRILLON,
SOLE PROPRIETOR,

Pharmacien de premiere classe
de la Faculté de Paris,

27 rue Rambuteau,
PARIS.

Tamar—unlike pills and the usual purgatives—is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

C. P. SHEFFIELD, N. W. SPAULDING, J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

REGULAR REPUBLICAN NOMINEE

FOR CONGRESS,

From the First District,

HON. PAUL NEUMANN.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NATURAL APERIENT WATER.

"SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER LAXATIVES."

"SPEEDY, SURE, AND GENTLE."—Prof. Roberts, F.R.C.P. London.

The most certain and comfortable cathartic in cases of sluggish liver or piles.

Ordinary Dose, A WINEGLASSFUL BEFORE BREAKFAST. OF ALL DRUGGISTS AND MINERAL WATER DEALERS.

NONE GENUINE BUT WITH A BLUE LABEL.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, Cal.

THE STUDENT'S

PHOTOGRAPH OUTFIT

This Scientific production cannot fail to interest, amuse and instruct every person who sees it. With any one by following the directions.

Can Make Their Own Photographs.

It contains all of the needed chemicals for working Printing, Framing, Silver, Toning and Fixing Baths, Albumen Paper, Mounting Cards, &c., &c. Everybody wants one. It is something new, and not only does it furnish amusement but by its use the operator becomes familiar with many interesting chemical experiments. Packed securely in a neat case with full directions which are so simple that any Boy or Girl can, with a little study and patience make a good photograph. Price by mail, Fifty Cents. Postage stamps taken. World Market Co., 122 Nassau Street, New York.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIR-BAIRN, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days—on judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30 day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

(Seal.) DAVID WILDER, Clerk.

By I. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

(Department No. 7.)

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

A. F. BENJAMIN, Plaintiff,

vs. JACOB LEVY, Defendant.

Superior Court. (Late 4th District Court.) No. 22,467. EXECUTION.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein A. F. Benjamin, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a Judgment against Jacob Levy, defendant, on the 1st day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $2,379.70 U. S. Gold Coin, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the 1st day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereafter described property, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Jacob Levy, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point in the northerly line of Tyler Street, distant 165 feet westerly from the west line of Franklin Street, thence westerly along said north line of Tyler Street 27 6 1/2 feet; thence at right-angles at the north line 120 feet; thence at right-angles easterly 27 6 1/2 feet; and thence at right-angles southerly 120 feet to the point of commencement. Together with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 28th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Jacob Levy, had on the first day of August, 1882, the day on which said judgment was docketed as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above-described property, to the highest and best bidder for lawful money of the United States.

San Francisco, August 5, 1882.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff

J. B. L. BRANDT, Attorney for Plaintiff.

August 5, 12, 19, 26.

NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 11th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, August 28, 1882.

NOTICE—The above sale is postponed till MONDAY, the 25th day of September, A. D. 1882, at the same hour and place.

Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated San Francisco, September 11, 1882.

PACIFIC BUREAU OF EDUCATION

Supplies (1) Teachers with desirable positions; (2) Colleges and Professors and Tutors; (3) Academies, Normal Schools and Public Schools of every grade, and families, with competent Principals and Teachers; (4) Colleges, Seminaries, Teachers' Institutes, and Lyceums with Lecturers. Circulars and forms of application sent free by Myron H. Savage, Manager, 10 New Montgomery Street, S. F.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.

We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.

Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30

LIABILITIES.

Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO

— WOMAN'S HOSPITAL. — THE CALIFORNIA State Woman's Hospital, on Sacramento Street, between Baker and Lyon Streets, is now open for the reception of patients. There is a Free Ward, Half-pay Ward, and rooms for those ladies who require particular treatment and nursing. Pure air, good diet, and the best of nursing and medical attendance are bestowed on all alike. Out-patients treated gratuitously. Attendance of surgeons for examination every day from 9 A. M. to 12½ P. M. For admission apply at Hospital.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,

10 POST STREET,

718 SANSOME STREET.

Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"A necessity at every Table and at every Bar."

New York Tribune.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS.

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,

522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,

HENNE & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,

GROVSTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,

TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.

WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,

Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.

PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000

ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President.

WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.

ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President.

E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED OIL CLOTHING

WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.

MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,

ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,

RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING

BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,

Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

A NOVELTY IN SAUCE!

MONTSERRAT

LIME FRUIT JUICE SAUCE.

FINEST TABLE SAUCE IN THE MARKET FOR ROAST MEATS, STEAKS, FISH, CURRIES, GAME, ETC., ETC.

We take great pleasure in recommending the above Sauce to the public for not only its wholesomeness, being made from pure MONTSERRAT (W. I. Island) Lime Fruit Juice, but for its delicacy of flavor, which makes it superior to any Sauce ever offered in this market.

LOWENTHAL, LIVINGSTON & CO., Importers and Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free | $7½ A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me. | $7½ outfit free. Address TRUR & Co., Augusta, Maine

ICHI BAN,

22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,
LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,
AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,

At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:
210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:
Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf - Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

When ordering wine, don't call for "California Champagne" merely, but state the brand, "EXTRA DRY," or the brand's name, "ARPAD HARASZTHY & CO."

S. P. COLLINS & CO.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
dealers in Old London Dock Brandy, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple Jack, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liquors, etc. 120 MONTGOMERY, and 511 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 14.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 30, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE MAN-DOG.

A Wild Story of a Tragedy in a Southern Swamp.

My first knowledge of the singular being called "Du Chien, the Man-dog," began when we were on duty down in the Peché country, a short time after General Taylor's celebrated "Run on the Banks," in the vicinity of Mansfield. The cavalry had really very little to do except "to feed," and await orders. As a result of this idleness many of the officers and men formed pleasant acquaintances with the hospitable planters in whose neighborhood we were located.

One of the planters whom I found to be most congenial was Captain Martas, a French creole, whose father had come from Languedoc. He was himself native-born. He was a man of forty-eight or fifty years of age, and had two sons by his first marriage, who were in the army of Virginia, and a boy two years of age, by his second wife, who was a young and beautiful lady. The bousekeeper was a mulatto girl, who was in every physical development almost a perfect being—even her small bands looking like consummate wax-work. She had been taught, petted, and indulged as much, perhaps, or more than any slave should have been, especially by Captain Martas, who uniformly spoke to her more in the tone of a father addressing his daughter, than in that of a master commanding a slave. She was always gentle and obedient. The family seemed to prize her very greatly, and the little boy especially preferred her to his own beautiful mother. I suppose it would be hard for the later generation, who remember little or nothing of the "domestic institution," to understand how such a pleasant and beautiful confidence and friendship could exist between a slave and her owners, but it was no uncommon thing in the South before the war.

The family was so attractive that I visited it often; but one evening, on my arrival at the house, I found that its peace and quiet had been disturbed by one of those painful occurrences which so often marred the happiness of Southern families, and which really constituted the curse of "the peculiar institution."

The day before, the beautiful and accomplished wife of Captain Martas had, for some unexplained reason, got into a frenzy of rage with Celia, the mulatress, and had ordered the overseer to give her a severe whipping. The girl had run off into the Black Swamp during the night, and Captain Martas, who imparted this information to me, was in a state of terrible distress by reason of her absence. He did not seem to understand the cause of the trouble, but he could not justify his slave without condemning his wife, whom he seemed to regard with a most tender and dutiful devotion. The only emotion which seem to master him was a heart-breaking and hopeless grief. I volunteered to hunt for the runaway, and while asking for such information as I thought to be necessary about the neighboring plantations, and of the almost boundless and impracticable wilderness known as the Black Swamp, I saw Celia slowly and quietly coming up the broad walk which led from the portico to the big gate.

She carried in her hand a branch of the magnolia tree, from which depended a splendid blossom of that most glorious of all flowers. She bowed slightly as she came near the portico, and, passing around the corner of the house, entered it by a side door. Mrs. Martas was most passionately devoted to the magnolia, and, from her exclamations of delight, which were soon heard in the hall, we knew that Celia had brought the beautiful flower as a peace-offering to her mistress, and that it had been accepted as such. Very soon the two women came nearer, and from our seats on the veranda we could hear their conversation. A terrible weight seemed to have been lifted from the heart of Captain Martas by the girl's return, and by the apparent renewal of friendly relations between his beautiful wife and his even more beautiful slave—a relief which showed itself in his face and form, but not in his speech.

"Yes," said Celia to Mrs. Martas, "it is an old, wide-spreading tree on the very edge of the water, and is glorious with just such splendid blossoms as these. There must be more than three hundred clusters, some that I could not reach being much larger and finer than this one."

"And you say," answered Mrs. Martas, "that the air is still, and that the perfume broods all around the tree? Oh, how sweet!"

"Yes," said Celia, "it is so strong that you can taste as well as smell the wonderful perfume. Few people could bear to stand immediately beneath the shade; it is so sweet as to be almost overpowering."

"Oh, how I wish I could see it! How far is it, Celia?"

"Only four miles. You can go. It is deep in the swamp; but the pony can follow the ridge all the way. You can go, and get home before dusk. I would like you to see it before a rain makes the road too bad, or the winds come and scatter the delicious perfume that now hangs as heavy as dew all around the glorious tree for yards and yards away."

"I will go," she cried. "Tell Toby to bring out Selim, and you can take a horse. Let us go at once. It is getting late."

"I would rather walk," said Celia, "so as to be sure that I will not miss the route in going back, although I watched so carefully that I know I can find it on foot."

Very soon a boy led up Mrs. Martas's pony, and she went out to the steps and mounted, followed by Celia on foot. The girl held the stirrup for her mistress, and as she did so looked back at Captain Martas with eyes in which shone strange love, pity, and tenderness; but the voice of her mistress called her away, and, even in turning her black and lustrous eyes toward Captain Martas, their expression totally changed, and showed for a fleeting instant the murderous glitter that gleamed from the eyes of a panther when ready for a fatal spring.

I was startled and troubled, and half moved forward to tell the lady not to go; but a moment's reflection showed me how foolish such an unnecessary and silly interference would seem. A strange mistrust flitted across my mind, but there was nothing on which to base it. I could not give a reason for it, except to say that I had seen the light of a gladiator's eye, the twitch and spasm of an assassin's lip, in the eye and mouth of that now smiling and dutiful young slave girl. The thing was too foolish to think of, and I held my peace.

The women passed out of the gate, and went on quietly in the direction of the Black Swamp. Martas and I resumed our conversation. Hour after hour passed away, and the sun grew large and low in the west; still Mrs. Martas did not return. The sun was setting—set; but she had not come. Then Captain Martas called Toby and had him ride to the edge of the wood, and see if he could learn anything of his mistress; but Toby soon came back, saying that he saw nothing except the pony's tracks leading into the swamp, and the pony himself leisurely coming home without a rider. Then Captain Martas mounted, and I followed him. He took the plantation conch-shell, and we rode on into the dark forest as long as we could trace any footsteps of the pony, or find any open way, and again and again Captain Martas blew resonant blasts upon his shell that rolled far away over the swamp, seeking to apprise his wife that we were there, and waiting for her; but nothing came of it.

"They could hear the shell," he said, "upon a still night like this three or four miles," and it seemed to him impossible that they could have gone beyond the reach of the sound. But no answer came, and the moonless night came down over the great Black Swamp, and the darkness grew almost visible, so thoroughly did it shut off all vision like a vast black wall.

Then Martas sent Toby back to the plantation for fire and blankets, and more men, and soon a roaring blaze mounted skyward, and every few minutes the conch-shell was blown. Nothing more could be done. I remained with the now sorely troubled husband through the night. At the first peep of dawn he had breakfast brought from the plantation, and as soon as it became light enough to see in the great forest, we searched for and found the pony's track, and we carefully followed the traces left in the soft soil. The chase led, with marvelous turns and twists, right along the little ridge of firmer land which led irregularly on between the boundless morasses stretched on either side, trending now this way, now that, but always penetrating deeper and deeper into the almost unknown bosom of the swamp. The pony had followed his own trail in coming out of the swamp, and this made it easier for us to trace his way. At last we came to the dark, sluggish, sullen water. It was a point of solid ground, of less than an acre in extent, a foot or two above the water, almost circular in outline, and nearly surrounded by the lagoon. It was comparatively clear of timber, and near the centre rose a grand magnolia tree, such as Celia had described to Mrs. Martas on the evening before. At the root of this tree, bathed with the rich, overpowering perfume of the wonderful bloom above her, lay the dead body of the beautiful woman, her clothes disordered, her hair disheveled, a coarse, dirty handkerchief stuffed into her mouth, and all the surroundings giving evidence of a despairing struggle and a desperate crime. Captain Martas was overcome with anguish, and after one agonized look around, as if to assure himself that Celia was not also somewhere in sight, he sat down beside the body and gazed upon his murdered wife in silent, helpless agony of spirit.

I desired all the men to remain where they were, except Toby, whom I ordered to follow me; and then, beginning at the little ridge of land between the waters by which we had reached the circular space before described, we followed the edge of the ground completely round to the starting point, seeking in the soft mud along the shore for a footprint, or the mark made by a canoe or skiff, for some evidence of the route by which the murderer had reached the little peninsula, or by which Celia had left it.

We found perfect tracks of all animal life existing in the swamps, even to the minute lines left by the feet of the smallest birds, but no trace of a human foot, although a snail could not have passed into or out of the water without leaving his mark upon the yielding mud, much less a footprint or a canoe.

The thing was inexplicable. Where was Celia? How had she gone without leaving a trace of her departure? Had she been there at all? Who had murdered Mrs. Martas? Surely some man or devil had perpetrated that crime. How had the villain escaped from the scene of his crime, leaving not the slightest clew by which it was possible to tell which way he had gone?

I reported to Captain Martas the exact condition of the affair, and told him I knew not what to do, unless we could get bloodhounds and put them on the trail. He said there were no hounds within sixty miles; that all of the planters he knew preferred to lose a runaway rather than to follow them with the dogs. Rumors of the loss of Mrs. Martas had spread from plantation to camp, and two or three soldiers had immediately ridden out to the plantation, and then had followed us to the scene of the crime. One of them said:

"If there are no hounds, send to camp for old Du Chien. He is better than any dog."

The remark was so singular that I asked:

"What do you mean by saying 'He is better than any dog'?"

"I mean that he can follow the trail by the scent better than any hound I ever saw, and I have seen hundreds of them."

"Is that a mere camp story," said I, "or do you know it of your own knowledge?"

"I know it myself, sir," said the soldier. "I have seen him smell a man or his clothes, and then go blindfold into a whole regiment and pick out that man by his scent. I have seen him pull a lock of wool off a sheep, smell it good, and then go blindfold into the pen and pick out that identical sheep from fifty others. I have known him to smell the blanket a nigger slept in, and follow that darky four or five miles by the scent of him through cotton, corn, and woods. He is better than a dog."

The man looked to be honest and intelligent; and while I could hardly credit such an astounding and abnormal development of the nasal power in a human being, there was nothing else to do; so I told him to take my horse and his own, ride as quickly as possible to camp, and bring old Du Chien with him.

Then we made a litter, and slowly and reverently we bore the corpse of the murdered lady along the difficult road until we reached a point to which it was possible to bring a carriage, in which we placed her in charge of the horrified neighbors, who had by this time collected at the plantation.

Captain Martas insisted on remaining with me and awaiting the coming of Du Chien.

More than two hours elapsed before the soldier whom I had sent for Du Chien, the Man-dog, returned with that strange creature. He surely deserved his name. He must have been six feet high, but was so lank, loose, flabby, and jumbled-up that it was hard to even guess at his stature. His legs were long and lank, and his hands hung down to his knees. A bristly shock of red hair grew nearly down to his eyebrows, and his head slanted back to a point, sugar-loaf fashion. His chin seemed to have slid back into his lank, flabby neck, and his face looked as if it stopped at the round, red, slobbering mouth. His nose was not remarkably large, but the sloping away of all the facial lines from it, as from a central point, gave his nasal organ an expression of peculiar prominence and significance. When he walked, every bone and muscle about him drooped forward, as if he were about to fall face foremost, and travel with his hands and feet.

Briefly I explained what had happened, and thereupon Du Chien, who seemed to be a man of few words, said:

"Stay where you are, all of you, for a minute." Then he started off at his singular dog-trot pace, and followed the edge of the water all the way around, just as I had done, lightly, but with wonderful celerity. Then he came back to us, looking much puzzled. I handed him the coarse, dirty handkerchief which I had taken from the dead woman's mouth, and Du Chien immediately buried that wonderful nose of his in it, and sniffed at it long and vigorously. Having apparently satisfied himself, he removed the dirty rag from his face, and said:

"Nigger."

"No," said I, thinking of Celia, and looking Du Chien in his little, round, deep-set eyes; "a mulatto."

"No," he answered, with quiet assurance; "not mulatto; nigger; black, wool-headed, and old—a buck nigger."

"What can you do?" said I.

"Wait a minute," said Du Chien. Then he started off again to make the circuit of the peninsula, but more slowly and deliberately than at first. He threw his head from side to side, like a hound, and smelled at every tree and shrub. He had got about half way around when he reached a mighty tree that grew on the edge of the swamp, leaning out over the water where it was narrowest and deepest, and seemed to mingle its branches with the branches of another tree of a similar gigantic growth that grew upon the other side. He walked up to this tree, saying: "Nigger went up here!" and at once, began to climb. The inclination of the great trunk and the lowness of the branches made the task an easy one. Almost instantly, Captain Martas, I, and two or three soldiers followed Du Chien up the tree. Du Chien had gone up some thirty feet into the dense foliage, when all at once he left the body of the tree, and began to slide along a great limb that extended out over the water, holding to the branches around and above him until he got into the lateral branches of the tree on the opposite side, and thence to the trunk of that tree, down which he glided, and stood upon the opposite bank waiting for us to follow. We did so as speedily as possible, and as soon as we were landed by his side, Du Chien said: "Single file, all!" started off, smelling the trees and bushes as he went.

The spot at which we had descended seemed to be a mock similar to that on the other side, but less regular outline; and soon the way by which Du Chien led us became more and more difficult and impassable. Often it seemed that the next step would take us right into the dark and sluggish water, but Du Chien, almost without pausing at all, would smell at the leaves and branches and hurry on, now planting his foot upon a clod just rising out of the water, now stepping upon a fallen and half-rotted log, now treading a fringe of more solid ground skirting the dreary lagoon, but going every moment deeper and deeper into the most pathless and inaccessible portions of the swamp.

For nearly two hours this strange man followed the trail, and we followed him. At last we came to a considerable elevation of ground under which opened a little V-shaped valley made by the water of a branch which drained the high land into the swamp. This valley was rather more than two acres in extent, and seemed to be a clearing. But there was a thick-set growth of sweet gum, holly, and magnolia across the opening toward the swamp, beyond which we could not see.

With quickened steps, and with many of the same signs of excitement manifested by a hound when the trail grows hot, Du Chien followed along this hedge-like line of underbrush, and at its farther end stopped. There, within three feet of where the steep bank ran into the water, which seemed to be of great depth, was an opening in the hedge. He slipped cautiously through it, and we followed him in silence. It was a little garden in the heart of the swamp, lying between the hills and the water. At the apex of the V-shaped valley was a miserable cabin with some fruit trees growing round about it. We gazed upon the scene with profound astonishment.

"Do you know anything of this place, Captain Martas?" said I, in a low tone.

"No," said he; "several years ago one of my field-hands, a gigantic Abyssinian, was whipped and ran away to the swamp; I never followed him, and have never seen him since, although every now and then I heard of him by the report of the negroes on the plantation; I suppose he has been living somewhere in the swamp ever since, and, unless this is his home, I can not imagine how such a place came to be here."

"The nigger is there," said Du Chien. "If there are a dozen of them I can tell the right one by the smell," and again he put the old handkerchief to his nose.

"If it is old Todo," said Captain Martas, "he is a powerful and desperate man, and we had better be cautious."

We formed a line, and slowly and cautiously approached. We had got within ten or twelve feet of his door, when we saw a gigantic, half-clad negro spring from the floor, gaze out at us an instant with fierce, startled eyes, and then, with a yell like that of some wild beast roused up in its lair, he seized an axe which stood just at the door, and, whirling it around his head with savage fury, darted straight at Captain Martas. It seemed to me that the huge, black form was actually in the air, springing toward the object of its hatred and fear, when one of the soldiers sent a ball from his revolver crashing through old Todo's skull. With a savage, beastly cry, the huge bulk fell headlong to the earth.

"It is a pity," said Martas; "I wished to burn the black devil alive."

At that instant Du Chien cried out: "Look there!" And extending his arm toward the top of the ridge, he started off at full speed. We all looked up, and saw Celia flying for dear life toward the crest of the high ground behind the cabin, and we joined in the chase. It was perhaps forty yards up the slope to the highest part, and about the same distance down the other side to the water's edge. Just as we got to the crest, Celia, who had already reached the water's edge, leaped lightly into a small canoe, and began to ply the paddle vigorously, and with a stroke or two sent the frail bark gliding swiftly away from the shore, while she looked back at us with a wicked smile. In a moment more she would be beyond our reach, and the soldier who had shot Todo leveled his fatal revolver at her head. But Captain Martas knocked the weapon up, saying, in a voice choked with emotion: "No, no! let the girl go! She is my daughter."

Swiftly and silently the slight canoe swept away over the dark waters of the great, black swamp, now hidden in the shadow, now a moment glancing through some little patch of sunlight, always receding farther and farther, seen less often, seen less distinctly every moment, and then seen no more.

NATHAN C. KOUNS.

September, 1882.

The news that Mademoiselle Feyghine, the Russian actress in Paris, had shot herself in the apartments of the young Duc de Morny, did not create much surprise in New York. When the duke was here in 1879, he was one of a number of young men who used to frequent certain balls given on the cooperative plan at a restaurant in Lafayette Place. There he made the acquaintance of a mother and daughter, who, if report says true, were often each other's rivals in love affairs. At one time it seemed as if an unpleasant exposure was likely to take place, and the duke, afraid of a scandal, cleared out one fine morning on board of a French steamer. The mother and daughter afterward followed him to Paris, but were unsuccessful in bringing the recalcitrant lover to book.

It is a fact not generally known that the smoking of cigarettes has a most injurious effect upon the growth of the moustache, as the poison generated while smoking them acts upon the mucous lining of the upper lip, thus stunting the growth of its hirsute appendage. It is not the intention to ruin the cigarette manufacturers, but if this fact becomes generally known cigarettes are in danger of becoming a drug in the market.

"Only the other day," says the St. Louis Spectator's "Town Talker," "I sat opposite a gentleman in a fashionable restaurant, who, after sampling the bread, which was slightly stale, said to the waiter, in a tone of the utmost seriousness: 'Wasn't this baked in the reign of Queen Elizabeth?' And the waiter, with equal solemnity, replied: 'No, sir; it was baked several years after that.'"

Montaigne, the essayist, took his son in front of a crucifix, and said: "You would reform the world; behold the life of a reformer!"

AN OLD FAVORITE.

One Day Solitary.

I am all right! Good-bye, old chap!
Twenty-four hours, that won't be long;
Nothing to do but take a nap,
And—say! can a fellow sing a song?
Will the light fantastic be in order—
A pigeon-wing on your pantry floor?
What are the rules for a regular boarder?
Be quiet? All right! Cling-clang goes the door.

Clang-clink the holts, and I am locked in;
Some pious reflection and repentance
Come next, I suppose, for I just begin
To perceive the sting in the tail of my sentence—
"One day whereof shall be solitary."
Here I am at the end of my journey,
And—well, it ain't jolly, not so very—
I'd like to throttle that sharp attorney.

He took my money, the very last dollar,
Didn't leave me so much as a dime,
Not enough to buy me a paper collar
To wear at my trial; he knew all the time
'Twas some that I got for the stolen silver.
Why hasn't he been indicted, too?
If he doesn't exactly rob and pilfer,
He lives by the plunder of them that do.

Then didn't it put me into a fury
To see him step up, and laugh, and chat
With the county attorney, and joke with the jury
When all was over, then go back for his hat
While Sue was sobbing to break her heart,
And all I could do was to stand and stare.
He had pleaded my cause, he had played his part,
And got his fee—and what more did he care?

It's droll to think how, just out yonder,
The world goes jogging on the same;
Old men will save, and boys will squander,
And fellows will play at the same old game
Of get-and-spend—to-morrow, next year—
And drink, and carouse, and who will there be
To remember a comrade hurried here?
I am nothing to them—they are nothing to me.

And Sue—yes, she will forget me, too,
I know; already her tears are drying.
I believe there is nothing that girl can do
So easy as laughing, and lying, and crying.
She clung to me well while there was hope,
Then broke her heart in that last wild sob;
But she ain't a-going to sit and mope
While I am at work on a five years' job.

They'll set me to learning a trade, no doubt,
And I must forget to speak or smile;
I shall go marching in and out,
One of a silent, tramping file
Of felons, at morning, and noon, and night—
Just down to the shops, and back to the cells,
And work with a thief at left and right,
And feed, and sleep, and—nothing else.

Was I born for this? Will the old folks know?
I can see them now on the old home-place;
His gait is feeble, his step is slow,
There's a settled grief in his furrowed face;
While she goes wearily groping about
In a sort of dream, so bent, so sad!
But this won't do! I must sing and shout,
And forget myself, or else go mad.

I won't be foolish; although for a minute
I was there in my little room once more.
What wouldn't I give just now to be in it?
The bed is yonder, and there is the door;
The Bible is here on the neat, white stand;
The summer sweets are ripening now;
In the flickering light I reach my hand
From the window, and pluck them from the bough.

When I was a child, (oh, well for me
And them if I had never been older!)
When he told me stories on his knee,
And tossed me and carried me on his shoulder;
When she knelt down and heard my prayer,
And gave me, in my bed, my good-night kiss—
Did they ever think that all their care
For an only son could come to this?

Foolish again! No sense in tears
And gnashing the teeth; and yet, somehow,
I haven't thought of them so far years;
I never knew them, I think, till now.
How fondly, how blindly, they trusted me!
When I should have been in my bed asleep,
I slipped from the window, and down the tree,
And sowed for the harvest which now I reap.

And Jennie—how could I hear to leave her?
If I had but wished—but I was a fool!
My heart was filled with a thirst and a fever
Which no sweet airs of heaven could cool.
I can hear her asking: "Have you heard?"
But mother falters and shakes her head;
"O Jennie, Jennie, never a word!
What can it mean? He must be dead!"

Light-hearted, a proud, ambitious lad,
I left my home that morning in May;
What visions, what hopes, what plans I had!
And what have I—where are they all—to-day?
Wild fellows, and wine, and debts, and gaming,
Disgrace, and the loss of place and friend;
And I was an outlaw past reclaiming;
Arrest and sentence, and—this is the end!

Five years! Shall ever I quit this prison?
Homeless, an outcast, where shall I go?
Return to them, like one arisen
From the grave, that was buried long ago?
All is still; 'tis the close of the week;
I slink through the garden, I stop by the well,
I see him totter, I hear his shriek!
What sort of a tale will I have to tell?

But here I am! What's the use of grieving?
Five years—will it be too late to begin?
Can sober thinking and honest living
Still make me the man I might have been?
I'll sleep. Oh, would I could wake to-morrow
In that old room, to find, at last,
That all my trouble and all their sorrow
Are only a dream of the night that is past.
—J. T. Trowbridge.

SENSE AND SENTIMENT.

Douglas Jerrold: Humor is the harmony of the heart.

Jeffrey: Good will, like a good name, is got by many actions, and lost by one.

Archbishop Whately: Cultivate not only the cornfields of your mind, but the pleasure grounds also.

"At nine honors don't count." A lady aged sixty married her footman, on which Talleyrand quoted this expression.

Queen Elizabeth, as the legend goes, thus greeted a deputation of eighteen tailors: "Good morning to you, gentlemen both."

Goldsmith: Fortune is ever seen accompanying industry, and is as often trundling in a wheelbarrow as lolling in a coach-and-six.

Jean Paul Friedrich Richter: Pleasures of high flavor, like pineapples, have the misfortune that, like pineapples, they make the gums bleed.

Hazlitt: The art of pleasing consists in being pleased. To be amiable is to be satisfied with one's self and others. Good humor is essential to pleasantry.

Tillotson: A more glorious victory can not be gained over another man than this—that when the injury began on his part, the kindness should begin on ours.

Anon: Every man has his chain and his clog, only it is looser and lighter to one man than another; and he is more at ease who takes it up than he who drags it.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan: Steal! To be sure they will; and, egad! serve your best thoughts as gipsies do stolen children—disfigure them to make them pass for their own.

A well known author once wrote an article in Blackwood, and signed himself "A. S." "What a pity," observed Douglas Jerrold, "that he will only tell two-thirds of the truth!"

Oliver Wendell Holmes: Literature is full of coincidences, which some love to believe plagiarisms. There are thoughts always abroad in the air which it takes more wit to avoid than to hit upon.

Some one asked Sir Walter Raleigh, of whom it was said he "could toil terribly," "How do you accomplish so much, and in so short a time?" "When I have anything to do," he replied, "I go and do it."

"It is not always necessary," observed Goethe, "that truth should embody itself; enough if it float spiritually about and induce agreement; if, like the deep friendly sound of a bell, it undulates through the air."

Anon: There is many a sermon even in the church-bell; and as to our towers and spires dotted in the landscape, no one can tell how many impressions we owe to "those silent fingers pointing to the skies."

Fuller: When there is no recreation or business for thee abroad, thou mayest then have a company of honest old fellows, in leathern jackets, in thy study, which may find thee excellent diversion at home.

Southey: The history of any private family, however humble, could it be fully related for five or six generations, would illustrate the state and progress of society better than the most elaborate dissertation.

Sir Humphry Davy: Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, of which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort.

Jean Paul Friedrich Richter: The last best fruit which comes to late perfection, even in the kindest soil, is tenderness toward the had, forbearance toward the unforbearing, warmth of heart toward the cold, philanthropy toward the misanthropic.

Arthur Helps: Always say a kind word if you can, if only that it may come in, perhaps, with singular opportuneness, entering some mournful man's darkened room like a beautiful firefly, whose happy circumvolutions he can not but watch, forgetting his many troubles.

S. T. Coleridge: The well-meaning man is one of those weak-moraled men to whom the meaning of to do a thing means nothing. He promises with ninety-parts out of a hundred of his whole heart; but there is always a stock of cold at the core that transubstantiates the whole resolve into a lie.

Dr. Busby was short of stature. One day he was accosted in a coffee-room by an Irish haronet of gigantic size. "Suffer me to pass, O giant!" "Pass, O pigmy," replied the doctor. "O sir," continued the baronet, "my expression alluded to the size of your intellect." "And mine," rejoined the doctor, "to the size of yours."

"I hope we shall exchange duties occasionally," said the Rector of A. to a clerical neighbor recently arrived; "my people like a little variety." "Oh, no," said the other; "I protest against exchanges; for if you preach better than myself, my people won't like me after you; and if you preach worse, you never ought to preach again."

Charles Kingsley: "I should like Amyas to be a bold adventurer like Mr. Oxenham," said Mr. Leigh. "God grant you become a braver man than he; for, as I think, to be bold against the enemy is common to the brutes, but the prerogative of a man is to be bold against himself, to conquer his own fancies, his own lusts, his own ambition, in the sacred name of duty."

Bishop Horne: A newspaper is the history of the world for one day. It is the history of that world in which we now live, and with which we are consequently more concerned than with those which have passed away, and exist only in remembrance; though, to check us in our too fond love of it, we may consider that the present likewise will soon be past, and take its place in the repositories of the dead.

ENGLISH NIMRODS.

The Different Sorts of Game that Men and Women Hunt.

London is just now at its emptiest. I do not mean that in Lombard Street or Cornhill there is the faintest sign of decrease in the throng of busy humanity, whose presence makes the "city" the commercial centre and stronghold of the world, from one year's end to the other, but from Grosvenor Square to Queen's Gate, from Mayfair to Brompton, the shutters are closed in almost every second house, and the occupants of a few weeks ago are gone to pastures new. Many are gone to the German spas or other continental resorts of strength-recuperative attractiveness—the Prince and Princess of Wales among the number—but the majority are away shooting grouse in Scotland and the north, or partridges all over England. Cricket is on the wane, and, aside from the hardening of the ground, which makes both games undesirable as the autumn advances, lawn-tennis always loses its zest as August—England's garden-party month par excellence—goes out. So young ladies are putting away their spiked canvas shoes and tennis hats, and forgetting the charms of "half-volleys" and "full pitches" in the delights which accompany the first days of partridge shooting, in which they are in no small degree permitted a share. Though grouse shooting begins on the 12th of August, and Scotland, Wales, and the border countries echo for two weeks previous with the resounding crack of scores of breechloaders, the sporting papers abounding in startling accounts of gigantic hags made on some ducal moor, or by some well known party of lesser coronets, shooting proper may be said not to fairly begin in England till the first of September. Everybody who is anybody, no matter where his prior wanderings may have led him, or what his August amusements may have been, manages to get home for the first; and this, whether a man has shooting of his own—i. e., game to be shot on his property—or not. If he has, he asks a party of friends to stay with him and lend their guns to the achievement of a daily bag of good proportions; if he has not, some neighbor or friend who has will ask his aid in the same manner. So it is that with September the country life of England begins for the year, for, though some people live in their country houses all the year round, they are those who either have no "town house"—meaning a residence in London—or, if they have, let it to somebody else during the season. I am speaking, therefore, of fashionable people, who follow the yearly routine of fashionable life, as one finds it come to hand year after year with an unerring precision in the order of its variety that almost makes it monotonous. The fashionable time for going to town is toward the end of April. The families of members of Parliament often go much earlier, for Parliament usually meets in February. But the first of September brings everybody back again, and then the country life begins. Following partridge shooting comes pheasant shooting on the first of October, and fox hunting from November till April, so every one who has a country house, and is content with the sports of his native land, lives in it throughout the winter.

Partridge shooting, which is the sport now on, is done in turnip fields and among the stubble left from the recent harvest. This year the harvest in some counties has been rather late, so that the shooting has not been so good, owing to the increase of cover thereby afforded the birds. Every house of any pretension at all has a large party always staying for the shooting, and from the gentlemen of the family and the male guests is the shooting party made up. Their number is reckoned as, and called, so many "guns." Shooting begins at from 10 to 11:30 A. M., and lasts well into the afternoon, dependent naturally on the sport encountered. The proper English shooting costume is a flannel shirt, tweed Norfolk jacket, knickerbockers and leggings, a double-peaked, helmet-shaped tweed cap, heavy-soled boots laced up above the ankles, and a cartridge-belt strapped round the waist. Followed by keepers, holding the retrievers in leash, the party thus attired, with their guns ready to bring up at the first "whirr," march across the fields in line, about twenty feet, more or less, apart, according to the number out, and shoot the birds on the wing as they rise from their meagre cover. At one o'clock, or thereabout, there is a cessation of hostilities, and an adjournment for luncheon, which is brought out from the house in a pony carriage or donkey cart, and spread out on the grass under the trees by footmen. The ladies of the party staying at the house join the gentlemen at this al fresco meal, mingling their smiles with the pâté de foie gras, and their bright glances with the iced Cluquet and Bass, and afterward either retiring or remaining to watch the subsequent proceedings from a distance, some of them not infrequently honoring one or other of the gentlemen by taking shot about with him for half an hour or so. That there can be no end of fun at luncheon one can readily imagine, and flirtations there begun have so often culminated in the tying of the knot matrimonial, that while old shots have set their face against, as they term it, "the introduction of women" into their sports, the custom finds too much favor with match-making mammas and their only too willing daughters to ever fear its discontinuance.

People do say it is this constant companionship with men, and mixing with them in their field sports, that give the fashionable English girl of the day all her love for "mannish" ways, and make her the slangy, hopsy, rapid creature we so often find her. Perhaps people are right. Yet what real harm, after all, if girls do wear stand-up collars and scarf-pins, and hunt, fish, shoot, play hilliards, and smoke? None, certainly, if their hearts are all right. Besides, look at the models they have. The Empress of Austria seems only happy in the saddle, and no less personages than the Princesses Louise and Beatrice smoke cigarettes. Such actions are, of course, likely to shock the sensibilities, not alone of our grandmothers, but of a certain type of young lady whose conversational powers are limited to undertoned replies of "yes" and "no," and whose proper bringing up is exhibited in a painfully studious avoidance of either showing her feet or separating her knees while sitting down. But a woman nowadays does not care to please her own sex as much as the other, and it is only too clear which sort of young lady is the most attractive to men, and which kind of girl gets the dances at balls and the most attention everywhere. Men are pretty good judges of women, and if they don't object, and are willing to make their wives out of girls who know more of horseflesh than they do of hotany, and prefer a whiff of tobacco smoke to ylang-ylang or Atkinson's white rose, it is their own look out, and no one else's business.

I know a young lady who lives down in one of the southern counties. She is one of the prettiest girls in England, has five thousand a year in her own right, is just three-and-twenty, and the daughter of a peer whose pedigree goes back to the conquest, and whose country house is the show-place of the county. To look at her you would think her the quietest of the quiet, and that she hadn't an idea beyond crochet and weak tea. But she hunts, has her own stable, keeps four hunters, now and then rides a steeple-chase, huys and sells her own horses without help from any one; has her own wine merchant, wine cellar, and tobacconist; fences, hoxes, skates, and rows; has her houndoir decorated with foils, gloves, whips, horse-shoes, and hunting trophies; smokes cigarettes during the day and cigars after dinner; is a capital judge of claret and port, and can tell Amontillado from Marsala with her eyes shut; is a first-rate shot with shot-gun or rook-rifle; draws her own charges, and pays her own bills; and last, though not least, has a delightful way of letting you see her foot and ankle when she puts one leg over the other on sitting down that would make a prim old dowager faint, and get her sat upon directly by the sly ones. Yet she has never been known to flirt, has refused more offers than the quiet ones ever dreamed of receiving, and once, it is related, taught the Prince of Wales a lesson by stopping in the middle of valse with him at a state hall at Buckingham Palace, and refusing to go on, because he held her tighter than she considered proper. You can't call a girl like that fast. But she knows enough to take care of herself, and if her companionship with the young swells of the day, and her imitation of their talk and ways, has taught her to prefer their friendship to their love, it is not unlikely she is nearer right in her estimate of her fellow-beings than are the dragonesses of propriety who regard her with abhorrence, but are willing to sell their hashful maidens to the first libertine or titled scapegrace whose establishment and rent-roll make him in their eyes a desirable parti.

Mrs. Langtry is, as far as a married woman can be so regarded, a fair specimen of the type of English girl just referred to. It is true her exhibitions of so-called masculinity are known to England only since her marriage—her girlhood's days, as Lillie Le Breton, having been passed exclusively in her native Jersey. But it is safe to say she was then possessed of the same unaffected want of reserve in speech, look, and manner which the uninitiated regard as fast, but which has done more than either her willowy figure or creamy complexion to make her—har none—unquestionably the most attractive woman London society has known during Victoria's reign. It is quite natural that the Princess of Wales should hate her. Even if the prince hadn't lost his head over her, the princess herself goes in for being a beauty, simple and straight-laced as she may appear on the surface; and Mrs. Langtry's supremacy in that respect has led her into an aggressiveness so marked as to deter her from even wearing a jersey, when that garment was all the rage in London a year or two ago, so as to put it out of fashion as soon as possible. Mrs. Minnie Stevens Paget is another lady whose designation of her house as "the shop," and her friends as her "pals," taken in connection with the fact that she drives about alone in a yellow pony cart, and wears a drab Newmarket coat with bone buttons, would be enough to horrify people who didn't know what a good wife and mother she is, and that never so much as a breath of scandal has ever been blown in her direction.

LONDON, September 7, 1882.

COCKAIGNE.

It is observed, says an Eastern journal, that the skin of those Jerseymen who spend part of their time upon the water is too thick for the mosquitoes' hills, and they are let alone; but the women have no such protection. The dress of one dashing Jersey belle who alighted at the Seaville camp-meeting ground was studied by a correspondent, who observed that her cheeks were shaded by a chip-hat far exceeding in dimensions the cart-wheel hat of the period, and suspended from the rim of this, and falling to a point below the waist, was a net which thoroughly protected the hands, head, face, and neck from the attacks of the pestiferous insect. But the nether extremities? He observed as she alighted that these were incased in sky blue stockings, terminating in low slippers. Knowing that the mosquito would bore through the thickest kind of cloth, he fancied that this pretty young lady was sacrificing some of her best blood to vanity until better informed. Inquiring of one who was "posted," he was told that, from her instep up to her knee joint, both of that young lady's limbs were tied up in newspapers. It is a secret which New Jersey appears to have held for a few centuries that mosquitoes can not bore through newspapers, which fact probably accounts for the large newspaper circulation in that State, and the consequent high intelligence of the average Jerseyman.

The presence of her majesty the Empress on the field on the recent occasion of the army manoeuvres at Krasnoe Selo. Little Russia, created great enthusiasm in the proceedings. On one occasion, in order to get to the top of a hill, her majesty mounted a Cossack horse, treating the peculiar saddle, in spite of its inconvenience for lady riders, as an ordinary side-saddle. In horsemanship the present Czarina is quite a rival of the Empress of Austria, who once at an Austrian meet rode without any saddle at all, simply supported by a spike in the roller.

At Hamburg the Prince of Wales takes two baths daily, composed of pine extract, Manheim salt, and soda water, and, according to the London World, "is a great deal with the American set, in which is Miss Chamberlaine," of whom our contemporary gracefully observes that she "is supposed to be a beauty."

Mr. Charles H. Phelps, formerly editor of the Californian, has established himself in business in New York as an attorney-at-law and counselor. He intends devoting particular attention to Pacific Coast business.

A GIRLY-GIRL

Demands Counsel of the Horse Reporter Touching her Coming Bridal.

"Do they edit in here?"

The several occupants of the room looked around and discovered a young lady standing in the doorway. She nodded slightly to the horse reporter, and that individual returned the salutation with a placid mile-and-a-half-over-eight-hurdles smile, whose grandeur of expanse would alone have made it noticeable.

"You are right this time, madam," he said. "This is the exact spot where the seething brain of the trained journalist proceeds to hubble, and the lances of Thought that pierce with unerring aim the helmets of Wrong are ever held in couchant poise by strong arms ready to launch them forth at the slightest signal of danger."

"Papa doesn't know I am up here," said the vision of loveliness, "but mamma does. The very minute I told her that I was going to see an editor she said it was the best thing to do; but when I got right to the door I just thought I should die."

"You don't appear to be in danger of immediate dissolution," remarked the horse reporter.

"Oh, of course, I don't mean exactly that," said the young lady; "but I was awfully nervous, you know; I always was that way; and when I was a little girl papa used to say that the only way to govern me was by kindness."

"Well, we'll be gentle with you," replied the personal friend of Rarus. "Would you like to read the Hawkinsville Clarion, or the Cohoes Freeman?" pointing to a pile of exchanges.

"No, I don't care about it, thank you," was the reply. "You editors must have a hard time managing all the people who come up here?"

"There is a managing editor for that purpose," said the horse reporter.

"How nice! And do all these gentlemen edit?"

"Yes."

"I'm going to be married next week," said the young lady. "Ain't it funny?"

"Quite ludicrous, no doubt," was the reply.

"And I came up here," she continued, "to see if you would put a nice notice of the affair in the paper. Will you do it?"

"Certainly," said the horse reporter. "Would you like to have it referred to as 'another one of those delightful events in which the happiness of a trusting love finds glad fruition in wedded bliss,' or 'the marriage-bells rang out merrily last evening, telling to the star-lit skies a joyful tale of love's final triumph?' Both those sentences are kept in type, and you can have your choice."

"I rather like the last one best," said the young lady. "It is more tenderly beautiful, and so sweetly touching. Don't you think so?"

"Yes," replied the horse reporter, "there is a sort of curfew-will-not-ring-to-night tinge to it that lays over the other one."

"Well, then, I will take that. And will an editor be around to write it up?"

"Certainly."

"I will send you a piece of the wedding-cake," continued the young lady.

"Do," said the horse reporter. "There is a dog up my way that needs killing."

Reginald de Courcey's Death.

Has he seen her foot?" Reginald de Courcey, eighth Duke of Wabash, smote his corselet fiercely with the trusty blade that had cloven in twain the skull of many an enemy, and looked tenderly upon his wife, the Lady Agatha McMurry, as they stood 'neath the shadow of a glove which the wife had carelessly left on the lawn. By the duke's side was his faithful steed, Step-and-fetch-it, in whose veins flowed the blood of the swift coursers of the desert—the Arabian.

"I know me not," quoth the Lady Agatha, "whether that of which you speak hath indeed ta'en place, but on her return from the tourney at Coshucton, whither young Rupert de Moyamensing hath ta'en our daughter, I will not fail to closely question the maid regarding the matter. Truly, it is of much moment whether this young knight, who cometh from beyond the Little Miami, doth wed our daughter."

"I prithee do not speak of that," said Lord Reginald, hastily; "and yet thou'rt right. An Rupert make not the lass his bride, methinks it will be many a day ere another one so guileless heaveth in sight. What's o'clock?"

"Three forty-five," replied the duchess, looking at the shadows which the sun cast upon the wood-shed.

"There is yet time to warn her," said Reginald; "but with another horse than thou, my pet," he added, stroking the glossy neck of the Arabian courser, "the task were indeed a hopeless one."

"Then haste thee," cried the Lady Agatha. "Lose not a moment of the time that is so precious. Fly with all speed, and I will offer up prayers that thy journey may be swift and sure."

Leaping upon his horse the duke sped swiftly from out the court-yard, the clatter of hoofs making glad music in the ears of his devoted wife. Suddenly she heard the horse give a mighty snort and stop, and there came upon the summer breeze that was kissing the locust blossoms above her head a dull thud. Running with fear-hastened feet across the portcullis the duchess saw the affrighted animal standing in front of some huge object, while farther on lay the corpse of her husband, the cold, white face looking up to heaven as if in mute appeal for pity. In an instant she was by his side, but the kisses that she pressed upon the pallid lips of the man she loved so well were unfelt, and the words she spoke brought no response. Then, going to the horse, she took him kindly by the bridle.

"I do not blame you, Step-and-fetch-it," she said, "for there are some things which even an Arah steed may not leap over." And hiding her face in her apron wept bitterly.

Reginald de Courcey, eighth and last Duke had met his death over his child's hottine.—Girl's Bogan, by Joseph Medill in the Chi.

SOCIETY.

General McDowell's Reception to Senator Miller.

The reception given on the evening of Thursday last at Black Point, by Major-General and Mrs. McDowell to Senator and Mrs. John F. Miller, was without doubt the event of the season, and one which has never been excelled in this hospitable mansion. The guests were conveyed hence both by land and water, the steamer General McPherson leaving the wharf at the foot of Washington Street at forty-five minutes past seven and half past eight o'clock in the evening, and returning at twelve and forty-five minutes past twelve o'clock. At the Black Point landing, carriages were found which took the guests to the residence. It was beautifully decorated on this occasion. A large dancing-hall had been erected on the north side of the house, and inclosed by innumerable American flags, so arranged as to present the field portion as forming the roof. The south end gave the appearance of an immense grotto, so profusely was it filled with palms, evergreens, and various exotics. Hundreds of Japanese lanterns spread their soft light over the scene. A platform surrounding the dancing hall was canvased and decorated around the outer edge with a row of cannon-balls, while at the back were seats for dancers. Two bands, one stationed at each end, discoursed dance-music. The floral decorations over the entire first floor, especially in the dance-hall, were of the most charming description. High pillars, going from the floor to the ceiling, were ornamented with standard and colors clustered gracefully together. Chandeliers—some five or six in number—were nearly hidden in smilax. The scene was of the loveliest description. The supper was at the usual hour. Mrs. McDowell received her guests costumed in a dress of old-gold silk with blue trimmings. Her daughter, Miss McDowell, looked exceedingly lovely in a toilette of soft pearl silk, with floral ornamentation. The senator's daughter, Miss Dora Miller, wore a lovely costume of salmon pink, low-necked and short sleeves, delicately embroidered, princess train; her gloves were worn à la Bernhardt. Mrs. Miller had on a black satin, richly embroidered. The following named persons were present:

Mr. and Mrs. Hull, Miss Sullivan, Colonel and Mrs. Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Flood, Mrs. Breckinridge, Mrs. and Miss Hoyt, Judge and Mrs. Sanderson, the Misses Durbrow, Messrs. Durbrow, Colonel and Mrs. Frank, Major and Mrs. Sanger, Mr. and Mrs. Davis, C. W. Howard, J. S. Minor, Captain and Mrs. Metcalf, General Backus, Captain and Mrs. Humphry, Mr. and Mrs. Van Ness, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Fry, Mr. and Mrs. Kendig, Lieutenant-Colonel and Mrs. Andrews, Mr. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Tevis, the Messrs. Tevis, T. Parrott, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Fair, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Haggin, Mr. and Mrs. C. McAfee, Mr. and Mrs. L. Haggin, Mrs. Hunor, Mr. Ward McAllister, the Messrs. Ashe, Miss Ashe, Messrs. Ogden, W. C. Brown, Mr. Beasley, F. H. Blake, Mr. Small, Mr. Nicholson, L. Y. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Bowie, Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Kittle, Miss Adams, Mr. Redington, Mr. Taylor, Lieutenant Kingsbury, A. E. Hall, Winfield Jones, Colonel and Mrs. Smedburg, Mr. Eugene Dewey, Miss Kittle, Mr. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Berry, J. D. Grant, Doctor and Mrs. Stebbins, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, Mr. Lucas, Miss Lucas, Mr. and Mrs. Hubble, Mrs. A. L. Pinart, Captain Buily, Miss Sprague, Miss Lucas, Judge Sawyer, Captain Dillenback, Mr. and Mrs. William G. Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pixley, Miss Van Reynegom, Miss Hammond, Mr. Twigg, Mr. and Mrs. Lucas, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Page, Doctor and Mrs. Brooke, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lynch, Mr. Chamberlain, Colonel Randall, Doctor and Mrs. Sutherland, Mr. and Mrs. Adams, Mr. and Miss Friedlander, Colonel McParlre, Mr. and Mrs. Van Off, Mr. and Mrs. Harmon, Mr. White, General and Mrs. Kautz, Major Wilhelm, Doctor and Mrs. Bowie, Mr. and Mrs. Jarboe, Mr. and Mrs. Babcock, Harry Babcock, Lieutenant Price, Lieutenant and Mrs. White, Lieutenant Oyster, Major Hammond, Mr. Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Dent, Mr. and Mrs. Yanagaya Miss Edes, Misses Paté, Mr. and Mrs. Barroillet, General and Mrs. Drummond, Mr. and Mrs. Freelon, Miss Bonner, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Davis, Alfred Tubbs, Miss Tubbs, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Tubbs, Mr. Sullivan, Doctor and Mrs. Beers, Mr. and Mrs. De Guigné, H. L. Dodge, Mr. Stratton, Harold Wheeler, Mrs. and Miss Smith, M. Blake, Messrs. Brumagim, Mr. Hein, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Reis, Miss Reis, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Miss Bowie, Mr. and Mrs. Donahue, Miss Low, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Torbert, Miss Torbert, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McLaughlin, Miss Beers, Mr. Alvord, Mr. and Mrs. William Howard, Mr. Hubert, Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, Messrs. Blanding, Miss Griffith, Mrs. Keeney, Mr. Page, Mrs. and Miss Wheeler, C. Coleman, Mr. Stetson, Mr. Griffith, Doctor Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Dillingham, Charles Swift, Colonel and Mrs. Bryant, Major Darling, Mr. and Miss Mizner, Mr. Webster, Lieutenant and Mrs. Russell, Mr. Marsh, Lieutenant L. A. Chamberlain, Lieutenant Bailey, General and Mrs. Saxton, Mr. Bodie, Misses Smith, Mrs. Shaw, Mr. Shelden, W. G. Nuttall, Mrs. Tallant, Mrs. Maynard, Mr. and Mrs. J. Henley Smith, Mr. Pitcher, Mr. and Mrs. Moore, C. F. Palfrey, Mrs. John Hammond, Mr. and Miss Pomeroy, Miss Brooks, E. Moor, W. B. Collier, Miss Elliott, B. S. Hayne, Doctor and Mrs. Hayes, Miss Little Hastings, A. D. Sharon, Charles Mayne, Mr. and Mrs. Keyes, Miss Little Hastings, A. S. J. Bowie, R. H. Pease, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Wilson, Messrs. Wilson, Judge and Mrs. Field, Miss Swearingen, Misses Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Hooker, George Crocker, Mrs. Buford, Mr. and Mrs. Russell J. Wilson, General and Mrs. Rosecrans, Miss Rosecrans, Mrs. Hooper, Miss Ives, Mr. Houghton, Mr. and Mrs. Sampson.

The Godley Party.

On Tuesday evening, the 26th instant, Captain and Mrs. Whitney were very handsomely entertained by Mrs. Godley and her daughter, at their residence on Franklin Street. The interior of the house was tastefully decorated, and the music, refreshments, and other accessories, were all of the highest order. There were a large number of persons present, many of whom were army officers and their ladies. There were also a number of pretty young ladies present. The three large parlors were used for dancing. The supper was served on the floor above at twelve o'clock, and then the company repaired in groups of ten, twelve, or fifteen at a time. It was late in the night, or rather early in the morning, before the last guests had taken their departure. Mrs. Godley wore a toilette of terra-cotta silk, elegantly fashioned with Valenciennes lace trimmings. Miss Godley was attired in white moire. The bride wore her wedding toilette. The following is a list of those present:

Charles Wood, Dr. Brown, Mr. Hooker, Miss Ellis, Mr. Alexander, Miss Martin, Mr. Mote, Mr. Hawks, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Wilson, Mrs. J. B. Crockett, General and Mrs. Kautz, Mr. Hunter, Lieutenant and Mrs. Van Ness, John Scott, Mr. Longhead, Miss Nina Platt, the Misses Ortig, Mr. Hubert, Miss Grace Brown, Miss Lizzie Crocker, Mr. Crocker, Miss Jennie Vassault, Mr. Danglerfield, the Misses Page, Mr. Wallace, Miss Prescott, Madame Zeitka, Miss Reynolds, Mrs. Sargent, Captain Dillenback, Mrs. Simmons, Miss Belle Reis, Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, Mr. Spencer, Mrs. Crockett, Mr. and Mrs. Loniers, Miss Adams, Lieutenant Bailey, Colonel and Mrs. von, Miss Sullivan, Miss Monteleagre, Mr. Monteleagre, George Howells, Harry Tevis, the Misses Pomeroy, Miss Huddort, Lieutenant Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Berry, Miss Lander, the Misses How, Mr. Durbrow, Miss Fargo, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. and Mrs.

George C. Boardman, Mr. Pennel, Arthur Page, Mr. Beasley, Mountford Wilson, Marie Stevenson, Kate Stevenson, Mr. Froelich, Miss Matie Peters, Anna Bradley, Miss Jarboe, Colonel and Mrs. Andrews, Miss Andrews, Mr. Buckbee, Miss Smith.

Marriage of Mr. Charles E. Green and Miss Mary E. Eldridge.

The pretty town of San Rafael was the scene of a very delightful wedding on Tuesday morning last, the parties to the contract being Mr. Charles E. Green, private secretary to Mr. Charles Crocker, and Miss Mary E. Eldridge, eldest daughter of Colonel J. O. Eldridge. They were married at the residence of the bride's father, the interior of which had been tastefully and beautifully ornamented with cut flowers and evergreens. The ceremony of marriage was performed by the Reverend James S. McDonald, a Presbyterian clergyman, in the west parlor, at eleven o'clock, in the presence of the father and sister of the bride, Colonel and Mrs. Charles F. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Douty, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen T. Gage, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Moor, Mr. and Mrs. Easton, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Shaw, Captain and Mrs. Nicholas T. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Talbot, Mrs. L. S. Adams, Mrs. James S. McDonald, Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. and Miss Harmon, Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty, Miss Florence Pope, Miss Ethel Beaver, Miss Nettie Tubbs, Miss Lizzie Hull, Miss Mary Pope, Miss Mamie Beams, Miss Mamie Requa, Miss Mamie Kellogg, Miss Emma Bray, Miss Carrie Sears, Miss Carrie Taylor, Miss Mabel Martin, Miss Nellie Bacon, Miss Alice Nichols, and the Messrs. W. E. Brown, George Crocker, Daniel Murphy Jr., H. B. Smith Jr., Edward Moor, George Roe, Edward Hull, and Messrs. Dingay and Steinberger. The floral pieces were very elaborate and handsome, and upon the west wall of the west parlor there were the letters "G" and "E" in pansies and geraniums. The mantel in this room was made to look like an immense bank of tuberose and Lamark and hermosa roses, while the frames of the mirrors and the chandeliers were enlivened with smilax and sprays of pepper-tree leaves and berries. There were also floral pieces on corner tables in all of the apartments, most of which were offerings from friends. The bride was dressed in a traveling costume, and carried a hand-bouquet of rosebuds. After the ceremony, the newly married couple received the congratulations of all who were present, and subsequently refreshments were served, during which many a bumper of champagne was tossed off to their health and happiness. After nearly four hours of merry-making the last good-bye was given, and the San Francisco guests returned to this city. Later Mr. and Mrs. Green departed on their bridal tour, which will last one or two weeks.

Honors to Captain and Mrs. Whitney.

On Saturday last, the 23d instant, Captain Folliet A. Whitney, of the Eighth Infantry, U. S. A., and Mrs. Whitney (née Myrick) were made the recipients of a reception by the officers and ladies of Angel Island, which proved to be a very delightful affair. San Francisco guests were taken to the scene of festivities by the steamer General McPherson, and those from Mare Island and Benicia by the Monterey. They were received by Mrs. General Kautz and other ladies of the post, after which dancing commenced, and lasted until nearly six o'clock. The reception was a very pleasant one throughout, and among those who were present we recall the following-named:

General and Mrs. George Stoneman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pixley, Colonel John E. Tourtelote, U. S. A., Colonel George P. Andrews, U. S. A., Miss Andrews, Mrs. Irving Scott, Miss Brown, Mrs. Brooks, Miss Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Swift, Mrs. Torbert, Mr. Forbes, Misses Forbes, Mrs. Dan Cook, Mr. Platt, Miss Platt, Mr. E. M. Pinkard, Mr. Charles Swift, Captain Hull, Misses Hull, Mr. F. K. Webster, Baron von Schlegel, Miss Richmond, Misses Mariotte, Lieutenant and Mrs. Hubble, Miss Josie Sprague, Madame Zeitska, Miss Fannie Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Godley, Miss Godley, Mr. C. Mitchell, Grant, Lieutenant and Mrs. Van Ness, Lieutenant, H. P. Kingsbury, Mr. and Mrs. Tripler, Miss Abel, Mr. T. C. Beasley, Colonel and Mrs. Heywood, Mr. and Miss Crane, Mr. H. Johnson, Miss Fannie Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Wash. Berry, Mr. Brien Berry, Lieutenant C. L. Bert, Lieutenant F. K. Marsh, Lieutenant C. J. Bailey, Lieutenant C. H. Hunter, Major and Mrs. R. T. Frank, Captain J. W. Dillingham, Lieutenant J. T. Webster, Doctor and Mrs. Stomberg, Doctor and Mrs. Hoff, Mr. and Miss Thornton.

The Grace Church Entertainment.

The entertainment presented by the Altar Society of Grace Church, at Saratoga Hall, last evening, drew out a large and fashionable audience, among whom were Mrs. Governor Low and Miss Flora Low, Mrs. Coleman, Mrs. Buford, Miss Sedgwick, Mrs. Miller and Miss Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Towne, Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. James Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Hooker, and a great many others whose names we do not recall. The entertainment consisted of twelve tableaux, and vocal and instrumental music. The first six tableaux were as follows: "School of Vestals"—Miss Carrie Gwin, Miss Wallace, Miss Bell Brooks, Miss Cheevers, Miss Platt, the Misses Hutchinson, and Miss Maggie Gwin; "Flirtation"—Miss Lena Maynard and Mr. Horace Platt; "Blind Man's Buff"—Miss Lucille Thornton, Miss Platt, the Misses Brooks, Miss Katie Hutchinson, and Miss Cheevers; "Charlotte Corday"—Miss Sedgwick; "Indiscreet Soubrette"—Miss Platt and Miss Maggie Gwin; "Sculptor's Studio"—Miss Carrie Gwin, Maggie Hutchinson, little Mabel Gwin, and Messrs. Eli Hutchinson and Charley Platt. An intermission then followed, after which there was vocal and instrumental music by Messrs. Reuhling, Ludovici, and others. Then followed the other tableaux, "Love and Riches," "Marguerite Tempted," "Serenade," "Judgment of Paris," and "Fountain of the Tuileries."

Miss Fannie Lent's Informal Party.

On Wednesday evening last, Miss Fannie Lent, who soon leaves for New York to spend the winter, gave an informal party at her residence, corner of Polk and Eddy streets, which proved to be a very pleasant and enjoyable affair. Among those who were present were Mrs. Daniel Cook, Miss Louise Arner, Miss Matie Peters, Miss Georgie Hammond, Miss Sedgwick, Miss Emma Durbrow, Miss Julia Bloch, Miss Florence Godley, Lieutenants Tate, Bailey, Price, and Kingsbury, Mr. Marsh, Mr. Harry Duhrow, and a few others.

A Yachting Party.

On Wednesday afternoon last George Crocker gave a yachting party on board the Chispa, which included a run outside of the Heads, and among the ladies who accepted invitations were Mrs. R. C. Hooker, Miss Flora Low, Mrs. Lieutenant-Commander Buford, Miss Sedgwick, and Miss May Smith. Among the gentlemen were Dan Murphy, Dick Pease, Chris. Froelich, Mr. Nickel, Governor Low, Mr. Lockwood of New York, and Admiral Gutte.

The Platt-Plate Wedding.

On Wednesday evening last, Alfred G. Platt was united in marriage to Miss Josephine E. Plate, at the residence of her brother, Mr. H. A. Plate, 1920 Washington Street, Doctor Stebbins officiating. The ceremony was very private, only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties being present, owing to a recent bereavement in the family.

Notes and Gossip.

Mr. Justice Field, Mrs. Field, and Miss Swearingen leave for Washington on Tuesday next. Mrs. and Miss Flood are about to visit New York, leaving San Francisco on Sunday. Mrs. D. J. Tallant and daughter, and Mrs. William H. Moor, go East on Wednesday of next week; Mrs. Moor to spend the winter in New York with Captain Hartshorne, chaperoning his daughters for the season. The Misses McAllister, of Benicia, are at present guests of Mrs. Jerome Lincoln. Eugene Sherwood, esquire, of "The Sausal," Salinas, Monterey County, will, with his family—as is their custom—spend the winter in San Francisco. This quite reverses the English rule, where families go to their country-seats in winter, the London season being the summer months while Parliament is in session. General and Mrs. Stoneman are in this city, the guests of Irving M. Scott; the general has resigned his position in the army, thus indicating his confidence in becoming Governor of California. The statement that Governor Stanford is about to take up his residence in New York is a mistaken one—or, at least, it is not so; the governor says, jocularly, that he has too many residences in this choice country to think of seeking permanent habitation elsewhere; still, he may add to the number of his houses by erecting a dwelling in New York, as he contemplates spending much of his time in that metropolis hereafter. James Flood will soon have commenced the erection of a pretentious dwelling on his splendid lot on California Street, and he has already drawn his own plan for the interior, and instructed his architect to make a plan for the exterior; this dwelling will be of stone, so we have been informed by those who are supposed to know. Mrs. Atherton is still adding improvements to her chalet on California Street. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hastings are occupying their new house, and work on the new dwelling of Mr. Goad is being pushed forward as fast as it can be. On Tuesday evening last, the 26th instant, Mr. William F. Smith and Miss Mamie A. Smith were married at the residence of the bride's father, 1719 Clay Street, in the presence of only relatives and friends. Mrs. Thomas Breeze and family, who have been enjoying a number of our late autumnal days at Monterey, have returned. Mrs. Paul Shirley, of Martinez, who has been visiting Mrs. E. B. Ryan, has returned home. Mr. and Mrs. W. B. May have returned from Monterey. Miss Sophia Cutter has returned from Los Madonas. Mrs. Alfred Wheeler and her daughter, Miss Helen Wheeler, have been ruralizing a few days at Monterey. Charles Crocker and family will leave London for New York on or about November 1st. Mr. and Mrs. Horace Webster contemplate spending the coming winter at Santa Barbara, accompanied by their two daughters, the Misses Kate and Minnie Webster. Mrs. B. B. Cutter is spending a few days at Monterey. Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Collier and Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Shaw have returned from Monterey. The Misses A. O. and M. O. Sullivan have returned from Monterey. John Mackay, who has been rambling in Southern California, has returned. Mrs. Jennie Ware leaves the White Mountains this week for Philadelphia, where she may probably spend the winter; her mother, Mrs. Tewksbury, is at present in this city. Ensign Stoney, who has been ordered to the Ranger, is on his way to this city. Mrs. J. H. Jewett, who has been sojourning at Monterey for nearly five months, has returned to the city for a short time. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hunter, of San Rafael, have been visiting Monterey. Miss Lena Ashe has returned from Benicia. Mrs. M. J. Chamberlain and Miss Chamberlain, of Berkeley, and Mrs. G. J. Turner, of Sacramento, are visiting Monterey. Miss Genevieve Wright has returned from her summer sojourn. Master F. H. Lefavor, U. S. N., and bride, (née Collins,) who are now in Ohio, will return to San Francisco some time during the coming month. Lieutenant Townsley, U. S. N., and wife, (née Gerke,) who are now in Nebraska, will not return until after the holidays. Lieutenant Cutts, U. S. N., and Mrs. Cutts leave for Washington on Monday next. Mrs. R. G. Sneath left for the East last week, meeting her son and daughter at Truckee, who accompanied their mother Atlanticward. Miss Addie Rankin, who has been in Sacramento visiting, has returned home. Mrs. Lieutenant-Commander Buford has been spending a portion of the week at Monterey. Mrs. Pay-Inspector Parks, accompanied by her mother, leaves for Fort Monroe in a few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Mann and Miss M. Hutchinson went to Monterey on Saturday last; also, Miss Flora Low, the Misses Meinecke, Mrs. Charles Miller and the Misses M. and B. Miller, the Misses Wheeler, W. F. Goad, Lloyd Tevis, Judge W. T. Wallace, Senator J. T. Farley, Colonel J. P. Hoge, George Crocker, R. H. Pease Jr., C. C. Coleman, and W. E. Brown. Lieutenant Millon, U. S. A., and Mrs. Milton, who are now in the East, will leave in a few days for San Francisco. Governor and Mrs. Leland Stanford leave on November 1st for the East, to remain away several months. Mrs. Sallie Hill, of Nevada City, is visiting Mrs. A. E. Head. Miss Nettie Tubbs has returned again from Monterey. Mr. and Mrs. James Robinson, of San Mateo County, have taken a suite at the Palace for the winter. Judge and Mrs. Sanderson have returned from Pasado Robles. Frank McCoppin has been spending a part of the week at Monterey. Mrs. William M. Stewart will shortly leave for New York and Washington. The Misses Blanding returned from Monterey on Monday last. Mrs. C. A. Longstreet and her sister, Mrs. M. E. Billings, of Los

EDITORIAL.

[CONTINUED FROM NINTH PAGE.]

Street Superintendent is left to stable men, street-contractors, jobbers, cart-men, and teamsters. It has somehow come to be considered that the men who use the streets for heavy hauling and contractors have a prescriptive right to the Street Commissioner's office. Looking at the present condition of the highways of our city, we would suggest that the next Commissioner be a bicycle-man, for he would, in the interest of his class, give us streets without yawning graves, or holes in the water-front through which men may fall and drown. We are informed that there is likelihood of a reconsideration by the conventions as to the office of Street Commissioner, and that a special committee will be appointed to seek out some competent civil engineer of character, to whom this very important office may be tendered.

The Bulletin thinks Mr. Lloyd met with a signal rebuke in the defeat of Dr. Newlands for the office of Coroner. To illustrate the extent of demoralization to which the Reverend Mr. Bartlett, Deacon Fitch, Brother Upton, Sister Burke, and the balance of the clergy and laity of this once orthodox institution has reached, we remark that Dr. Newlands is an ex-army surgeon, who served with credit, resigned a few years since, and entered upon private practice in San Francisco; he stands upon his own merits, but happens to be the brother of Mr. Frank Newlands; Mr. Frank Newlands was once the law partner of Mr. Lloyd, and is the son-in-law of Mr. William Sharon; Mr. William Sharon is the owner of water stock; hence, in the opinion of the Bulletin, Mr. Lloyd is deeply humiliated over his defeat in not securing the nomination of Dr. Newlands for Coroner. All this would be logical and satisfactory, except for the fact that Mr. Lloyd did not vote for Dr. Newlands, and did vote for his successful opponent, Mr. Weeks. We place this on record, so that the next time the Bulletin charges supervisors, municipal officials, leading politicians, and respectable journals with being the tools and organs of Spring Valley, the intelligent reader will be indulgent and excuse the Bulletin, because it has water on the brain, and to illustrate in what shallow water this flat-bottomed craft can float: Another convention, called by the ward clubs, has been in session. It has in it some excellent men; but it is a boss miscarriage. It has done some good; it has acted as a teaser to the B'nai Brith Hall Convention. It has emphasized the position of some unfortunate victims of the bosses, and has passed them out of public life. It has taught some good men that they have no business to associate with rogues. It has taught the lesson of poor dog Tray, and of the man who fell among thieves on his way to Jericho. The "Bluffers" will print no ticket. On election day they will be only a pleasant memory—a sort of monumental head-stone by which to designate the last resting-place of the bosses, where we trust they may peacefully and quietly rot till the devil calls them to join the great majority in that place where water politics will be as important as the Bulletin and the bosses think it ought to be here; where free water, and plenty of it, will be the universal demand of all the machine politicians, bosses, bluffers, and blackmailers who find themselves elect of the devil and holding place with the damned. We hope there is no foundation for the rumor that there is to be a compromise between the conventions. The Platt's Hall rumormongers were undoubtedly organized for the purpose of compromise. It was for this purpose that it began at the tail-end of the ticket, in the hope that it might grow a tail strong enough to wag the dog. For the B'nai Brith Convention to make terms with the other is to admit that the County Committee was wrong. The strength of its position, outside of the active politicians, lies in the fact that it is an anti-boss and anti-machine movement; and just to the extent that it notices the other movement, or coalesces with it, or compromises on candidates, just to that extent it confesses its dishonesty and weakens its influence. For every man that the Republican machine can carry over to the Democratic machine, there will come five respectable Democratic gentlemen to take his place. This is not so much a fight of parties and contest of politicians as it is a struggle between taxpayers, for honest government, against political plunderers for party loot. At this writing, supervisors and school directors are to be nominated. If they are as unexceptionable as the balance of the ticket, there is every indication of success for the Republican party in San Francisco. It is a ticket that can not be defeated, except the Democracy shall do an impossible thing; viz., place a better ticket in the field. This the Democratic party can not do. It can not do it, because its leadership is in the hands of bosses and a machine, and because the rank and file of its party is not sufficiently intelligent, nor has it enough of property interest or general integrity to enable it to break away from the control of the party managers, who will deliberately destroy it if they can not control it. The Republican municipal ticket is now in the hands of the tax-paying and property-owning citizens of San Francisco. If they will register and vote, they can elect it, and our city affairs will be honestly managed. If they fail to register and do not vote, the Democracy will carry the city and its treasury will be plundered.

The Bulletin is again, by its editorial of Thursday, in full opposition to the election of Mayor Blake. This is the less alarming when we remember that Judge Blake was elected the last time with the Bulletin and Call and the machine in full cry against him. This opposition is based upon a false argument as to the mayor's position upon the tax levy. The mayor declares, as the result of his knowledge of the municipal expenses demanded by law, that the city government can not be carried on for a one-per-cent. tax. It is insincere and disingenuous enough to claim that the Hawes Consolidation Act should be maintained and no new charter adopted, and yet appeals to the history of the proposed charter to demonstrate that a tax levy of one per cent. is sufficient. It demands the reduction that might follow the reduced expenses of a new charter, and still upholds the Consolidation Act that makes reduced expenses impossible. We all agree in our desire for economy and low taxes, but until we can have a new charter that will lessen the number of deputies, reduce salaries, and restrain Alexander Badlam from expend-

Angeles, are at the Palace. Mrs. J. W. Calkins and Miss Sallie Calkins, of Santa Barbara, are at the Grand. Senator and Mrs. John F. Miller and their daughter, Miss Dora Miller, have been spending the greater part of the present week at their summer place in Napa County. W. G. Cogswell, the artist, is at the Palace. General A. V. Kautz, U. S. A., Colonel Bryant, U. S. A., and H. C. Chamberlain, U. S. N., have been at the Occidental during the week. Mr. and Mrs. L. Gilson, Mrs. A. Halsey, Miss Halsey, and Mrs. S. Bailey have returned from Monterey. Mrs. Captain Forney, of Oakland, is visiting friends at the Navy Yard. Mr. and Mrs. John J. Valentine have been visiting Monterey. Mrs. H. R. Judah has gone East on a visit. Doctor W. J. Hoffman, of the United States Geological Survey, and Mrs. Hoffman, are at the Occidental. Charles de B. Stewart, of the English navy, and George T. Davis, U. S. N., are at the Occidental. Judge and Mrs. Sanderson are contemplating an Eastern trip. Mr. and Mrs. James V. Coleman are at Santa Cruz. Mrs. E. B. Crocker, of Sacramento, accompanied by a number of friends, is at Idlewild, Tahoe. Her daughter, Miss Amy Crocker, is at Carson, Nevada. Commodore E. R. Colbourn, who has been on the Pacific Coast for a number of years, and who was succeeded by Commodore Phelps as commandant of the Navy Yard at Mare Island about a year and a half ago, has taken up his permanent residence at Washington, D. C. Mrs. Hall has returned to the Palace from her extended Eastern and European trip. General Nelson Miles arrived here Thursday from Oregon. Miss Grace Eldridge is contemplating an Eastern and possibly a European tour. Richard P. Hammond Jr. has gone to Alamos, Mexico, to be gone five or six months, and possibly longer. Miss Julia Pomeroy and Miss Clara E. Glover, of Oakland, are visiting Mrs. J. H. Miller, in Sacramento. Mrs. J. C. Tubbs, of Sacramento, is visiting this city. Mrs. E. S. Mitchell has returned to Sacramento from Oakland. The last literary and social of the navy people took place on Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. Commodore Phelps. Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Baker, who have been residing on Van Ness Avenue for more than a year past, have gone to the Palace to live until their new residence on Franklin Street is ready for occupation. It is expected that the Princess Louise will return on or about the 12th of next month, on the Queen of the Pacific, or perhaps later, on an English steamer. The Princess and her husband will occupy the same apartments at the Palace occupied by them a short time ago. Lieutenant Palfrey has been visiting Clear Lake, and was the guest several days of Captain and Mrs. R. S. Floyd, at Kono Tayee.

Joseph O'Connor.

[From a former master of Lincoln School, now an honest farmer in the valley of the San Joaquin, we receive the following admonition, expostulation, and recommendation. We hope Mr. Joseph O'Connor is as sincerely in earnest as we are, that the public schools should not come under clerical influence, and that they should remain forever free from the control of Roman priests. We wish this disclaimer had come from Mr. O'Connor, and not from Mr. Marks. Somehow, we are not quite confident that even so indifferent a churchman as Mr. O'Connor seems to be, and the two or three hundred other Roman church school-masters and school-mistresses in the employment of our school department, are quite to be relied upon when the contest shall come. We do not believe in neutral soldiers. We do not believe in indifference. We do not believe in bad Catholics, and when these hundreds of Roman Catholic teachers listen to denunciations from the pulpit of their schools as goddess, and as nurseries of vice, and read in their church organs the constant and vituperative abuse of the free schools; when they know that from Rome itself there comes the mandate to send Catholic children to Catholic schools only; when the Order of Jesuits, Christian Brothers, and ever so many of the sisterhoods, monasteries, and convents are devoted to education; when every priest in California, from Archbishop Alemany to Father King, denounce our common school system, and withhold the sacraments of the church from parents who do not send their children to parochial schools; when Mr. O'Connor and his Catholic school-teaching associates know these things, are silent about them, do not protest against them, and quietly draw their salaries—when all these things are so, then we infer that they approve them, that they are spies in the camp, and that whenever the time of conflict shall come between these contending forces, the best we can hope of these indifferent and bad Catholics is that they will run away. We do not like bad Catholics half as much as we like good ones. The Romanist who does not believe in the doctrines and the policy of his church has no business in it. The man who does believe in its divine mission ought to stand up for it, fight for it, die for it, and, if necessary, refuse to draw a salary from its enemy—the free public school. We have never heard a single Roman Catholic school-marm or master in this State defend, in an open and manly or womanly manner, the system of education from which they are only too glad to draw their support. We have but a limited respect for the men or women who will teach school during the week, and on Sunday seek the priest at confessional to purge themselves of the offense they have committed against the canons of the Holy Roman Catholic Church. However, we give Joseph the benefit of his friend's letter.]

CENTRAL COLONY, FRESNO, September 25, 1882.

EDITORS ARGONAUT: If any paper in this State can afford to be honest and truthful, even when thereby flying in the face of public prejudice, that paper is the Argonaut. If any paper in this State can not afford to fight an enemy on unjust grounds, that paper is the Argonaut. Freedom from party trammels and courage to approve what appears to be right in the opponent constitute the character of the Argonaut. Take from it this character, and the Argonaut sinks to the level of the partisan sheet so heartily despised by Argonaut readers. If the Argonaut shall oppose the candidacy of Mr. Joseph O'Connor on the ground of his foreign birth, recent citizenship, communion with the Catholic Church, or on any truthful ground, his Argonaut-reading friends will find no serious fault; but when the Argonaut avers that "this is an Irish Roman Catholic ecclesiastical cat in the political meal-tub," it takes wrong ground against Mr. O'Connor. I have been intimately acquainted with him for many years, and I offer in his behalf, and for your benefit, my testimony to the fact that his relations with his church are exactly the same as those of the average intelligent, reading, free-thinking Protestant with any Protestant church. They are of the kind that the Argonaut extols. I feel safe in asserting that the editor of the Argonaut is not himself more free from clerical domination in the church which he frequents than is Mr. O'Connor in his own. I know for a truth that if ever the Catholic clergy shall take any overt step in the direction of sectarianizing our public schools, one of their fiercest opponents will be Joseph O'Connor. And this is a proper time to say, too, that of the large number of Roman Catholic teachers in the school department of San Francisco I am personally well acquainted with very many, and I do not know of one who is not openly in hearty accord with your readers on the school question.

B. MARKS.

From Rochester, New York, our editor receives the following card of invitation:

Mrs. Abeldard Reynolds,
Ninety-eighth Birth-day Anniversary Reception.

1784

1882

Mr. M. P. Reynolds
Will be pleased to see you,
Saturday, September 23d, from 3 to 5 p. m., 40 Spring Street, Rochester.

ing $222,627 for assessing $211,000,000 of property, when seven years ago he himself assessed $319,000,000 of property for $40,000, one per cent. tax is impossible.

We wish the Bulletin would let Spring Valley alone long enough to explain how and why it is that Mr. Badlam should have increased the expenses of his office from $40,741 in 1875 to $222,627 in 1881, when the assessable values of the former year were $319,311,343, against $211,600,564 in 1881. We recall the fact that once when the Bulletin's printers struck for higher wages Badlam went into the office and helped to set type. It was very good of Aleck, and helped the Bulletin reduce printers' wages; but if it costs the city $181,886 a year, it would be better to support this very valuable journal by a subsidy direct from the city treasury, and mandamus Supervisor Carmany to audit the bill.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From an Absent Californian.

[Those who know Colonel Stuart M. Taylor may be surprised to learn that he is a cattle-breeder on the great plains, with his headquarters at Cheyenne. They will be glad to read, from a letter to a friend in San Francisco, such extracts as that gentleman is willing to give to the public. We are afraid our friend, the colonel, formerly a soldier in the armies of the loyal North, once recorder of San Francisco, is backsliding from his Democracy. Perhaps the broad and breezy plains are too high, too wide, too airy, and too free to encourage such Democracy as lurks around the beer-saloons and whisky-mills, and hides in the narrow alleys of our city. The man who was loyal during the war, who is loyal now to all its memories, who favors the preservation of a Christian Sabbath, and who has the manly courage to say so, is, in our judgment, an awful bad Democrat; but a soldier, gentleman, brave and honest man, is, in our judgment, something very superior to a Democrat.]

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, September 9, 1882.

DEAR COMRADE: You will find inclosed in this letter an order for fifty dollars, which I desire through you to donate to the Home for disabled veterans, which is soon, I hope, to be erected in California. It is a matter of heartfelt regret with me that my gift is not a larger one—I wish it were five thousand dollars. God bless these gallant men who helped with their strong arms to keep our flag in the heavens, where its name is written forever, in full sight of a watching world, and where its every letter is a star. You and I, and all other comrades who are happy in health, and not incapacitated for work by reason of debilitating wounds, owe it to ourselves, and our country, to see that these brave men are cared for now, when they are incapable of self-support, or nearing that dreaded spot adown the hill of life, where "sit the shadow shunned of men." Let us give them a home where rest is, a home where comfort is, a home where all their ills may be heeded and healed, a home where they can dwell in blessed contentment and think their hands helped erect that monument which lifts its white grace aloft, and around which the stars gather to sing their exultant songs—a monument to liberty, nationality, and the rights of men. Had I returned to California it had been my earnest intention to go about the State, from one end to the other, and with voice and pen try to rouse our fellow-citizens to aid this deserving charity. But fate has willed that I linger here a while, and so a great personal gratification has been denied me. When you and other comrades meet to serve the cause, remember that I am with you, heart and soul. But I want to see placed at the head of this Home, men who are known to be able and trustworthy. Put none but good and true men "on guard." I don't care who be is—comrade or not—if any man has been careless in his accounts, remove him, and put a worthier man in his place. We can stand no trifling in such a cause as this. It should be sacred to us. Let rigid investigation and prompt punishment tread like a sleuth-hound on the heels of official negligence or incapacity. As men who stood shoulder to shoulder with these crippled veterans, we can not afford to see their interests unguarded, or one single dime appropriated for them misspent or unaccounted for. And why not put Union veterans at the head of this "Association"?—men who stood in the ranks or drew their swords in the late civil war? I want to see in the forefront of this charity a man who helped to band our States together. No matter how much we may respect him or them, we can afford to have no man or men, at the head of this movement for our Veterans' Home, on any committee, who sympathizes with secession. And just here let me say one other thing, comrade. I had hoped to visit dear old California, where I left my heart long months ago, and say with my voice what I now write, but it seems now impossible for me to leave; but I do want to say just this: I know the Grand Army is not a political order. We taboo politics rightly. Soldiers who are Democrats and Republicans stand touching elbows; but I want to express the hope that every old soldier of George H. Thomas Post—ay, and of every other post in the department—will cast his vote in the coming election for the municipal candidates who favor the Sunday law. I don't care whether these candidates be Republicans or Democrats. There is precious little dividing us now. I want to see men elected who believe that one day out of even should be observed differently from any other. I believe in the Sunday law. Call it a union of church and state, if you will. I don't care what you call it, so long as Sunday is respected. I want to see this loved land of ours a God-fearing, Sabbath-respecting land. I am not a religious man; I am not a church-goer; but I respect religion, and I reverence the churches—the sentinels of civilization. I believe one day in seven should be, in a measure, enthroned above the others; and while innocent amusement and recreation should be tolerated, all grog-shops and corner gin-mills, where bad alcohol is king, and all gilded palaces of drink, should be shut tight—even as the door of the counting-house is closed, or the shutters of the mechanic's shop are barred. I believe this will work injustice to no man, or set of men. I believe it will be in the interest of the honest toiler, and conduce to the happiness of the laboring man and his family. I believe it is demanded by all good citizens, by all good mothers, by all good wives, by all good sisters, and by all good sweethearts. Respect for the Sabbath was one of the laws thundered from Sinai. Let the voice of women, true women, be heard in the land on the subject. It will be one grand chorus throng in unison. I don't care what element, or what set of voters in our midst, demand that this law be set aside. If I were a candidate for office I would not give one fig for their votes if my conscience told me I was right. Who are the men so violently opposed to the Sunday law? They are not the men who help to create towns and cities, erect school-houses, and build up states. With few exceptions they will be found among the lawless, and the criminal, and communistic classes. They will be the Dennis Kearneys of the Sand-lot. They will belong to that element that once festered too long in our midst, and which many of us longed to suppress. The old soldiers who helped to recreate this Union are not of these classes. Neither are a majority of our Irish or German fellow-citizens. My good friend Pixley, of the Argonaut, says, "No Democrat dares to favor the Sunday law!" I am a Democrat, and I favor it. Ay, and dare to favor any measure which my conscience tells me is for the good of my fellow-citizens and the welfare of American homes! It is not the first time I have gone against my party when I believed that party wrong, or differed with any disturbing element in its ranks. My country and my American manhood first, my party afterward. And the man who differs honestly with his party, and dares not express his conscientious opinion upon any subject of absorbing public interest, no matter if it deprive him of the presidency, is a craven coward, and unworthy the honor of being an American citizen. Let the old soldiers, in the coming municipal campaign, vote for measures most conducive to the city's moral health and the happiness of thousands of workingmen's homes. With countless good wishes for the Post's welfare, and that of each and every comrade, I am, my dear comrade, always your friend, STUART TAYLOR.

Mr. Louis Braverman, of the firm of Louis Braverman & Co., left for New York City last week in search of holiday attractions.

THE BANCROFT LIBRARY.

The visitor coming west, at the threshold of the plains strikes the trail of the most brilliant of modern histories. The daring of Columbus, setting across the Sea of Darkness to discover the new Atlantic; the conquests of Cortés, who added a new empire to the pride of Spain, and poured the wealth of millions of Castellanos into her coffers; the enthusiasm of Ponce de Leon and the venturesome Coronado—alike belong to an era which reads not dim, not ordinary, beside the glories of Tamerlane and Alexander. The history of the Spanish possession is one which blends fortune-hunting with romance, the gallantry of adventure with religious fanaticism, and mingles soldiers and priests, nobles and swashbucklers, generals and prelates in its heroic drama, all afire with the subjugation of a new world. Balboa, Cortés, De Soto, Coronado, Torquemada, Zumarraga, and the Catholic priesthood who hid the flame of conquest under the serge of the church—figures equally commanding whether in plumed mail or the black robe—appear in wanderings through unknown forests, which parted on the banks of mighty floods or led to the steps of awe-inspiring temples and imperial cities, and across trackless deserts, which yawned at their feet in impassable cañons, or rose in majestic steps to snow-crowned mountains and heights of fire. Three hundred years of conquest leave their crumbling walls and deserted mines and missions to the possession of a new race.

It is time, then, that history should be written, before their traces are obliterated, before the ink of royal letters and records has faded, or the ancient forts and cities are one with the debris of the plains on which they were built. After the pomp of the Spanish invasion and the vice-regal court of Mexico has been dulled by the monotony of centuries of possession, comes a half century of reckless, eventful history in the settlement of the new territories of Oregon, California, and their sister Pacific States, whose fleeting flavor needs to be caught before its spirit of blended daring, enterprise, ambition, and freehooting evaporates in sober railroad building and money-getting. Old Californians long to see the record of those days worthily preserved, and new Californians are curious to know the old stories of the conquest and the mission grants, the gold fever, and the Vigilantes, and, passing beyond these, all that makes gorgeous the past of Mexico and Central America—countries related by nature, by the ties of race, climate, and common origin, doubtless at no distant day to resume honorable place under one government again. The average American, with his smattering of high-school education, thinks of Mexico as a sun-parched table-land, inhabited by a race of indolent, vindictive good-for-nothings, whose principal amusements are quarreling over a change of sweethearts or of governments; of the Isthmus as populated by macaws and monkeys, and human beings of the same family, and the den of yellow fever; and believes the United States would not take either country as a gift. Our own territories of New Mexico and Arizona figure in the minds of many—not to say most—of the good people at the North as an arid expanse of baked clay, or fields of dry prairie-grass and cactus, with the heat at one hundred and twenty degrees, and fever inevitable the greater part of the year. The railroads newly built have introduced some of the more venturesome to the clear and electric coolness of the air of the plateaus; to the wealth of a region where illness would be unknown, except for the atrocious carelessness of its settlers on every point of health; to our inland Italian valleys, with a Switzerland of icy peaks and deep-cleft cañons on their borders—a country where the long summer of the tropics exists with the bracing air of the Swiss Alps, where one wise in his own generation might live as long as the Pueblo Indians before the climate would destroy him.

But hardly more surprise will the newcomer feel at the difference of the present from his ideal than at the history of its past. A glance at the literature which treats of the new region, and its past, will be of service in restoring his ideas to just proportions, and teach him in future to consider the Pacific slope as a new country only in a comparative degree. Tranquil on its mountain mesas, there sits a semi-civilization, mild-mannered and devout as that of the patriarchs, with traditions of embassies from the Far West, seven thousand miles across the Great Sea, whose chronicles the agave leaf has kept for fourteen hundred years in the records of the city of Mexico. The Zuñi and Moqui chiefs who went to the Atlantic coast after the sacred water for their rites last spring were of a descent and antiquity to which Boston blue blood might have done homage to the ground. Zuñi tradition, and agave leaf, and Aztec stone may yet solve the problem of the origin of American peoples, and trace with living figures the long blank of the continent since the flood.

But leaving these with the mysterious writing of glacier-scratch and fossil character, and coming down to our little day of three hundred years ago, it seems the printing press was discovered only soon enough for the crowding intelligence of all that was told of the new Indies discovered by Columbus. The enterprise of the modern newspaper hardly outdoes the industry of monkish historians and viceroys, who toiled to set before their sovereigns the hardships and the glories of their devoted services to crown and church. Columbus's letter, in print 1493, announcing the success of his expedition sailing westward to the shores of India, was the first of unnumbered appearances on the subject of the New World, which happily rose from the waves in time to save the world a deluge of the dismal theology which engrossed the literature of the time. Cortés, enlightened conqueror that he was, must import printing presses to his new dominion of Mexico, and set them to publishing catechisms and theology—more theology, of a dreariness which lends the fate of the caciques torn by dogs mildness in comparison. In Europe, Peter Martyr, first and sprightliest of modern historians, was publishing works on the new discoveries in 1532, again at Basle, 1533, and Venice, 1534. Simon Gryncous, in 1532, published a collection of travels, including Vespucci's four voyages—about as soon as there was anything reliable to tell; for Bergomate's history of the whole world, in 1513, disposed of the new half of the globe in a single chapter. And of Pope's bulls, and pastoral letters excellent burning and torturing hishops, sermons and expositions, there was such liberality as makes Zumarraga's pious auto-da-fé of the priceless Aztec word-paintings in the plaza of Tlatelolco thrice an injury to the world. If the burning of manuscripts could only have been on the other side!

Possibly, the glimpse given of the curious antique wisdom yet lodged in antique folios in hiding on convent shelves, or in the dingy shops of continental book-fanciers, will explain to minds of generous susceptibilities how it was that, exploring the crypt of history from its day-light opening on our own half century, the mind of a shrewd, practical young business man should grow enthusiastic in its research and from collecting the annals of California pioneers in the sketch of 1849 and 1853—should be drawn to the deeper pages of Irving and Prescott, finally to be satisfied with nothing less than the originals of old history, such as are in king's closets and university treasures. It is, we trust, an earnest of the future which enlightened faith sees for San Francisco, when her millions will be of no dearer use to their owners than to bring here the finest art, in science, in the humanities, and refinements of every kind; when from Point Reyes to Monterey will be such a shore of costly villas and noble pleasure grounds, of statued gardens and galleries of treasure, as reaches from Venice to Sicily—a terrace of art, the world's gallery of riches in collections of painting, mosaics, priceless goldsmith's work, ceramics, and carving, such as make the dust of Italian vineyards precious. A misguided generation will doubtless have to learn the folly of spending its money in a coarse materialism, which means merely fine clothes, fine horses, big houses, big diamonds, good things to eat, and private bath-rooms to each suite of chambers; and men may be content to live as simply as Greeks, or as republicans, for the sake of owning such treasures in art or in books as now belong to cardinals and sovereigns. Why not, since even in these early days San Francisco, or one of her citizens for her, owns such a collection of rare books as belong to few private persons in the world, and is unequaled in public or private hands this side the Atlantic. If he had been infatuated with a love of fast horses and had spent a hundred thousand in matching a pair to his fancy, or if he had laid out a million or two in a house with ceiling by French decorators, emulating Louis XIV. or Lorenzo Medici, who would have spent that sum in a morning on their frescoes alone, or if, smitten with a love of fashionable art, he had paid a fortune for a Meissonier, it would have been conventional and comprehensible. But that, for his own tastes, in a somewhat uninviting direction, with a definite end in view and with the purpose finally of doing a service to the world, he should have cheerfully put a fortune into rare books, and brought and lodged in San Francisco a collection fit for a prelate or a peer's library, is something out of the common, and creditable and encouraging for the air in which such dreams come true. How many who read this know of the historical work that has been imagined and carried out to the fullest particular in this rushing, money-chasing city—the last place, one would think, for long and earnest literary tasks.

Where the coast hills draw in, miles from the business part of San Francisco, and the city comes to a natural end against their hulwarks, the site has been chosen for several buildings of public interest. As one steps from the Valencia Street cars, the scene is not without a serious fascination. Large hills are thrown across the valley, with mist almost always clinging about their outlines; cottages and gardens stray up the slopes, and hang out eucalyptus and masses of red geraniums in self-contained coziness. The street is in a transition state, with laying grades and erecting new houses; but the shadowy, brooding hills, and the wreathing ocean mists, in large, mysterious, thoughtful quiet, dominate the scene. Most in spirit with them is a modest, secretive brick building, plain and strong as a village bank, with its close iron shutters—set, however, in such environment of scrupulously kept lawn, and choice flower borders, and shrubbery, dewy fresh and carefully trained, as mark a gentle pride in its belongings. Here Mr. Hubert H. Bancroft, the historian of the Pacific Coast, has built the home for his library, secure from fire, in suburban quiet and open air and sunlight, best aids to a studious work. Who that has gained a settled headache, reading hours in the foetid air, or taken a cough in the chill, gloomy alcoves of city libraries, will not assent earnestly to the wisdom of building a library in open ground, with all the sun and fresh air that can be admitted to stimulate the brain? In this building lodge thirty-five thousand volumes, many of rarity and cost, each and all relating to the history of the Pacific Coast, from the Darien isthmus to Alaska; and here are the twelve scholarly, accomplished secretaries who translate, index, and make reference from the mass of authorities. Never was public library so orderly arranged or capable of use, or so completely under the command of the men who use it; for the first work, twenty years ago, when the plans were laid for its use, was to read, translate, and summarize the whole, in an index of reference to secure forty subjects relating to the history proposed—so that any scholar wishing, for instance, to trace the Aztec traditions or the manufactures of the Californian tribes, the surveys of the Isthmus or any leading topic of the sort, instead of toiling through a thousand folios in search of possible information, finds the title and page of each authority ready for him to turn to without more ado. The labor may well be called heroic, but the scholar will agree that the five years' work of twenty intelligent men, at a cost of thirty thousand dollars, was well spent, for no more signal service can be rendered to orderly and profitable study than in well prepared indexes and reference lists, which do the work of pioneers and foresters in clearing the royal road to learning. That road is toilsome enough at best—delightfully so to the genuine student; but it is simply wisdom which by such aids prevents his wasting strength and years in groping and ineffective work. Imagine one man reading three hundred and fifty volumes a year—a perfectly preposterous number, if he reads for information—and laying down his last volume at the end of a century, to drop into his grave with his wisdom all unused! But let us see what material has been deemed not too costly for the use of thorough history of the Pacific side of the continent.

To begin with the oldest authorities: Bergomate, in old clasp binding of stamped arabesque with metal corners, the "Supplementi Chronicarum ab ipso Mundi," Venice, 1515; the "Libro di Beneditti Bordini, 1528, with its crude maps of the new region; "Gryncous," Peter Martyr—fourteen-head of American history—in his first three editions, the earliest hearing the wood-cut portrait and the arms of Charles V.; Apiani's "Introductio Geographica," 1533; and "La Cosmographia" of Anvers, 1575; the atlases of Mercator and Ortelius, dated 1569 and 1571, with highly colored and curious maps, are among the rare issues of the first authorities on the history and geography of the New World. Ramusio, from whom Hackluyt drew most of his material at second-hand, is here in three folio volumes of most learned compilation—"Delli Navigazioni," dated from 1554 to 1565. The third volume relates wholly to America, containing three of Cortés's relations, part of Oviedo's histories, and Guzman's expedition to northwestern Mexico, with other matter of the first importance. Hackluyt's travels in the famous and rare black-letter edition of London, 1599, contains many valuable journals of discovery in America. The quaint black-letter volumes of the next century, curiously illustrated, include the rare and costly editions of Purchas, whose "Pilgrimages" in the earliest editions of 1614 and 1625, five large folios, are worth between three and four hundred dollars a copy, to use the readiest terms for conveying their value to the unclerical mind. Molina's "Vocabulario" of Castilian and Mexican, printed in Mexico, 1571, and long believed the first book published in America, is still the best authority on the Aztec language, and copies have brought five hundred dollars from collectors.

Though by intention strictly a working library, with small proclivities to rare bindings, uncut copies, and the indulgence of the book fancier, its rule has been the choice of the best editions, and in the original language of authorities, which necessarily brings together much of exceeding rarity and value, as well as works of interest for their age and associations. Of the first interest from every point are the parchment manuscript "Concilios Provinciales," or Mexican church councils, when the archbishop was also the head of the government, four folios, comprising the original record of the first ecclesiastical councils from 1530 to 1585, bearing the signatures of Philip I.—"Yo El Rey," Zumarraga, and Las Casas, the good Bishop of Chiapa, whose "Historia de las Yndias" and his "Apologetica" also adorn the library—rare writings, rarer in their championship of the oppressed Indians in a merciless age. The catechism of a fourth council, with autographs of the primate Lorenzana and his five episcopal brethren, is shown in the excellence of royal blue velvet cover, fine clerical manuscript, and illuminated title page. These records present a curious picture of society and affairs; for in those days the church must have its finger in every pie, and if the faithful did not walk straight it was not for want of explicit guidance. From these folios with a monarch's signature, we find that the clergy were allowed to play for not more than two dollars a day at cards; that the display of gold plate and carpets at christenings was so extravagant as to require priestly check; the distribution of eggs and fish for Lent among the Indians called for the grave discussion of the council; and ecclesiastical censure fell heavily on all clergymen dabbling in trade. A curious and delightful manuscript is the "Moralia" of Pope Gregory, written with all the refinements of monastic copyists, with Byzantine initials, in the finest tracery of red, filled with blue, with carmine letters and numerals lighting the glossy black-letter page, with Greek marginal references, and large blue headings—work which leads to vague regrets for the introduction of printing. The department of history is rich in early originals and copies of documents bearing upon Mexico and Central America; many from Maximilian's collection for the imperial library at Mexico, from whose sale at Leipzig three thousand volumes were secured for the Bancroft library. The costly "Concilios" referred to properly belongs to the Mexican archives, but was exposed for sale in Europe, where it fell into Mr. Bancroft's hands. The Ramirez sale in Mexico contributed largely to the division of jurisprudence as well as history—notably the "Ordenanzas de las Indias" of Verez de Castro, Valladolid, 1603, containing one hundred and twenty-two ordinances on vellum, with the arms of Spain on the title-page; "Oviedo y Valdes Cronica de las Indias," vellum folio, Salamanca, 1547; Acts of the Province of Santiago, 1540, original quarto manuscripts, with interesting autographs, which sold for one hundred and ten pounds sterling; and a volume of Christian doctrine, by Zumarraga, 1546, which cost two hundred and ninety dollars. And of the first books printed at Monterey a catechism (of course), a small herbal, both 16mo., coarsely printed, and a set of regulations for the territorial assembly, and a manifesto of José Figueroa, which really was the very first issue of the small Boston press, imported by Zamorano, the private secretary of the governor, are kept as curiosities of the art, and specimens of the poorest ink, paper, and impressions imaginable.

Leaving these quaint volumes, the historical shelves are filled, in close chronological order, from Bernal Diaz's "History of the Spanish Conquest from 1518 to 1547," the "Historia de Mexico," Anvers, 1554; the "Historia di Cortez," Venice, 1560, in clear script type; Duran's manuscript work on the ancient history of the Indians, in three bulky treatises; Coronado's "Relacion" of conquests in Costa Rica, 1562, and the manuscript copies of reports and journals by priests and officers in the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, collected from the Mexican general archives, and whatever is needed to fill the void among published works in the shape of manuscript copies from archives and libraries of Seville and Madrid, as well as celebrated private collections abroad. Benzon's, Oviedo's, and Acosta's histories of the sixteenth century; Herrera, the royal chronicler, in three editions, including the rare one of 1601; Remesal's rare "History of Chiapa and Guatemala," Madrid, 1619; Rihás, who treats of the northwest provinces of Mexico, bordering on the Californias; Burgoa, standard authority for southwest provinces, with their host of conferees, bring us down to Solís, the standard historian of Mexico, in the elegant Madrid edition of 1684, besides four other Spanish versions, two English, and one French. Bustamante, the Mexican historical writer, is represented by one hundred and ten volumes, besides the bulk of his manuscripts, which passed from the Maximilian library to the Bancroft shelves. The "Diario Oficial" of the choicest documents on Mexican history, the "Diario" of the Spanish Cortes since the beginning of the century, and filling several shelves, and the forty-nine volumes of the Gaceta of Mexico from 1784 to 1821,

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Burdette's Budget.

Mr. Frost is principal of a high school over in Illinois. Mr. Frost couldn't be anything else than a High school teacher. See? An i— Sir? No, sir; we didn't; he done it. Yes, sir; no, sir; we won't put it in. Yes, sir; it's tore up, and throwed in the waste-basket. We didn't see it till after it was wrote, sir. It come up in the copy dummy. The foreman done it.

Look at this, will you. We wrote: "Any sect that ever prayed before a pagoda or knelt in a mosque," and how do you think the lunatic who never can tell a "g" from a "q" set it up? "Knelt in a morgue." Fore heaven, if we could have clenched our fingers in his hair last Sunday, he would have wrapped his drapery of a morgue about him, and lay down to reap the reward of the errors done in the body, "Knelt in a morgue." A sweet place for public worship, isn't it? When a man gets so that he can't tell a morgue from a mosque, he ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts; hang him a most awful one in the place where his brains ought to be. It may not have the power to teach him anything; but it can kill him, and improve the appearance of the paper in subsequent numbers.

Mrs. Howe says "women do not fall in love any more." Ah, well! Perhaps Mrs. Howe's charming and beautiful daughter is a much better authority on that subject than her gifted mother. You see, Mrs. Howe, there comes a time when we—when we are apt to—well, the plain fact of the matter is, other people do not grow old at eighteen just because we do at forty-five. There are girls falling in love, headlong, every day, in the same old, impulsive, romantic, beautiful, unquestioning fashion that used to prevail when their mothers' mothers' mothers wore dimples twenty years old. When the time comes that men and women do not fall in love, you may just nickel-plate this poor old world and sell it for a moon. There will be nobody on it when that time comes. Women don't fall in love any more? Of course not; they can't perform impossibilities, and they can not fall in love any more than they do, unless the years are made longer.

Joseph Cook met with a painful accident on his way to Japan. During the prolonged continuance of most vehement meteorological disturbances and electrical discharges and phenomena, accompanied by irregular and violent undulations and movements of the saline aqua, he was abruptly impelled from his insecurely established footing on the superior deck to a recumbent position on the deck subjacent. The hoardness of the deck, aggravated by the nailiness of the spikes, dismembered the cartilaginousness of the enribbed sides. The injuries caused by the fallness of the fall were skillfully ensured by the chururgeon, and in the near To-be, the ecrochasmilated antichism resultant from the saline-aquatic porphyritic blendings will leave no residue of their one-time hereness in the system of the sufferer, who will remember them only by their ever-present goneness.

Bill Nye's Boomerangs.

The Bologna sausage will be in favor this winter, as was the case last season in our best circles. It will be caught up at the end and tied in a plain knot, with strings of the same.

An exchange has the following, which is a joke on Pullman car porters, very likely: "The Pullman train hadn't run more than ten miles before the robbers headed it. 'You're lucky,' said one of the passengers to the leader of the gang, 'the porter hasn't been through the car yet.'"

A mild-eyed youth, wearing a dessert-spoon hat and polka-dot socks, went into Middle Park the other day and claimed to be a mining expert. The boys inveigled him into driving a stick of giant powder into a drill-hole at the bottom of a shaft with an old axe, and now they are trying to get him out of the ground with ammonia and a tooth-brush.

We desire to call the attention of those who love and admire the Indian at a distance of two thousand miles, to the aesthetic love for the beautiful which prompts the crooked-fanged and dusky bride of old Fly-up-the-Creek to rob the soap-grease man and the glue factory that she may make a Cheyenne holiday. The Indian maiden at the present moment stands on a lofty crag of the Rocky Mountains, beautiful in her wild simplicity, wearing the fringed garments of her tribe. To the sentimentalist she appears outlined against the glorious sky of the new West, wearing a coronet of eagle's feathers and a health corset trimmed with fantastic bead-work and wonderful and impossible designs of savage art. Shall we then rush in, and with ruthless hand shatter this beautiful picture? Shall we portray her as she appears on her return from the great slaughter-house benefit and moral aggregation of digestive mementoes? Shall we draw a picture of her clothed in a horse-blanket, with a necklace of the false teeth of the pale face, and her coarse, unkempt hair hanging over her smoky features, and clinging to her warty, bony neck? No, no. Far be it from us to destroy the lovely vision of copper-colored grace and smoke-tanned beauty which the freckled student of the effete East has erected in the rose-hued chambers of fancy. Let her dwell there as the plump-limbed princess of a brave people. Let her adorn the hat-rack of his imagination, proud, beautiful, grand, gloomy, and peculiar, while as a matter of fact she is at that moment leaving the vestibule of the slaughter-house, conveying in the soiled lap-robe, which is her sole adornment, the mangled lungs of a Texas steer. No man shall ever say that we have busted the beautiful cigar-sign vision that he has erected in his memory. Let the graceful Indian queen that has lived on in his heart ever since he studied history and saw the graphic picture of Columbus, in which Columbus is just unsheathing his bread-knife and the stage Indians are fleeing to the tall brush—let her, we say, still live on. The ruthless hand that writes nothing but everlasting truth, and the stub pencil that yanks the cloak of the false and artificial from cold and perhaps unpalatable fact, will spare this little imaginary Indian maiden with a hack-comb and gold garters. Let her withstand the onward march of centuries, while the true Indian maiden eats the fricassee locust of the plains and wears the cavalry pants of progress.

also from the Maximilian library, are invaluable historical matter. The standard travels and illustrated works include Cook and Vancouver, in French and English, and all the familiar collections of celebrated navigators, the Royal Geographical Society's journals, in forty volumes; the "Nouvelles Annales des Voyages," ranging from 1809 to 1863; and the now priceless—because the only complete—set of "The Wilkes Exploring Expedition," in twenty folios, with several volumes of colored plates. Kingsborough's "Mexican Antiquities," in elegant folio, superbly illustrated; Waldeck's "Antiquities of Yucatan," with folio photographs by Charnay, and the "Ruins of Palenque" by the same author, with plates in elephant folio, reveal the noble architecture of the Aztec empire. Of the American and British modern writers on history or antiquities, it is believed not one is wanting, while the titles given are a mere flavor, as one may say, of the collection, which includes three hundred rare hooks of great value as ancient or unique works, which are modestly worth from fifty to five hundred dollars in the book markets of the world, setting aside the priceless manuscripts and transcripts, on the price of which silence is preserved lest it should seem like extravagance to common readers. Besides the copies from government archives in Washington, Mexico, and the Continent, the Bancroft library is rich in family papers presented by old Spanish and pioneer Californian families, especially the Bandini and Vallejo collections, (the former covering the period between 1769 and 1845, and as the work of a prominent public man during Mexican domination, most valuable for the promised history of California). The Vallejo papers, in forty stout volumes, including documents from 1800 to the American possession, are equally important, as linking the Mexican and American periods together, and giving a lively picture of the bear-flag times. The papers which Benjamin Hayes, formerly judge of Los Angeles County, had collected since 1850, with a view to a history of Southern California, were given by him to the library before his death, believing that the work would be better accomplished in its hands. The papers of Thomas O. Larkin, consul at Monterey from 1844 to 1846, and afterward United States Naval Agent at the post, presented by his son, are another important collection. The old Spanish residents of the State, the Castros, Alvarados, and Picos, have vied in contribution of valuable material, and the history of California from such resources must be presented with a fullness which leaves nothing to be desired.

The unique possession of the library, however, is its store of manuscripts and personal narratives, to obtain which Mr. Bancroft and his assistants made visits to Oregon, British Columbia, and various parts of California, to hear and take down the reminiscences of old pioneers. A thousand such experiences are recorded in the clearly written manuscript folios of the library, and what a wealth of history is here preserved of the most interesting kind! History never was, never will be, written with the eloquence with which it is told by those who took part in it. No Iliads have the moving pathos, the simple grandeur of those told by hunters, Indian-fighters, and old settlers, around their own hearths. The force of expression, the unconscious matchless poetry, the picturesque incident in which nature speaks, taught the old poets and chroniclers their art, before which modern skill can only be silent and admire. One such Odyssey of the Sierra, or the redwood forests, can fascinate all classes. What, then, of a thousand such? What material for poet, magazinist, novelist, to be found in the California history! Imagine Charles Reade and Clarke Russell, with such a store of romance to draw upon! In the historic collection of such a library, one sees hovering the winged fancies of noble epics, of dramatic poems like those of Browning, the legends of a new "Earthly Paradise" like that of William Morris, and the plots of endless novels, touching and exciting, which must soon drop the name of fiction, seeing they have so much stronger material in reality.

If any one ask to what end was this collection made, in which the labor of twenty-five years and a half million of money have been freely spent, the answer is ready that the research, the accumulation, the study of such a library, to a man of high tastes, is the finest pleasure he can have out of his life and fortune. While ransacking the bookseller's shops on the streets and quays of Paris, Vienna, Leipzig, or exploring the rich libraries of Madrid and Seville, going over the boards of paper-sellers and the wares of old convents, or reporting in shorthand the garrulous memories of old Californians, under their own vine and eucalyptus, Mr. Bancroft has doubtless found more interest, more compensation, than his work will bring him in any other shape, whether of fame or profit. Such labor, to those who are moved to undertake it, is in itself the richest reward, always excepting those labors of humanity which are the supreme blessedness of life. But the owner of such treasures is soon brought to feel that they include the duty to share their benefits with the world. Out of the library, when it had taken shape, with some sixteen thousand volumes, ten years or more ago, rose the plan of the history of the Pacific Slope of America, from Darien to Alaska. Its collections, of which, from its manuscripts to its files of four hundred Pacific newspapers, it is simply impossible to speak within limits, have since then been symmetrically arranged for the purpose of the history—such preparation as never before was made for royal chronicle or modern historian. Five introductory volumes on the "Native Races of the Pacific States," seven years ago, which at once took place as standard authorities with such scholars as Herbert Spencer, Lecky, Carlyle, and Draper, were the first fruits of the library. And now the first volume of the history of Central America leads the way to a consistent knowledge of the Spanish possessions, for the same mountain chain, the same climatic influences, and the same conquest unite the countries of the Southern and Central Pacific coasts. The history, which designs to include the annals of four centuries in something like thirty volumes, treats fully and in detail of the period of discovery, passing from south to north, in regular order, making California its central interest as the key of the Pacific States.

With such resources of material, it can not but be condensed, strong, and absorbing. The study of the ancient chroniclers has molded the direct, nervous, yet picturesque style, which is not so much that of the cabinet historian as that of an enthusiastic writer seduced into a task which absorbs sympathies and brains, and in which the reader presently becomes absorbed and enthusiastic also. Besides the many documents relating to the discovery of America printed of late, in Spain and by various historical societies, much of the material for this interesting part of history has been drawn from the archives of Nicaragua, Guatemala, and other Central American States. New light is thrown upon the character of Columbus and the attitude of the Spanish crown toward its new possessions. The former, if less the hero of Irving's "Life," appeals more strongly to our sympathies—faulty, ambitious, fanatical, and disappointed as he appears in the light of bare facts; while Spain as the protector of the Indians, by ordinances and royal letters, is certainly a strange rôle for that cruel government. The history of the isthmus reads like one long romance, in which caciques, with armors of gold and state robes of brilliant feathers, offer baskets of gulf pearls as tribute, and pay superior honors to their invaders and their invaders' horses alike. The temple of Dabaiba, lined with gold; Utatlan, palace of the Quichés, built of mosaic, colossal in dimensions, with garden courts, menageries, aviaries, lakes, and fountains within its walls, its throne-room canopied with costly featherwork, and the maidens' college, where were reared the females of royal blood; Cakchiquel, built on a platform six hundred feet high, a single narrow causeway across the chasm on all sides, city of the black oracle stone; Golfo Dulce, and the Isle of Pearls, the simple Indians offering roses to the horse of Cortez as a supernatural being—are the figures among which move the gold-hungry Spaniards in a career of avarice and blood. The treachery by which Balboa was slain, the ambush set for Alvarado, the march of Cortés across the isthmus, are tragic pictures with a background of intrigue, treachery, and desperate adventure. In an earthly paradise, human nature, set free from the interference of civilization, turned tiger, when it was not devil; but its vices, at least, were heroic in size and its incidents of a large, dramatic sort—which is, also, the most that can be said for the greater part of the world's history, and creates vivid historic reading. And now the warehouses and supply depots, the hospitals and gangs of workmen, of the transcontinental company occupy the route where Balboa dragged ship-timbers through the forests by his six thousand Indian serfs, and where Cortés struggled through swamps and bridged morasses with his famine-stricken army. There are yet pearls in the Southern Sea, and gold in the mines of Guatemala, and forest-grown temples in Yucatan, by whose sites the conqueror marched unheeding, or they might have no stones left to tell the tale. For those who would know the history of their own continent it is time to begin reading, for the stores of discovery and of annals open before them invitingly; and as the records of the historian enamored of his subject will leave many unsatisfied until they can explore the original authorities, the existence of such a perfect library of history will become better acknowledged a necessity and a public benefaction.

An old Oriental story relates that one day Moolla Museerodeen, in a mosque, ascended the desk, and thus addressed his audience: "O children of the faithful, do ye know what I am going to say?" They answered, "No." "Well, then," replied he, "it's of no use wasting my time on such a stupid set," and, saying this, he came down and dismissed them. Next day he again mounted the desk, and asked, "O true Mussulmans, do ye know what I am going to say?" "We do," say they. "Then," replied he, "there is no need for me to tell you;" and again he let them go. The third time his audience thought they should catch him; and on his putting the usual question, they answered, "Some of us do, and some of us do not." "Well, then," replied he, "let those who know tell those who do not."

A Newport correspondent quotes Miss Louie Jerome, who is visiting Mrs. Paron Stevens at Newport, as one of the belles of the season. "She is," writes the correspondent, "an attractive and graceful figure on a coach-box or in a drawing-room. Miss Jerome has received an injury to one of her remarkably fine eyes, which, fortunately, does not at all disfigure her. But the disfigurement is accomplished by art, when the young lady puts in her eye that abomination, a single eye-glass, and scans the crowd of admirers who always encircle her chair."

At the last Prince's garden party in London the caprice of fashion was the parol. Some specimens were of great value. There was a plague of jewels on the top of a white one which dazzled the eyes of the beholder. The queen, whose sight had been caught by the topazes and amethysts, encircled by rows of seed pearls, with which it was adorned, turned away with manifest disapprobation, and, like the angel in Moore's poem, "never looked again."

During the service in the cathedral at the Illyrian city of Ragusa, some weeks ago, the officiating priest, a member of the Society of Jesuits, was stabbed to death by a girl whom he had betrayed. She inflicted five wounds. The congregation poured into the street amid wild excitement, and the girl was taken into custody. The cathedral was built by Richard I., and contains Titian's celebrated picture of "The Assumption."

It is related of Mrs. Vashti Bartlett, who lately died in Baltimore, that her social circle was very large, and that at one time she counted among her friends seventeen couples who had all been married within a few weeks. She invited them to her home, and gave a sumptuous dinner to the seventeen brides, who were accompanied by their husbands and friends.

The father of a St. Louis bride presented his son-in-law with eighty thousand head of cattle. "Papa dear," exclaimed his daughter, when she heard of it, "that was so kind of you; Charlie's awfully fond of ox-tail soup."

The guests have dined, and the host hands round a case of cigars. "I don't smoke, myself," he says, "but you will find them good—my man steals more of them than of any other brand I ever had."

A Boston girl attracted a multitude by having her boots blacked, just like a man, in front of the Revere House.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.
 Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.
 News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 417 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.
 The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.
 Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.
 No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.
 Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.
 Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."

A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY Editor.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1882.

CONTENTS:

EDITORIALS:	Page	SOCIETY:	Page
Ex-Governor Stanford's Letter—The Many Routes Which Run, or May be Used, in Opposition to the Railroad—A Plain Statement of Facts Candidly Submitted to Good and Tax-paying Citizens—A Comparison Between the Old and the New Methods of Traveling in this State—The few Privileges really Given to Railroads in this State—A Parallel Instance—The Municipal Republican Conventions and their Nominations—The Excellent Choice of the B'nai B'rith Convention in Comparison with Platt's Hall Machine Candidates—The Bullfinch's Extreme Previousness in the Matter of Mr. Lloyd and the Water Company—Why a Compromise would be Worse than Senseless.	1-9	The McDowell Reception to General Miller—Who were There—The Whitney-Myrick Wedding—The Godley Reception—Other Weddings of the Week—Notes and Gossip.	1-2
		THE MAN-DOG.	2
		AN OLD FAVORITE.	2
		SENSE AND SENTIMENT.	2
		ENGLISH NIMRODS (Our London Letter).	3
		A GIRLY-GIRL.	3
		THE BANCROFT LIBRARY.	6-7
		THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.	7
		THE VANITY FAIR.	10
		LITERARY NOTES.	10
		STORYTELLERS.	12
		THE STROLLING PLAYERS.	12
		THEATRICAL GOSSIP.	12
		THE TUNEFUL LIAR.	14

When Governor Stanford replied to the interrogations propounded to him concerning railroad management, he struck a centre-shot in the opening words of his letter by denying that the railroad transportation facilities of California constituted an oppressive monopoly. We have so long been accustomed to hear railroads spoken of as monopolies, varied by all the qualifying adjectives as oppressive and tyrannical; so long have we heard the din and clamor of the politician, on stump and in convention, pronounce railroad corporations as enemies of our interests and obstructionists of our material progress; we have witnessed so many efforts to regulate them, to control them from the exercise of "extortionate" acts, the collection of "unreasonable" fares and freights; we have so continuously heard from demagogues, sand-lot adventurers, journalistic blackmailers, discontented traders, and small politicians of all parties; so long have we heard all this that we have come to accept the terms of "railroad" and "monopoly" as if they were synonyms for an undefined evil. Without reflecting, the unthinking part of the community has come to believe that railroading has become an antagonistic interest, because of its illegal and unreasonable exactions as to fares and freights, its unjust discriminations as to localities and individuals, its oppressive and illegal acts, and has deemed it the duty of the State Government to wrest its management from the hands of its owners, and place its control under the direction of politicians—in a word, to take from the corporation its directors and servants; to wrest from the owners and their agents the control of a vast private property, and give it to individuals to be chosen under our elective system. It is admitted that railroading is a complicated business, but imperfectly understood by the very best minds that have given to it long years of patient study and have had in its departments long years of experience; that railroads are constructed and equipped with the expenditure of vast sums of money, and that their ownership is guaranteed by the same laws which protect all private property; yet because their use is for the public, because the Government has, at the expense and cost of railroad companies and for the benefit of the public, exercised its sovereign prerogative of eminent domain, because municipal, State, and general governments have loaned credits and money—although in the instances of all the Californian roads, the credits have been protected and the money repaid; that because of all these things the public at large has somehow a right, through its political machinery, to place the management of railroad property under official control, take it from its owners, and turn it over to those who do not own it, and this because in the hands of its owners it is a monopoly, oppressive in its operations, and not administered for the best interest of the community doing business with it. It is upon this assumption that State conventions pass resolutions, and that rival office-seekers stump the State, to denounce the management of railroads for "enslaving commerce," and by unjust and tyrannical acts impeding the progress and hindering the prosperity of the people for whose benefit and accommodation they were presumably constructed. Governor Stanford, not stopping to explain that the primary law of self-interest so identifies railroading with the progress and prosperity of the locality in which it is located as to make it impossible for even a selfish and mercenary directory to ignore the interests of the community in which it does business, goes directly to the point of the controversy, and denies that the system of railroading with which he is connected is a monopoly in law or in fact. It is not a monopoly in law, because any respectable association of capitalists can obtain a franchise for railroad building under general laws. Any association can obtain the right of way by purchase, or by demanding from the authority of the Government that it invoke its right of eminent domain for the public good; that is, for the building of a public highway for the public use. Governor Stanford further claims that the obtaining of money or credit from governments or individuals is a matter of negotiation, depending upon the condition of the money market, the public necessity, the character of the security, the promise of performance or payment—conditions open alike to all who would engage in the construction of national highways. He asserts that it is not a monopoly, because one company has the right to parallel every mile of the road of another company; that the Californian railroads under his management are not monopolies, because "it so happens that the principal volume of the "business of California is subject to competition by water "transportation, and, further, that the only real monopoly "that the railroads can have is to the extent that they are "able to do business cheaper and better for their patrons "than can otherwise be done, and to that extent the monopol—"oly—if monopoly it is—is beneficent in character."

We question whether our readers have ever sufficiently considered the extent of the navigable waters of our State in connection with their rivalry with any artificial highways that may come in competition with them. Our entire sea-coast, with its bays, harbors, inlets, and roadsteads, owing to the peculiar character and pacific nature of our ocean, affords opportunities for receiving and discharging cargo along the entire ocean shore. Our great Bay of San Francisco, with its interior bays, gives shipping facilities to the very agricultural heart of the State; while the great navigable streams of the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, with their hayous and navigable tributaries, reach north and south through great, productive, and populous valleys, offering steamships and sailing vessels an easy access to the largest part of our improved and most productive farming lands. The Bay of Monterey is at the entrance of the splendid valley of the Salinas. The entire shore along San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and San Buenaventura may send its products to the sea. There is no better harbor in America than San Diego. The harbor at Wilmington is ample for the accommodation of shipments from Los Angeles and San Bernardino; while the Colorado River sweeps around to the eastern side of our State, with its stretch of navigable water for hundreds of miles. All these are natural highways. No State has such a system of natural commercial arteries, or so many miles of ocean, bay, and river navigation. No railroad system in America is to such an extent subjected to such a competition with water; and Governor Stanford does not misstate the facts when he declares that the only way he can monopolize transportation, in competition with this system of navigable water-courses, is to do the business for his patrons cheaper and better than it can otherwise be done. We know it is charged that the railroad company also monopolize the steamship navigation of our interior waters. This is disposed of by simple denial. In the years '75, '76, and '77, as we gather from the figures of an official report, there was a carrying capacity represented by 16,133 tons of steamers and barges, that had been built within three years by parties in outside competition. During this time the railroad had not built a single steamer to be used, except for ferry and other like direct connections. On the coast, on the Feather River, upper Sacramento and San Joaquin, and on the interior bay shores and elsewhere, the company does not engage in competitive transportation in rivalry with steam lines. Steamships are only subsidiary to their regular lines of roads. That the railroad has not destroyed, or even retarded, the general steam navigation of California is proved by the large steam and canvas fleet now engaged in navigating our interior and ocean shore routes. The Californian railroad system comes in direct competition with the navigable waters in bay and river, where competition is active throughout its entire length. On the California Central, as we count upon the map, this is the case at nine different places; on the Central Pacific, at some twenty-five different points, besides crossing the San Joaquin River and other navigable streams. The southern road is in competition at Yuma for freight with the Colorado, and at Los Angeles with the sea. The extent of navigable shore lines, taking the sea and hay coasts together with both sides of river and slough hanks, gives over three thousand miles from which the products of farm, forest, and mine may be shipped. From the Oregon line to the Mexican boundary, including the sinuous lines of the bays, there are twelve hundred miles of shore line—Suisun Slough, twenty-eight miles; Napa River, thirty-six; Petaluma Creek, sixteen; Sacramento River, (Collinsville to Red Bluff,) six hundred and fifty; Feather River, (Vernon to Marysville,) sixty; San Joaquin, from Collinsville to head of navigation, five hundred and forty; Stanislaus River, to Knight's Ferry, ninety-six; Tuolumne and branches, ninety; Merced River, to Snelling, one hundred; Colorado, west side, two hundred and fifteen miles—while within the borders of the State the Pacific system embraces less than seventeen hundred miles of road altogether. That this competition does tell upon the business of the road is indicated by the constantly decreasing rates, as they are fixed from year to year. There is no single spot to-day in the State of California where the average railroad freights are not cheaper than the rates that existed before railroad construction. There are no points of travel in the State that are not now cheaper by rail than they were by stage or steamer before the time of the railroad. There is no locality in the State reached by rail where the prices of land and all its productions have not been advanced in value. There is no spot in the State, no community or class of individuals, where a respectable minority would willingly return to the condition of the ante-railroad era. There is no honest business man or property owner who does not recognize the vast benefits arising from railroad construction, and there is no intelligent man outside of politics who does not acknowledge the good it has accomplished. In noticing the possibilities of rivalry in transportation between the natural highways and the railroads, it must not be forgotten that our waters are open twelve months in the year, never closed by ice or snow, and that our climate, because of its dryness, allows some months for the farmer to transport his grain from the field to the landing. Nor must the fact be lost sight of that Messrs. Stanford & Co. do not own the North Pacific Coast Railroad, that skirts the ocean to Mendocino County; nor the North Coast road, that opens up Sonoma Valley; nor the South Coast narrow-gauge railway to San José and Santa Cruz, and several other roads now operating successfully in this State. To say that the Central Pacific Railroad system is a monopoly, simply because it would demand a hundred millions of dollars to rival it and to compete with it, and that it ought to be managed by others than its owners, because its owners will not give the benefit of their brains, the result of their earnings, and the luck of their opportunities over to an adventurous mob of hairless and impecunious politicians, is to confiscate their property and to strike a fatal blow at all future enterprise. It is to establish a precedent that will pursue every enterprise and all capital that may, by the most liberal interpretation, be considered as of a quasi public character. It will be a precedent that will place all business and business men, all property, wealth, enterprise, all public affairs and private pursuits, at the mercy of an unmerciful gang of agrarians and communists, whose only aim in life is to take from those who have something, and appropriate it to themselves who have nothing. That "property is theft," they assert; that "land ought to be as free to use as air and water," they have now the audacity to proclaim; that there should be at death a reversion of all property to the State, is with them a cardinal principle. Every business man, every owner of land, and every man who would transmit his accumulations to his heirs or devisees is interested in arresting a doctrine of confiscation that will only be first applied to railroad property. This article is written for the home and fireside consideration of the reader. He will have the right to reflect upon this matter and conclude whether the railroad is an oppressive monopoly to himself; and, in coming to a conclusion upon this question, let him alone consider how it personally affects himself. Let him be fair enough to admit the logic of his location, the business in which he is engaged, and, discarding from his mind the passionate and prejudiced arguments of politicians and the business rivalries of traders and merchants, let him confine his observation to the effect railroads have had upon his own personal comforts, the surroundings of his own home, the profits of his own business, and the advancement and progress of his own immediate locality. This article will be read by hundreds of old Californians; those who, like the writer, have tramped along the snow-paths of the Sierra in winter, and up and down the burning trails of its mountain slopes in summer, carrying flour and bacon, pan and rocker, pick and blankets, upon their backs; who have tramped across the broad and dusty valleys of the Sacramento and San Joaquin, too poor to ride; who have paid fifty cents per pound to haul their hard-tack and jerk from Sacramento to Hangtown: who have paid twenty dollars for passage in the old Senator from Sacramento to San Francisco; who, in the later times, paid for a passage of eight hours between the same places eight dollars, even down to the day of the railroad—a trip now made in half the time for one-fourth the money. The early ones will remember the cost and labor of a trip to Oakland, the trip to San José, the trip to anywhere. The early politicians will recall a stumping tour by stage-coach, over the long and weary stretches of plain, and with mules, along perilous paths, when a Congressional nomination for the San Francisco district involved a pilgrimage of twelve hundred miles. The early citizen will remember his costly and perilous passage across the Isthmus "to the States," and all these things in contrast with the inexpensive, and comfortable, and speedy transportation of the railroad of to-day. The dwellers in Los Angeles and San Bernardino, in the lower valley of the San Joaquin River, and in the upper valley of the Sacramento, will recall those ante-railroad days, when they were isolated, when their now beautiful and lovely homes were desert wastes, unoccupied and houseless. They will contrast those times with the present, and when Mr. Estee, shaven and shorn, with clean shirt and linen duster, steps from his comfortable silver sleeping-car to an upholstered hall, where fair women beam upon him, and he there denounces Governor Stanford and those early pioneers who became railroad builders, let the old fathers and white-haired mothers of the fair-faced boys and bright-eyed girls, remind him of the time when, weary and worn, with unclean linen and unkempt hair, the old guard of party orators unlimbered from mule or stage-coach to speak in open air in vindication of a party that made railroads possible. Let them recall the time anterior to railroad building, and, contrasting the now and then, fairly and honestly answer to themselves whether Governor Stanford and his associates deserve the denunciations, the personal abuse, and the malicious innuendo that form the hurden of appeal of nearly all the place-hunters, Democratic and Republican, who are now perambulating the State in pursuit of an opportunity to make an easy living out of office.

To us all this anti-railroad rant, all this rivalry of politicians in the use of strange oaths against companies, seems dishonest and crazy. It convinces us that we have fallen upon prosperous and happy days when in State politics there is found no other issue than this of transportation, and in municipal politics no other complaint than that the water tax is distributed to property as well as individuals. The truth is, our people are not oppressed by railroads. They are in every respect benefited by them, and all this cry against railroads is false and hollow sham, created by politicians for their personal benefit. It has had its day in England and all over Europe, in the Eastern and lately in the Western States. The hour of passion, prejudice, ignorance, and misconception has passed; differences have been adjusted; mutual interests and business rules have harmonized what was discordant. In almost every part of the United States railroads are working in friendly coöperation, and without friction with all other business interests. It will be so in California in time. It will come from natural causes and through the beahtful operation of business laws, and not through the agitation of demagogues or the formulation of false political issues. Railroads must not be held responsible for all the greed, avarice, and grasping ambition of the unscrupulous men who are gamblers in railroad stocks. There is the same wide difference and normal distinction between the railroad builder who plans, constructs, and owns railroads, and who uses the earnings for the construction of other lines—the ambitious, enterprising, pushing railroad builder and operator—as there is between the men who exploit mines, and engage in the legitimate industry of actual mining, and the stock gambler who weaves his web of criminal devices to catch the industrious and toiling poor. The railroad corporations and the railroad properties that are controlled by Vanderbilt and Jay Gould are not responsible if those men corner the stock market, or if they control the Western Union Telegraph Company, elevated railroads, and steamship lines; bribe legislatures, corrupt governors, and debauch courts of justice. It is the men themselves who must be held responsible for these dishonorable and criminal practices. Governor Stanford says truly when he declares that his railroad system is not a monopoly. If this article were written in personal defense of Governor Stanford and his associates—which it is not—it would be proper to call attention to the fact they are still builders of roads; that they are to-day in the field with ten thousand laborers pushing their work to the Gulf of Mexico and to the Oregon boundary line; that the Salinas Valley road and an Ocean Shore road are in contemplation; and that from the Mojave they are pushing eastward for a third transcontinental line; that Governor Stanford promotes the interest of this city, Sacramento, and the entire State by his enterprising expenditures in the encouragement of horse-breeding, viticulture, woolen and other manufactures; and that Mr. Crocker is a large builder of elegant property in this city. We might point to Monterey and its improvements, to their residences which adorn our city, to their cable-roads, as evidences of their value as public-spirited and enterprising citizens. We might, we trust, even without deserving the reproach of being a railroad organ, say that we would not have these men denounced as criminals by a blackmailing and censorious press, or driven from the State by political blackguards, until they have accomplished the important public works now in hand. No corporation, formed under general laws and having no exclusive privilege, can be styled a "monopoly." When special acts conferred special privileges, when railroad, water, and gas franchises could be conferred only by acts of special legislation, they were, as Governor Stanford says, "from that fact necessarily monopolies, enjoying 'privileges which others could not possess. But our corporation laws are antagonistic to such privileges, and provide for the prosecution of every character of legitimate 'business through the coöperation of capital and numbers. Under these laws no enterprise, however great, but can find the requisite numbers and the requisite capital to be 'associated in its prosecution, if it offer sufficient inducement 'and reward, and this insures all needful regulative competition. Excessive profit arising upon any enterprise is the 'strongest attractive force to capital to engage in competitive undertakings. The aggregated capital of the many is 'thus made to balance the accumulations in the hands of 'the few. Our corporation laws offer no special privileges, 'the State grants nothing through them, and acts only for 'the purpose of aiding the natural right of association. It 'is upon this natural right of association that society itself 'is organized, and the legal association of capital and numbers is only the exercise of the same natural right that a 'man has to call in his neighbor to assist him in rolling a 'log or raising his barn. It is the foundation and security 'of our republican institutions; for so long as the people 'can associate themselves together with the right to express 'their ideas, and organize to give them force, it can not be 'otherwise than that the majority must rule." The writer has for twenty-eight years lived at the corner of Fillmore and Union streets in the city of San Francisco. His residence reaches back to that time of his life when he was toiling at his profession for his support; when there were no streets; when sewers and sidewalks were things unknown; when gas and water-mains had not been laid; when an omnibus drive of one mile and a half cost half a dollar, and at a time when, if the mud was too deep, the omnibus did not run. He has walked back and forth through wind and mud, in summer's heat and winter's storm, a distance which in the aggregate would reach around the world. To-day, with his cigar, he takes an elegant cable-car at his door, and for five cents is landed in twenty-two minutes at Montgomery Street. This Potrero Cable Road is a monopoly. It is the same kind of monopoly of which the residents in Fresno, Merced, Kern, and Tulare counties complain. It has the privilege to use the streets—"the sovereign right of eminent domain." It did not pay for this privilege. The property owners were compelled to grade and sewer the street for railroad use. It occupies the centre of the street, and has the right of way over vehicles or pedestrians. It discriminates in its fares. It costs five cents to ride from the ferry to Harbor View, and it costs the writer five cents to ride less than half the distance. It discriminates in favor of passengers. It will not let the writer's dog "Snyder" ride at any price. It is arbitrary, exacting, and tyrannical in refusing to allow freight to be transported inside the car, or boarding-house women to carry corned beef, dripping blood upon the seats. It is grasping in its endeavor to secure all the passengers it can possibly carry. Its owners are growing rich. Its stock has advanced more than fifty per cent. within a year. In every sense that the Central Pacific Railroad Company is a monopoly, the Potrero Cable Railroad is a monopoly. As the cable-road has given value to the writer's property, made his home accessible, added to his comforts, and reduced the toil and cost of his daily trips from home to office, so has the railroad system of California contributed to its wealth, promoted the prosperity of all its parts, and added to the comfort of all its people. Should any number of impecunious Twelfth Ward loafers endeavor to run Mr. Estee as candidate for the Board of Supervisors upon the same principles as are set out in the Republican State platform, and should he interpret those declarations as he speaks of the railroad managers of this State in his speeches, we should reserve to ourselves the privilege of withholding from him our vote. If we found that he had been nominated by the propertyless whisky-sellers and the untaxed corner-grocers, by violence, fraud, and forged papers of registration, we should deem it a duty to expose the fact. If, during the canvass, Mr. Estee, as candidate of the whisky-dealers and corner-grocers, should obtain from them the money to make his canvass, and, in event of his election, should promise to keep open saloons on Sunday, and should in all his speeches favor Sunday as a day of "rest and recreation," we should think he meant "rest" in a whisky saloon on Sunday, indulging himself in the "recreation" of playing pitch seven-up for beer. In a word, we should think Mr. Estee, our candidate for supervisor from the Twelfth Ward, a political hypocrite and humbug.

To the average Republican who wants no office, and "don't care a d—n what happens, so long as it don't happen to him," the situation of municipal politics is eminently satisfactory. After the State Convention, and while the Hectors and Achilleses of the party were chasing each other around our municipal walls, hewing and slashing each other; while Higgins was editing the Bulletin in the interest of the boys, and imploring all the political divinities to give them another primary; when "lovers" might disport themselves, and when bruisers might practice the manly art of muscular æsthetics upon all Republicans who would not pledge themselves to wear the collar and the brand of the machine, the Argonaut said in substance, that "we do not care how or by whom conventions are called; we will await the result and determine by the character of the convention whether it would be likely to do good work." The County Committee undoubtedly exceeded the authority that belonged to its office in naming delegates, who should associate other delegates with them in performance of the duty of nominating candidates for municipal office. The exigencies of the situation demanded such action. The Republican organization was in the hands of the bosses. The bosses are three. Their headquarters are known, and their agents are known. Apparently respectable men are willingly used by them as candidates for office, and as delegates for conventions. These bosses had just held a primary in San Francisco, and had secured a large majority of its delegates to a State Convention. They had nominated the Governor against the man who, had there been no unfair politics, would have been the choice of the State Convention by acclamation; they had caused a platform to be put forth which ignored all the time-honored principles of the party, and in its place substituted the one already formulated by the Democracy. This primary had been conducted in fraud and violence. Its proceedings were outrageous—in defiance, not only of party usage, but of decency and law. To have held another primary as the bosses demanded, and, as the Bulletin desired, would have been attended by the same results. It would have given the city of San Francisco over to the control of Higgins, Gannon, and Chute, from whom we rescued it at the late election. It would have defeated Blake for Mayor, Brickwedel for Auditor, and John Sedgwick for Sheriff, whom last year the machine opposed. It would have restored the street department to the ring. It would have reëlected the street-sweeper's contract. It would have robbed the treasury, plundered the tax-payers, reëstablished in the Board of Supervisors the old ring of seven, and placed our municipal affairs again in the hands of political and party thieves. There would have been another Stuart in the Clerk's office, to disgrace and dishonor the community. The County Committee had the courage to defy the bosses, the machine, and the Bulletin. It gave us the names of good men, and these added the names of good citizens; and, in spite of their daily denunciation by the Bulletin as "Duffers," in spite of its continued assaults upon them as obscure and unknown men, in spite of its insinuations that they were the slaves of Spring Valley, and were led by Lloyd and Elliott, who in turn were coached by Spring Valley, this convention has given us a good ticket in the majority of its candidates. It has given us an excellent platform of resolutions—all the better because, in despite of the iron bedstead which the Bulletin had built for it, just "one per cent. long," it has given one of rational dimensions, upon which honest men can accommodate themselves.

When General Barnes explained that he had taken Mayor Blake and Auditor Brickwedel into counsel, in preparing that part of the platform that provided for the tax levy, be satisfied the Convention and all reasonable tax-payers that the resolutions were right, and that the Bulletin's iron bedstead was intended to be so uncomfortable that honest men could not lie upon it. When Mayor Blake declares, and Mr. Brickwedel assents to the declaration, that in the coming year it will be impossible to keep the tax levy within one per cent. and pay the current expenses and legal indebtedness without a deficiency, the wealth and intelligence of this city will see the propriety of an increased levy. Better have honest supervisors upon a liberal platform, than a set of rogues squirming within the short and iron rules of an impracticable pledge. The ticket, as nominated, is a strong one. Blake, Brickwedel, Sedgwick, Wilder, Widber, Mastick, Cowdery, Walter Leman, and James K. Wilson, for their respective offices, are most excellent nominations. John Cherry ought not to have been defeated for recorder. His long party service and the manner in which he had administered the duties of his office entitled him to renomination. Graham would not have been nominated, except that there was no other candidate against him than Patterson, and his memory is unsavory of contact with the machine-ring and the machine-sweeper. He owed his last nomination to the bosses. He made his appointments under boss dictation, and favored contracts in boss interests. Graham was the unwilling choice of many delegates in the Convention. It was Hobson's choice—the choice of two evils. It is a matter of some surprise and regret that the important office of

[CONTINUED ON FIFTH PAGE.]

VANITY FAIR.

On a woman's complexion (says Lilian Whiting) hang all the possibilities of immediate beauty. As it is a primary duty of woman to make her appearance just as attractive as possible, the proper care of the complexion is a matter to be considered. It is difficult to obtain on this matter reliable counsel. The ordinary druggist knows nothing, except, perhaps, to sell cosmetics, which are utterly ruinous, and as it is only the exception among women in ordinary life to employ a lady's maid skilled in all the mysteries of the toilette, it chances that many things which it were well to know are not attainable. Now, we all know how some actresses at forty look hardly half that age. Nor is this effect produced with any of the ordinary various cosmetics in vogue. The dozens of different powders, etc., are all alike simply ruinous to the skin, because of the poisonous white lead which is the basis of their composition, both in liquid and powder form. Now, to a woman who understands the proper care of the complexion from early youth up, advancing years have no terror. She can safely defy time. This care, of course, is by no means wholly external, though its entire perfection depends on external care. It includes a knowledge of hygiene, the cold bath in the morning, if one has the strength to endure this lively tonic; or, if not, the tepid sponge bath; the understanding of good food, and, as far as possible, early hours. For, be the cause what it may, there is a magic in the "sleep before midnight," which can never be found after that hour. Let us start from the consideration that attention to her appearance is not beneath any woman's attention, but is rather one of her social duties. Few know the uses of cold cream. It is by no means limited to being good for the hands, but has its uses in lieu of soap as a cleanser of the skin. None but the best brands should ever be used. Pineau's is reliable, and there are one or two others which are recommended. At night, after carefully washing the face with clear, soft water, and drying it on a fine damask towel, apply the cold cream, allowing it to remain until morning. After the bath, bathe the face in water in which a little French cologne is added, which brightens and tones the skin by invigorating it. Then apply the cold cream, which absorbs every imperfection and blemish, and wipe the face softly with a fine soft linen or baptiste towel. A trifle of the Lablache face-powder dusted over is a wonderful preserver of the skin, protecting it from the particles of dust and the wind, and preserving it entirely from roughness. But unless using this Lablache powder, use none. The ordinary kinds are cosmetics, not protectors, and their use is simply ruinous to the complexion. Any woman following these directions will find herself in ten days so wonderfully improved in complexion, that she will fully appreciate this bit of information. This improvement, to a marked degree, is absolute. Of course, it can be greatly enhanced or retarded by hygienic conditions of food, sleep, and baths.

We often feel annoyance, writes a lady from Europe, at the erroneous impressions we find among foreigners of American women, as a whole. Last night, at a friend's, I met an English girl of the aristocracy, a clever, frank girl, who looked me straight in the face, and said: "Your American girls are so pretty, but always so fast, you know." If you are wise you never argue with an Englishwoman. "Your English is not so bad," she said, again, "but it does amuse me to hear you Americans talk." In the next breath she asked me if I thought a certain court beauty, who was present, had gone off in her looks since I saw her last, and if I didn't think Oscar Wilde was quite nasty (pronounced nawsty).

Young ladies have shown a desire to make palmistry the next sensational folly. London Truth calls attention to an unrepented act of Parliament which imposes upon all who go about practicing the art the penalty of being scourged, having the ears cropped, and being placed in the pillory.

The fall styles for young men, and what is to be worn in scarfs, handkerchiefs, and other articles, may be found in this paragraph: In neckwear the puff scarf is to take the place of all the various shapes of flat "breast-plates." This is an adaptation of the French style, and the manufacturers are vying with one another in the endeavor to produce the handsomest effect. The small figure and polka dots that have been so popular in the past will be superseded by flaring colors and rich velvets. All the grounds are brilliantly lighted, and covered in the brightest tints—cardinal gold, bright blue, gendarme, etc. The De Joinville scarf also will find many admirers. The designs are mostly bold, in two-color spots and rings, and all over tissue satins. In handkerchiefs, new designs are shown in linen, with very striking figures and colors, mostly of a plain color surrounded by a brilliant border of Roman colors and large spots. The silk handkerchief is scarcely shown, save in the variety known as English silk, and plain white is to be more popular among the ultra fashionable than it has been for eight years. In half-hose Roman colors will be all the rage; terra cotta shade is to be, however, a strong favorite. In pure silks, for full-dress wear, black will be generally worn, but other solid colors—navy blue, garnet, etc.—will find purchasers. In collars there will be no material change, the standing, close-fitting collar finding the greatest number of admirers. There are no changes to report in shirts for evening dress, and, although some very dressy young men will wear an embroidered front, the plain hosom with small studs is the proper thing. The open front is worn more than it has been for years, and as it is something of a novelty of late years, it bids fair to be all the go. In underwear, heavy English Balbriggan suits are shown in all the æsthetic tints—terra alba, sage, and terra cotta—with silk stripes, though solid colors of the same tints will also be worn. These suits are very handsome, and will sell at from seven to fifteen dollars a suit. Pure silk underwear is unchanged in everything. It is a trifle too expensive for manufacturers to attempt to force any decided colors into it, and in the well known color it can not be imitated, and shows for itself. Suits for winter wear will cost from fifteen to twenty-five dollars, depending on the quality and size desired. Suspenders will be non-elastic silk in rich sporting designs, and the polka dot will be popular, variously mounted with silver, and gilt chains, and white calf-skin. The favorite colors for gloves will be mahogany and red tan; the material will be fine chevrete. It is impossible to thoroughly stamp out the standard black, though self-embroidered will be worn. In jewelry, the unique French patterns will find a ready sale for scarf-pins, as there is an increasing taste for designs that are not worn by everybody else; and as the fashions in this article change so frequently, gentlemen prefer to purchase the imported article in preference to the pure gold and jeweled pins shown by the jeweler. In rings and sleeve-buttons, hammered and plain Roman gold, encrusted, will be en règle. The stones to be worn are diamonds, aqua marine, jacinth, pink, tourmaline, and chrysolite, though much latitude is allowed in the matter.

English women have monstrous feet. Their hands are also large, though generally well shaped, and a number six glove is considered fit only for a fairy. A close observer of English beauties, after years of study, declares that there is not a pair of feet in the whole Saxon race that can compare with American women's in point of size and shapeliness; and what is more, even the much vaunted Parisienne's foot must yield the pas. The French woman dresses her feet better, that is all. How nice!

"It is said," remarks "Jay" in the Boston Gazette, "that very little jewelry is being worn by ladies who have the most of it; but do not make any mistake and believe all you hear. Quantities of jewelry are worn by the best people. Not those 'sets' or charms and lockets in vogue ten years ago, it is true, but the most unique devices—baubles, in fact, which would not look out of place in a cabinet of curiosities. The rarest gems are set in rings, and figure in pins that really fasten a bit of lace, or are stuck carelessly in the hair; the queerest little watches and 'charms' dangle from the belt, and bracelets of exquisite workmanship clasp a mosquetaire glove around the wrist. No jewelry, indeed! Every well dressed woman wears it, but she wears only what is odd and a gem in its way—something that is inconspicuous and very precious." Another fashion-writer remarks: "For possessors of costly jewelry the affectation is, excepting on great occasions, not to display it. When, however, the time arrives for its exhibition, it is the custom to lavish jewels, not upon the neck and arms alone, but over various portions of the dress; for, besides the necklace, earrings, and bracelets, which used formerly to constitute the sole adornings, the draperies are now held in place by jeweled clasps, ring, and crescents. There are tiny dress-buttons of diamond, ruby, or sapphire, Anne of Austria helms, glittering with half-precious gems, and combs, arrows, Greek bandeaux, and other glittering parures."

The love of the ex-Queen of Spain for her eldest son is a well known fact, and is quite sufficient to account for the journey she took the other day. She left Paris by the eight o'clock "rapide," as they call it, and was met by two of Alphonso's chamberlains on the Spanish frontier, under whose escort she hurried on to Comillas, where, in a really charming royal residence, her son and his children were waiting to receive her. The young queen is in an interesting condition. Queen Isabella, it may interest the ladies to hear, took no less than fifteen new "confections" in her trunks, and was dressed for the journey in a robe of cinnamon color, her bonnet, gloves, sunshade, fan, boots, etc., being strictly en suite.

It is sad to learn that Mrs. Astor's diamonds are eclipsed by those owned by Mrs. Moore, of Philadelphia. It takes a whole detective and a husband to accompany this latter lady when she favors society with a view of them. They were on exhibition recently at a Saratoga ball, in company with a lavender silk, flounced with costly round point, and consisted of diamond bracelets on each arm, shoulder, and wrists, confining the lace at the narrow sleeves; a rivière of solitaires with long pendant of immense stones; a pair of large diamonds fastening the fichu in front; large solitaire earrings, and a star, tiara, and comb of diamonds also gleamed in the masses of dark hair. There was such a blaze and sparkle about this diamond field that several old dowagers held up their feather fans before their faces, and declared they wouldn't look at her. Those who conquered their prejudice, and did look, said it broke their eye off. Diamonds are really becoming too common for anything.

Velveteen is revived for skirts.—The new colors are in endless variety, and each is blessed with its own distinctive name. It is an excellent exercise of memory to remember them in order.—There is a tendency to increase the size of the sleeve above the elbows and in the armpoles.—A unique feature of a Washington wedding was that, with the invitation, a card, engraved in silver, invited the guests to be present at the same time at the celebration of the silver wedding of the bride's parents.—The newest material for wedding robes is repped satin.—Mrs. A. T. Stewart attended a ball at the Grand Union Hotel, Saratoga, for the first time in more than seven years.—Bonnetts are worn tip-tilted far over the forehead.—The Philadelphia Times, bemoaning the failure of the matrimonial crop, says, in the memory of the oldest mamma who for years has had marriageable daughters in the resort market, there has never been a season quite like this.—Fans rival sunshades in size.—Lawn-tennis not being found sufficiently exciting for the French ladies, they are learning fencing. An assault of amateurs is soon to take place at Dieppe. The "houquet" will be a fencing match between two ladies.—The jacket is the rage this fall.—Linked bracelets of Roman gold fastened by a chain are the latest.—No more scarlet geraniums. William Morris has said it. They are a bad color, and must be suppressed. Oscar Wilde follows his worthy master, and inveighs against them with all the force of his big æsthetic soul as the murderers and criminals of flowers.—The European costume of carrying infants on lace-trimmed pillows is adopted by American mothers; and the nurse wears an Alsace cap with a bow of ribbon a fourth of a yard wide, with ends that hang behind nearly to her feet. The nurse's dress is of the color used for lining the lace of the baby's pillow.—Milady now has the hospitable salt put in brill-colored glass stands at the four corners of her table.

LITERARY NOTES.

"A Russian Princess," by Emanuel Gonzales, is the romance of the adventures of a high-born Muscovite and her lover, a portionless but handsome young nobleman. It has been translated rather poorly from the French by G. D. Cox. Published by T. B. Peterson & Co.; for sale by Bancroft; price, 75 cents.

Bancroft's "New Map of California and Nevada" is commendable as regards topographical accuracy; but it seems rather a mistake not to have more carefully designated mountains and lakes. This map is supposed to be chiefly used by tourists; but we must confess that it bears ill comparison with the maps which are gotten up in the East for White Mountain or lake tours. Published and for sale by A. L. Bancroft & Co.; price, $1.00.

The æsthetes will revel in the dainty covers of "A Red-Letter Day," a volume of poems by General L. H. Foote, United States Consul at Valparaiso. On a background of delicate blue is a scroll-work panel, over which is cast a spray of hawthorne. Above flits a golden butterfly, and beneath a swallow wings its flight. To the right, and above the centre, a flashing sun, on which is inscribed in scarlet the title of the volume. Published by A. Williams & Co., Boston; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.50.

The school histories are gradually improving with the age, and each new volume corrects some of the faults of previous hooks. Mr. P. V. N. Myers, of Ohio, has with commendable research compiled a volume of "Outlines of Ancient History," from A. M. 1 to A. D. 476. It is prepared with a view to interest the pupil, but at the same time to secure for him the most accurate knowledge that is possible in a limited space. A cursory perusal will satisfy an examiner of the care which the author has taken in procuring his statements from the best authorities in Germany, England, and France. Published by Harper & Bros., New York; for sale by Bancroft.

France seems to be the home of oratory. The French devote more attention to that art than they do to many others. Like the Greeks and Romans, they have analyzed and sought out its deepest mysteries, and every gesture and modulation is the result of precise calculation. One of the most celebrated of French oratorical teachers was François Delarte, who was the instructor of kings and princes, and also the trainer of Sontag and Rachel. L'Abbé Delaunais was one of his most successful pupils, and after the death of his master formulated his system in a volume, entitled "The Art of Oratory." This book has just been translated into English by F. A. Shaw, of Albany, New York. It proves to be a valuable work, and enters minutely into every detail. Even the feet receive particular attention, and are made the subject of a lengthy illustrated disquisition upon the emotions which their various attitudes may suggest. Published and for sale by E. S. Werner, Albany, New York.

It has been rather a difficult matter to procure any of Phil Robinson's delightful India sketches, since the literary conditions, in default of an international copyright, prevented their publication on this side of the Atlantic. This fact has prevented in America the great popularity which he obtained in England, as his successive books were published, and hailed with delight by Edwin Arnold, and other noted students of Buddhism and the Hindus. Mr. Robinson gained quite a reputation in the Zulu and Afghan wars, as correspondent for the London Telegraph. Since then he has written some exceptionally interesting letters to the New York World, concerning the state of affairs in Utah Territory. The American public will now have a better opportunity to enjoy his works, since he has compiled the best things from his three books, "In My Indian Garden," "Under the Punkah," and "Noah's Ark," and, adding several new sketches, issues the whole in a single volume with the title, "Under the Sun." Published by Roberts Bros.; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.50.

The Century Magazine for October contains, among other things, an admirable engraving of President Lincoln, a delightful paper on the "Corcoran Gallery," in Washington, and an account of the "Negotiations for the Obelisk," by E. E. Farman, late consul-general for this country in Egypt.—The principal paper in October Atlantic Monthly is the continued account of Lieutenant Cushing's visit to the "Nation of the Willows;" Thomas Hardy's story is continued; and a contributor furnishes an interesting account of the "Smyrna Affair."—The California for October appears with a sub-title, "The Overland Monthly," which will supersede the other at the beginning of next year. It opens with a scholarly article on "The Doctrines of R. W. Emerson," by Professor Sill. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Carlotta Perry both contribute poems; James O'Meara furnishes interesting "Reminiscences of the Gold Period," and Miss Millicent Shinn is the author of an attractive paper on "Modern Ethics and Egotism."—The Victorian Review for July contains a sketch by Charles Warren Stoddard, entitled, "In a Californian Bungalow;" "Samoa and the Samoans," by M. Dyson; "The Rāmāyana," by James Murdoch, and other interesting papers.—The North American Review for October opens with an article on "The Coming Revolution in England," by H. M. Hyndman, the English radical leader. O. B. Frothingham writes of "The Objectionable in Literature;" Doctor Henry Schliemann tells the interesting story of one year's "Discoveries at Troy;" Senator John I. Mitchell, of Pennsylvania, treats of the rise and progress of the rule "Political Bosses;" Professor George L. Vose, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contributes an article of exceptional value on "Safety in Railway Travel," and Professor Charles S. Sargent, of the Harvard College Arboretum, contributes an essay on "The Protection of Forests."

Miscellany: A copy of the first edition of the "Complete Angler" was sold in England the other day, the competition of would-be buyers being energetic and exciting. The price finally secured was nearly one hundred and sixty dollars. Another copy of this edition is now on sale in London at two hundred and sixty dollars.—An English translation of "Konrad Wallenrod," an historical poem by the Polish poet Adam Mickiewicz, has just been published by Trübner. It is a work full of idealism, heroism, and unselfishness.—Thackeray invented the name of the Pall Mall Gazette, for his uses in "Pendennis." Mr. George Smith, his publisher, applied it to the newspaper which Thackeray projected, but did not live to see.—M. Morin, the illustrator of La Vie Parisienne, is dead. This artist of large-eyed, wasp-waisted, fashionable women detested the special public for which he worked. He used to go to the watering places to study his subjects, and he called these visits "halts in purgatory." He looked like an old ragman, and led the life of a hermit, and he never ceased to regret that he did not, like Millet, elect for what was true and healthful in art.—John Morley will soon begin to edit Macmillan's new monthly, the English Critic. He retains the editorship of the Pall Mall Gazette.—The Countess de Clermont-Tonnerre has lately translated into French Mr. Parkman's work on the Jesuits in North America.

Announcements: New editions have just been brought out by Harper & Brothers of "Ben-Hur," the historical novel by General Lew Wallace, United States Minister to Turkey, and "Atlantis," by Ignatius Donnelly.—The Putnams will publish, early in October, a volume of "Reminiscences of Court and Diplomatic Life," by Lady Bloomfield, who for many years was one of Queen Victoria's maids of honor. Her husband, Lord Bloomfield, was at one time Minister to Russia. The two stout volumes are said to contain much entertaining gossip. A volume of "Chapters in Evolution," by Andrew Wilson, is announced by this firm.—Mr. William Swinton has succeeded, after long litigation, in getting possession of the plates of his "Campaigns of the Army of the Potomac," which has been out of print for thirteen years. The book will be published for much less than the original price, but with all the maps and illustrations, by the Messrs. Scribner.—A cookery book, bearing the quaint title of "Forty Puddings," is announced as in the press of Charles Scribner's Sons.—Macmillan & Co. are preparing for the English market a handsome new edition of Emerson's works in six volumes, with an introductory essay by John Morley.—A new American novel, entitled "Mr. Isaacs," will soon be published by the Macmillans. Its author is announced as F. Marion Crawford.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

The following is a mot, says the Baltimore American, credited to one of the recent governors of Maryland: "What a remarkably ugly man Mr. Blank is," said he to a pretty and tender-hearted young lady. "Ah," replied she, deprecatingly, "but he has a face that grows on you." "Hum!" responded the governor, "God forbid, madam, that it should ever grow on me."

A gentleman who was on a visit to Niagara, when the car raised and lowered by steam power was in use on the incline plane, went into the starting-house to witness the descent, being too timid to go down himself. After the car started, fully impressed with the danger, he turned to the man in charge, and said: "Suppose, sir, that the rope should break?" The man, with a serious countenance, and a single eye to business, replied: "Oh, they all paid before they went."

Beau Brummell being at a dinner party in Portman Square, on the removal of the cloth the snuff-boxes made their appearance, and his own was particularly admired. It was handed round, and a gentleman, finding it was rather difficult to open, incautiously applied a dessert-knife to the lid. Poor Brummell was on thorns; and at last, unable to contain himself any longer, he addressed himself to the host, saying, with characteristic quaintness: "Will you be good enough to tell your friend that my snuff-box is not an oyster?"

When Mademoiselle Rachel was at the height of her popularity, Dr. Véron, ex-manager of the Opéra, and author of the Mémoires d'un Bourgeois de Paris, who was a frequent visitor at her house, happening one day to differ with her on some matter connected with the theatre, she flew into a violent passion, and called him to his face vieille canaille. Next day she had forgotten all about it; but Véron could not so easily get over the obnoxious epithet, and told her so. "Bah!" retorted the actress; "you ought, on the contrary, to be highly flattered at being treated like one of the family."

Lord Kenyon thus addressed a dishonest butler, who had been convicted of stealing large quantities of wine from his master's cellar: "Prisoner at the bar, you stand convicted on the most conclusive evidence of a crime of inexpressible atrocity—a crime that defiles the sacred springs of domestic confidence, and is calculated to strike alarm into the breast of every Englishman who invests largely in the choicer vintages of southern Europe. Like the serpent of old, you have stung the hand of your protector. Fortunately in having a generous employer, you might without dishonesty have continued to supply your wretched wife and children with the comforts of sufficient prosperity, and even with some of the luxuries of affluence; but, dead to every claim of natural affection, and blind to your own real interest, you burst through all the restraints of religion and morality, and have for many years been feathering your nest with your master's bottles."

During the last days of the Lyceum management an author had a piece, in which Charles Mathews was to play the principal part, in rehearsal at the theatre. But the collapse came suddenly, and the theatre was abruptly closed. The comedietta consequently never appeared. After a time the author wrote, begging to have his manuscript returned to him. The answer of Charles Mathews was brief: "My dear P. S.—You have got it." The author remonstrated. He had never seen the manuscript since it was in the prompter's hands. Some time elapsed and he wrote again—many times again. But nothing moved the incorrigible Charles from the same invariable reply, "My dear P. S.—You have got it." Two, or even three years had passed, when one evening the author found on his hall-table a note from the manager, accompanied by a roll of paper. The note had now varied in its strain: "I always told you," it went, "that you had the piece, and you see you have." The roll of paper contained the long missing manuscript.

Foppery in dress is by no means a sure sign of either effeminacy or cowardice; and those who presume on such appearance, like all who judge merely from externals, will often be mistaken. The late Sir Alexander Schomberg, many years commander of the king's yacht, the Dorset, was, during the whole of a long life, a very great beau. When a young man, he was one day walking down a fashionable street in London, and, having taken out his pocket-handkerchief, which was highly perfumed, a couple of hucks, conceiving that an officer so perfumed was a very safe object of ridicule, followed him down the street, amusing themselves with sneers at him. Sir Alexander at length reached his lodging, and, having knocked at the door, he called one of the gentlemen and said: "Sir, I perceive you have been much taken with the perfume of my handkerchief;" then, taking it out with his left hand, he added: "I request you to smell it closer," at the same time tweaking his nose and flogging him with a cane. He concluded by informing him that he was Captain Schomberg, of the Royal Navy, very much at his service.

Among the many anecdotes related of the steadiness of nerve of the veteran Prince Charles of Prussia as a boy is the following: On the 20th of October, 1811, the prince being then ten years and four months old, he was dining at Wustrau Castle with Count Zieten, the only son of Frederick the Great's renowned cavalry general. His host was a very eccentric person, invariably addicted to practical joking, and upon the occasion alluded to had prepared an unusually startling surprise for the juvenile prince. Count Zieten rose during dinner to propose the health of "the king," and as the words left his lips a whole battery of field-guns, which had been posted just under the dining-room windows, was fired off at a volley. Everybody present started except the prince, upon whom his host's eyes were steadily fixed. Observing with grim satisfaction that the royal lad did not even wink, Zieten turned toward him with the question: "Not afraid of cannon, eh, your royal highness?" Pointing to the walls of the apartment, lavishly adorned with portraits of officers of the famous Zieten Hussars—the regiment of which his son, Frederick Charles, always wears the scarlet uniform—Prince Charles quietly replied: "Certainly not, in such company as this!" and went on with his dessert as though nothing unusual had been done or said.

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S OSWEGO STARCH.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO.'S CHOCOLATE.

SMITH BROTHERS' PACKAGE BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.
AGENTS,
121 and 123 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM, For the Care and Treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION
called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of over two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal.
ASA CLARK, M. D.
References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Shurtleff, Stockton,
Sup't State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO. (Established 1854.)

HAY, GRAIN, AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

39 Clay Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Telephone No. 35.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO. Commission Merchants, SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR Street
Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP, 581 and 583 Market Street, S. F., Manufacturers Mirrors, Coracles, Hardwood Mantles, Picture Frames, and Etc-a-Brac.

IMPORTERS OF GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHROMOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY. OFFICE, 325 Market St. WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts. C. SPRECKELS, President, J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President, A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO. San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel, and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts, Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connecting Rods, etc., etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron. 202 MARKET STREET.

THE AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY SAN FRANCISCO, MANUFACTURERS OF ALL Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar for export. C. ADOLPHE LOW, President. Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN, A. P. BRAYTON PACIFIC IRON WORKS RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO., 127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco. Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines— both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL or Office by Telephone 308. Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company. 118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO., Shipping and Commission Merchants 204 and 206 California Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.

PAYOT, UPHAM & CO STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS, Commercial Printers, and Blank Book Manufacturers 204 Sansome Street, near Pine.

TABER, HARKER & Co., IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San Francisco.

UNIVERSALLY PRESCRIBED BY THE FACULTY

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON

A Laxative and Refreshing Fruit Lozenge for CONSTIPATION,
Hemorrhoids, Bile, Headache,
Cerebral Congestion, etc.
Prepared by
GRILLON,
SOLE PROPRIETOR,
Pharmacie de première classe
de la Faculté de Paris,
27 rue Rambuteau,
PARIS.
Tamar—unlike pills and the usual purgatives—is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

C. P. SHEFFIELD, N. W. SPAULDING, J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

ALASKA COMMERCIAL CO.

NO. 310 SANSOME STREET,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

ALLEN, MCGARY & CO., IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE Liquor Dealers, 322-324 FRONT STREET SAN FRANCISCO.

THUNDER POWDER COMPANY.— Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Alameda County, California. Notice.—There are delinquent upon the following de- scribed stock, on account of assessment (No. 1) levied on the fifteenth day of August, 1882, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as fol- lows:

Name.	Cert. No.	No. Shares.	Amount.
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	3	5	$2 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	37	10,000	4,000 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	73	200	80 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	74	300	120 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	79	14,995	5,998 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee..	87	6,000	2,400 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee..	4	5	not issued 2 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee..	5	995	do 398 00
W. W. Dodge, Trustee..	6	5	do 2 00
W. W. Dodge, Trustee..	7	995	do 398 00
E. G. Waite, Trustee..	8	5	do 2 00
E. G. Waite, Trustee..	9	2,495	do 998 00
Geo. W. Prescott, Trustee..	10	5	do 2 00
Geo. W. Prescott, Trustee..	11	995	do 398 00
Wm. Sherman, Trustee..	12	5	do 2 00
Wm. Sherman, Trustee..	13	2,495	do 998 00
R. M. Anthony, Trustee..	14	1,000	do 400 00
John A. Benson, Trustee..	15	2,000	do 800 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee..	16	1,000	do 400 00
M. Baldrige, Trustee..	17	1,500	not issued 600 00
Fred'k Lux, Trustee..	18	1,000	do 400 00
Charles Camden, Trustee..	19	2,000	do 800 00
Jackson Hart, Trustee..	20	1,000	do 400 00
R. D. Lennox, Trustee..	22	500	do 200 00
Daniel Gorham, Trustee..	23	500	do 200 00
Theodore Greene, Trustee..	24	1,000	do 400 00
Eugene L. Sullivan, Trustee..	25	2,000	do 800 00
Walter Mead, Trustee..	26	500	not issued 200 00
J. H. Fish, Trustee..	27	500	do 200 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee..	28	1,000	do 400 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee..	29	1,000	do 400 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee..	30	1,000	do 400 00
L. C. Kelly, Trustee..	31	1,000	do 400 00
Chas. S. Neal, Trustee..	32	5	do 2 00
Wm. F. Flick, Trustee..	33	5	do 2 00
Chas. H. Hopkins, Trustee..	34	5	do 2 00
Wm. Wilson, Trustee..	35	5	do 2 00
Benj. Teal, Trustee..	36	5	do 2 00
F. C. Kiel, Trustee..	52	1,000	do 400 00
F. C. Kiel, Trustee..	53	1,000	do 400 00
Wm. Heick, Trustee..	54	1,000	do 400 00
Wm. Heick, Trustee..	55	1,000	do 400 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee..	56	1,000	not issued 400 00
John F. Baxter, Trustee..	57	3,000	do 1,200 00
David S. Sherman, Trustee..	58	3,000	do 1,200 00
W. H. Campbell, Trustee..	59	1,000	do 400 00
R. N. Bourne, Trustee..	61	500	do 200 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee..	60	500	do 200 00
Geo. E. Barnes, Trustee..	62	200	do 80 00
Wm. Wilson, Trustee..	63	100	do 40 00
L. E. Crane, Trustee..	64	50	do 20 00
S. E. Herriman, Trustee..	65	50	do 20 00
A. E. Bauton, Trustee..	66	50	issued 20 00
W. W. Glazier, Trustee..	67	50	not issued 20 00
H. W. Newbauer, Trustee..	80	250	do 100 00
L. Halen, Trustee..	81	250	do 100 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee..	85	1,000	do 400 00
Matthew Clark, Trustee..	103	500	do 200 00
Jas. S. Porteous, Trustee..	110	500	do 200 00
Thos. Legg, Trustee..	104	100	do 40 00

And in accordance with law, and an order of the Board of Directors made on the fifteenth day of August, 1882, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary will be sold at public auction at the company's office, No. 606 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California, on Monday, the ninth day of October, 1882, at the hour of one o'clock P. M. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of the sale.
C. M. OAKLEY, Secretary.
Office—Room 5, Sherman Building, No. 606 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

STROLLING PLAYERS.

We were off on a little excursion in Surrey one week, and, stopping in a very quaint village about noontime, we wandered about in search of local characteristics, or perhaps the sight of something new in field or flower. On one of the side streets, we came upon an unusual sight. In a meadow to the right we saw a barn half covered over with canvas, and close to the road was a very impromptu sign-board. It consisted of a plank fastened on two poles, and on it, in very inky characters, were these words: "TO-NIGHT WILL BE PERFORMED 7 O'CLOCK LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET." Here was a reward for our wanderings! A band of genuine strolling players! We could see no sign of the company, but heard a cheerful hammering going on within the barn, and felt full of a desire to see the "performance." The summer's evening was still almost daylight when we left our inn for the impromptu theatre. Several villagers were bent in the same direction, and there were various groups under the trees, around the little muddy bumps in the road, and especially near the barn itself.

There was a hedge separating the barn from the road, and at one point quite a high bit of wall, within which, on the top of a ladder, sat a woman. The sunset lay in a glory behind her, and about were clear purpling tones which seemed to emphasize in a cold, dull way the quaintness of her features, their stolidity and undeniable homeliness. She was about forty, I should think; had a face expressive of much theatrical and domestic wear and tear. She was resting an elbow on the wall, and beld her chin in her hand, surveying the scene before her in the most stolid, unimpassioned way, apparently quite disregarding us as we stood studying her features—for she was a study. The face had, I think, once been good-looking; but it seemed to me that, little by little, life had worn away all its desire to be soft and kindly. The dark eyes were bright, but with a hard sort of brightness; and her cheeks were brown and thin, and her hair scant. Yet nothing could have exceeded her self-complacency. She sat there, with all that gorgeous color at her back, the very fairest things in nature about her, a curious figure, hard and cold, and apparently comfortable.

After a moment one of us ventured to address her, at which she only drooped her eyelids slightly, not altering her position.

"When will the play begin?"

"Height," she answered, stonily.

"We thought it was seven."

"So it was to be," was the answer, in the same tone; "but audiences about 'ere won't hassenble hearlier," and she continued that speculative gaze over our heads.

At this moment from within the barn was heard a little music. It seemed to proceed from very inconspicuous instruments—a French horn, a drum, and a flute. The drum, happily, only did an occasional "ra-ta-ta-ta," but the horn fairly flew at the music. It was the "Carnival of Venice," and apparently the players knew only one-half of the melody, for, in the most exasperating manner, they kept stopping just in the middle of a phrase, and beginning again. I felt the same sort of exasperation as Mr. Charles Dudley Warner describes when his man at "Badcock" wouldn't say "Lynx."

"Want your tickets?" queried the goddess above us.

We said yes, we thought we might as well have them; and with a very fine gesture she waved us toward the door of the barn. Our moving there inspired others, and we stood at the head of quite a little company, who waited while we made our purchase.

The door-keepers or ticket-sellers were two—a young woman in a short astrakhan jacket and cap, who had evidently begun to "make up" for the play, as her face was uncommonly ghastly, and a very thin, ill-tempered youth. The young woman had a large leather belt at her waist, from which depended a mysterious locked box. I am sure the treasurer of Drury Lane could scarcely have needed anything more commodious and secure for his receipts, and it made us wonder a little as to what element in the company demanded this financial seclusion. As soon as we asked for tickets, an argument rose between the girl and the young man as to what the price should be, (we were evidently people who could pay,) and so they wrangled over it while we waited in the fast-waning dusk, with a gathering audience at our backs. At one side a canvas curtain was flapping, and a curious thing was that the door-keepers were quite unobservant of what happened during their discussion. A number of boys softly glided in under the curtain while they talked, and took any seats, I suppose, they liked, paying nothing. I became interested in watching their very agile manner of lifting the curtain and noiselessly drifting in, and they remained very quiet inside while the shrill voices went on. At last it was decided. We were to pay one shilling each, and we did so, the plebeians in our rear paying sixpence most good-humoredly, and streaming in after us. Within, we found a sort of amphitheatre, with seats composed of planks on trestles; a stage, with footlights of oil-lamps, and with a most glaring and papery-looking curtain. Presently the dusk gathered into darkness, and the oil-lamps shed a bright, if fitful, glare over everything, while the "house" filled and the music went on. We were in the front row, and looking back and up, the audience presented a most curious sight, the faces only partially illumined, the figures sitting against the barn walls and outlined against each other—a close, eager crowd of people, but no separate identities, as it were: here and there a pair of eyes or a nose in prominence, occasionally the flash of a red shawl, or a bit of color in some girl's gown, but nothing personally impressive. We wondered how it would look from the stage, where all the light was concentrated.

There was a large chest just below the stage, and presently the girl who had demanded our shillings appeared from "the back," and opening it, took out various stage properties. At first she was watched in silence, but at last the upper rows became conversational.

"Got what you want, dear?" said one.

"Hurry up; we're getting tired," from another, and so on, while the music became more and more sultry in point of melody, and the lamps glared more and more fitfully.

At last the curtain rose—and shall we soon forget that scene? It represented a wild, forbidding, and desolate seashore. We could only think the company had recently been performing an arctic drama; but close against the waves was a wooden well with a very rickety handle. It was incongruous, but then the drama appeals to one's imagination, and we decided to be thoroughly lenient. Simultaneously appeared two characters—Phoebe, Lady Audley's maid, otherwise the door-keeper, and Lucas, the villain of the piece. They conversed some time, explaining to the audience the motif of the drama, and we immediately saw that this company had evidently learned the play from hearing it, for their phraseology was entirely their own—neither Mr. Merivale's nor Miss Bradon's—and they had throughout an affecting way of explaining things to the audience.

On the whole, it was rather Greek, and certainly shows what primitive dramatic intuitions are, for some members of the company always in this fashion represented the Greek chorus, explaining who was coming next, and who it was who had just vanished. When Phoebe said, "Lady Audley's a-comin', proud and 'aughty, and oh, so beautiful, a-flaunting in 'er jewels and 'er laces," we looked for something a little decorative in that weird scene; but instead, with a slow, majestic tread, our friend of the ladder appeared. She walked past the other two like a tragedy queen. I have always maintained that that woman deserved a certain amount of praise, for her absolute self-control and dignity were really an art. She was certainly the most unprepossessing individual I have ever seen. She was dressed in a scant red satin skirt, a black "shepherd's waist," (as we used to call them,) and a white cambric chemise. She had on an old-fashioned pair of under-sleeves, such as used to be worn twenty years ago, and were fastened with little elastic around the arms. But our lady had no elastic, and the consequence was that she was obliged perpetually to keep them up, first on one side, then on the other. She wore large and very soiled white jean congress gaiters. The two minor characters left the stage at once, and Lady Audley advanced to the front and calmly told us her history. It was brief, but very terrible, and she recited it as if she were Fate. She told us a tale to freeze our young blood, without moving a muscle or making a gesture, except in the case of her under-sleeves, and finally she said:

"Sir Haudley knows not of my first 'usban', George Talboys. What would 'e do or say if 'e really knew?" And while she stood gazing upon us, close to the footlights, there appeared a tall figure in the rear, a man in a heavy ulster and big hat. Lady Audley (we never knew her by any other name) turned slowly toward him, then back to us, saying: "George Talboys 'imself; it is 'e," and waited stonily while George said:

"Ere I am. Didn't you know I was balive?"

"I didn't," she said, immovably.

Thereupon ensued a very brief argument as to whether she could give him any money. He walked back, and Lady Audley demanded of us: "Shall 'e die? Shall I kill 'im? I will. 'E dies"—like a terrible mythological oracle. And at once she waved a disordered looking handkerchief, saying: "Sh! George! Quick! I am faint; 'asten, 'asten; water!"

George seized the handkerchief, and, curious to say, with all that turbulence of sea at his very feet, he stooped down on his knees to wet it in the well. In some way one doesn't think of wetting a handkerchief in a well, and even George Talboys seemed to find it a difficult performance. While he was manfully struggling, Lady Audley approached, and, with the same implacable countenance, said: "E dies—George, lareswell!" and, giving him a push, he disappeared down the well without a groan.

After that, as may be imagined, remorse set in, and goaded her on to all sorts of stony-hearted actions. "Sir Haudley," as they persisted in calling him, appeared, and a more demoralized-looking old gentleman I never beheld. He wore his hat—and a very rusty silk one it was—all the time, in the drawing-room scene or on the wild sea-shore, and his clothes were like those of a fourth-rate cabman. Perhaps it was for this reason that they kept perpetually telling him he was such a "perfect gentleman." I don't know how often they told him this during the play, and it never failed to bring a smile to his face, never seeming to contain a covert insult.

Rosa had no teeth, but otherwise she was very piquant and juvenile, and her lover appeared in George Talboys's ulster until the moment of that individual's reappearance, when Robert dashed out, and returned in a linen seersucker coat.

During the play the music continued in the most remarkable manner. The tune went on, dragging and dragging, if the performers were dressing themselves, and stopping short suddenly when it was their time to "go on," so that at last the orchestra became a sort of wonder to us, and we waited nervously to know just how far a phrase would be allowed to go before this desperate silence came.

I never saw a play so hurried. Everything was rushed on; climaxes were hardly begun before they ended and a new one was introduced. When Lady Audley saw George reappear from his watery grave, she simply sank on her knees and looked vacantly toward us.

"Do you 'ear, woman?" said Sir Haudley.

"I 'ear," she answered, still impersonating Fate;

"but I do not 'eed."

"She is mad," said George, calmly.

"She is," they all answered, after the fashion of Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan.

"Let her die in peace," said Sir Haudley; and then, for some unaccountable reason, they all broke into a sad little hymn, and the curtain dropped.

Sir Haudley, in his character of manager, came out, thanked us all for our "generous support," and announced that the next night would be given "The Fisherman's Foundling; or, the Convict's Revenge." And he then said he would sing a song. He wore his tall hat and his shabby old coat, but in intervals of the song he danced around quite wildly. The song was about taking tea in the harbor with Miss Barber, and on those words I certainly thought he would rend his lungs. He became so frantically energetic that his face grew purple. As Sir Haudley he had been full of a dignified calm; but I suppose he wanted to show us his wonderful versatility. Before he had ended, half of the audience were moving their feet, and humming in unison with his loud, harsh voice. We went away out into the moonlight, half full of amazement, half of pity for the poor players. And, after all, in spite of her gaunt ugliness, her boarse voice, and her tawdry, ridiculous costume, Lady Audley had her own sort of power. I think we respected her for adhering so closely to the remorseless aspect she had chosen to take of the character.—Mrs. John Lullin in October Harper.

The improved libretto, to be used in grand Italian opera, and in the drama where the words are spoken in a foreign language, invented by Mr. Thomas L. Jones, of St. Louis, has been perfected, and will probably be given a trial at the New York Academy of Music at the opening of Mr. Mapleson's season. "It is a very ingenious contrivance," says the Spectator, "and if adopted, will at once do away with the old-fashioned book librettos. The words are presented from the stage on a white canvas, and can be easily read by the entire audience. Mr. Jones has spent much time and money on his invention. Some improvement is certainly necessary on the present means of following the singers in grand opera, as the use of books not only entails an additional expense, but distracts the audience. The libretto that Mr. Jones has invented stands at the foot of the stage, and the hearer can easily glance from it to the singer or vice versa."

A large and appreciative audience gathered at Fidelity Hall, on Tuesday evening, to listen to a very interesting lecture delivered by Major H. C. Dane, of Boston, Mass. The lecture was delivered for the benefit of G. H. Thomas Post, No. 2, G. A. R. The lecturer devoted his attention mainly to the exciting operations around Vicksburg, and the taking of Island No. 10, together with a sketch of Farragut's famous advance into Mobile Bay. Major Dane described many thrilling scenes, particularly those occurring during the action at Mobile, in which he himself took a part. The description of Admiral Buchanan's single-handed assault, in a small ram, upon the Union fleet was especially stirring. The speaker was applauded many times, and the affair was a decided pecuniary success.

Frank Mayo, at Haverly's California Theatre, has been playing "The Streets of New York" all the week to fair houses. On Monday evening Frank Mordaunt opens in a new play, "Old Shipmates." At Emerson's Standard Theatre John Byrne was the novelty this week, and proved to be very clever in song and dance. Madame O. Genee's German Dramatic Troupe are playing each Sunday evening at Haverly's California Theatre.

The Conservatoire of Paris is about to have a powerful rival. That institution has long been the victim of red tape. Only a limited number of pupils are admitted, and the prizes depend more upon favor than talent. To remedy the evil a society of first-class artists is being formed to found a free and independent Conservatoire, and the Municipal Council has promised to supply the locale.

"While 'La Belle Russe' was running at Wallack's, that gentleman paid the owner two hundred dollars a week royalty—rather encouraging for a native author." So says the New York Dramatic World; but we can not vouch for its accuracy.

The London comedian, Lionel Brough, was engaged to come to America in support of Mrs. Langtry, but she objected to his name being printed as big as hers in the advertisements, while he insisted on it, and hence he will not come.

John Howson, it seems, has concluded to let comedy alone for a while and stick to comic opera—having signed with both Comely & Barton and John A. McCaull for the coming season.

We have received from Messrs. Sherman, Clay & Co. "In the Twilight," a gavotte by J. Oettl, dedicated to Miss M. Taylor.

CCXLVIII.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday, October 1.

Potato Soup.
Shrimp Salad.
Boiled Chicken, Oyster Dressing and Sauce.
Lima Beans, Cauliflower.
Roast Venison, Port Wine Sauce. Sweet Potatoes.
Lettuce.
Frozen Peaches and Cream.
Fancy Cakes.
Nectarines, Oranges, Peaches, Plums, Gages, Figs, Grapes, and Apples.

POTATO SOUP.—Boil eight potatoes and one onion till tender in one quart of soup stock. Strain through a sieve, and add salt, pepper, one teaspoonful of butter, and a pint of new milk. Boil all for a few minutes, and serve very hot.

THE CALIGRAPH.

IT IS INTERESTING TO REVIEW THE SUCCESSIVE discoveries which are superseding hand-work. A young husband, out of work, watched his wife knitting to earn a little money for their support. An idea flashed upon him, and straightway the stocking-loom was invented, bringing fortune to himself and work to thousands of English families. A young Lyons weaver saw his pretty sister die at the cumbrous weaving-frame of hemorrhage of the lungs. The resolution fixed itself in his soul that no more of his half-starved family should fall victims to this racking Moloch. His determination was lasting—and, behold, the weaver's loom of to-day gave his name to fame and salvation to the consumptive weavers of France. Mr. G. W. N. Yost, of New York, realizing the ills and evils attendant upon band-writing—the weary bending over manuscript, the overtaxed eyes and aching head, the tired hand grown listless with the ceaseless working of the pen—comprehending all the maladies, from consumption to neuralgia, which follow unremitting labor at the pen, resolved to hit upon some invention which should do away with all the cumbrous and faulty working of the band-writer. There had previously been exhibited in New York the rough model of a printing-machine something after the style of a type-writer. But Mr. Yost realized that this was not the right thing, and that the real invention was yet to come. He purchased a half right from the owner, and straightway proceeded to seek for an improvement. Experiments were made and thousands of dollars spent in the search. Various machines were constructed and put forth to the market. Greater perfection was attained at every improvement. But in 1879, after ten years of labor, he came to the conclusion that not even yet was the ideal type-writer discovered. He thereupon bent his whole energies to the supreme effort of inventing a machine which should well nigh embody perfection. The CALIGRAPH is the result. What the sewing-machine is to the needle and thread, what the cotton-gin is to the rude discrimination of the negro worker, what the steam-engine is to the horse or ship, what the loom is to the old-fashioned frame—all of these is the CALIGRAPH to hand-pennmanship. Every hour spent in writing with the pen is at least forty minutes worse than wasted. Mark Twain uses one of these machines constantly. D. R. Locke (Petroleum V. Nasby) has used a writing-machine for seven years, the CALIGRAPH for the last two. It is difficult for the uninitiated to credit that a hundred words per minute have been produced on the CALIGRAPH, and that the only limit is the power of the human touch; but nevertheless this statement is true, as many prominent men throughout the country will bear witness. The CALIGRAPH is beautifully constructed, and as it stands on the table occupies less than a foot of space, and makes a brilliant display of steel and brass, being japanned, polished, and nickel-plated. The paper is inserted between two rollers, by simply lifting one of which the paper may be inserted at any time. In front of the rollers is an adjusting bar, to regulate the movement of the machine to the width of the paper. Below, in front of the roller, is a slanting key-board, on which appear half a dozen rows of little glass disks, or keys, on which are engraved the various letters of the alphabet (capitals and small letters), and also numerals, punctuation marks, etc. In working, you press the disks a light sacacote touch, and immediately the corresponding lever-type makes the impression on the paper of the desired letter. The slowest learners acquire a rapidity far exceeding penmanship by simply writing an hour each day for from a week to a month, according to capacity. The stenographer transcribes his short-hand notes to paper by means of a CALIGRAPH with marvelous rapidity. On one Chicago paper there are eight type-writing machines in use, which gives testimony of their worth. In a similar manner the CALIGRAPH is invaluable for lawyers, where manifold copies of long documents are needed; for ministers, where legible sermons are required; to copyists, where time is money; and as much as in any case it is necessary to the office, bank, or counting-room. In short, the CALIGRAPH is a sine qua non in every walk of life—professional, commercial, or personal. The prices of these machines vary from sixty to eighty-five dollars, according to capacity and finish. The agent for this coast is Mr. J. H. W. Riley, Stevenson Building, corner California and Montgomery streets, room No. 47.

USE

SIBERIAN BALSAM
IT CURES
CATARRH AND ASTHMA.

..... ALSO.....

CROUP, COUGHS, AND COLDS, AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF
THE BRONCHIAL TUBES AND PULMONARY ORGANS,
As well as the
DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS AND URINARY ORGANS.

The SIBERIAN BALSAM is a purely vegetable compound, and pronounced by all who have tried it to be the most effective remedy for the diseases above enumerated ever used by them. It has never failed when taken according to directions to give immediate relief and effect a permanent cure. It reaches the disease through the blood and removes the cause. Coughs and Colds, Sore Throats, and Hoarseness relieved at once and cured in from one to two days.

CLERGYMEN, PUBLIC SPEAKERS, ACTORS, AND VOCALISTS,

Affected with HOARSENESS, or LOSS OF VOICE, will find almost instantaneous relief from a single dose of SIBERIAN BALSAM.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

DEPOT, 415 MONTGOMERY STREET, . . . SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

— THE SAN FRANCISCO PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY will give the first of their second series of concerts on Friday, October 6th, under the supervision of Mr. Henry Heyman. This society was highly successful last year, and succeeded in presenting to the public the highest and most elevating class of music. Their effort is one in the right direction, and it is to be hoped that it will bear good fruit in the musical future of San Francisco. The following is the programme for Friday:

1. Fest-overture—"Friedensfeier".....Reinecke.
2. Symphony No. 2, D Major.....Beethoven.
3. Recitative—Aria from "Titus".....Mozart.
4. Madame Zeiss-Dennis, (first time in San Francisco.)
5. Entre Act from Manfred.....Schumann.
6. Waltz—"Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald".....Strauss.
7. Overture—"Rienzi".....Meyerbeer.

Madame Zeiss-Dennis.

— This programme is rich in its numbers, and will excite interest in the music-lovers of this city.

The despised variety show, says the New York Sun, is the school in which many of the most popular performers on the legitimate stage get their training. This is true of Joseph K. Emmet, Lillian Russell, Lotta, George K. Knight, Joseph Murphy, Gus Williams, Nat Goodwin, Denman Thompson, Sophie Worrel, Alice Harrison, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and others equally successful. The Bunthorne and the Lady Jane of the juvenile "Patience" at Wallack's are prodigies from the variety theatres.

— "ROUGH ON RATS." CLEARS OUT RATS, MICE, flies, roaches, bed-bugs, ants, vermin, chipmunks, etc.

— TEACHER—WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY HAVING had several years' experience in public school teaching, a few pupils; children attending public school assisted after school hours. Address EDUCATOR, this office.

— REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE IS UNEQUALLED for chilblains, chapped hands, frost bites, etc. Try it.

— A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR IS APPRECIATED by everybody, and how to secure it interests everybody. The hair and scalp must be kept free from scurf and dandruff, and not be allowed to get dry and harsh. The roots must be stimulated to healthy action. Flexibility and a bandsome gloss are essential. All these requisites are easily secured by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor.

— STINGING IRRITATION, INFLAMMATION, ALL Kidney Complaints, cured by "Buchupaiba," 5¢ per bottle.

— HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, AND appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

— MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

— DR. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

— MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

— LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL remember that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

— Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

SAN FRANCISCO PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

FIRST CONCERT

Friday Evening.....October 6, 1882

AT PLATT'S HALL.

Grand Orchestra, assisted by the distinguished Prima Donna

Madame Carolina Zeiss-Den

(First appearance since her return from Europe).

GUSTAV HINRICHS.....CONDUCTOR.

Box Sheet opens on Monday, October 2, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Music Store.

FILIPPE'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
235 KEARNY ST.

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF BUSH.
PROF. DE FILIPPE continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by his easy, practical method, saving months of study. Classes and private lessons. Apply from 3 to 5 or 7 to 8 P. M.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

THE CALIFORNIA FURNITURE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Invite the public to visit their

WAREROOMS, 220 TO 226 BUSH STREET

And inspect their

NEW GOODS

Which constitute

THE FINEST DISPLAY OF FURNITURE

Ever shown on this Coast, and which cannot be excelled for Variety and Beauty upon this Continent.

Bring your Friends along. The Rich can gratify their Tastes; the Poor can supply their Wants.

THE CALA. FURNITURE MFG CO., 220 TO 226 BUSH ST.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

HAVE INTRODUCED THE LARGEST STOCK OF

FALL-STYLE HATS

EVER SHOWN ON THIS COAST.

Call and examine them at

336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 310 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns—Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.

AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANOS, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,

As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with

J. H. MOTT & CO.,

647 Market St.,

Nucleus Block, Second Floor.

Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

J. R. COWEN. J. W. PORTER.

COWEN & PORTER, FUNERAL DIRECTORS,

118 Geary Street, San Francisco.

OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

REGULAR REPUBLICAN NOMINEE

FOR CONGRESS,

From the First District,

HON. PAUL NEUMANN.

J. W. EVANS,

29 Post Street, San Francisco.

"Dress Reform" CORSET.

Specially for Stout Figures, (worn with or without Straps,) by mail, $3.00. Send waist, hip, and bust measure. Also, Shoulder Braces, Union Under Flannels, Ladies' and Children's Comfort Waists, Buses, Hose Supporters, etc. Send for Circular. The only Depot for these goods.

MRS. M. H. OBER & CO.
Boston Dress Reform,
326 Sutter Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Elegant Corset to Order for $1.

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker.

428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-Medical Belts always have excelled all other electrical appliances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs. This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States. Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

TIMOTHY NUNAN, Plaintiff, vs. SAM SING et al., Defendants. Superior Court. Department No. 3. No. 6027. Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 3, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Timothy Nunan, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against Sam Sing, Sun Sing, and War Foo, defendants, on the 18th day of September, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book 2, of said Court, at page 178, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at the northwesterly corner of Clay Street and Waverly Place; running thence westerly along the northerly line of Clay Street thirty-nine (39) feet and one and a quarter (1 1/4) inches, more or less, to the east line of Cochran's building; thence at right angles northerly thirty-six (36) feet four and a quarter (4 1/4) inches; thence at right angles easterly thirty-nine (39) feet one and a quarter (1 1/4) inches, more or less, to the west line of Waverly Place; and thence southerly, along said line of Waverly Place, thirty-six (36) feet four and a quarter (4 1/4) inches to place of beginning. Being part of lot No. 57 of the 50-vara lot survey. Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 23d day of October, A. D. 1882, at 2 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, September 30, 1882.
JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
SAWYER & BALL, Attorneys for Plaintiff.
September 30, October 7, 14, 21.

DANICHEFF KID GLOVE FACTORY

REMOVED TO 119 DUPONT ST.
Between Post and Geary.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO. FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

The Boston Girl.
Lord Byron sang of Grecian girls,
And Oriental ladies,
Of flowing locks and jetty curls
Worn by the girl of Cadiz.
If Byron loved the Turk and Greek,
He'd certainly get lost on
The girls whose beauty none can speak—
The classic maids of Boston.
They have no tresses unconfined,
These cultured bean-fed witches,
But work them up in twists behind,
Where Nature yields to switches.
And when the soft New England wind
Disturbs their locks with kisses,
It does not woo the twists behind,
But struggles with the frizzes;
It gently stirs the artful bang,
That decks the brow—oh, sorrow!
To-night upon a chair 'twill hang,
'Tis donned again to-morrow.

—Unknown Liar.

An Imitation of Algernon.

Between the gate-post and the gate
I lingered with my love till late;
And what cared I the time of night,
Till wakened by the watch-dog's bite
And thud of leathery box-toed fate
Between the gate-post and the gate.

Between the sea-side and the sea
I kissed my love and she kissed me;
But rapturous day was gravesome night,
And what is love but bloom and blight?
And what is kiss of mine to thee
Between the sea-side and the sea?

Between the bumble and the bee
I'll many a soul has had to flee;
And what is love, may I inquire,
When asked to build the kitchen fire?
Or who would not leap in the sea
Between the bumble and the bee?

—R. W. Criswell in Puck.

Zagazig.

Sir Garnet feels serene and big,
Because he's got to Zagazig.
His soldiers dance a merry jig
Along the streets of Zagazig.
And sing, and smoke the Turkish cig-
Arette as well, in Zagazig.
Bismillah! Arabi did dig
That morning out of Zagazig!
Three weeks this Pasha took to rig
His fortresses at Zagazig,
But in ten minutes with his brig-
Adiers he ran from Zagazig.
He must be saddest when he fig-
Ures up his loss at Zagazig.
His hair he pulls, or else his wig,
When'er he thinks of Zagazig.
—R. K. Munkittrick, Goat Poet of Puck.

The Boys.

Full many a maid has toyed with kerosene,
And sailed to glory in a gorgeous glare;
Full many a man has poked at glycerine,
And flown promiscuous through the desert air.

Ouida's "Poem."

Great England put her armor by, and stretched
Her stately limbs to slumber in the sun.
The nations, seeing then how long she slept,
Communed together, and in whispers said:
"Lo, she is old and tired; let us steal
The crown from off her brows. She will not know!"
And Goneril and Regan, o'er the seas,
Mocking her, cried: "Her time is past. Her blood
Is sluggish, and her rusted sword from out
Her scabbard she will draw no more." And so,
Thus gibing, flung with cruel hands the seeds
Of discord and of hate amidst her sons.
But from the East there came a blast too loud,
As from the West there came a taunt too much;
And she, awakened, raised her head, and saw
Around her all her faithless friends, and all
Her sisters and her children jeering her,
And crying: "She is old!" and meting out
Her lands among themselves, and parceling
Her honor. Then, swift as lightning flashes
From the blue skies, her glance of scorn fell on them,
And they crouched, like wolves that are o'er-mastered.
England stretched out her hand, and touched the world—
England arose, and spake, and calmly said:
"Nay, I am mistress still." —London Times.

Mathematical Matrimony.

"I'm in love with your figure," the young man sighed.
"You cipher me, then," the young lady replied;
"Let's add both our fortunes and then divide."
And then they were married and multiplied.

"Vanity Fair."

All the world's a wardrobe,
And all the girls and women merely wearers.
They have their fashions and their fantasies,
And one she in her times wears many garments
Throughout her seven stages. First the baby,
Befuddled and broidered, in her nurse's arms.
And then the trim-hosed school-girl, with her flounces
And small-boy scolding face, tripping, skirt-wagging,
Coquettishly to school. And then the flirt,
Ogling like Circe, with a business attitude
Kept on her low-cut corset. Then a bride,
Full of strange finery, vested like an angel,
Veiled vapidly, yet vigilant of glance,
Seeking the woman's heaven—admiration—
Even at the altar's steps. And then the matron,
In fair rich velvet, with suave satin lined,
With eyes severe, and skirts of youthful cut,
Full of dress-saws and modish instances,
To teach her girls their part. The sixth age shifts
Into the gray yet gorgeous grandmamma,
With gold pince-nez on nose, and fan at side,
Her youthful tastes still strong, and worldly wise
In sumptuary law, her quivering voice
Praising of fashion and Le Follet, pipes
Of robes and bargains rare. Last scene of all,
That ends the sex's Made-swayed history,
Is second childishness and sheer oblivion
Of youth, taste, passion, all—save love of dress.
—Anonymous Barding.

A Course of Lectures on PHYSIOGNOMY, by M. O. STANTON, will be given at the St. Cloud, No. 418 Sutter Street, Monday Evenings, at 8 o'clock. Admission, 50 cents.

A Class for Teachers and others will meet at Miss Marwedel's Kindergarten, 1810 Sacramento Street, on Fridays, at 4 o'clock P. M.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR,

For Restoring Gray Hair to its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth; and always surely restores its color when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brassy, weak, or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable, and strengthened; lost hair re-grows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and established; thin hair thickens, and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean, and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!
Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close application to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, securely sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either quire or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. B.—YOUNG and MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address

PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,

Or W. H. PARKER, M. D.,

4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION, FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DYSPNOEA, CATARRH, HEADACHE, DEBILITY, ALL CHRONIC AND NERVOUS DISORDERS. Prepared by DR. STARKEY & PALLEN, Philadelphia, Pa. Package contains all directions, and is easily sent by express, ready for USE AT HOME. H. E. MATTHEWS, Forwarding Agent, 606 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal. Send for Free Pamphlet.

PACIFIC BUREAU OF EDUCATION

Supplies (1) Teachers with desirable positions; (2) Colleges with Professors and Tutors; (3) Academies, Seminaries and Public Schools of every grade, and families, with competent Principals and Teachers; (4) Colleges, Seminaries, Teachers' Institutes, and Lyceums with Lecturers. Circulars and forms of application sent free by MYRON H. SAVAGE, Manager, 19 New Montgomery Street, S. F.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

OFFICE OF THE EUREKA CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY, Nevada Block, Room 37, San Francisco, September 23, 1882.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the above named company will be held at the office of the company, Room 37, Nevada Block, San Francisco, on MONDAY, the sixteenth day of October, 1882, at one o'clock p. m. of said day, for the election of five Trustees to serve for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented.

W. W. TRAYLOR, Secretary.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 10) of Fifty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twelfth day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary.

Office—Room 79 Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

POTOSI MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 14th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 9) of twenty-five cents per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the Eighteenth day of October, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday, the 8th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 5th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 5) of Twenty (20) Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Room 23, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 13th day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday, the 10th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. P. GORDON, Secretary.

Office—Room 23, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St., San Francisco Cal.

NONE GENUINE BUT WITH A BLUE LABEL.

FOR SALE BY

RUHL BROTHERS

522 Montgomery Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

RUPTURE

The New American Dictionary Price only $1.00. Contains 1,000 Engravings and 100 pages more than any other book of the kind ever published.

The New American Dictionary, is an Encyclopedia of useful knowledge, worth its weight in gold to all classes. It is the most complete, the most useful and entertaining book ever issued. If we could induce every one of our readers to buy one we should feel that we had conferred a benefit on them. When you order the Dictionary, kindly mention that you saw the advertisement in our paper.

LEGAL NOTICES.

[Department No. 7.]

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT, City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

EMMA J. FAIRBAIRN, Plaintiff,
vs.
NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF

California send Greeting to NICHOLAS H. FAIRBAIRN, Defendant. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the grounds of defendant's willful desertion, and failure to provide plaintiff with the common necessities of life; and awarding the custody of the child of the parties hereto to plaintiff. Also, requiring defendant to pay such sums as the Court may deem proper for the support of plaintiff and her child, and costs of suit, together with general relief. Reference to the complaint is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the said Superior Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 3d day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty two.

[Seal.] DAVID WILDER, Clerk.

By J. D. RUGGLES, Deputy Clerk.

J. BOAS, Plaintiff, Justice's Court. No. 13,991.

CONRAD HEROLD, et al. Execution.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Justice's Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested on the 7th day of September, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled action, wherein J. Boas, the above named plaintiff, obtained a judgment against Conrad Herold, defendant, on the 3d day of August, A. D. 1882, for the sum of $299.50, lawful money of the United States, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Conrad Herold, had on the 7th day of September, 1882, the day on which the hereinafter described property was duly levied upon in the above entitled cause, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the hereinafter described property situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing in record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Conrad Herold, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing on the southeasterly line of Welch Street, at a point distant 40 feet southwesterly from the southerly corner of Welch and Zoe streets; thence at right angles southeasterly 40 feet; thence at right angles southwesterly 40 feet; thence at right angles southeasterly 40 feet; thence at right angles northwesterly 80 feet; to the southeasterly line of Welch Street; and thence at right angles northeasterly along said southeasterly line of Welch Street 40 feet to the place of beginning. Being part of lot-100-ava lot No. 163.

Public notice is hereby given that on MONDAY, the 16th day of OCTOBER, 1882, at 12 o'clock noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Conrad Herold, had on the 7th day of September, 1882, the day on which the above property was duly levied upon, as aforesaid, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the above described property, to the highest and best bidder, for the coin of the United States.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.

JOS. ROSENTHAL, Att'y for Plff.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 23, 1882.

23-30-7-14

FINE

Suits, TAILORING Suits. $25. TAILORING Suits. $30.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Suits, TAILORING Suits. $40. TAILORING Suits. $50.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Suits, TAILORING Suits. $60. TAILORING Suits. $70.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.
We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.
Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	627,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,363 30
LIABILITIES.	$3,752,099 09
Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,933,672 80
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda
NOTHING ELSE
Newton Bros. & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO

Bound Volumes of the "Argonaut,"

From Vol. 1 to Vol. 10, inclusive.

ANY ONE CAN BE ACCOMMODATED with the Bound Volumes from the commencement by applying at the Business Office, 522 California Street.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,
10 POST STREET,
.....AND.....
718 SANSOME STREET.
Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Apollinaris

"THE QUEEN OF TABLE WATERS."

British Medical Journal.

"Apollinaris Water is an article which is produced by Nature and is not the handiwork of man: it is a Natural and not an artificial Water."

U.S. Treasury, 28 January, 1882.

ANNUAL SALE, 10 MILLIONS!

Of all Grocers, Druggists, and Mineral Water Dealers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

FOR SALE BY RUHL BROTHERS,
522 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,
HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,
GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,
TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,
Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.
PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President. WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.
ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President. E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED
OIL CLOTHING
WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.
MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,
ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,
RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING
BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,
Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

A NOVELTY IN SAUCE!
MONTSERRAT
LIME FRUIT JUICE SAUCE.
FINEST TABLE SAUCE IN THE MARKET FOR ROAST MEATS, STEAKS, FISH, CURRIES, GAME, ETC., ETC.

We take great pleasure in recommending the above Sauce to the public for not only its wholesomeness, being made from pure MONTSERRAT (W. I. Island) Lime Fruit Juice, but for its delicacy of flavor, which makes it superior to any Sauce ever offered in this market.

LOWENTHAL, LIVINGSTON & CO., Importers and Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.
FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free | $72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me | $72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine

ICHI BAN,
22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.
The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,
LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,
AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,
At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:
210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:
Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf Oakland.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.
N. B.—Examine the cork.

When ordering Wine, don't call for "California Champagne," merely, but state the brand, "ECLIPSE," Extra Dry, or the firm's name. We are the only producers of NATURAL SPARKLING WINES on this coast.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
dealers in Old London Dock Brandy, Port Wine, Sherries, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple Brandy, Pisco, Arrack, Cordials, Liqueurs, etc. 720 MONTGOMERY, and 511 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.
110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 15.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 7, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

THE WOMAN WHO SANG.

Related by One of the Gentlemen Who Came Home Late.

The street is the same as it used to be. I visited it the other day, and I doubt if it has changed much since the year of grace, say, '55. There is a church at one end of the block, the Fifth Avenue end; and a queer old tavern, that may have stood there since the days of the Albany post-road, at the other, the Sixth Avenue end. I don't know much about the church, but the best two kinds of punches were always on file at the tavern—the "London" and the "milk." We were habitués, Frondeur and I, until one night—a little too much Tenniel in the London Punch, I suppose, was the cause, or mayhap a sniff too much of nutmeg—we grew rather hot and loud over the staple discussion of the time, Dickens and Thackeray, and they always put so little Tenniel or nutmeg in our punches after that that we left in disgust. The houses are low on the street, and a good many have white doors with round, brass knobs. I don't think the street could ever have been modish, but that it was born bourgeois, and stayed so. It harbors neither swell nor shop, and its nearest approach to dignity is its neighborship to the residence of a retired Macchiavelli of State politics around the corner.

It was an oppressively quiet street. We, the gentlemen who came home late, and she, the woman who sang, were the sole disturbing elements. We used to sit in the summer nights with open windows to hear her concerts, which began about ten, and went on to midnight. Our concerts were al fresco, and, in the German custom, were frequently given at sunrise, though oftener than every May-day. Ours, as to noise and discord, were Wagnerian, but she was a true Italian. But the neighbors slept through both, as they do in the city through all noises—of cats, milkmen, and drays for the ferries. It was only when we had not the material for getting up one of our concerts that we attended hers—that is to say, when we were poor, and had to stay in the house. It would have paid us at the same price as that of one of our own musicales. She was of the "old school good school," as I said, with its trills, and quavers, and surrenders of sense to sound. Well I remember it. The hot, dark room, lighted only by a pipe at each window, and the glare of the street-lamp at the curb beneath, which also feebly penetrated the dark bank of foliage—for the street was shady—between us and the singer, and then rising through the sultry bush of the night from her windows the notes of some famous aria.

I thought her voice perfect, and battled for my conviction with Frondeur, who had heard more operas than I had heard of; but "Pshaw, I tell you it is worn! But she is a consummate artist," he would say.

One night—a rather dumpy one, for the finale of our concert of the previous one had been rather tremendous; I couldn't hold a pen down town that day, I know, and when I came back I found that Frondeur had written another swear-off and stuck it on the wall, and from the uneasy way in which he eyed the moon, I knew that at least one cow, to saw nothing of zebras, was jumping over it—one night, I say, we were just going to stay up for the first number. When it came, it was a plaintive bit of sentiment that I vaguely recognized as Bellinian; but when it was finished, Frondeur knocked the ashes out of his pipe, and said, plaintively:

"She must be an old woman. She has sung with Steffanone."

"Steffanone!" I said.

He laughed. "That sounds to you as old as the piper who played before Moses; but true it is." And to bed we went, with the memorial of Castle Garden opera and the great Havana company still ringing in our ears.

That she had sung with Steffanone made her singing sweeter to Frondeur than if she had sung like a new Steffanone, for it brought him a bit of his past back. A Second Empire kind of a past was Frondeur's; a past of Offenbach first nights, and of Mabile, and of the Boulevard whereon Heine said the Deity, grown ennuyé, might look of an evening to enliven himself; a past wherein he had not heard opera from the second-story window of a West—th Street lodging-house, but from the boxes, or oftener the wings. A man of the world down in the world. What sadder situation! Lucifer cast from a haven of clubs and co-teries, to writhe in a Tophet of tap-rooms and beer-gardens. From Fifth Avenue to Sixth; it is more than a block, as well for men as women.

Another night Frondeur did something rash. It was a "Trovatore" night. She had sung something—the "Tacea la Notte," I think—and then had let her fingers wander at random over the old score. Snatches and catches we got of all the most hackneyed melodies, till we marked the quick leap of "Di Quella Pira." Frondeur squirmed in his chair. "I wish she would play that again," said he. Sure enough, something in the spouting melody had arrested the listless fingers. It began again, and with the note came one from my chum, struck with wonderful accuracy, considering the distance. The piano stopped, and then came the sharp repetition that marks the waiting accompaniment. Frondeur jumped to his feet—bad I ever seen him do so before?—and went storming up the splendid score clear to the great A and down again without a break, the piano firmly accompanying. I had never heard him sing before, except the an-thems whereby and with hallooing Jack Falstaff lost his voice. Then he sat down and damned himself in the polyglot profanity which I envied. With an Esculapian precision and elaborateness he cursed each member of his corporeal frame, and devoted his soul to every Gehenna that the mind of man has invented, as those of a boy and a blackguard, swearing à la mode de Paris et de Londres and in the famous Liverpoolian.

"There's your prima donna, Ned," he said, the next evening, as we started back to our rooms after dinner. I looked up, and along the shady street I saw a stoutish woman, a little less than middle-aged, with brown clustering hair and red cheeks, and a broad, laughing mouth, advancing toward us. Frondeur worked at home during the day, and had seen her before from his window.

"Not quite divine, eh, Pendennis?"

"I am not likely to apotheosize any opera singer," I said, somewhat ruffled by his airs of seniority.

"Gad! you might as well that as the other thing, for all you know about 'em. She'd better 'ware of dog-catchers, though."

I had noticed a little hound running along the gutter by her side, loosed from the leash which she held in her hand. As Frondeur spoke, one of two men who had been driving a dilapidated horse and cart slowly along the street as we walked, leaped suddenly from his seat, and dashed straight at the unfortunate dog. It was all in a moment. Coming in the same direction as ourselves, who had almost met the singer, he had to pass us to reach her pet. Strange to say, he neither passed us nor reached the pet; for the elder of the two gentlemen in his path, without so much as turning a glance over his shoulder, suddenly changed his cane from his left hand, wherein he had swung it, to a position under his right arm. The knob was heavy, and protruded a matter of eighteen inches behind the gentleman's back. I prayed then, and I pray now, that one of the blackguards whom the city of New York licenses to worry ladies and children, and harass and madden harmless animals in its streets, lost an eye by that manœuvre—as neat a one as may be found in "Napier," "Kingleake," or the "Comte de Paris." At any rate, he said he had, emphatically. Pray heaven, as I said, that for once in his dirty life his foul lips spoke truth. The signora was quick as Frondeur; her clasp was on the dog's collar, the brute himself was in her arms, and she, with tucked-up skirts, was running homeward for dear life before the Billingsgate recitative was half over. We followed slowly; for she had turned back as soon as Frondeur had stood his ground long enough to say so, and so reached her house ere long, and without incurring a suspicion of premeditated resistance to the law. She stood on the steps. The dog was safely housed. With her emboupoint in a state of billowy agitation, her cheeks flushed, and eyes sparkling, the signora was simply charming. She shook her fan at Frondeur as if she had known him for years. She would not have done it to me. It was the freemasonry of Bohemia. "Ah, sir, it was inimitable, that ruse! You are Napoleon, and all for my little dog; but he was Baillo's dog, Crispino—he named him."

Frondeur bowed and laughed.

"A musical animal, indeed! Do you think he could strike a key from a piano across the street?"

She gave a pretty little gasp of surprise, and then a suppressed scream of delight.

"Oh, my Manrico! and you are the Troubadour—Il Trovatore? And the dog-catcher shall be Di Luna. Imagine him in 'Il Balen!' But you had an encore—half a dozen. I tried you on 'Favorita' and 'Lucia.'"

"Indeed!" said Frondeur, with one of his frank laughs. "I spent what voice I had in your service, and have hardly been able to speak since. Besides, you know, a man must sleep one night a week."

She asked us in after a little more of badinage, and, \pm truth, I was not sorry, fearing from our clatter that the neighbors, who went to bed, I think, with the sun, would rise in barbaric wrath and expel us from the precincts of Philistia.

Was there ever a pleasanter evening spent than in that second floor front? The room was a revelation to me. Books, and music, and pictures, in hopeless confusion. Piles of little, chunky, green-covered French novels. Balzac and Paul de Kock—the signora was not squeamish evidently; autograph scores innumerable, some of them of great name. Each of the wondrous trio whose splendid song-hurst filled the earlier years of the century, and made Italy forget her chains—is not the new German tyranny in art worse than the old one in politics?—the drums and gongs and steam piano of King Louis more deadly than the muskets and cannon of Emperor Francis?—each of these, Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, were represented. I provoked a roar from Frondeur, and a piteous appeal from the signora, by asking the latter if she had known the author of "Sonnambula," who died, he it said, when she, though no chicken, was in long dresses.

Nay, there was never such an evening before in my life, and there have been few since, for the signora was not to stay, and Bohemia is like the early Rome. Its women are few; the Sabines have to be ravished from the outlying countries—Belgravia, Philistia, perhaps too often Alsatia. Smoke and snatches of song floated out of the open windows. It was the crowning triumph of home products, I thought, when she accepted a cigarette from my Virginians, and declined Frondeur's Honradez, saying as she did so, in mock anger:

"It is from the way I sing, then, that you think my throat is made of copper?"

But the cigarettes went out and the songs died, when these two old soldiers got fairly to fighting their battles over again. What one had not heard in Venice, the other had sung at St. Petersburg. And he, too, had bought pearls for Clarisse; yes, but not such big ones as the baronet who shot himself. He had gotten out of these waters ere great winds and large fish troubled them. Ah, well, there was not vinegar enough in the world once to dissolve the pearls of Clarisse; but she died in a hospital. "And where were the pearls, and the English baronets, and the Yankee students?" said the signora, striking a melancholy chord on her grand piano. But she could not sing, Clarisse, nor act; she was a shape to hang dresses on. And the signora touched the keys again and sang one word, "A-de-la-i-da," as Beethoven wrote it. Some people had shapes and some had voices. And he had known Spinelli?—then Spinelli had borrowed money from him. Yes, and he had been paid with a little buffa—so. And she bobbed her head and crooked her fingers, and sounded a note that was nearly bass, with a droll grimace.

How long it would have gone on I know not, had not Frondeur asked her if she had ever dined at the Stromberg Café, in Strasse So-and-so, Vienna. The signora stared, flushed, and then, with a symptom of asphyxia, told him his European remembrances were mixed. We went home then, and suddenly, on the way, Frondeur was seized with the same difficulty in respiration, and finally gurgled out words to the effect that the café in question was like the clan MacGregor, and had a name that was nameless by day. He had confused it with some other.

There were many visits across the street as the summer wore on. We suspended our concerts pretty much. There was some place to go of evenings, music to be heard without paying for it in drink, and the signora's lively talk, and droll, graceful ways, supplied the stimulus to exercise, which two flagging and fatigued brains used to seek in kummel and brandy. We had been getting, in truth, into a habit of spiritual inebriety that was as dangerous as pleasant. Brutal drunkenness, staggering, fighting, falling in gutters would have disgusted us both utterly, but each of us knew himself and knew his fellow; knew that a little of the divine essence would sharpen the senses and loosen the tongue; that the application of the beautiful in sound, and shape, and color, would be heightened; that fancies would arise and express themselves in apt speech; that quaint thoughts would pass into felicitous sentences; that, in short, the mental freshness which comes and goes with youth, and leisure for reading and meditation, would be renewed. The signora, as I said, supplied this in a great measure. Except for such forced and artificial growth, we had pretty much reaped and gleaned each other's minds, plucked them bare of fruit, and hers was a new variety which we could both pick and graft on the old stock.

One day I had been obliged by a raging headache to leave the treadmill for a season, and so rode up through the blistered streets to the end of our block, and then, with half-closed eyes, reeled along the pavement to the door of our domicile. Entering the rooms I found them empty, front and back. Frondeur's work, New York correspondence for the Paris Tanbours, lay on the table. I thought he had gone down to the Café Vingtvins to get some politics out of the morning papers. Then I heard a well known laugh outside the window, and looking across the street saw the truant ensconced in the singer's casement, chatting gayly, with the stem of his long porcelain pipe in his teeth. I laughed afterward when analyzing, according to my habit, the feeling of the moment. It was not jealousy. It was thoroughly childish. He had not played fair. He had run away from—"shaken" me. He had taken more of the cake than belonged to him. Perhaps they were laughing at me and my greenness. I flung myself on a lounge with a jar that set my head swimming nearly into the misty ocean of unconsciousness. I lay there half stupid, watching the lazy wave of the leaves in the heat that seemed almost visible in its permeating intensity. After a while he came in whistling, in capital spirits.

"Hullo, old man! Sick, eh? What's the matter? Some old spree come back on you? Thought you skipped a headache or two last spring. Getting it now—mills of the gods, you know."

Then he went on to tell me where he had been. I informed him that I knew.

Why hadn't I come over, then? She looked cool and fresh enough of a morning to cure a beadache, and she might have fussed me up. There was nothing like a woman around when you are sick.

I thought sickness of all kinds disgusting, I said, and would not intrude it on any one. Besides, he had beard, no doubt, of that unlucky gentleman, Monsieur de Trop.

"De Trop! Ho, bo—and you think I've gone philandering, sentimentalizing?"

"Not by any means. There is no place for sentiment between you; but—I don't know that Charlotte is a married lady, or a moral man is Werther."

Frondeur laughed a little disgusted laugh. Heaven is in your lump. From the easy way in woman admitted you to her acquaintance you have doubts of her. If you had been required to be visited before you were let into the same room with her, and stamped and countersigned to insure introduction, you would have none. Oh, they are pretty safeguards, and of great avail. Damme! I wish I had a double X now for all the women I've known that way, and whom!—He stopped, and then went on more quietly. "That a woman smokes cigarettes and burns brandy in her coffee is a sign of nothing except that she disregards conventionalities, and I can bet you, boy, that if you take that for a sign of anything further you will get into awful trouble some of these days. There are no signs of anything further to be trusted."

I felt thoroughly ashamed by this time, and begged his pardon.

"You haven't harmed me," he said, "and it isn't your fault. It's the cursed, foul narrow-mindedness of the society in which you and I and every gentleman were bred." He turned to his work and continued looking toward the opposite windows. "She's a good woman, and a good Catholic. I wish to God I were." For, like many a gentlemanly wreck, Frondeur was firm in the faith, if not proficient in works. Such people are the least blown about by the winds of doctrine of a time like ours. They receive their convictions in their youth, and lock them up in their bureaus, and, when bested by age or sickness or ill-fortune, bethink them of their beneficent qualities and take them out often; and, like all ignorant folk, who, knowing that a medicine is good, think that the larger doses they may take the better, so have longings for the shelter of the Romish communion, such as my chum expressed. This little tilt was unfortunate enough at the time, but afterward I was glad of the opportunity that a moment of nervous ill-humor offered to clear up all doubts on the question.

It was not to be expected that a woman so cheery as Madame Alherti—for such was her name—should not have friends, and we often saw them from our windows, and sometimes ran across them in our calls. There were many gay, gossiping ladies, some of them queens of song, who came with spicy bits of greenroom scandal, grumblings about salaries and managers, and with anxious questionings for madame to answer about the horrors of the provinces. Neither was there wanting an occasional impresario, with a company to make up, and wanting material. We met one, a droll, bluff Frenchman, who advised her to pitch the doctors to the deuce and come along with him. She might as well die on her first night as stay where she was. But would he have her die on the stage and spoil a scena? He seemed to be in some doubt there. The disappointment of the audience might be counterbalanced by the free advertising that such an event would give his troupe.

There were needy songsters, too, in plenty, and I fear that madame's purse was too often opened to settle up old scores among the table d'hôte keepers of Wooster or Fourteenth Street.

As I indicated, madame was on the sick list. She would die—burst her heart—she said the doctors had told her, if she sang an opera through.

"You will find that high C a stepping-stone of your dead self to higher things, some time," said Frondeur, one night, as she mounted it with a little strain that began to be noticeable in her voice.

"Yes," she said; "to die on the high C, that would be pleasant, would it not?"

"Ay, or on the low one."

"That is not a good way to talk," she said, leaving the piano and coming toward him, "for you, though it might do for me, who have something to complain of. Do you want to be running around Europe all your days doing nothing? Was the greenroom such a heaven? I do not like your signs. You are careless. See the holes burned all over your clothes with sparks, and these stains at the third button of your vest; that is where the beer drops off the bottom of the glass. And your menagerie" (as he called the moon-jumping cows and zebras) "will eat you up by little pieces. Ah, you must not do that. I have seen so much"—and she turned to her instrument again with a face full of the pain of remembrance.

I was out of town for the two closing weeks of the summer, and knew nothing of what was going on in West—th Street. It was late one night shortly after my return that I sat in my room alone. Frondeur had gone across the street, but I was too far down on my luck to accompany him. Briefly, I was learning to accept defeat at the hands of the world. It is a hard lesson, and well it is to learn it young, as I did. I was beginning to find out that I was one of those "who don't, somehow, seem to get along," and the reception of the conviction was not pleasant. Presently my chum came in, and, after putting on his slippers and loading his pipe, inquired abruptly if I could afford a ticket to hear Alherti in concert.

"Who the deuce is Alherti? What—I thought she couldn't sing."

"The key of her life," said he, quoting his favorite Clough as he puffed jerkily, "is not 'I will,' I suppose, but 'I must.' She can't starve."

"But I hadn't imagined she was hard up."

"No, I suppose not. She is one who will carry all sail till she runs under."

"She must have made a great deal of money."

"Ay, and spent it. They all do. Especially when they have a man to help 'em."

"And she had?"

"She is a mime—isn't she? I fancy that like Sir Walter, and others, she has an old crack in her heart that was never more than half healed."

"And was the maker of the crack as worthy an artificer as the one who performed the office for—others?"

"Gad! I fancy he and Millie would have paired very well. Pity they hadn't—knifed each other, and saved a peck of trouble. But he's dead, and she's dead; and they cheated the devil, for they hadn't soul enough between them to make a rasher for his breakfast. And madame will sing in concert. And let us go to bed."

This was the tone in which Frondeur thought fit to speak of the fairest woman whose baleful occupancy ever depreciated the value of a fashionable block. There was joy in London County when she died, for in order that she might be buried properly, the last of the Van Alstyne tenants was allowed to huy in his lease, one of those "durable" ones, under which the old lords of the soil let it.

I know that Frondeur kept her body till it was no longer sweet, and that in his mind was sharply pictured, as by sight, for months and almost years, each stage of the process that resolved it to its native clay. These cracks in a man's heart do not more than half heal.

The first chill of autumn was in the air, the pavements shone with the first autumn rain, and the lamps flickered in the first autumn wind, as I slammed the door behind me and took my place with Frondeur on the back seat of the carriage that bore madame, her friends and fortunes, to her resuscitation in the musical world. She, with her skirts and hoop—it was in the hooped era—occupied the other seat.

"A had night for it," said Frondeur; "look out for your throat, madame."

But madame did not heed him. She was thinking, as I guessed, of La Scala and her debut, of youth, and health, and the sunny Italian skies, and the handsome tenor; and then, perhaps, of the northern drizzle and soak and cold, of foreign comrades, of the comradeship of defeat, and of Death and Poverty that were fighting for the possession of her. He face lighted and her step grew buoyant though, as she mounted the steps of Chickering Hall. The crowd about, the lights, the carriages, the audience pouring in—these were the heralds of battle and victory. They were concert-singers, the others; and what lay-figures beside the queen of the great boards, the grand opera, with her ease and confidence and superior rapport with her audience!

What was the light in her face in that mad song from "Lucia"? Only the delight of triumph, or had she weighed the consequences and found truth in the old manager's words, "Better die on your first night than live here"? Prescience she may not have had, but I think, in the calm of this later time, that the first strain of her aria from the orchestra filled her with high resolve and longing to go with the immortal numbers still on her lips or ringing in the ears through the sleep or waking of those who heard, and that with this her face was radiant as Stephen's before the Sanhedrim.

As we drove home through the rain, she was pale and exhausted, but vivacious and happy. At the house an idea struck her. She would have a little supper. She was going to be rich now, and it was her treat. We boys had been feting her all summer, she said, which we had been able to do out of the savings arising from the abandonment of our amateur entertainments. I should run around to Creillon's, and order something.

"Remember," she said, laughing, in the doorway, "vin à discrétion; à discrétion, remember!"

I vanished into the darkness, and she went back into the light—in very truth.

When I returned—ten minutes of time—there was a bustle in the house and women in the room. Madame lay rigid on her sofa, and Frondeur was rubbing her hands. The light blazed on the pleasant room, and the books, and pictures, and music—shone on the polished keys of the open piano.

"What is it?" I gasped, in blank dismay.

"My God, my God, she is dead!" he cried, breaking down.

And dead she was, on the high C, rehearsing her conquest. The servant came in a moment later with the tray from the restaurant. It seems rather ghastly now, but then I thought it a natural thing to do—the only thing, in fact. Frondeur and I had little or no money. I took the porte-monnaie from the dead woman's pocket, and paid for the supper. Then they turned us out. We were men. It was proper. Madame was left alone among strangers. In that chapel, or stall, of the temple of art the disheveled Philistines watched its dead votress till morn, and then, thank God! their work, begrudged, for her was done.

Dear madame! A memory that shall grow faint perhaps, as older memories have. We forget all things—home, mother, wife, children, friends—that we outlive. But ere I forget you, I will write you down, judiciously enough, to have had a woman's grace, an artist's soul, and the voice of an angel.

ANDREW EDWARD WATROUS.

October, 1882.

"It is curious that solitaires," observed a jeweler to a New York Sun reporter, "should have remained so long the fashion, when such fine effects may be obtained from the tasteful setting of a cluster. Here are some fine cluster rings, yet I have not sold one for two years. The cry among the fashionables is a solitaire or nothing. The æsthetic craze affects our business. It has had the effect of bringing once more into prominence stones of an odd character, or which had been out of style for years. Carbuncles, for instance, have become very fashionable of late, because Mr. Wilde wore one of them at a lecture. Here is a very fine one which I have had several years. It will easily bring me now four times as much as I could have sold it for four months ago. Cairngorm stones, such as the Scottish chiefs used to wear in the hilts of their claymores, are also coming in again. Just now Egyptian jewelry is, of course, fashionable among those who can afford to indulge the caprices of the moment. Here is a pretty thing in that style made from a smoked topaz—that is, a topaz which is clear at its circumference, but whose interior seems filled with heavy smoke. Advantages is taken of the dark portion by the skilled lapidary, who cuts it into a dull and dusky head—that of Isis or Cleopatra—while the surrounding parts make a fine contrast with the clear violet shade of the stone as ordinarily seen. The depending bands, you observe, as also those crossing the head and falling over the forehead, are exquisitely ornamented with stripes containing alternate layers of small diamonds and rubies. It is an old and striking piece of jewelry; but that is an advantage in these days when the antique in everything seems to be so much valued merely for its own sake. Those delicate lines bordering the bands are of genuine huhl work. The gem is actually inlaid with solid gold. It is worth one hundred and seventy-five dollars now; but when Egypt becomes no longer a fashionable drawing-room topic, dealers will buy it in for thirty or forty dollars."

The master of ceremonies at a Saratoga hotel always asked of a new guest, for whom he was about to make it pleasant: "Shall I introduce you, sir, to a porch girl or a dancing girl?" The porch girl, it is said, was chosen every time.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Speaking recently at Norwich, Cardinal Manning said that last year he had the pleasure of sitting next General Sir G. Wolseley at a public dinner in London, and observed that the general was a strict total abstainer.

Mrs. Maxwell, better known as Miss M. E. Braddon, is just passing the prime of life and enjoys the most vigorous, robust health. She lives in a fine house near London, and is fond of driving a team of spirited chestnut horses.

Judge Hilton, who refused banker Seligman entertainment at the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga, because the latter was an Israelite, now offers to give ten thousand dollars to the exiles' fund for the benefit of Russian Hebrew refugees. Several gifts and subscriptions by Judge Hilton to different Jewish societies have already been refused.

It is reported from Vienna that the Empress Eugénie has bought the château and park of Wasserberg, in Styria, from Baron von Herzinger for sixty thousand pounds, having quitted England in high dudgeon at the attentions which were shown Cetewayo. She is not at all delighted with her new residence near Farnborough, which cost a large sum.

The Marquis de Manzanaedo, Duc de Santana, who died recently, was the richest man in Spain. His fortune amounted to twenty millions of dollars. Like the Astors in New York, and the Dukes of Bedford and Westminster in London, most of his fortune came from judicious investments in land in the capital. The Santana possessions in Madrid are enormous, and embrace almost all the fashionable quarters.

September 7th was a proud day for the Duke of Buccleuch, when he was able to present to his tenantry of Upper Teviotdale his son, the Earl of Dalkeith, and his son's son, Lord Eskdail. The duke, taking in hand a silver flagon, drank good health to all present. Lord Dalkeith and Lord Eskdail also pledged the company in their turn. The loving cup, a good old Scotch institution, was afterward handed round, and the healths of the present and prospective owners of the wide domains of Buccleuch were duly honored.

Notwithstanding his pilgrimage to Lourdes, the heir to the premier dukedom of England, now nearly three years of age, is still unable to see, speak, or walk. He is taken to Littlehampton daily, and bathed in the sea, and is the object of much sympathetic curiosity among the people of that place, by whom the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk are held in highest esteem. The unfortunate child is heir to a far larger fortune than that enjoyed by his father, splendid though it is; for he will, should he reach middle life, inherit property of immense value in Sheffield, of which the lease has to fall in.

At the review of the Fifth German Army Corps, near Breslau, the Crown Princess of Germany, in her hussar uniform, rode past at the head of the splendid regiment of hussars of which she is honorary colonel. She wore the little hussar cap, with its long plume, and the black jacket with white braid, from which the corps is called the Black Hussars. A short habit took the place of the manly garments of the other officers, and, instead of a sword, the princess carried her riding-whip swordwise. Like all other commanding officers, she took her place at the right side of the Emperor as her regiment filed past.

"Is it true, colonel," a friend of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll is said to have asked the other day, "that you keep a considerable sum of money loose in an unlocked drawer of your desk at home, so that your children may help themselves without stint or solicitation?" "Certainly," was the reply; "I believe that to be the best way of cultivating in them a sense of responsibility and honor." "Well, frankly, now, colonel, if Brady and Dorsey were staying over night at your house, would you leave that drawer unlocked?" But the colonel's only answer to this home-thrust at himself and his clients was "a long and resonant laugh."

The Princess of Wales, now in her thirty-eighth year, is described as looking scarcely a day older than when, on March 10th, nineteen years ago, she stood at the altar by the side of her young husband. Nor do advancing years change, save to deepen and strengthen, the regard and affection in which she is held by the people of England. By common consent she is placed beyond the region of criticism. "What the prince does" is the topic of free discussion—praise or blame—every night at a score of clubs and in drawing-rooms innumerable. But the good taste of "what the princess does" is never for a moment called into question.

When Mrs. Morse first went to Washington, she prepared to make the calls that official custom imposes on members' wives, and very early in the list came the wives of senators. Hon. B. K. Bruce, now register of the treasury, was then senator, and Mrs. Morse said inquiringly to her husband: "I suppose it is the right thing to include Mrs. Bruce." "Certainly," he replied; "if you are going to call on senators' wives, why, damn it, call on senators' wives, and don't make any contemptible distinctions." So she made the call. But when Mrs. Bruce, a handsome, lady-like, and highly educated octogenarian—who, by the way, was socially very popular at Atlantic City this summer—returned it, two or three supercilious society women cut Mrs. Morse.

Certainly there is an air of romance and of tragedy about the story of Dhuleep Singh, who, it is announced, intends now to seek election to the British House of Commons. He began life as the Maharajah of the Punjab, possessor of the Kohinoor and other almost boundless wealth. After ruinous wars and equally ruinous treaties, he now bids fair to close his career in the position of Squire of Elveden, a quiet English country gentleman, without the Kohinoor, or any of his former vast possessions, save an annuity from the government of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, which, by his luxurious habits, he has already reduced to sixty-five thousand dollars per annum. True, he has purchased estates and built magnificent palaces in England, Elveden Hall having cost three hundred thousand dollars; but, by act of Parliament, all these must be sold at his death, leaving his heir only the name and the memory of the son of the "Lion of the Punjab."

THE GIRLS OF GOTHAM.

Their Manners and Customs, and How They Amuse Themselves.

The New York girl has been more maligned by the American press than any other creature on earth. I never pick up an out-of-town paper without seeing some glaringly absurd story about her. She is represented as dining in her chamber at midnight in company with a handsome footman; driving a four-in-hand up the avenue at five o'clock; visiting the gambling hells with a male escort at an uncommonly late hour, concealing her identity behind a thick veil; taking naughty peeps at wild French halls; climbing into the rear windows at night after some "giddy pranks" (ye gods!); having her face enameled by an old hag who formerly attended the Empress Eugénie; indulging in clandestine meetings with a bogus count (this is a very popular one in New England, where counts are abhorred); competing with her girlish friends for a prize offered on the quiet to the maiden who can show the prettiest foot and ankle to a select committee of salacious club men; riding bicycles in fascinating costumes in a school where their admirers are permitted to view them from a gallery; taking lessons in the manly art of wrestling from a charming and dangerously beautiful "professor"; holding high-jinks in the parlor after the old folks have gone to bed, and heaven only knows what not. How mightily a man will be undeceived who approaches a New York girl under the impression that she is the sort of creature that the pleasing little stories and anecdotes floating about in the rural press would indicate. It seems incredible to a man who has always lived here that such infernal rot should ever get into type, and the only way to account for it is on the supposition that the men who write the stuff have mixed the New York girl up with her unfortunate sister who has sunk into sin for a living. Even then the paragraphs are untrue, because almost none of the fast women here are native New Yorkers. The police department in counting them up a short time ago (there were seven thousand, more's the pity) asserted that the number who were natives of the city was infinitesimal. I never met one who was born here, though there are many who came here when very young and slipped under the wheels at an early age; but natives are few, for the simple reason that when a woman falls she feels that she must get away from home. That the extraordinary things credited to the New York girl are intended for her unfortunate sister is possible, for the city boasts the wildest and wickedest lot of these devils in the land.

By a singular coincidence, too, the men who accompany these women, and make Rome howl from sun-down to dawn, are invariably out-of-town visitors. A New York man—by which I mean a man who has some standing in society and is known to respectable people—would not ruin his chances by whirling around in the sinuous measures of the pump-handle waltz on the floor of one of the fast dance-houses of the city, in the arms of a dear despoiler. He will stand on the edge of the floor, and look and talk, but he rigidly leaves the dancing to the gentleman from out of town. So it is seldom that the New Yorker finds himself smashing gas-lamps, clubbing hack-drivers, holding up telegraph poles, losing his valuables, and fighting policemen; while the visitor is constantly having that sort of "a good time," and his companion is invariably dressed with lavish extravagance, and can drink as much as he, though she is but a weak and worldly woman. I presume that the befuddled visitor concludes, after he has soaked his head in cold water for a couple of days, that the creature was a fair sample of the New York girl, and he straightway begins to indite paragraphs for the suburban papers with the double effect of easing his troubled soul and refilling his depleted purse. Thus are the New York girls supposed to be wild, reckless of action, fond of exhibiting physical points at the expense of modesty, and delightfully loose in general. The idea of a respectable young woman acting in the hoydenish manner accredited to her is so preposterous as to be grotesque.

No girl ever drives up the avenue at five o'clock in the afternoon. Few, if any, are expert enough to get along in the howling crush of teams, and no one tries, as it is bad form for a woman to drive in New York, except in the morning, when a village cart and pony are not altogether condemned, if there is a groom along and the driving is confined to the park. Of course it is impossible for any woman to get inside the doors of our best card and haccarat places, and a girl might as well throw up all hopes of social position if she puts her foot within the Academy when a French hall is on. As for climbing in a hack window, the feat would be impossible where the clocks are solidly built as they are in New York, and no girl ever had her face enameled in this section of the country. That pleasing proof of insanity is left to passée and ambitious old women. The idea of a number of girls exhibiting their feet and ankles to lascivious club men is indeed truly beautiful, and is only equaled by the picture of them astride the lithe-limbed bicycle, or in the muscular embraces of a wrestling pugilist. All rot of the most transparent kind.

In point of fact, no girl in the whole country—not even excepting the firmest of straight-laced New Englanders—is half so carefully guarded as the New York girl of to-day. She is watched with the most elaborate care, and cultivates a reticent manner that places her in the foremost row of discreet womanhood. In particular are the street manners of New York girls and women admirable. Men who yield a seat in a car or stage to a lady here are often incensed because the only acknowledgment is a haughty and almost imperceptible inclination of the head. But the seat is the woman's by right, and a little reflection will show any man that in a vast city, full of presumptuous fools and conceited cockneys, a reticent and reserved manner is the only safeguard. The same woman, in noticing a friend or acquaintance on the street, will greet him with the frankest of smiles and the most cordial manner in the world. Young women are not allowed to walk the streets alone by the vast majority of parents. They must be accompanied by a friend or a maid, if the distance is only half a block. Of course, she never ventures into the street after dark without a male escort, and few girls will drive with men even at five o'clock, unless the couple is engaged to be married. There will be fewer girls driving than ever this year, and a girl perched on top of a huge yellow dog-cart will be a much rarer sight than formerly. In the landau or victoria, with her mother, is the proper place for her. She goes nowhere of an evening without a chaperone, except to Wallack's or Daly's theatres, and then there must be no cabs in going to and from the theatre. The fashion is becoming more and more general to allow unmarried women to visit the play only in theatre parties, when there can be chaperones and mammas without great inconvenience.

This fashion, if it goes much further, will end in the remodeling of some of the more fashionable theatres after the London plan, so that boxes will be plentiful. It was a very popular form of entertainment last year to give a theatre party followed by a supper at the Brunswick, and it was no unusual sight to see four distinct parties in the boxes and one or two in the stalls on the first night. It makes a brilliant-looking audience, but it induces untold profanity and severe strictures on American manners. The worst instance of the year was the first night of "La Belle Russe" at Wallack's. There were half a dozen parties of from six to fourteen, all more or less known to each other, and there was such an incessant chatter, and flutter, and flurry, that the manager of the theatre—the genial and polite Mr. Lester Wallack himself—felt obliged to admit to several bosom friends that "it was most devilishly apparent, don'tchew-know, me boy." Members of a theatre party are usually amused, and there are often appetites for the supper, but there are no chances for a l'été-à-l'été, and this is of course pleasing to the mammas who employ all devices, fair and foul, to avoid putting their daughters in such a position that a private and personal chat with a young man is possible.

The manners of society girls to-day are severe. The gushing era has passed by, and the "thoughtful and occasionally vivacious" era has arrived. They talk about everything, and hold their heads well up in the air. The girl who looks shy, droops her head, or lowers her eyes when addressed by a man is voted very bad form; and, as the carriage is very upright, the prevailing manner of society girls is charmingly frank and earnest. I call this a big improvement over the maidenly simper that formerly prevailed. It is difficult to analyze the subtle delicacies that make a woman fashionable and in proper form. One thing I notice is the custom of iteration which most girls cultivate. For instance, if you say to a girl: "It is very warm," she does not smile, and simper: "Perfectly dreadful. I never suffered so in my life," or, "I'm quite consumed," but she looks at you expressively, and says, with the same emphasis that you have used: "Yes; it is very warm." Again, you say: "Mrs. Brown's death was a great shock." The answer will not be a sudden burst of adjectives expressing her grief, nor will she say: "It's so dreadful!" but the simple formula: "Her death was indeed a great shock." I find it difficult to illustrate my meaning fully; but in general the conversation of a New York girl is simple in language and profound in accent. It is the craze for the English which does her the greatest harm. In her struggle to get the English accent, she lays herself open to ridicule. She is guilty of calling street-cars "trams," and says such things as "I can't dance any more," or "I can't dawnc any more," combining the American and English in a most hybrid and enervating way.

In the way of fun, New York girls have everything from prayer-rugs to fencing; but always within the strictest bounds of propriety. The prayer-rugs are genuine importations from the East, and have most of them been used by Mohammedans. The fashion is not new, but it has been revived of late, until no girl considers her chamber furnished unless one of these heavily woven, heart-shaped little rugs lies at her bedside. They fence to a limited extent. Colonel Monterey, who was in San Francisco some years ago, and may still be remembered there, has several classes at young ladies' houses. They fence with the single stick, and confine themselves to up and down movements. "It doesn't pay to have them thrust," said the colonel the other day, "because as soon as one of them makes a pass they both run away." But lawn-tennis is their great field, and New York girls rank at the head of the list as expert players. There are private tennis courts wherever the grounds will admit it, and the armories of the city are utilized to the utmost by tennis clubs. There is great rivalry among the girls, not only in point of skill, but costume. They look stunning, in snug-fitting Jerseys and short skirts, and move as gracefully as when roller-skating. The number of horsewomen in New York never fails to astonish strangers. The riding habits are made by tailors, and are marvels of close fitting, and the horses are half-blooded. The girls ride well, and there is no prettier sight than a company of twenty or thirty of them scampering through the park at a furious pace in the early morning, with a squad of sedate grooms in the rear.

At home the New York girl plays the piano a little and the harp, hanjo, or violin a good deal—that is, the last three instruments, and particularly the violin, are throwing the piano into the shade. The piano is left almost entirely to the Wagner enthusiasts, who form an extensive and exclusive clique, and are known personally as "Parsifals." The New York girl is also wildly enthusiastic in matters of art, from Kensington embroidery to Bartholdi statues. She paints on everything—silk, velvet, marble, tiles, plaques, walls, wood, stone, dress materials, hosiery, furniture, and her enthusiasm for working in clay is great. She seldom or never produces anything from the plastic mud, but her soul soars, and she is enabled to wear a square pasteboard cap and a huge hih with Queen Elizabeth shoulder-puffs. Then, too, she is a prodigious worker at private theatricals, charades, and dumb-cramho—if that's the way it's spelled. In private theatricals no end of trouble is taken, and money is lavished in the most reckless manner. Scenes are painted, temporary stages erected in hall-rooms, orchestras employed, and skilled dramatic teachers retained for weeks. The most elaborate tableaux are given with a richness of costuming never approached on the professional stage. Then there are the dances of the F. C. D. C., and the Patriarch's, Mrs. Irvin's, and Mrs. Barlowe's dancing classes, and the thousand and one societies and socials. Then if the girl is old enough she may carry a crimson parasol and drive to the races (duly chaperoned) on one of the brightest drags, surrounded by men and stared at by the vulgar throng.

The New York girl leads a husy life, and, on the whole, rather a happy one, and taken all in all she is about as charming as any other girl on the bosom of the earth.

NEW YORK, September 27, 1882.

FLANEUR.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

The following description of a bicycle is rather rough on the wheel-man: "The bicycle is a slender, graceful, and altogether harmless arrangement, chiefly composed of two wheels, turned by two cranks, one of which is seated on a little saddle, and operates the machine with his feet."

A colored porter in a Louisville store asked the proprietor for a day's leave of absence. "What's up now?" "Dar's a niggah gwine ter git married, and I oughter be present ter see him fru." "Who is this colored man at whose wedding you have to be present?" "I'se de niggah, hoss."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Up at Trenton Falls, recently, was a married lady, whom we will call Mrs. Spriggins. She had her little child with her, which could toddle about, and was venturesome, and caused her great anxiety in the absence of Spriggins. She remarked to a friend: "I wouldn't have that child to fall over the precipice and get killed for anything, because I would never hear the last of it from Spriggins."

It was at the shore. A gentleman was chatting on his cottage porch with two or three guests. His pretty daughter comes up from the beach, first out of the surf. "Oh, papa!" she exclaimed, "only think, I was nearly drowned." Papa, turning pathetically to his friends: "By the powers, gentlemen, do you hear that? I have spent more than five thousand dollars on that girl's education, and to-day she was nearly drowned."—Progress.

"What have you that's good?" said a hungry traveler, as he seated himself at table d'hôte at a Salt Lake City hotel. "Oh," said the waiter, "we've roast beef, roast mutton, roast pork, and broiled curlews." "What's a curlew?" said the traveler. "Why, a bird—something like a snipe." "Could it fly?" "Yes." "Did it have wings?" "Yes." "Then I don't want any curlew. Anything that had wings and could fly, and didn't leave this country, I don't want for my dinner."—Hotel Mail.

You know these little spindles made of an upright wire about eight inches long, sharp at one end, and set in a base of iron? People have them on desks to put papers and letters on. And the other day a gentleman who left a silk hat on a chair in an office chanced to see one of those spindles on a desk, and put it under the hat; and the fellow who thought it would be a good joke to stroll in, and, apparently by accident, sit down upon that hat and smash it, came to the conclusion that he had exercised fearfully had judgment. —Boston Post.

Almost every year some town is afflicted with the yellow fever. Not long since a fair was gotten up in Texas for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers at Brownsville. Everybody, regardless of social status, attended, and the consequence was that some ladies and gentlemen, who never afterward recognized each other on the streets, became acquainted at the fair. Among others, Pinkeye Bill, who used to drive a street-car, was introduced to the daughter of one of the most aristocratic families in Austin. "I am glad it is the yellow fever they have got down in Brownsville," said Pinkeye Bill. "Why are you glad the sufferers have got the yellow fever?" queried the young lady. "Because, if they had Asiatic cholera, I would not get into decent society hut once every seventeen years."—Texas Siftings.

Three years ago a summer hoarder, while straying along the bed of a stream that had been left partially bare by excessive drought, discovered lying upon the sand a conchiferous mollusk—vulg. clam—which seemed to be in the last gasp from exhaustion and thirst. The kind-hearted stranger, pitying the sore strait of the unhappy bivalve, at once took it up and cast it into a deep part of the stream, and then went his way, speedily forgetting the incident. A week ago, however, as he was enjoying his vacation, and sitting near the spot where the above described event took place, he perceived a clam laboriously climbing out of the water and dragging itself over the sand. Arrived, with much exertion, at the feet of the observer, the clam opened its shell and disclosed a pearl as large as a hazelnut, which the gentleman did not hesitate to appropriate. Thereupon the clam, smiling clear around to its back hinge, returned to the water and disappeared with a gurgle of satisfaction. This affecting incident, besides showing that even the humblest works of creation are capable of noble emotions, teaches us the fine moral that we should always be kind to animals.—Boston Journal.

"I am cutting my corns."

As the words floated out upon the soft air of a June afternoon, and fell upon the ear of Berwick Hetherington, who was swinging lazily in a hammock that hung beneath the larches, he smiled the cold, cynical smile he had learned in Kenosha, and then he raised himself on one elbow and fell out of the hammock.

The noise attracted Eulalie McGirlygirt's attention, and she came to the window, holding a shoe in her hand. Leaning out over the casement, she was about to offer words of condolence and sympathy to Berwick, when her foot slipped, and the loud crash of furniture which followed so startled the girl that she dropped the shoe.

"Will this patient ever recover?" asked a visitor at a noted insane asylum.

"It is a hopeless case," replied the physician. "He was brought to the hospital nearly two years ago, dreadfully mangled, and when his health was restored reason had fled. His one idea is that the court house is falling on him."

"We have kept the secret well, daughter," said Mrs. McGirlygirt to Eulalie, one summer afternoon.

"Yes," was the reply. "But do you know that I have never worn the shoe since that day?"

"How foolishly notional you are, darling," said the mother. "You might at least give it to some poor family who have no home to protect them from the cold."

"No," answered the girl. "It is a sacred relic, always keep it to remind me of one who might have been my husband."—Chicago Tribune.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Herman A. Kellum is the regular Democratic nominee for Superintendent of Public Schools for the city and county of Sacramento. Mr. Herman A. Kellum is a teacher in Saint Joseph's Roman Catholic Academy. Mr. Herman A. Kellum will not be elected as Superintendent of Public Schools for the city and county of Sacramento, and ought not to be. We presume from his name that this person is a German Romanist, and in that connection we beg to print the following excerpt from an Eastern paper, showing the tendency and drift of German Romanism as to our free public schools. Let the German liquor-dealers paste it in the tops of their smoking-caps for easy reference. To raise a generation of Roman Catholic Dutchmen, who will jealously guard the privilege of drinking lager beer on Sunday, seems to be the leading idea of the Roman Catholic Central Society of Milwaukee. Dunder und blitzen!

MILWAUKEE, September 27.—The German Roman Catholic Central Society adopted in to-day's meeting the following: "All members of the Central Society are in duty bound to send their children to Catholic parochial schools only, and it is the duty of every Catholic to contribute to the organization and maintenance of parochial schools and the colleges of the Catholic Church. All Catholics should assist the clergy in providing for the Catholic education of their children, so that a generation of Catholics may be raised who will jealously guard their rights and privileges." The same committee reported in favor of the organization of Catholics for the purpose of electing candidates to political offices who will protect the Catholics in their constitutional rights to unimpair religious worship. Resolutions against prohibition were concurred in. H. J. Spaunberst, of St. Louis, was re-elected president. Also, a vice-president for each State, including A. Boppert, of San Francisco, for California.

At a railroad banquet in New York, once, the toast was proposed, "An honest man's the noblest work of God," to be responded to by Dean Richmond. After an eloquent and witty speech, in which he recited the vexations of railroad politics, the difficulties he found in the lobby, the treacheries and ingratitude of politicians, he came to the end of his remarks by defining an honest man. He said: "An honest man is the damned rascal who will stay bought." Tested by this rule, we just wonder what the Central Pacific Railroad people think of the Honorable Morris M. Estee, late member of the Constitutional Convention.

The Territorial Enterprise, commenting upon the railroad question in the Democratic platform of Nevada, says:

There is no violent demand that freights and fares shall be cut down one-half, whether the business will permit of such reduction or not. There is no passionate clamor for regulating the transportation business on the basis of so much interest—say three per cent, per annum—upon the capital of the railroad companies, less operating expenses. There is no echo to the communistic yell in the Europa platform for certain things to be done, falling in which officials and legislators are to be held up to "lasting scorn and execration." None of this kind of nonsense finds a place in the Democratic county platform. We have only in its place the declaration which favors "such legislation regarding railroads and other corporations within this State, as circumstances from time to time show to be necessary to bring them on an equality with all other interests of the State." The efforts of certain agitators in the Democratic party to make a great hullabaloo over the railroad question in Nevada do not amount to much in the face of a resolution in a Democratic convention, which alone invokes the spirit of justice.

Mr. Irish, of Iowa, who recently purchased the Oakland Times, and who will make it a, if not the, leading Democratic journal of California, says that Iowa had the railroad fever to the extent that citizens would not aid to extinguish railroad property, depots, and buildings when on fire, so intense was the prejudice and so hostile the feeling toward railroad corporations. Now the best sentiment prevails, and the railroads throughout the State are working in harmony with the best interests of the State. It will be so in California in a short time. As soon as the unprincipled demagogues, a few lawyers whom the railroad has omitted to retain, a few journals to which the railroad has refused blackmail, and a few noisy and clamorous blackguards whom the corporations have not deemed it necessary to silence by coin—as soon as these people have found their efforts unavailing in a business direction, they will subside, and will withdraw to their holes. Snakes of railroad wisdom, owls of omniscient intelligence, persistent, barking prairie-dogs of the press and stump, will all again burrow in harmony together, and silence and peace will prevail again in the State.

Some one asked us what Higgins and Gannon would do if temperance politics gained the ascendancy in this State. Our belief is that they would join the party; and we shall not be surprised if four years from now Bill Higgins is running the prohibition party, from his headquarters in a Quaker dairy; Peter Hopkins running for Sheriff, from a temperance coffee-saloon; or Chris Buckley and Jim Gannon parading the Army of Salvation as grand marshals, with Hallelujah Cox in advance, acting as full band, singing temperance songs.

The Republican party is everywhere in revolt against corrupt leaders. In Pennsylvania, the corrupt and tyrannical leadership of Don Cameron has secured its certain defeat. The Democracy will carry Pennsylvania. In New York, the arrogant and insolent conduct of Roscoe Conkling has stamped a convention with fraud, and driven Judge Folger to an unsatisfactory apology for being its candidate for governor. In California, the machine, through fraud and violence at the San Francisco primaries, gave the nomination to Morris M. Estee—a nomination not unfit to have been made if it had been made fitly. Against Mr. Estee we make no other, and we can make no worse, indictment than that he has been dishonestly nominated, and that he is not innocent of participation in the scandalous practices that made it possible for him to secure the nomination in defiance of the wishes of the Republicans of the State. A nomination so obtained is not a nomination in any honest sense of the word. The Roman candidate stood in the forum clad in white. Mr. Estee's candidacy came from the slums. Mr. Estee is not so great nor so respectable a man as Judge Folger, of New York, yet the New York Times, the Tribune, and the Post, all oppose his election, because he was dishonestly nominated; and Judge Folger is not charged with personal cognizance of the villainy that gave him the nomination, yet the ablest journals and the best Republicans in New York think his defeat and the election of a Democratic governor to be desirable. George William Curtis writes as follows. We ask our readers to substitute for "Folger" "Estee," and for "New York" "California," and seriously consider whether the welfare of the State and of society, as well as of the Republican party, does not demand the defeat of Morris M. Estee:

Judge Folger's ability and character are not in question, but his nomination is. That nomination was procured by the combined power of fraud and patronage, and to support it at the polls is to acquiesce in fraud and patronage as legitimate forces in a nominating convention. Every good citizen is bound to resist to the utmost such wrong to free institutions, and the only effectual way in which voters can emancipate themselves from the corrupt and debasing rule of the machine is the defeat of its candidates. I believe this will be done decisively by the Republican voters of New York and of Pennsylvania at the election this autumn. They will see their party defeated rather than to have fraud and corruption of patronage triumphant. The events in both States show that no graver political peril now confronts the country than the complete subjugation of the party by unscrupulous cabals, which bribe with public employment, and pay their way by filching from the public treasury. This is an evil which will end in violence unless conclusively rebuked by the people at the polls.

Governor Booth and John M. Swift, Esq., make three speeches at Humboldt. The last one is to-night; and the steamer is delayed a day to bring them down. It is quite surprising how these monopolies hate one another. The steam monopoly keeps its ship a day over to accommodate Booth and Swift, while they pitch into and abuse the railroad monopoly.

A correspondent writing September 9th, to the New York Sun, about that relic which has been the jest of every humorist from Artemus Ward to Mark Twain—the Washington monument—says: "To-day the workmen were laying the blocks which make the height two hundred and ninety-two feet. The stones are each two feet in perpendicular diameter, and three tiers can be laid each week. The monument will therefore be raised about a foot higher every day for the next two months. The plan is to build at least fifty additional feet before cold weather. The work proceeds very quietly and scientifically. The blocks are cut at the base of the column, and carried to the summit in a strong elevator, which slides up and down the great dark funnel which extends in one smooth abyss from the summit to the ground. It is probably, even now, the highest elevator in existence outside of mining shafts, and as it consists of a simple platform the trip is not an agreeable one to a nervous person. The winding staircase is, however, not an improvement in this respect on the hoist. Not to speak of the fatigue of mounting and descending five hundred steps, the stairs look fragile, if they are not, and the glimpses of light one catches in the prevailing obscurity are not reassuring, as they disclose the fatal depths into which he would be precipitated by a false step. It is exciting to watch a laborer stand on the newly placed block, and, swinging the huge wooden mallet over the edge of the precipice, pound the stone into its exact position. Were it not for the netting, this step in the work would be hazardous in the extreme, and, as it is, good nerves are necessary. This horizontal netting is one of the important features of the work. It is made of strong rope, and is stretched out from and surrounds the sides of the shaft to a distance of nearly ten feet. To afford greater security, it is bent slightly upward from the horizontal, so as to throw backward toward the stonework any weight falling upon its surface. The net has already saved one life, and its value as the monument reaches still more giddy heights than that now attained will constantly increase. At times the wind sweeps over the summit with terrific force. A young man whom I saw there was working on the edge one windy day, when the wind caught him right off his feet and flung him over the brink of the monument. He landed in the net, held on, and so was saved. On our asking him how it felt, he replied: 'I remembered that the netting was under me. I felt about six feet before I struck. You see, we don't move up the net till we build about eight or ten feet of wall. When I hit the net I grabbed the meshes, and they pulled me up.' The netting is comparatively a recent device, and is very ingeniously constructed, under designs patented by the master mechanic. None was in use while the old part of the shaft was building, and its absence cost the life of not only a man, but of an adventurous cat, which ascended the winding staircase one night soon after work on the monument had been resumed. For some reason the cat tumbled over the edge, and fell one hundred and sixty-five feet to the ground. In her flight she spread her tail and legs, and landed without vital injury. She broke one leg, however, and in this disabled condition, while limping away, was attacked by a watch-dog, which is kept at the base of the shaft, and was killed. She now lies in state at the Smithsonian Institution, where she divides attention with the skeleton of the mastodon and the cage of snakes as the cat which fell one hundred and sixty-five feet in safety, only to be worried to death by a dog."

"Mr. and Mrs. Howells, a sister of Larkin Meade, the sculptor," writes Mr. M. D. Conway in a recent letter, "arrived in London and settled themselves at South Kensington, in the pleasant house just vacated by Mrs. Procter, widow of Barry Cornwall, and belonging to her. Howells has been lauded by Longman to write for that new, first-class, sixpenny magazine which bids fair to revolutionize our periodical world. But this charming story-teller is so fêted and 'dinnered' that he finds he can not get on with a work upon which he is engaged, and is about to tear himself away and seek solitude at Vevay. After that he will go to Italy."

"No, papa, I do not wish to marry yet. What I want is a man who does not drink, smoke, chew, snuff, go out nights, gamble, bet, over-eat, etc.; in short, a man with no vices, and one who is always good." "My daughter," said Mr. Dusenberry, "you are but a stranger here; heaven is your home."

Herbert Spencer characterizes Oscar Wilde as "an outlandish person, who attempts to reconcile idiocy with art and nambypambyism with sentiment."

Great floods are reported in New Jersey. Most of the inhabitants escaped on mosquitoes, however.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Concert of the Orchestral Union.

On Thursday evening of last week the silence which has reigned, musically, since the departure of the Quintette Club, was broken by the first concert of the Orchestral Union's third season. It was a pleasant concert, and very largely attended; and although a crowded house does not, by any means, insure the success of a programme, the visible sympathy existing between the audience and performers on these occasions really has a good deal to do with one's estimate of the entertainment.

"There he is!" proudly whispers one family group after another, as the particular young musician of its heart comes forward to take his most important of places; and criticism is all but disarmed by the sight of those answering glances of recognition which pass so frankly from these interesting amateurs to their admiring friends and relatives.

The Orchestral Union, however, wins substantial approval on grounds quite removed from sentimental considerations. A smoother, more spirited piece of playing than was given in the overture to "Raymond," as a whole, could not have been asked of any body of musicians. The composition, to be sure, is in the light vein of Ambrose Thomas's graceful imagination, and soars to no lofty heights. But its passages of impetuous introduction call for a unanimity of attack and a volume of tone, both of which (in spite of harmonic simplicity) might have been as bad as they were surprisingly good. In the little Andantino, with its very marked and taking accentuation, the violins did well, and the concluding Allegro movement was played with the greatest dash and brilliancy. "Wald und Bergeister," by Ph. Scharwenka, set forth, in a melodious and somewhat complicated manner, the extremes and peculiarities of the modern style as applied to ideas whose treatment is more remarkable than their originality. This second number was less firmly and confidently rendered than some others of the evening, and conveyed the impression of being slightly above the heads of Mr. Toepke's forces. The bright little "Dance of the Flies, Gnats, and Beetles" which followed, was extremely pleasing and successful. The composition is one of an unpretentious but clever suite, by R. Wuerst, and, as its title implies, is strictly in the line of descriptive effort. Its performance showed careful study and training, while its tuneful twangings and tiny shrillings were as charming a bit from the insect world as one would care to hear in music any day. Although it received no encore, the "Dance of the Flies" was really a feature of the programme, and, in its way, was much of a novelty.

Mrs. Henry Norton, the warmly received vocalist of the evening, gave as her first selection "Le Vallon," by Gounod. This lovely and meditative song was so loudly accompanied, by boisterous brass in particular, and too much of everything else in general, that the singer could scarcely be heard. Occasional notes lifted her voice into prominence, and isolated passages were sufficiently subdued to allow of Mrs. Norton's part being made known; but, as a whole, "Le Vallon" was sadly unsatisfactory. "Yearnings," by Rubinstein, which followed immediately, was far more enjoyable. The instruments were held under, with improved effect, and the singer threw herself into the song with more impassioned feeling. Yet one flaw in the perfection of this truly inspired performance can not be forgotten; that is, the fact that certain of its passages were painfully out of time. How one so gifted as Mrs. Norton can be so fated in this respect is difficult to explain. Her quality of tone, her grace, her finish, her artistic conception, are all faultless; and yet in her singing of "Yearnings," particularly in the repetition of its conclusion, which was re-demanded, inaccuracy of pitch was distressingly apparent. In the noble scena and aria, "Ah, perfido," by Beethoven, the same unfortunate defect existed, though in less degree, and the accompaniment was good. Mrs. Norton is deservedly a great favorite, and always awakens enthusiasm. The orchestration of the songs was done by Mr. Koppitz.

Part second was chiefly devoted to Reinecke, orchestrally. An exquisite "Romance" from "Manfred," and the introduction to the fifth act; an "Idyl" from "William Tell;" "Twilight," and the "Dance under the Village Lindens," from "A Midsummer Night's Dream," made up the "Fünf Tonbilder," by this delightful writer. Of these, "Twilight" was the most ambitious effort, and was rendered with painstaking attention to coloring, shading, and delicacy of expression. A hint of immaturity, in point of appreciation and comprehension on the part of the performers, runs through their interpretation of deeper subjects; but study of the best works, continued under the efficient direction of so capable a leader as Mr. Toepke, will naturally overcome this in course of time. The "Dance," a joyous little affair of pronounced rhythms and intelligible sprightliness, was loudly encored. The "Idyl" should also be specially mentioned. The programme was concluded with a light, pretty waltz by F. Wagner, "Les Américaines;" and with this came to an end one of the most interesting concerts ever given by the Orchestral Union. F. A.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 3, 1882.

Daniel Cook, the mining millionaire, died in this city Friday morning, at six o'clock. His death was due to a complication of disorders, in which consumption figured. Mr. Cook was a native of Rochester, New York, and was forty-two years of age. He leaves a large fortune. He had been twice married, his second wife being Miss Carrie, youngest daughter of the late General Colton. Mr. Cook was a man whose charities were many, although those who knew of them were few. His death will be a loss to the community, as well as to his family and friends.

The Emperor William is a man of iron, if not of blood. He was present for nearly two hours at a grand reception in Breslau a fortnight ago. He occasionally leaned on his great cuirassier sabre as if it were a stick, but otherwise showed no signs of fatigue, though he had been in the saddle for two hours, reviewed twenty-three thousand troops, received deputations, and presided at a state banquet during the day—not bad for a man of eighty-four!

THE CALIFORNIA PIONEER.

Celebration of Admission Day—Address by Alfred Wheeler—The Motive of the Pioneer Immigration—The Last Pioneer Idealized by the Orator and by his Reviewer.

EDITORS ARGONAUT: I had the pleasure of listening to the address of Mr. Alfred Wheeler, before the Society of California Pioneers, on the 9th of September.

Though its subject was mainly a philosophic one—to wit, "The potency of dominant idea over human events"—I could not avoid the impression that all orators, on similar anniversaries, have failed to do justice to the pioneer's motive in coming hither, to his influence while here, and to the obligation of posterity to honor his memory. To illustrate my views I here give you a quotation from Mr. Wheeler's address, with his peroration to the last pioneer, and follow it with my own views of the pioneer, first and last.

Mr. Wheeler said:

"The great influx to this State in 1849 of almost a hundred thousand pioneers was a forcible illustration of the power of dominant ideas over human events. California was a sudden revelation of an elysium to industry, where those aspirations which had pervaded the American mind long antecedent to the gold discovery might be fulfilled.

"The longings of the industrial classes to rise above the mere drudgery of life; to reach after and secure, not alone the comforts, but also the enjoyments and luxuries which wealth only could procure; the desire for a higher civilization than that mere nominal existence which was the doom of poverty; the aspirations for intellectual and physical improvement, which, during the preceding fifty years, had been born in the human heart by means of the knowledge which printing and modern inventions had diffused—all these remained hopeless and unsatisfied dominant ideas. Universal education seemed only to have opened the eyes of labor to the consciousness of its own deplorable condition, and to have led philosophers to doubt the beneficence of disseminated knowledge.

"On the discovery of gold in California these burning ideas burst out into the flame of action, resulting in the unexampled movement of an army of the very flower of the land, without a commander, and whose banner had no device but industry and happiness.

"The 'dignity of labor,' which had been but an aphorism, here became a reality. It established a commonwealth whose foundation was laid upon the rock of industry, whose superstructure shall, without stain upon its walls, bear testimony to the pure refinements of prosperity, and whose dome, monumental as her mountains, shall yet light the earth with the golden glow of virtue.

"And of those who founded and helped to build it some day there will be but one—the last veteran of the army of Argonauts. Who shall it be? And what a glory shall be his!

"Behold him standing on the mountain! Far Across the fertile valleys, populous With millions prosperous, he dimly sees This city by the sea, grand and sublime, Without a peer in splendor or in wealth Of mind.

Faintly his dreamy thoughts recall That pilgrimage and season when, of old, He sowed the seed whose harvest, ripe and rich, Before him stands. Now memory unrolls Before his mental view her faded scroll, The panorama of his path of life, A journey of a century of years. At first, the glowing sunshine, breaking through The showery clouds of youth with beams of Hope, While, on his russet cheek, the burning flame Of heartfelt longings flashed with rosy hue, And then, the noonday path o'er rugged rocks, Where scalding heat or biting blasts blinded The toilsome way; though here and there it led By babbling brooks and over flow'ry meads. At last, the sombre evening shade; the cold And dreary gray spreading its gloomy veil Over the blue and gold of setting sun. And now, ere on his drooping eyelids sleep Lays soft her gentle touch, his quivering brain Quickens, like vivid lightning flashing on The silent evening sky. And thoughts, which once Were dominant and led him here, return, Revealing, clear as with electric light, The living picture of a people blest With happiness, and rich in Wisdom's wealth Of honor, learning, industry, and truth."

Now, this is poetic, and it would be pleasing to contemplate if it were only true. I am willing to submit to your readers whether my picture of the pioneer is not more real.

At the date of the gold discovery, there existed all over the United States a peculiar class of people. They were poor young men with such high sense of dignity as to feel above the mere drudgery of life, and were imbued with a common idea; to wit, the right to live without work. They were earnest men, especially eager to reach after enjoyments which the rich and industrious possessed. They had genius. In fact, they were of such natural astuteness as, during their boyhood, to have found it unnecessary to go to school more than one or two days in each week, the rest of the time being generally passed in the study of pomology in the neighboring orchards or watermelon patches, or in investigating the wonders of ichthyology at the end of the wharf. Some of them were poultry fanciers, and could so mesmerize a fat chicken or turkey as to be able to take it off the perch in the middle of the night, and carry it half a mile without its making the slightest outcry. In religion, they discarded the old dogmas of theology, and had special contempt for the Ten Commandments. The number of these restless beings was largely increased by the disbanding of the soldiers of the Mexican War. They, too, had high-reaching aspirations after the unattainable.

Notwithstanding the heroic habits of these independent youths, the general public and their kindred failed to appreciate their ambition. Locks and bars were used, and watch-dogs kept as restraints upon freedom of action, and the sensibilities of the young and brave were often wounded.

When the news reached the East that gold by the pound could be obtained in California, and with no greater labor than by picking it out of the crevices of rocks with a jack-knife, and that here there were none of the absurd and old-fashioned legal restraints upon individual freedom, it can be readily imagined that the desire of those of whom I have spoken to get to this El Dorado assumed an epidemic fever. They might have despaired of going, but for the aid of more prosperous citizens. Nearly every well-to-do merchant or mechanic who had one of these ambitious sons or nephews, and every farmer who had wearied of keeping padlocks on his stable or hen-house, and feeding big dogs to run loose in his orchard, contributed means to secure the departure of one or more of those who desired to seek the Golden Fleece.

There were also other, less heroic, classes of citizens superabundant east of the Rocky Mountains. There was the man of middle age, who had waited patiently all his life for fortune to come and smile on him. She had never smiled, and in consequence every project, enterprise, or industry which he had almost made up his mind to undertake swamped his courage in the very conception, and got no further toward fruition than to buzz among the tangled cobwebs of his brain. He succeeded in but one thing, and that was in failure. He was impetuous, humble, dependent on kinsmen, generally pious, without original power—a corporeal manifestation of inertia. Then there was the good young man, who neither smoked nor drank. He was of respectable parents—probably a deacon's or vestryman's son. Being regarded as a nice person, he had unrestricted companionship with the lambs of the fold, and courted the artless maiden zealously and con amore. He did not marry her, for he himself was dependent upon paternal support, but his amative disposition and experiences rendered it essential to the maiden's good name that she should wed, and to the good young man's safety that he should go abroad.

California was a revelation of elysium to the first of those classes, and to the guardians or dependencies of the others was replete with transporting ideas.

Nearly a hundred thousand in all were started out in old hulks that had every prospect of going to the bottom of the sea; the most without a cent in their pockets, and with a banner whose sole device was "Luck and Liberty." Nearly all who escaped getting into jail at Rio, or other stopping places en route, arrived here safely.

It is unnecessary to recount how that band of brothers laid the foundation of a future great empire on this coast. It will be sufficient to mention the names of a few of the most distinguished Argonauts to whose genius this State owes so much of its present advancement. One may point with pride to Harvey Sparks, Frank Turk, Emperor Norton, Philosopher Pickett, and Jim Casey—men whose names will be known in the remotest ages, when California shall have been forgotten. They were true to the "dominant idea" which brought them here—to try and get rich without work. So long as gold could be got by picking it up, they got it; when it required toil and labor, they scorned to be recreant to fixed principles, and fell back upon natural resources. Look at the noble results of their perseverance. Where would our Pacific railroad be to-day but for those whom I have named? Nowhere. Or if it were anywhere, it would be somewhere else. Where would Montgomery Avenue, and New Montgomery Street, and the sea-wall, and Telegraph Hill observatory, and the Park, and the new City Hall, and Seal Rocks be, had those men failed to connect with this El Dorado? Probably in New York or Chicago. The names of many of the prominent Argonauts who came here in the fall of '49 or the spring of '50 are familiar as household words to some of our best citizens; among whom I may mention Chief Crowley, Judges Blake and Freelon, and 33 Secretary. The State, even, has taken some of them into her kindly keeping in return for their volunteer services rendered to the weak and helpless found on lonely highways in the mountains.

Some day there will be only one left of all that host which in the early day swept down upon California like the wolf on the fold. Who shall he be?

THE LAST PIONEER.

Behold that strange, weird object doubled up, Like sage Diogenes of old. Upon A keg of beer he sits, his back against The iron lamp-post. Elbows, knees, and toes, Scorning restraints of art, peep boldly out From garments which like forty-niners seem. Upon his ancient brow the hat of felt Spreadeth itself in fashion neglige: The evening breeze toyeth with hair and beard Unkept. Depending from his bulbous nose, Ripe with experience of libations free, A lipid tear-drop glistens, mournful sign Of spirits much diluted—of low proof. With furtive glance he gazeth down the street Upon the corner groceries and halls Whose festive lunches are but memories Of joy.

Faintly his dreamy thoughts recall That pilgrimage and season when, of old, He sowed the seed of golden nuggets found In "Jackass Gulch;" and votive offerings, Like long-eared Midas, made at Bacchus' shrine. Now memory unrolls before his view Her faded scroll, the picture of his life, A journey of a century of years. At first, the adolescent days of bliss, When, like a royal prince, he ruled the roost, Leading his comrades, like retainers true, In bold foray; when his poetic soul Loved the soft moonlight rather than the day, And his exploits beneath the stars were deeds Of fame and fright to fogies, he or she. And then, the noonday path, winding along O'er bogs, and stones, and brooks with quicksand bed, Some ignis fatuus his guiding-star; Fortune, with sly alluring leer, beck'ning, But still eluding his Micawber hand. At last, the shades of disappointment. Night, Cheerless and sombre with its starless sky, Spreading above his ling'ring days a pall Of dreary loneliness. Bereft of home, Of hope, of happiness; a fossil form, Whose past a blank, whose present without use, Whose future but a lesson of the dead. And now, as on his eyes the flick'ring sight Is fading dreamily away, his brain Startles with vivifying thrill each nerve Of thought; and, quivering, he sees the wealth And splendor of a past metropolis Reared on the rock of industry. He shrinks, Like poverty in presence of a queen; And o'er his cheek a blush, like that of youth, Flashes a fleeting time; and on his breast, Shriveled and bare, his chin rests motionless.

September 20, 1882.

ONE OF THEM.

SOCIETY.

It is in contemplation, by certain prominent society folk of the civilian class to give General and Mrs. McDowell an entertainment at the Palace Hotel at no distant day. This is to be in return for the many social entertainments given by the General and Mrs. McDowell while residing at Black Point. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crocker, Miss Hattie Crocker, and Will Crocker, were last heard of at Moscow, Russia. All the party except Mrs. Crocker, on September 7th, were attending the great fair at Novgorod. On the following day the party left for Berlin—all in health and good spirits, seeing sights, and having no end of a good time. Mr. H. L. Dodge left on Thursday for the East; he will return in November with Mrs. Dodge and his niece, Miss Molly. The completion of the Tucson and Sonora Railroad will, in November, be the occasion of an excursion of gentlemen from San Francisco to Guaymas, Mexico, the affair being under the management of a number of gentlemen of Tucson. Mrs. J. H. Jewett has returned to Monterey. Miss Carrie Hammond, of Chicago, is visiting Miss Adams this week. Mr. Justice Field, accompanied by Mrs. Field and Miss Swearingen, departed for Washington on Tuesday last. Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Jones, who have been summering in Sonoma County, have returned, and taken up their winter residence at the Grand. Mrs. Captain Forney, of Oakland, who has been visiting Mare Island, has returned home. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Collier left here on Wednesday last for St. Louis, at which place they will make quite an extended visit. Captain and Mrs. F. A. Whitney left here for San Diego during the week. Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Green have returned from their wedding trip, and taken up their residence at San Rafael. Colonel Winthrop, U. S. A., and Mrs. Winthrop arrived here from the East on Sunday last. Mr. and Mrs. William F. Smith, who were married in this city on the twenty-sixth ultimo, and who went on a short bridal tour to Monterey, returned on Sunday last. Mr. and Mrs. Smith will reside for the present at 1719 Clay Street, and Mrs. S. will be "at home Tuesdays in October." Miss Tallant, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Lieutenant Brice, at the Navy Yard, returned to the city on Monday last; Miss Tallant and her mother soon depart for the East. Lieutenant Thomas Phelps, U. S. N., has been ordered to the Wachusett, which will arrive here from Alaska waters in a few days. Midshipman Gibson, U. S. N., who is engaged to be married to Miss Hopper, niece of Captain Norton, of the Marine Corps, has been ordered to the Ranger, which leaves for the lower coast on or about the fifteenth instant. Lieutenant Richman, U. S. N., has been ordered to sea, and Mrs. Richman and Miss Tolson, who are great favorites at the Navy Yard, will come to San Francisco to live. General Miles and family have gone East. Mrs. J. J. Valentine has gone to Monterey to spend a few days. Jerome Lincoln and wife, Mrs. C. C. Keeney, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hall were among those who went to Monterey on Saturday last. Mrs. John S. Carr, of Tucson, gave an elegant reception at her residence in that city on the twenty-sixth ultimo. Henry B. Lockwood, of New York, the guest of George Crocker, is visiting Riverside this week. Judge and Mrs. Sanderson have gone to New York, from which city Mrs. Sanderson will sail for Europe on Saturday next; Miss Sibyl Sanderson will return with her mother from Paris in a short time afterward. Arthur Page, accompanied by two sisters and a brother, left for Philadelphia on Wednesday last. Miss Fannie Hubbard is visiting friends in Sacramento. Lieutenant Cutts, U. S. N., and Mrs. Cutts, accompanied by Miss Lander, departed for the East on Tuesday last. Miss Pomeroy also went East on Tuesday last, in company with Mrs. Justice Field and Miss Swearingen. Mrs. James Flood and Miss Jennie, her daughter, leave for the East on Sunday next, if not a day or two before. Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Parrott returned on Thursday last. Captain Cook, U. S. N., will soon leave for the East, so we are informed, accompanied by Mrs. Cook. We have also been informed that Commander Glass, U. S. N., will succeed to Commander Boyd's present place at the Navy Yard. Surgeon Woods, U. S. N., has been ordered to the Junita, now in the Asiatic station; Mrs. Woods, who is now at Mare Island, will reside with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Lewis, in Oakland, during her husband's absence. The next dramatic entertainment at the Navy Yard will take place on Thursday evening next, at which "Everybody's Friend" will be presented. Captain Kempff, U. S. N., returned to San Francisco from the East on Tuesday last. Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott returned home on Tuesday last. Lieutenant Force, of the Ranger, has been visiting friends in San Francisco during the week. A. Weil and family returned from their trip on Tuesday last. Mr. and Mrs. George F. Hooper, of Sonoma, have been at the Occidental during the week. Lieutenant Waring, U. S. N., who is engaged to Miss Lutie Cole, a daughter of ex-Senator Cole, is now in Washington, where he went to get a leave of absence. G. H. Day, and J. Van R. Hoff, U. S. A., are at the Occidental. There was a meeting of ladies at Mrs. Captain Irvin's, at the Navy Yard, a few evenings ago, to take into consideration the movement on the part of some of the ladies against the holding of further "literarys;" the meeting only developed the fact that the movement meets with decided opposition, and the matter thus rests in statu quo. On Wednesday evening, the eleventh instant, General McDowell will be given an entertainment at the Occidental Hotel by the officers of his division, which will, no doubt, be a brilliant affair. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Platt, who were married in this city on the twenty-seventh ultimo, have returned from their wedding tour, and are at the Lick House. Madame Zeitska, and the young ladies of her school, will give their first musicale and dance of the season on Friday evening, the twenty-seventh instant. Captain Lee W. Mix is in Hermosillo, Mexico. Mrs. Colonel Eddy and her daughter, Miss Mary Eddy, are in Paris this week, but will leave for Spain on Monday next; they will spend the winter in Rome. Mr. and Mrs. Claus Spreckels arrived here from Honolulu on Tuesday last. Mrs. and Miss Heyl, of Mare Island, are coming to the city to live during the winter. Mrs. Gordon Blanding and family returned from Monterey on Monday last. Miss Grace Eldridge, of San Rafael, will give a party on Friday evening the 20th instant. Mrs. L. T. Breckinridge returned to Monterey on Monday last.

VANITY FAIR.

"I must be permitted to say, casually," says Clara Belle, "that it makes me sick to see a man with a bracelet on his wrist. Only once have I been made to endure the nauseous sight. It was at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. The offender was a pretty, sissy young fellow, in an evening suit that evidently owed much of its shapeliness to padding on the shoulders, if not to lacing at the waist. The bracelet was a wide band of gold color and enamel, and was clasped directly under the cuff. He had no idea of being ashamed of the femininity which he was displaying, but repeatedly rested his head on his hand, in a way to exhibit the bracelet. I fervently pray that this was not a forerunner of a fashion to be generally adopted by fops. It is true that some of the coarse habits of men are displeasing to women, and that neatness of attire commands their admiration; but they have an abounding contempt for males with female tendencies, and therefore fops with an atom of common sense will abjure bracelets."

Red-haired girls may profitably read the following description of one of their own kind: "A girl with red hair looked very nice in a myrtle-green skirt, with gray and green checked woolen stuff for overdress. Her bonnet was of dark red straw, the brim being covered with white beaded lace, falling over white wild roses. The strings were of dark red ribbon, and round her throat was a white gauze tie. It is rather difficult for a girl with red hair to manage colors well, but this was a decided success."

"The aristocratic instrument of the present day is unquestionably the banjo," said a teacher of the art of playing on that instrument recently, in New York. "You would be surprised if you knew what a number of social lights are good amateur banjoists, and what a furor there is at present among ladies for learning to play the banjo. Lord Dunraven is an excellent performer. Leonard Jerome's daughter, now the wife of Lord Randolph Churchill, plays the banjo very well, and among other amateur banjoists whose names at this moment occur to me are Peter Cooper's nieces, C. G. Guntber Jr., Miss E. S. Reid, niece of Whitelaw Reid; Miss M. B. Patterson, granddaughter of ex-President Johnson; Fred Vanderbilt, one of the Havemeyers, (don't remember his initials just now); Arthur Claflin, son of H. B. Claflin, one of the best amateurs in Brooklyn; C. D. Arthur, nephew of the President; Judge Hilton's youngest son, Miss W. A. Bigelow, Miss Jennings, and Miss Matthews, all of Fifth Avenue; the two Misses May, sisters of Fred May, and—but it's no use making an elite directory; I have mentioned enough to give an idea of what kind of people learn, appreciate, and play the banjo. It is not every one who begins to learn that continues. The first lesson is apt to make the rosy tips of pretty fingers exceedingly tender, and even to raise blisters on them. Then, if the owner of the pretty fingers has simply taken up the banjo from caprice, or because some other society girl of her acquaintance has done so, she drops it in pain and disgust; but if she perseveres, she will find that after those first blisters go away, no more will come, and her fingers will not develop big joints and a sprawl, as they are liable to from piano practice, or get unsightly callouses upon them such as come sometimes from playing the harp, and always from fingering the zither."

Ladies in France have not only taken to pigeon-shooting, but to book-making, and to betting at pigeon-shooting matches. One of the most assiduous and most fortunate is the Countess Latisseff; every one loses to her with a good grace, and is forced to lose, for she has a manner which is most "winning;" also, be it added, she is as pretty as she is gleeful.

The correspondent of an Eastern journal, writing from a fashionable watering-place, says: "I must confess that I was rather startled recently while standing in a trade-shop to hear two young, aesthetically attired ladies ask the shopkeeper if he had any pennies. That evening I called at the cottage of a lady friend, and, as I was ushered into the darkened parlor, I was surprised to see a company of six or seven seated about a marble-topped table. They all seemed strangely disconcerted, and vainly endeavoring to conceal little wooden buckets whose contents were made only too well known by a pitiless rattling. My hostess reassured them, a pack of cards was produced from the lap of one of the ladies, and I was calmly asked to play a nice, quiet little game of penny ante. And, ye gods, what a game it was! I never saw old desperate faro gamblers one-half as excited over their hundreds and thousands as were these fair, frail damsels over their pennies. Think of it! Women accustomed to every form of lavish prodigality and extravagance; creatures whose little faults were so gilded with gold that your poor dazzled eyes couldn't see them! Yet there they were, wrangling over who had 'anted' and who hadn't, as if their very existence depended on that penny delinquency. And they were in earnest, too. They showed their innate meanness in all its hideousness. Despite their efforts, all the petty feelings of the average being displayed themselves at the slightest provocation. It would require a volume for me to describe some of the many entertaining incidents of the table. For you must know that I became one of the elect with the party, and was always ready to take a hand. After we had gotten it real bad, we would prolong our game late into the night, and often a considerable way into the next morning. The ladies seemed to love it. 'It reminds me of a regular old-time rout,' said one smiling beauty, radiant with her interest and a little wine; 'and I think an old-time rout must have included about everything that conduces to human enjoyment.' Now, though I confess I am a bashful man, I felt just like asking that girl to go out for a row, even though it was almost twelve o'clock. Somehow or other, when I see that lascivious relic of the last century—that word 'rout'—I always think of a voluptuous dowager, powdered and rouged, with a beauty-patch here and there, and tantalizingly short dresses displaying embossed slippers and trim ankles, and transparent stockings of lace, suggesting delicate embroidery, and—mais vous savez le reste. How a sleepy party would brighten up, and toss from round their necks the arms of that teasing, coaxing, persuading Comus, when some enthusiastic player would grab—yes, grab—the cards, pass them around with an 'Ante five, girls,' and an 'It takes two pair to open, remember!' I have seen girls so sleepy that they would actually yawn and nod, and possibly nap when they weren't playing; so sleepy that they were cross, irritable, and even sarcastic. I've seen these women exhilarated, and passée women rejuvenated, at that mystic rite, until one would think they had just come anew from a Ponce de Leon bath, with a Phryne-like richness of face and form."

English authorities state that youthful damsels make use of polar-blue paper, with a lily thereon inscribed, for epistolary purposes. Engaged people adopt orange flowers as a fitting emblem for their writing paper from the moment of betrothal to that of marriage. Sporting characters are naturally lavish of horseshoes and jockey-caps, even where billets-doux are concerned. A successful ménage proclaims its happiness to the world by choosing two partridges contentedly sitting side by side on a tuft of greensward, as the description for the family note-paper. In the matter of perfumes, héliotrope du roi has recently come in vogue; but refined society seems to have frowned so resolutely on all intrusive odors, even of the most balmy description, that it seems useless to give any novelty in that line the peculiar stamp of fashion.

Father Ignatius is a fashionable English ritualist. He has established an Anglican monastery in the mountains of Wales, which half a dozen noble penitents have joined. He recently made a collection among his London society lady admirers and secured many thousand pounds for his new nunnery. An English paper thus announces that he has already begun to fill it up: "An extraordinary scene was witnessed at Llanthony Abbey two or three Sundays ago, when Father Ignatius admitted a novice to the mysteries of the 'black veil.' Opposite the principal shrine was a black funeral bier, covered with a velvet pall, with white cross, and with a huge candlestick at each corner. The novice knelt by its side. After mass and a sermon, the 'father abbot' sat down in his chair by the altar, arrayed in a gorgeous robe, embroidered with angels and saints, with a richly jeweled mitre on his shaven head and a crosier in his hand. The nuns in their grated gallery sang a chant, while the father cut off the hair of the novice, two acolytes holding a towel to receive it. Then she was clad in her nun's robes, with a crimson veil and a wreath of flowers, and, after a variety of intricate ceremonies, she was placed on a throne-like chair before the altar, and the whole of the monks, nuns, sisters, and acolytes prostrated themselves before her, and as they kissed the hem of her garment she placed her hands on their heads. After the procession she was laid on the bier and covered with the pall, and the abbot and acolytes came forward in a magpie-like costume of black and white, the 'father' with a high, caul-cap-like, linen mitre on his head. Then the funeral service was chanted, a muffled bell sounded, and the monks bore away bier and nun behind the gratings. These strange mummeries have excited considerable comment in the district."

The ex-Khedive Ismail Pasha has transferred his barem to the Rue Boyard, in Paris. The private hotel in which it is installed is exiguous, but well detached, and enclosed by high walls. The ex-Kbedive's ideas about women are almost European. If those of his seraglio chose, they might go about like his daughters, who dress in the French style, and wear mere excuses for veils. But they do not choose. There are several wives. The legitimate one is elderly, and her advice is asked by the Khedive on all questions relating to the education of his children. The other women are the mothers of younger sons and daughters, and as such are deemed worthy of respect. Ismail cares little for them, but liberally provides for their wants. His eldest and his youngest daughters engross his affection. The former is blonde, elegant, very interesting, and distinguée, but she is threatened with consumption. She is a good linguist and musician. The youngest is also fair, with the exception of her eyes and eyebrows, which are magnificently dark and oriental. No ferocious looking Nubian keeps guard over Ismail's harem. European women-servants transmit orders to the cook and house steward.

Among the caprices of fashion to be witnessed at the French seaside resorts are decided efforts to reintroduce the crinoline. As there has been a great deal of wind-on the coast for the last month, the costume has been very diverting to the loungers (male) looking about for amusement, for the wearers have naturally been in constant trouble to keep up an aspect of propriety when the breezes have rudely searched and exercised their power with the whalebone and wire machinery.

Mademoiselle Berthe Rothschild has gone well over the "bridge." She was christened in the little church of Chaillo, by the Abbé Gallet. The Duchesse de Gramont was one of her god-parents. But this interesting neophyte, having arrived at the age of discretion, answered for herself. There would have been a greater show of the pomps and vanities but for the death of the old Princess of Mingrelia, who was, through the Murats, connected with the de Wagram Berthiers. The baptismal ceremony was held at four o'clock in the afternoon. Mademoiselle Rothschild was dressed in white muslin, and wore no jewels. There was a short address, in the course of which she was told she was as innocent as on the day of her birth, and was exhorted to maintain that innocence by means of the sacraments to which she would shortly be admitted. An American who witnessed the ceremony says that she wept bitterly as (under the compulsion of her parents) she renounced the faith of her fathers. Her yearly income is said to be six hundred thousand dollars. In the contract she is to be styled Berthe Marie de Rothschild. The "Marie" was given to her at her baptism, and the "de" is a solecism. The Berthier family, and particularly Alexander, the heir to the perpetual income of sixty thousand dollars a year attached to the Principality of Wagram, are very glad to secure the fortune which the newly christened lady brings to them. The bridegroom designate is of an extremely liberal disposition. Money is said to burn holes in his pockets.

CATHOLICISM AND MURDER.

A Study in Crime.

We have in San Francisco a weekly Roman Catholic journal. It is published under the patronage of the holy Roman clergy of this diocese. It is an avowed propagandist. It is "devoted to propagation." We quote from it, and, in quoting, we declare it as our conviction that there is no class in the world that commits more of the crimes alluded to in the quoted paragraph than does the Pope's Irish, and that no church in the world has been more unsuccessful in "curbing the headlong career of the masses toward hell" than the papal church of Rome:

Satan is in society circles everywhere, as may be learned by the almost daily reports of murders, robberies, drunkenness, and debauchery of the darkest hue which the press places before its readers. We must candidly and sorrowfully confess that, outside the pale of the Catholic Church, we see no means of curbing the headlong career of the masses toward hell. They will not hearken to the voice of God; they have broken the tablets of the law into a thousand fragments; and in their wrath, and pride, and lust, and love of lucre, they have given the worship due to God alone to the idols of their passions. Religion, honesty, morality, charity, and all the other virtues that follow in the train of supernatural wisdom, have become exiled from the earth, and the non-Catholic world has given itself over, body and soul, to the service of Satan.

And now, having read this devilish libel against all other religious organizations, and considered the sweeping and malicious slander that "the non-Catholic world has given itself over, body and soul, to the service of Satan," let us contemplate the social and religious condition of that part of Ireland where the papal church holds sway, and where for long generations its influence has been felt upon civilization, by copying the following Dublin letter to the New York Times:

The romantic district of wild Connemara, in which the lonely Lough Mask lies imbedded in the gloomy mountain ranges, has already won a terrible preeminence for mysterious murders. It was here that, some twelve months ago, two men, bailiffs on an estate in the neighborhood, disappeared one day, and after a considerable lapse of time their dead bodies were fished up from the bottom of Lough Mask, tied in sacks and riddled with bullets. From that day to this but little light has been thrown on this mystery of Lough Mask. The shores of the lake have now another horror added to their history by the wholesale slaughter of the Joyce family, who were brutally butchered as they lay in bed. If an adventurous tourist had been wandering one day this week along the shores of Lough Mask he would have witnessed a scene unequaled even in the Ireland of to-day. In perhaps the most widely romantic region of the Connemara country, he would have seen an open-air inquest being held close by a wretched cabin overlooking the lake; he would have seen policemen standing under arms, and silent crowds of peasantry, of both sexes and all ages, picturesque even in their misery, sitting about on the hillocks which form a sombre background to the coroner's court under the blue sky. This dramatic group were engaged in ascertaining how John Joyce, his wife, mother, son, and daughters, lying in the hovel above mentioned, came by their deaths. The primitive nature of the whole proceedings was heightened by the circumstance that the Irish language alone was spoken by several of the jurors and by the witnesses. When the jurors had all been duly sworn, the coroner led them into the cabin to "view the bodies," according to law in such cases. What they saw there was something to haunt the memory for life. The father of the murdered family, John Joyce, a cottar of the poorest class, lay dead on the floor of the one apartment which served the wretched family for all purposes. The body, which was wholly naked, had two bullet wounds in the back. On a bed which stood in a recess built off this apartment, was the dead body of Joyce's wife, while about the place lay dead the grandmother and a young girl, daughter of Joyce. An examination of the bodies showed that some of the victims had been shot and then bludgeoned, while others had been dispatched with some blunt instrument. Two sons, young lads, were also in the house at the time; both were shot and bludgeoned, and no doubt left for dead by the murderers. One has since died; the other still lives. He can not tell much about the terrible tragedy. He says two or three men entered the cabin at night, carrying a rude torch of lighted bogwood, and that they shot him as he lay in bed. An Irish-speaking witness told at the inquest, through an interpreter, how upon going to Joyce's cabin "about two hours after sunrise" on Friday morning, to borrow some article, he found the door off the hinges, and on entering saw the dead bodies of the slaughtered family lying about. Numerous arrests have been made in connection with these murders, but they are all merely on suspicion. The boy, who is the only survivor of the family, says he does not know any of the men who entered the house. He describes them as having "dirty" faces, from which it is inferred that the party had smeared their faces with soot or other black stuff to prevent identification. There surely are horrors enough compressed into this short story of the wholesale massacre of the Joyce family, but there is a further hideous incident to be told. As is the custom of the poorer peasantry, the domestic and other animals attached to the household shared the scanty accommodations of Joyce's cabin. Among these were two dogs, which were found in the bed on which the dead body of Joyce's mother was lying. When the police came to the place these dogs couldn't be got out of the house of death. When expelled from the bed they ran under it, and it was necessary to remove them by force. It was thought to be a touching instance of canine affection, but the revolting fact was found to be that the dogs had been engaged in devouring one of the old woman's arms, which hung from the bed, and that they had actually gnawed it away from the elbow. When this became known, the people who had gathered outside the cabin chased the brutes across the country, and captured and killed them with sticks and stones. The wake of the murdered family was a weird scene. Like the inquest, it was held in the open air; the peasantry who attended were supplied with pipes and tobacco, according to ancient custom, and the women among the party filled the night air with the wild wail which the female peasantry raise at a wake. But for all their wailing, we are told that no woman in the place could be induced for love or money to give any assistance in nursing the surviving lad of the family. "Pat Joyce," aged about twelve years, who has since been removed to the village of Cong, a dozen miles off, where he is under the care of a Dublin surgeon. The general belief is that these murders are the outcome of the working of a secret society, and the suggestion is that they are mainly attributable to the popular impression in the district that Joyce had given some information to the authorities in connection with the fate of the two bailiffs whose bodies were found at the bottom of the lake. So far, the usual appalling mystery hangs over this massacre in Connemara; the police, however, say they have got a clue which they expect will lead to disclosures of a startling character.

If elsewhere in the world, where the Protestant religion prevails, or where men and women are permitted education and freedom of thought, there can be found the parallel of the wild and wicked Connemara, where ignorance, crime, bigotry, superstition, cruelty, and inhumanity have such unrestrained freedom of exercise, we should be glad to have the Roman family journal, "devoted to propagation," designate the place. We will enlarge the area, and if in the heathen wilds of Africa, among the natives of Dabomey, or among the more refined cruelties of Turk or Pagan, there can be found another locality where such things exist, let it be pointed out, that we may admit that, under the influence of the papal church and priests, within the sound of its bells, is not the vilest spot on God's earth, nor the most dreadful people that disgrace the century in which we live.

HAS CALIFORNIA A REPUBLICAN PARTY?

By James McM. Shafter.

As a life-long Republican, I have felt compelled to very many doubts as to the solution of this question.

Originally Republicans were drawn together, as all parties should be, by common opinion. This attracting force was intensified by the external pressure of contempt and hatred.

It was the great primordial principle that all men were created equal that created republicanism. The men who adopted this principle in its full significance were in all respects the very pick and flower of their time. They not only believed in equality, but they possessed that true manliness and integrity that led them irresistibly to the application of this principle in all their political and social relations.

Belonging to whatever party they might, these men, in the ranks where they stood, each labored to produce everywhere equality of political condition. They became, of course, uncompromising enemies of human slavery, as opposed to republican government, as tyrannical to the slave, and as dishonoring to free labor.

The war of the rebellion was the natural outcome of these opposing forces. When it came, the Union sentiment sent the North into unison. The copperhead, the true dirt-eater, remained faithful to his ancient masters.

Emancipated from their constitutional scruples, a large mass of Democrats united with the Republicans upon the principle of legal equality; many more for the mere purpose of restoring the Union, without regard to the principle of equality or the destruction of slavery, its great enemy.

All these elements, however, worked together until the close of the war, and accomplished the intention of original republicanism—to make this land all free. From this grand culmination the morale of the party began to sink. It not only fell into the hands of the worst element in the party, but it dug up out of the lower depths a power more potential than itself. Men without learning, without any honest business, without any public service, without integrity or wealth or history, suddenly, by mere craft working up through a seething mass of political corruption, by the power of combining the worst and the weakest elements of all parties, became a power against which "the most intelligent and patriotic" people on earth have hitherto been unable to make even a decent resistance. Not only have the people been deprived of the power to resist this mean and degrading tyranny, but these tyrants in politics have turned the spirit of the old party, its sacred memories of love and labor and suffering, into reasons of abiding in the camp, notwithstanding it is in the hands of ghouls, who hate the good that are living and dishonor those who are dead. This may seem strong language, but it is just.

The statesman can not consider the general intelligence and honesty of the membership. He must, and can, look only to the motive power that controls a party's action; no matter how pure or good the voter's motive may be, so long as his act is directed by a master to whose dictation he assents. That what is called the Republican party is now ruled by these detestable elements, is beyond dispute.

In the briefest terms it may be said, that seventy delegates from this city to the late State Convention did not represent the opinions of one-fourth of the Republican party. They were themselves (however personally respectable) the spawn of the vilest reptiles of this community. If they did not represent the prize-fighter, the pimp, the thief, the social outcast, then they were untrue to their constituents.

The present exhibition in this city is enough to sicken one—two nominating conventions in session, and the State League trying to reconcile them; the State Committee interfering everywhere; the County Committee denounced as infamous, the ward clubs as intrusive usurpers, the people as idiots looking on while their patrimony is divided among thieves. All this forms a part of that history which Chairman Latimer read out at the late Convention in solemn tones as constituting the GLORY of the Republican party.

In all these proceedings I see nothing of the self-sacrifice of the Republican party of 1856. I see nothing but the selfishness and crime of 1882.

Allow me to recall to your readers some other portions of this "glorious" history. At the end of the war, as its fruits, we had a million of dead men, ten billions of dollars lost, four millions of emancipated slaves, ignorant, destitute of all things, to take care of. We owed these freedmen everything which could impress an honorable mind. They had suffered for more than a century under our laws; they had succored our soldiers, had secreted and guided them; they had turned the tide of battle in our favor. Their friends, the Republican party in the nation, resolved to protect them; Congress passed the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, and submitted them to the States for ratification. The fruits of the whole war rested in these amendments. Without them, we had fought in vain. An ambitious young man, seeing "with how little wisdom the world is governed," thought his chances, with a little craft, as good as another's. He proposed to the secessionists of his county if they would vote for him for the State Senate, he, in case of election, would vote against the ratification of one of these amendments. He was elected, with the aid of these secession votes, as a Republican, and he voted against the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment. For this act of infamy, of treason to party, to country, to honor, and humanity, the so-called Republican party three years ago made this man Governor, and made possible one of the worst administrations in this State.

Is this one of those points of history of which California Republicans are proud? You hung Champ Ferguson and others for guerrilla murder, and you made a California governor out of a man who, joining his secession friends, fired a last volley of hate and revenge into the backs of the black men, without whom you might have been a dismembered nation to-day. And yet this man hopes, with the senatorship before him, to place his lineal successor, who, having three times abandoned his party in its hour of trial, denounced it as having ended its mission, because it had become hopelessly corrupt, voting against its candidates, expects as governor to help on this conspiracy to its end.

That the true Republican will put his foot upon this nest of vipers, it needs no gift of prophecy to foretell.

Booth was made president of a moral, Sunday convention. Estee, candidate for governor, must, with Booth, have a bridge of brass built by the Republican party over the chasm which these men consciously and avowedly dug to prevent their weak human nature from ever dragging them back to Republicanism, so that they may return and take place at the head of that party and its power, which, but the other day, they spit upon, and kicked, and put between themselves, and it "a great gulf fixed," as something too wicked and mean for these great, pure souls to have any connection with. Do they now say that the "dog has returned to his vomit, and the sow to her wallowing in the mire," or is it the party that says it upon this blissful reunion?

As to this want of fealty and stability of purpose, Edgerton and De Haven are equally culpable. There are one or two things, however, about Edgerton which are too creditable to be lost. While Estee possesses this quality to a most brilliant extent, to Edgerton must be conceded the palm. This is, that versatility of genius which not only enables a man to be on different sides of the same question on different days, but of being on all sides at the same time. Now, in what is called the Republican platform is a condemnation of "unjust discriminations" in fares and freights of railroads. I venture to say that this must have been furnished by the railroad agent. The railroads are as hostile as is the most enthusiastic anti-monopoly man to unjust discrimination. They only wish to be the judges of what is unjust.

Why did not this clean and acute committee upon resolutions declare against all unjust murders, or improper larcenies? Such a declaration would have been as sensible as that as to fares and freights. The people are denouncing all discriminations. They treat all distinctions in price of carriage as inadmissible, but the Republican party, as it is called, covers up all opinions by the use of a word evidently designed to please everybody, and to enlighten nobody. It is pleasant, however, to look to the sand-lot for outspoken precision upon this subject. It was moved by Estee, as chairman of the committee upon corporations other than municipal, to insert this very word "unjust" before discrimination, in the Constitutional Convention. (1 Con. Debates, p. 516.) This word "unjust" was rejected by the Convention, as nullifying the whole effect of the provision. Even then Estee was playing for position—to seem, without doing anything. Judge Terry, at the same point in the debate, said: "We decide here in this Convention a fact that is patent to every man, and we say, 'you shall not discriminate at all.'" But the platform is in favor of discrimination, only it must not be unjust.

But it is of Edgerton I began to speak. On page 518, of the Debates, will be found the eulogy and groans of Brother Barton on him—eulogy for Edgerton's fight against the railroads in his canvass for senator, and his abandonment of his party, and his "throwing overboard" Mr. Shafter in favor of that anti-monopolist, that great and good man, Booth, who, in one session of the Legislature, contrived to put through eighteen bills for subscriptions and subsidies for railroads, amounting to nearly five millions of dollars.

But Brother Barton groaned over Edgerton's defection. He charged him with almost "scandalizing Estee," and of being the tool and attorney of the corporation. Edgerton, (p. 489,) after defending discrimination as to facilities and cost of transportation, pays his respects to Estee. Notwithstanding Edgerton's forcible argument upon the main topic of debate, it has always seemed to me that the gem of his speech was upon the subject of the character and conduct of Estee. That portion of his speech ought not to be abbreviated. This is it: In hac verba, Estee's conduct "was the fatal habit of browsing through the organic laws of other States, horrifying enough to show a want of invention, and inserting just enough to show a total want of judgment," the result being "superficial, charlatan patchwork of clumsy, hybrid eclecticism;" the whole "a harefaced imposition."

Edgerton further charges Estee with misrepresentation: "We have a right to expect from a gentleman occupying the high position of chairman of one of the most important committees of this house a careful comparison of systems relating to the subject committed to his charge. We expect from him sound and judicious counsels regarding it. Above all, we demand of him rigid exactness in his statement of facts. Such misrepresentations as I have noted would be hardly excusable if made in the heat of debate. But when they are made in cold blood; when they occur in a speech which was weeks in process of incubation, and for which the columns of a widely extended and influential journal were offered days in advance; when they are thus paraded to propagate, mislead, and poison the public mind; when their evils are thus diffused, they are simply atrocious." This is Edgerton on Estee two years and a half ago. Many of us think he was right, and that Estee has not changed since.

It is gratifying, however, to see this versatility. Edgerton as candidate for the Senate made fierce war upon the railroad. In the Legislature, he and De Haven and Estee holted their party. In the Constitutional Convention Edgerton is next heard of as the advocate of discrimination in fares and freights. He is now an anti-monopolist, and stands upon a platform which denounces discrimination, and is opposed to every word of his sworn argument before the Convention.

It seems to me, an old farmer as well as Republican, that the political character and conduct of these "standard bearers" is, as Edgerton styled it, "simply atrocious."

There is not a trace of Republicanism left in the platform, except such reference as a man might make to the Deluge. Nothing is presented but which is utterly foreign to the underlying principles of Republican government. Gentlemen who rule the Republican organization will soon be admonished that there are some of the faithful left in this State who will no longer be disfranchised. When Hengist and Horsa were to be successful, the ravens flew before their banner. The hesses have but to look behind to see these birds of evil omen gathering in clouds in their rear.

The late Monsieur Gaillardet, of Paris, founder of the Courrier des Etats-Unis, wrote to a friend, two weeks before his death: "I have sold my place at Plessis-Bouchard. My successor will take possession on the 15th, and I shall leave it on the 14th, at ten o'clock in the morning." And on the 14th, at ten o'clock in the morning, he did leave it forever—in his coffin.

ANECDOTES OF CELEBRITIES.

Curran, hearing that a stingy and slovenly harrister had started for the continent with a shirt and a guinea, observed: "He'll not change either till he comes back." Somebody told Curran during his last illness that he seemed to cough with more difficulty than on the previous day. "Do I?" said Curran; "that's odd enough. I've been practicing all night."

It would be interesting to know just what impressions of England Cetewayo actually took home with him, and compare them with those which he is popularly supposed to have conceived. Tocqueville, in his "Voyage in Greece," relates that when Tussuf Effendi, who represented the sultan in London, returned home in 1794, he was asked what were the most remarkable sights that he beheld; what, for instance, he thought of the House of Commons. "The House of Commons," he replied, with great contempt, "is nothing but a noisy assembly, but I did see a thing really striking and wonderful. I saw a man who, holding four oranges in one hand and two forks in the other, threw up into the air the oranges and the forks, successively, and stuck one on the other with the utmost rapidity."

Many of the events that James Bruce, the African traveler, described, were so extraordinary that they were immediately discredited, greatly to the injury of the book—so much so that copies of the work were found on sale soon after publication as waste paper. Later travelers, however, substantiated Bruce's claims to veracity; and Bruce undoubtedly was firm on that point. "What I have written I have written," are the concluding words to his preface, and this was his invariable reply to every skeptic. Once he started a doubting friend by a practical exemplification of the statement that the natives of Abyssinia eat raw beef. The friend, who was at dinner with Bruce, said that such a custom was "impossible." Bruce rose from the table and left the room without a word, returning shortly afterward with a piece of raw beefsteak, peppered and salted à la Abyssinia. "Now, then," he said to the gentleman, "eat that or fight me." The steak was eaten, the traveler adding, "Now, sir, you will never again say it is impossible."

There is a tradition in the world of letters anent a practical joke played on Ponson du Terrail, the author of "Rocambole," by one of his friends, Benassit. The latter had been invited to a drive with Ponson du Terrail in the Bois de Boulogne, and was expected to admire the skill of his host, who considered himself the best whip in France and Navarre, and who had recently been gazetted Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. As they were driving up the Champs-Elysées at the fashionable hour, Ponson du Terrail met Barrière, and invited him to join the party. Knowing that Barrière liked to play second fiddle to none, he asked Benassit to do him the favor of giving up his seat in the phaeton and taking a place behind with the footman or groom. The artist consented, and Barrière, putting himself by the side of the driver, the party proceeded toward the Bois de Boulogne. Ponson was delighted to find that he was the observed of all observers. He remarked everybody looking at him. He bowed gracefully to the people in recognition of their unfeigned curiosity, which he took for admiration, and as a mark of popularity; for his name had recently appeared in the columns of the Journal Officiel among the recent appointments in the Legion of Honor. Suddenly, as he was nearing the gates of the Bois, he had certain misgivings as to the ovation given him. He fancied he saw smiles on the faces of some of the persons who were looking at him. He turned round, and perceived Benassit sitting with his legs dangling over the back of the phaeton, gesticulating to the people, and throwing the crowd some of the new cards engraved with the words, "Ponson du Terrail, Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur," which the author's groom had taken with him to leave at the houses his master intended to visit. A violent altercation took place, and it is said that Ponson never spoke to Benassit afterward.

Shortly after the production of "Hernani," more than half a century ago, Victor Hugo was traveling on foot through Normandy and Brittany in search of "new impressions," when one day an evil inspiration prompted him to ride in the diligence from Rouen to Havre. He had hardly taken his seat, when a fellow-passenger of eminently respectable appearance—spectacled, white-cravated, notarial, and bland—entered into conversation with him upon the various political and literary topics of the day. "Pray, sir," he presently inquired, "as you have just left the capital, did you happen before your departure thence to hear anything about this 'Hernani,' about which people are making such a fuss?" "I certainly have heard it mentioned," said Hugo. "It is a miserably stupid piece." "Very likely." "Do you do anything in the way of literature?" "A little. For instance, I write tragedies." "Indeed. Well, the author of 'Hernani' must be an abominable person." "Really! As it happens, I don't know him." "Neither do I. But one of my friends saw him in the street not long ago, and in such a state! The wretched creature is nearly always drunk. Only fancy, he has to be carried home from the cabaret every day. No wonder his poetry is such maniacal rubbish." "Under the circumstances how could it be otherwise?" "Worse still, the fellow spends most of his time with ballet-dancers of the lowest description. And yet this degraded being has the audacity to importune us with his mad ravings!" "We will by no means endure him, sir." In this strain the conversation continued until the diligence arrived at Havre, where Hugo's interlocutor, delighted with his companion, insisted upon putting up at the poet's hotel, in order to secure a few hours more of such congenial company. While their rooms were being prepared the landlord brought them the register of arrivals, requesting them to inscribe their names therein. As Hugo took up the pen to fulfill this formality, the unknown of notarial aspect looked eagerly over his shoulder. Having signed his name in eminently legible characters, the poet turned round with a smile, saying: "Now, my dear sir, it is your turn." But his horror-stricken fellow had snatched up his carpet-bag and fled as soon as words, "Victor Hugo," had disclosed to him the abyss into which he had "put his foot."

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.

Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.

News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 413 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.

The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.

Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.

No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.

Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.

Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."

A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY - - - - - Editor.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1882.

CONTENTS:

Page	Page
EDITORIALS:	EDITORIAL NOTES:
Justice Field's Rebuke to the Anti-Railroad Communists—The Manly Platform and Excellent Nominations of the Prohibition Temperance Convention—The Sterling Character of their Choice for Governor—A Summing Up of the Temperance Forces in California—What Henry Edgerton Once Thought of Estee—Higgins, Hopkins, and the Sheriff's Office—The Suicidal Policy which the Press Employs to Defeat the Railroad—A Political Parson and Saint Peter—Judge Allen—The Democratic Convention.....8-9	What Would Higgins and Gannon Do if the Temperance Ticket Won?—A Politician's Definition of an Honest Man—What Mr. Irish has to Say on the Anti-Railroad Question—A Nominal Revolt Against the Corruption of the Republican Party..... 4
THE WOMAN WHO SANG.....1-2	THE LAST PIONEER..... 5
INDIVIDUALITIES..... 2	VANITY FAIR..... 5
THE GIRLS OF GOTHAM..... 3	CATHOLICISM AND MURDER..... 6
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS..... 3	HAS CALIFORNIA A REPUBLICAN PARTY?..... 7
MUSICAL NOTES..... 4	ANECDOTES OF CELEBRITIES..... 7
SOCIETY NOTES AND GOSSIP..... 5	SARCASTIC..... 10
	OLD FAVORITES..... 10
	LITERARY NOTES..... 10
	STORYTELLERS..... 11
	DRAMA:..... 12
	Betsy B.'s Letter—Theatrical Gossip..... 12
	THE TUNEFUL LIAR..... 14

The spirit of communism that took its rise at the Sandlot; that was fanned into a flame of passionate resentment against railroad corporations by party demagogues; that forced its way into the new Constitution, through the efforts of malignant journals and the cowardice of political leaders, and that now dominates both political parties, has met its check and rebuke from the Circuit Court of the United States. The constitutional provisions, and the laws in aid thereof, which attempted the creation of a distinct tribunal for the assessment and taxation of railroad property, are declared to be inoperative and void, because they are in derogation of the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. They deny the equal protection of the law to all within its jurisdiction. The court declares that the State can not deprive any person—and corporations are persons—within its jurisdiction of an equal protection and equal security to its property. All are to have the same access to the courts, and all to bear equal burdens. Taxation shall not be arbitrary or unequal, but must be uniform. All railroad property must be assessed by the same tribunal, upon the same ratio of value, under the same notice, with the same privilege of review, with the same deductions when incumbered with mortgage, and under the same rules of uniformity and equality as apply to all other property within the State. The new Constitution created a State Board of Equalization with authority to tax "the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock," and, in making this assessment, the Board is not required to give any notice to the owners, nor can they be heard respecting the valuation of their property. Three men, ignorant of railroad values, perhaps demagogues, elected probably through hatred to corporations, possibly impecunious and unprincipled adventurers, seeking an opportunity to blackmail railroad owners, are clothed with authority to put any arbitrary or excessive value they may please upon railroad property. Of the tax there was no notice, and from their decision there is no appeal and no review by courts. This is taking property without due process of law. It is robbery and condemnation. It is stealing under guise of law. No granger stock in a cheese factory would willingly submit to such a thing. No honest man would seek to subject a railroad corporation to such a wrong. No lawyer or court can uphold such a law. None but ignorant and unprincipled men would have passed it, and no candidate for office, unless he is a knave or a fool, will endeavor to uphold it. One of the primary objects of government is to protect and guard the rights of property; and when it shall become possible for a State government to take from individuals or corporations any property by them rightfully acquired, we shall have taken the first steps on the downward road that leads through anarchy and chaos to tyranny and despotism. Corporations are artificial persons created by law, and equally entitled under the law to the same protection as appertains to individuals. They are composed of individuals, and are to perform the same duties so far as they are capable, hear the same burdens, pay the same taxes, and in all respects have the same rights, immunities, and guarantees, as the government, through its laws, extends to the individual person. The prejudice against corporations is altogether unreasonable and absurd. It is founded on misapprehension and ignorance. It is fostered by jealousy. It is stirred up and kept alive by political demagogues, who selfishly seek their own personal advancement by it. Corporations are not monopolies, because any persons can unite to form them for any lawful purpose, and any hurtful legislation directed against corporations is inimical to the interests of all the people. There was a time when franchises and special privileges were the gifts of the crown; when corporations were granted by special laws, and given the privileges of monopoly. All this is changed by the enactment of general laws, under which any number of persons may associate, and use their capital, their labor, and their brains. Justice Field says that, "as a matter of fact, nearly all enterprises in this State, requiring for their execution an expenditure of large capital, are undertaken by corporations. They engage in commerce; they build and sail ships; they cover our navigable streams with steamers; they construct houses; they bring the products of earth and sea to market; they grade our streets, dig our sewers, and light our buildings; they open and work mines; they carry water into our cities; they build railroads, and cross mountains and deserts with them; they erect churches, colleges, lyceums, and theatres; they set up manufactories, and keep the spindle and shuttle in motion; they establish banks for savings; they insure against accident on land and sea; they give policies on life; they make the money exchanges of the world; they publish newspapers and books, and send news by lightning across the continent and under the ocean. Indeed, there is nothing which is lawful to be done to feed and clothe our people, to beautify and adorn their dwellings, to relieve the sick, to help the needy, and to enrich and ennoble humanity, which is not to a great extent done through the instrumentalities of corporations. There are over five hundred corporations in this State; there are thirty thousand in the United States; and the aggregate value of their property is several thousand millions. It would be a most singular result if a constitutional provision, intended for the protection of every person against partial and discriminating legislation by the States, should cease to exert such protection the moment the person becomes a member of a corporation. We can not accept any such conclusion."

Earnest effort, resulting from sincere convictions in any case, commands respect; in a bad cause, it claims indulgence; in a good one, challenges the applause and admiration of all intelligent and honest persons. The recent Prohibition Temperance Convention (after the flight of its forty political parsons, who came there to defeat its purpose) was composed of earnest, honest men, who believe that alcoholic drink is an evil so affecting the moral and material interests of the people that its use ought to be arrested by the exercise of political power. Moral suasion accomplishes very little in remedying the evils of intemperance. The prayers of political parsons accomplish less. Reason teaches, and experience has demonstrated, that by the adoption of prohibitory constitutions, and the enactment of prohibitory laws, great results can be attained and great good effected. Temperance men from all parts of the State, respectable in numbers, gathered in convention for the purpose of laying the foundations of a political party that has "temperance" for its governing motive, and all other desired reforms as incidents of its organization. They determined to place themselves in alliance with the national movement, and were rebaptized and named "Prohibition Home Protection." Wisely recognizing the fact that their sphere of usefulness and power of accomplishing results depended upon a united organization, self-reliant, independent of party entanglements, the convention wisely determined to formulate a platform of principles, nominate an independent ticket, and take position as a recognized political party, with distinct purposes and aims. This, in spite of a clerical intrigue, the convention successfully accomplished, and stands to-day in resolute attitude with other and older parties in the political arena, prepared to do gallant and loyal duty in defense of principles which it believes—and, believing, declares—involve the best interest and highest welfare of all classes of society. Its platform of resolutions indicate convictions and the courage to express them. It is a manly document, strongly writ. It has the ring of truth. It is in all respects above and superior to the cowardly and specious evasions of the Republican or Democratic party. Its purpose to suppress the manufacture, sale, and use of alcoholic drink is declared in emphatic language. It is to be worked out at the halloo-hox, and under processes of law, till the "crime" is fixed by legislative enactment, and its punishment provided by penal statutes. Sunday is recognized as an American institution that must be preserved. The declaration against the "saloons and places of business where intoxicating drinks are now licensed to be sold," and demanding that they be closed on Sunday, is so precise and emphatic that the League of Freedom, though drunk, may not misunderstand it. The convention declares in favor of free schools, and free text-books to the poor. It is opposed to sectarian education, and does not favor such a division of school moneys that the Roman Catholic church, priest, or scholar shall get any part of them. It treats railroad corporations just as it would treat any individual engaged in the same business; treats railroad property the same as it would treat any other property; treats railroad owners as it would any other business men, making them all hear their just proportion of the burdens of government, pay their just proportion of taxes, and would throw over them the shield and ægis of just, impartial, and equal laws. The party, the journal, the man, or the candidate for office who does not recognize the justice of this position is either an idiot who can not understand, a mercenary whose interests will not permit him to understand, or a self-seeking political knave and party demagogue whose interest it is to misrepresent the relations which all corporations, all property, and all persons hold toward the laws of the country, where the property-owner resides and the property is located. The declaration in reference to the hydraulic miner is that he has no right to injure the property of his agricultural neighbor; that he must so impound his detritus that it "shall never injure land, fill navigable streams, or interfere with the bays and harbors of our coast." In a word, the miner must take care of his own débris, and if he can find no way of pursuing his industry without injury to the interest of agriculture and commerce, he must be restrained by law from its prosecution. And, finally, the convention declares that it is the duty of the State to assume the ownership of water for irrigating purposes, and provide for its distribution. This is altogether a most respectable platform, so far as it goes. It does not declare, as it ought, in favor of restricting the immigration of foreign paupers, criminals, and political adventurers; and it does not declare, as it ought, that those foreigners who shall hereafter come to the country ought to be denied the privilege of the elective franchise. The ticket is a good one. Its candidate for Governor is an intelligent, honorable, and wealthy citizen of San Francisco, a man of clean life and of consistent temperance record, well known, and popular. Doctor R. H. McDonald is one of those energetic and earnest men who will not be content with the empty honor of a nomination, but will exert himself in the direction of election. The convention has elected a State Central Committee. There are in this State, and all over it, temperance organizations, and most of them are just now very active under the influence of the temperance agitation at the East. We have no doubt the new party will receive a large vote—larger, perhaps, than the temperance people themselves anticipate. It is, we believe, the beginning in California of an important political movement, and one which is destined to act an important part in the politics of this State.

The Sacramento Record-Union, in its editorial of October 1st, in speaking of the prohibition temperance party, says that its platform is a decided improvement upon those of the regular parties; that the railroad plank is temperate and fair, insisting upon equal justice for the people and its corporations alike; the débris plank is neither ambiguous nor evasive, while its positions upon the liquor traffic, education, and Sunday law are all strongly taken. The Record-Union, in estimating the possible strength of the new party, says: "There are in California twenty-two thousand members of the order of Good Templars, of whom ten thousand are voters. Of believers in prohibition outside the Good Templar order there are ten thousand more. It may therefore be said that there are twenty thousand votes capable, under conceivable circumstances, of being polled for the prohibition ticket." It is the only party that presents any genuine issues. It presents the only manly and honest platform. It has the courage to express its opinions in favor of temperance, in favor of closing whisky saloons on Sunday, in favor of non-sectarianism in our public schools, in favor of just and honorable treatment of railroad property and its owners, and in opposition to the rights of gravel-sluicers to destroy the farms of our valleys and the navigable waters of our State. In point of character and intelligence, the personnel of the temperance ticket is not inferior to either of the other tickets. In wealth and social position, Doctor McDonald is the peer of either candidate for Governor. We understand that it is the intention of the State Central Committee to put the names of Jackson Temple, of Sonoma, and Anson Bronson, of Los Angeles, on the ticket for judges of the Supreme Court. If this is done, and certain other things are brought about that are quite within the lines of possibility, Doctor McDonald will receive more votes than did Leland Stanford when he first ran for Governor of California upon the Republican ticket; and it may not be altogether improbable that he will turn out to be not the last in the gubernatorial race.

If the reverend Methodist divine, Doctor Briggs, does not have a little bit of an explanation to make to Saint Peter, when he comes up to the celestial gate, over his temperance politics, we shall be mistaken. The discipline of the Methodist church does not permit its members to make, sell, or drink beer, wine, or whisky, or to rent property to those who do sell. It is very severe, very consistent, very ultra, this church, upon the temperance question, and when Saint Peter opens the wicket and looks out upon the shining face of Doctor Briggs, he will say to him: "Doctor, how about your temperance politics?" "All right, Saint Peter, I will just step in and sit down upon one of your golden stools, and tell you all about it." "You stand where you are, doctor; the music of the golden harps is very confusing inside just now, and I can hear you better from the outside. How did you come to send your whole conference over to the temperance convention in aid of Estee?" "Well, you see, Saint Peter, I was a Republican; Governor Perkins had appointed me Yosemite Commissioner, and Estee would keep me in if he were elected." "Who is this man Estee? His name has never been upon our books." "Estee? Well now, Saint Peter, I don't defend myself for supporting him, except that I had to go against Stoneman—the least of two evils," you know, Saint Peter. "Do evil that good may come." "Doctor Briggs, don't wink at me; there is no choice of evil, and to do it under any circumstances is the teaching of the devil, the door to whose abode is just a little farther on and down under the hill." "But Stoneman was a Democrat—" "All right, doctor; there are several Democrats inside, but no Jesuits who practiced your kind of politics. We do not admit parsons or politicians who do evil that good may come." "I have always been a consistent temperance man." "Then how could you vote for Estee?" "Don't the Bible say, 'A little wine for the stomach's sake'?" "That was Saint Paul who made that mistake. I am Peter, and I keep the gate. Estee was a vine-grower and a brandy-maker; drinks gin, and made his fight in Peter Hopkins's bar-room, and you, as a Methodist preacher, knew better than to support him." "I have always been an observer of the Sabbath, and you know, Saint Peter, that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." "There you go again, doctor. The Sabbath was not made for man to get drunk at a corner grocery, and your man Estee had not the courage to so declare." "Saint Peter, you don't understand politics; you had no primaries in Palestine." "We did have primaries, caucuses, and conventions in Judea and in all the land round about Jordan. If you think the Christian doctrines were promulgated and the church was built up without politics, you don't know." "Then, Saint Peter, you should be indulgent to me, for you know bow it is yourself." "Your kind of politics, I know nothing about. The early Christians were honest men. They did not meddle in politics nor hold office; with staff and without scrip they went forth to preach the gospel. The Apostles never endeavored to break up a temperance convention, and never apologized for drunkenness or Sabbath desecration. You may be a very excellent and worthy politician, Doctor Briggs, but as a temperance man and Methodist preacher you will have to pass along. Next gentleman," called out the Saint. The door opened, and the editor of the Argonaut passed smilingly in, helped himself to harp and stool, and made himself quite at home. The last information had of Brother Briggs, he came up from Sulphurdome with a request from Estee, Fitch of the Bulletin, and Bill Higgins, for Charles Webb Howard to send them water at any price.

The political game in municipal politics is not yet made. Before another issue of the Argonaut, the Democracy will be at it, hip and thigh; the thud of the shillalah will be heard in the land, and many an exulting Democratic bead, now proudly wagging, will be laid low. The Republicans are just now all moored in the downs: two conventions nominating candidates in session, each trying to destroy the other; but in politics the strongest survives. This is not always Darwin's doctrine of the survival of the fittest, although in this instance we regard the County Committee convention as alone entitled to recognition. There is a very large number of excellent citizens in the Platt's Hall, or club, convention; but it has upon it the smell of the machine. It has not the support of any considerable number of Republicans. It has the support of the Bulletin, and this, not from principle or any honorable purpose, but because in Higgins and the machine the Bulletin finds effective allies in their most unrelenting and unreasonable war against the Spring Valley Water Company. The Platt's Hall convention and its candidates will cut no figure on election day.

The B'nai B'rith convention has so far given us a fairly good ticket—as good as we had a right to expect from the present disorganized and demoralized condition of the party—and will, we believe, be the only one upon which the party can unite. If we had any authority to advise, it would be that the better men of the Platt's Hall wing swallow their grievances, and unite the party, to save San Francisco from the peril of a possible success of the Irish Democracy. The Democratic party can not nominate a good ticket. A bad convention never nominates a good ticket. Good men will not run upon a ticket put forth by the class of men that now control the Democracy. The party is so flushed with the probability of success, so drunk with the chance of power, so absolutely delirious with the coming of the long hoped for opportunity to steal, that it is beside itself. The Irish, who form a majority of the rank and file, are rightfully demanding the spoils. The Gils, and Macs, and O's are no longer to be blarneyed with promises. They are no longer content to stand back. Messrs. Moriarty, Gilhooley, Flannigan, and Haggerty are too familiar with their own names to be told that these melodious patronymics are not sufficiently euphonious to please the Browns, and Smiths, and Jones, and Robinsons of native birth. There is rebellion and revolution among the hay-makers of the mouth, and "whin the Dimicratic convition gits to wurrick," there will be lively times. We await, with the patience of a great soul, this scrimmage of Erin's statesmen.

The outcry against Judge Allen by the press is dishonest and insincere. It can be interpreted as resulting only from a conscious conviction that its hypocrisy has been exposed in a decision that is sound in law, and applicable to every newspaper published in America. There is no journal printed upon this continent that is not printed for coin. It is the most unmitigated and arrant affectation on the part of editors to assume that they alone, of all men, do not sell, hire out, and for coin dispose of their labor and their brains, the same as does a lawyer to his client for a fee, and a clergyman for his salary, and everybody else that is employed for a compensation. The decision of Judge Allen, in the case of the Chronicle against the Bulletin, stripped from the face of journalism the mask of hypocrisy, and all its pretensions and false arrogance of being controlled by any higher, better, or other motives than control all other men in business. It has relegated newspaper men to the position occupied by ordinary mortals who work for a living, and who apply their brains and hands in any lawful occupation. Editors and publishers are not philanthropists; newspapers are not eleemosynary institutions; and the declaration of Judge Allen was right when he said that "it was no more libelous to accuse one of selling for gain the support and 'advocacy of his newspaper, than it would be to accuse the 'merchant of selling for gain his merchandise.'" The thing that burts, that makes the editor wince under the lash, is the consciousness that he does sell himself and sell his journal. The shame and the crime of the whole business are the lying and hypocritical declarations that he is disinterested in all he writes, that he is governed alone by high and honorable motives, that he has the public good only in view, and that journalism alone of all industries, and journalists alone of all men, are unselfish, and not mercenary. To take the view that the editorial talent and the journalistic type may be employed and compensated as all professional, scientific, and literary men are employed and compensated, does not justify the blackmailing of the newspaper blackguard, nor imply the right of anybody, in ink or speech, to do a dishonorable, criminal, or improper act. If the Bulletin can find any moral consolation in the abuse and vilification of such enterprises as the transcontinental railroad, which it fought for years, or the Spring Valley Water Works, which it now fights, or in its opposition to Judge Allen, because he rendered a conscientious decision against it, or its opposition to Judge Blake—if, we say, it can find any moral solace that it does not do mean things for hire, then we would not deny it to be the most conscientious of journals. We wish it would just take a bribe to behave itself, and consent to be paid to reform. The extent of the sacrifice would command a generous subsidy.

The following extract from the official records of the Constitutional Convention is Henry Edgerton's opinion of Morris M. Estee: "His, the fatal habit of browsing through the 'organic laws of other States, borrowing enough to show a 'want of invention, and inserting just enough to show a 'total want of judgment, constitutes a superficial, charlatan patch-work of clumsy, hybrid eclecticism, the whole 'a bare-faced imposition." Mr. Estee is an intellectual and moral impostor. He has but a smattering of law, picked up in a country attorney's office. He lacks the mental discipline and intellectual strength to ever compensate for his want of early education. He is a politician in the lowest and meanest sense of the word. He has no breadth of statesmanship to comprehend great political questions. He has no moral faculties to appreciate them. He lacks the courage to emancipate his mind from the thralldom of error, or himself from the political association and influence of a class of bar-room rogues. He is totally insincere, ungrateful, and unreliable, and, in the event of becoming Governor of California, will be under such obligations to men of bad principles, by agreements made in Peter Hopkins's bar-room in San Francisco, with disreputable machine politicians, and in confidential bargainings with whisky dealers and League of Freedom men, that he can not conscientiously perform his duties as Governor without violating his word. Yet we hear that Mr. Estee is making a "good impression in the country," "is carrying everything before him," through the eloquent exposition of his principles on the railroad question and on the Sunday law. Mr. Estee is not eloquent, and is not honest. Whether he is the friend or enemy of the railroad corporations no one can tell from his record, because he has occupied all sorts of attitudes. If he says he is opposed to the Central Pacific Railroad, and unfriendly toward any corporation that has money, we do not believe it; and the reason we do not believe it is, because Mr. Estee says so, and because the corporations have money. If Mr. Estee says that he is in favor of such a law as will close saloons on Sunday, and the enforcement of such a law by more severe penalties than are now imposed, we will take the liberty of believing him insincere; and he dare not say so unless he gets the consent of a secret committee of the League of Freedom. Republican claqueurs are falsely reporting "large meetings," "unbounded enthusiasm," and "eloquent speeches," wherever Mr. Estee goes. They also say that Democrats in large numbers are expressing their intention to vote for Mr. Estee. The Argonaut makes the following proposition: For every respectable and disinterested Democrat who will own, over his own signature, his intention to vote for Mr. Estee, we will name two respectable, disinterested Republicans who will not; and to the extent that we do not do this, we will, for every Democratic name, present ten dollars to the Protestant Orphan Asylum, and send the Argonaut free for one year to the fooled Democrat who votes for M. M. Estee for Governor.

When the blackmailers in print and the political demagogues have driven Governor Stanford away from San Francisco and the State, what good will they have accomplished? The railroad system will go on all the same. His departure will not increase the probability of reduced fares and freights, or of enlarged railroad accommodations. Branch roads as feeders to his main lines, and avenue cable-lines here in the city, will not be liable to be built if he is not a resident of California. His Palo Alto farm, with its splendid stud of horses, will not be maintained. His magnificent vineyard in Butte County, instead of becoming an experimental establishment for the production of vines under the most approved methods, with the expenditure of large money to exploit this vine-growing industry, will become a simple mercenary business. The Warm Springs property will not be improved. The Golden Gate Woolen Mills are liable to be closed. A mansion will not be built at Palo Alto. Servants and employees, to whom he is now paying thirty thousand dollars a month, will be discharged. It is the policy of other cities to encourage the residence among them of wealthy men. The extravagance, display, and enjoyment of lavish wealth contributes to the various industries, and promotes and advances the prosperity of the city. The policy of the Third Napoleon was to make Paris beautiful and attractive, that it might become the pleasure city of Europe, where tourists and travelers would spend their money, and where persons of wealth and leisure would make their homes. The policy was a wise one. In New York we seldom hear from the stump or read in the journals denunciations and personal vilification of men because they are rich. Men of wealth are welcomed to New York. We suppose when this little Pedlington of a city shall outgrow its slanderous and gossipy youth, and attain larger dimensions, we shall welcome back our exiled millionaires, and be willing to indulge them in building palaces upon our bills, and driving their equipages in our Golden Gate Park.

The Bluffer convention, at the dictation of Higgins and the machine, and in opposition to the wishes and judgment of a majority of its own members, has nominated a sheriff against John Sedgwick. This is Higgins's work. It is done to destroy the Republican candidate whom Higgins approved last year, in the interest of Edward Flaherty, and to elect Peter Hopkins, Esq., Democrat, to the office of sheriff. Peter Hopkins is the Irish gentleman in whose bar-room at the Grand Hotel Mr. Estee arranged the preliminaries of his candidacy for governor. Messrs. Higgins, Gannon, Chute, Buckley, Rainey, and Hopkins are understood to be in friendly alliance upon the sheriff programme. We sometimes wonder whether the Bulletin is in the conspiracy, or only fooled.

The Pope's Democratic Irish have gone into convention in San Francisco, for the purpose of relieving Americans from the responsibility of governing the city. We shall in our next issue give the names of the principal delegates and candidates who participate in the scrimmage.

SARCASTIC.

Some Facts on Freights—Railroad and Ship.

All business is conducted on the highest possible plane of charity, long suffering, and politeness, except the transportation of goods by rail. Wholesale merchants, importers, ship-masters and owners, always act on a basis of perfect impartiality to the small dealer and ultimate consumer. Any man in private business (no man not righteous ever engaged in a private business), who ever varied his rate, obliged a friend, made a special discount for a large order, made a time contract, kept his stock down to keep prices up, cut off orders to make a corner, drew an agreement for his private profit, entered into a trade combination, did only what was right, and any man who declined to fill an order at the cheapest rates for a troublesome customer, who declined to do all that every living soul asked of him, and who declined to let any one single malcontent abuse him in public, track him in private, bulldoze him in politics, and open his private records to the public by means of public commissions and examining powers, did very wrong.

Articles of Faith.—(1.) All corporations are organized swindlers. (2.) Each private firm or individual is faultless, and a mirror of equity and commercial honor. (3.) All questions between a corporation and individual should be decided by the individual at once without question. (4.) Only corporations escape equitable taxation (see tax-list of San Francisco). One thousand men pay taxes on less than one thousand dollars, who are worth from fifty thousand to one hundred thousand dollars each. They swear personally to these rolls, and are not soulless monopolists. Every farmer in the State whose land is raised from one dollar to one hundred dollars an acre shall damn the soulless monopoly who built the road. (5.) Trade strikes are not monopolies. When wages of masons, machinists, and carpenters go from two dollars and a half to six dollars a day, this is right and is only equitable, and does not sinch the soulless monopolist who happens to need labor. This is always done without notice, as it makes business pleasant and equitable, and enables you to look ahead. Trades unions do right when they limit the number of apprentices in every shop in San Francisco, and beat, kill, wound, or drive off every man who does not belong to the coldest and bloodiest-minded monopoly in the world—secret trades unions. This is right. The individual mechanic is not a corporation, and can do no wrong. If the union shuts his boy out from learning a trade, the boy can hang around the street, become a "lover," or a cut-throat, and vote at the next election (under any name) against the soulless monopoly. The laboring classes are just lovely, because not corporations, and they always work at the same rate of wages all over the State, and never favor any one locality where business is large or steady. This is admirable, as a good carpenter will go afoot to Shasta and work as cheap as in San Francisco, because he will never discriminate against a locality. It is a brutal blackguardism for any railroad to secure its charges (whatever they are) on goods in their hands. It is so convenient to let every man have his goods and settle all things afterward. Our individual merchants always fill every one's order without public or private inquiry. The merchants never require a deposit in advance, never make private inquiry about a man while holding him in the office, never use commercial spies and secret inquiries, never call for indorsements, and positively demand that one shall contract ahead, or stipulate to buy no one else's goods, and never put a stipulated price on the goods—not depending on the cost, but merely on the amount they have decided to "sock on." All private firms are mirrors of honor, their goods can be bought without weight and inspection, their employees are double paid, get a domestic duck every Saturday night as a present, have all their accident bills paid by the rich firms, and the employee and his man are always seen arm in arm. All the business men who came to California were distinguished (except the soulless scoundrels who run the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads, and who came here to get up a soulless incorporation).

No purse-proud citizens, self-made men, or lazy, luxurious livers are in the State except the bloated band on the top of Nob Hill. Parlor furniture, champagne frappe, draw-poker, and pretty women have been invented to suit a small hand of incorporated robbers (three or more—not to exceed six or seven). The five hundred swell palaces of this city are occupied by the degraded serfs who are manufacturers, wholesalers, and importers, and who, by a life of the most practical golden-rule piety have brought all their charges down to cost. If accident or rule brings up the freight charges on their goods, they always deduct these items from the cost and profits in selling their goods, so as to equalize their conduct; and their success in life is due to the fact that they sell a sack of flour as cheap as one thousand barrels of that useful article—which is free to the poor, through the efforts of these good men—while freights are always high, on account of the soulless corporation. All railroad owners should be driven out of this State to New York, and give the poor and thoughtful wholesaler, importer, and manufacturer a chance. Life is a dream on Front Street and Tar Flat. The clerk gets a nickel watch every New Year's in return for swindling in weights for the firm, and the grimy apprentice runs away with his master's pretty wife, and thanks God he does his duty and is dead against any corporation. Railroad freights are a brutal load, and not to be borne. The treatment is indecent, the service is not performed. And that is why all our goods are brought in six months around the Horn, in British ships, insured in British insurance companies, and our capital lies idle months, because it is so nice, and we can fill our orders so quick, and then go and live in London with our foreign friends. Merchants never make a discount for orders over five hundred dollars; never give sixty and ninety days additional for a large purchase. They always give a stranger the benefit of his cash, and they never put up a job on a customer. Country buyers are never dragged, drunken, through every dive in the city by drummers, and their orders filled in places where no wise man dates his correspondence.

Coal, pig iron, beer, whisky, lumber, flour and grain, bags and sacks, tow-boats, mill-work, brokerage, banking, mortgage foreclosing, and contracting have never raised these delicately slated roofs in the French style, which cover the altogether sweet and lovely regions of the aristocratic portions of the city where the pious importer, successful contractor, and foreign merchant looks out through his stained-glass windows at his own synagogue, Joss house, or temple, and thanks God, Allah, or Jehovah, or the great Job (limited), that he is not a soulless monopolist. Freight is always carried for nothing in ships, and when we get goods by ship we always reduce the price. The getting of goods by ships cheapens and steadies the rate. Coal and pig-iron come by ships. Coal only went from four dollars to eight last winter for engine use, from nine dollars to sixteen for family use, and from twelve dollars to twenty-two for foundry use. Coke only went from eleven dollars to twenty-five; pig-iron only fluctuating from twenty-four dollars to sixty a ton here because it is all brought by ship—certainly it advanced two dollars in one day, when the Clipper Gap furnace burned down. This was an equitable action, because coal and pig-iron are sold by truly good men. Nails come by ship, and they only jumped from three dollars to six a keg two years ago, and have only jumped a dollar now. Sacks and plate glass are never cornered. Lumber, which pays at sixteen dollars, is only sold at twenty-four dollars to twenty-six by the Lumber Dealers' Association.

No country merchant is helped to run out the other man; no private ledgers are kept; no special discounts allowed. All is equity fairness, and loveliness with mercantile men, mechanics, and manufacturers. Bad work never appears, put-up jobs are unknown, and discrimination is born at Fourth and Townsend Streets. In view of the absolute equity and mercantile honor of the unincorporated successful citizens and mechanics of the city it is now decided to drop all private rings, stop all secret associations to fix prices, sell at retail as cheap as wholesale, blot out the sundries account in the ledger, get all our goods by ship at unvarying rates as fixed by British capitalists, close our stores, let every man help himself to our goods, services, wares, and privileges, and attend a general convention to reduce the rate of freights on tomatoes from Mendocino to San Francisco; and if we succeed in placing the average tom-cat in the hands of every soul in the State at uniform rates, we have certainly laid out the tom-cat issue, and will look up another issue before the soulless corporation can rush American tom-cats from the East by rail, sell them to the lowest bidder for cash, and anti-cipitate Balfour, Guthrie & Co.'s fleet of foreign tom-cats, to arrive in months. All questions are purely one-sided in this world. There is no such thing as a free lunch, or a free rail-road. What—a pity!

SAN FRANCISCO, October 4, 1882.

X. Y. Z.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Maestro's Confession—(Andrea dal Castagno, 1460).

Threescore and ten!
I wish it were all to live again.
Doesn't the Scripture somewhere say,
By reason of strength men oftentimes may Even reach fourscore? Alack! who knows?
Ten sweet, long years of life! I would paint
Our lady and many and many a saint,
And thereby win my soul's repose.
Yet, Fra Bernardo, you shake your head:
Has the leech once said
I must die? But he
Is only a fallible man, you see.
Now, if he had been our father, the Pope,
I should know there was then no hope.
Were only I sure of a few kind years
More to be merry in, then my fears
I'd slip for a while, and turn and smile
At their hated reckonings. Whence the need
Of squaring accounts for word and deed
Till the lease is up? . . . How?—hear I right?
No, no! You could not have said, To-night!
Ah, well! Ah, well!
"Confess," you tell me, "and be forgiven."
Is there no easier path to heaven?
Santa Maria, how can I tell
What, now for a score of years and more,
I've buried away in my heart so deep
That, howso tired I've been, I've kept
Eyes waking when near me another slept,
Lest I might mutter it in my sleep?
And now at the last to blab it clear!
How the women will shrink from my pictures! And worse
Will the men do—spit on my name, and curse;
But then up in heaven I shall not hear.

I faint! I faint!
Quick, Fra Bernardo! The figure stands
There in the niche—my patron saint;
Put it within my trembling hands
Till they are steadier. So! My brain
Whirled and grew dizzy with sudden pain,
Trying to span that gulf of years,
Fronting again those long-laid fears.

Confess? Why, yes; if I must, I must.
Now, good Saint Andrea, be my trust!
But fill me first, from that crystal flask,
Strong wine to strengthen me for my task.
(That thing is a gem of craftsmanship:
Just mark how its curvings fit the lip.)

Ah, you in your dreamy, tranquil life,
How can you fathom the rage and strife,
The blinding envy, the burning smart,
That, worm-like, gnaws the Maestro's heart,
When he sees another snatch the prize
Out from under his very eyes.

For which he would batter his soul? You see,
I taught him his art from first to last;
Whatever he was he owed to me.
And then to be browbeaten, overpassed,
Stealthily jeered behind the hand!
Why, that was more than a saint could stand;
And I was no saint. And if my soul,
With a pride like Lucifer's, mocked control,
And goaded me on to madness till
I lost all measure of good or ill,
Whose gift was it, pray? Oh, many a day
I've cursed it, yet whose is the blame, I say?
His name? How strange that you question so,
When I'm sure I've told it o'er and o'er,
And why should you care to hear it more?

Well, as I was saying, Domenico
Was wont of my skill to make such light,
That, seeing him go on a certain night
Out with his lute, I followed. Hot
From a war of words, I heeded not Whither I went, till I heard him twang
A madrigal under the lattice where Only the night before I sang.

—A double robbery! and I swear
'Twas overmuch for the flesh to bear.
Don't ask me. I knew not what I did,
But I basted home with my rapier hid
Under my cloak, and the blade was wet.

Just open that cabinet there and see
The strange red rustiness on it yet.

A calm that was dead as dead could be Numbed me. I seized my chalks to trace—
What think you?—Judas Iscariot's face!
I just had finished the scowl, no more,
When the shuffle of feet drew near my door
(We lived together, you know I said);
Then wide they flung it, and on the floor
Laid down Domenico—dead!

Back swam my senses: a sickening pain
Tingled like lightning through my brain,
And ere the spasm of fear was broke,
The men who had borne him homeward spoke
Soothingly: "Some assassin's knife
Had taken the innocent artist's life—
Wherefore, 'twere hard to say. All men
Were prone to have troubles now and then
The world knew naught of. Toward his friend
Florence stood waiting to extend Tenderest dole." Then came my tears,
And I've been sorry these twenty years.

Now, Fra Bernardo, you have my sin;
Do you think Saint Peter will let me in?

—Margaret J. Preston.

Sœur Louise de la Misericorde.

(1674.)

I have desired, and I have been desired;
But now the days are over of desire,
Now dust and dying embers mock my fire;
Where is the hire for which my life was hired?
O vanity of vanities, desire!

Longing and love, pangs of a perished pleasure,
Longing and love, a diskenked fire,
And memory a bottomless gulf of mire,
And love a fount of tears outrunning measure;
O vanity of vanities, desire!

Now from my heart, love's deathbed, trickles, trickles,
Drop by drop slowly, drop by drop of fire,
The dross of life, of love, of spent desire;
Alas, my rose of life gone all to prickles—
O vanity of vanities, desire!

O vanity of vanities, desire!
Stunting my hope which might have strained up higher,
Turning my garden plot to barren mire;
O death-struck love, O diskenked fire,
O vanity of vanities, desire!

—Christina Gabriella Rossetti.

LITERARY NOTES.

The last two numbers that have appeared in the Franklin Square Library are "The Knights of the Horseshoe," by Dr. W. A. Caruthers, and "A Strange Journey; or Pictures from Egypt and the Soudan," by the author of "Commonplace." Published by Harper Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; prices, 20 and 15 cents.

Lady Georgiana Fullerton, herself a veteran novelist, has translated from the French Madame Augustus Craven's "Eliane." It is an artistic story, and possesses a well wrought out plot. The translation is especially well done, as could be expected from one who is bound to France by so many ties as is Lady Georgiana Fullerton. Published by William Gottschager & Co., New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, 50 cents.

Bret Harte has just published his latest two stories in book form, under the title of "Flip," and "Found at Blazing Star." Both have been published in the Argonaut, and met with marked success. They were also printed by many European journals, the Paris Figaro first setting the example with "Found at Blazing Star," and then German and Austrian papers following in the lead with "Flip." Bret Harte seems to have lost little of his old vigor and originality. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

The day has gone by for the old-fashioned Indian trapper story; for since the advent of the government agent, the reservation, and all its attendant schemes for schools and farms, the Indian has either had the romance civilized out of him, or else is so watched and guarded by the troops that he is confined to horse-stealing, arson, or murdering small bands of defenseless settlers. In fact, he has been shorn of all his glory and much of his romance. Mr. William O. Stoddard, comprehending this condition of affairs, has just written a little book which gives the modern aspect of the red man. In a little work entitled "The Talking Leaves," he relates many exciting incidents, and deals with a strong plot; but it is true to nature, and is an accurate picture of life among the Apaches, down on the Mexican border. Published by Harper Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $1.

Dean Swift was in literature like one of the old Homeric heroes—huge of brawn and massive in his blows. One always associates him with the story of the Dublin printer, who, on being asked why he had obeyed at dinner the stern mandate from Swift, "to finish your asparagus stalks," replied: "If you had dined with Dean Swift, you would have been obliged to eat your stalks, too." He did nearly what he liked with every one who came in his path—from bishop to sweetheart. He was one of the hugest giants of a century of giants. For over half a century there has appeared, with the exception of Foster's fragmentary biography, no complete life of Swift. During this time many interesting facts have come to light. Henry Craik, of London, it is said, is about to issue a voluminous work on the subject. But, meanwhile, Mr. Leslie Stephen has prepared a short biography for the "English Men of Letters" series. It proves to be a carefully written history, and although its brevity is against it, yet one could hardly find a juster study of Swift in as little space. Published by Harper Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, 75 cents.

Professor Müller, of Tübingen, Germany, has long occupied a foremost place as a chronicler of current political history. His "Politische Geschichte der Neuesten Zeit" is considered a standard work on the subject of the political history of the century. Andrew White, president of Cornell University, several years ago urged the Rev. Dr. John P. Peters to make an English translation of his work. That gentleman finally did so, and the result is a volume entitled "A Political History of Recent Times." It comprises the period embraced between the years 1816 and 1875, with an appendix by the translator covering the period from 1876 to 1882. It has been prepared with a special reference to Germany, although the translator has condensed much of the German history in order to generalize the book. One of the chief values of such a work, aside from chronological accuracy, ought to be a careful index. This feature has not been neglected, and serves to render the book perfect in its way. Professor Müller displays a singularly unprejudiced judgment in his accounts of the decisive events which have stirred Europe during the last three-quarters of a century. He is evidently a liberal in politics, and favors the great advances toward freedom and independence which the subjects of European monarchies have made in modern times. He, however, very justly condemns the communistic and socialistic efforts. Published by Harper Brothers, New York; for sale by Bancroft; price, $3.

Miscellany: Mr. Swinburne will, it is said, visit America before long, and give readings from his own works. An English critic calls upon the Browning bibliographers to clear up a disputed point as to the color of Mrs. Browning's hair. Bayard Taylor, who called upon the poet at Florence, describes her as possessing "a pale, wasted face, shaded by masses of soft, chestnut curls." Nathaniel Hawthorne, who also visited Mrs. Browning at Florence, says: "Her black ringlets cluster down her neck, and make her face look the whiter by their sable profusion."—The Athenaeum is surprised that "several members of the Leigh and Byron families" should object to the publication of the Byron correspondence which has come into its possession, but will refrain, for the present, from taking further steps in the matter. The Bookseller of London declares that Americans have "shown much sense and dignity" in buying only twenty-six copies of Guitau's book.

A correspondent of the Hartford Post says that a young Bostonian was so indignant about Matthew Arnold's recent criticisms of American manners that he wrote a letter to the author, politely calling him to account. Mr. Arnold replied, setting forth the plea of probably wrong information, and declaring that he will be pleased to correct his errors when he sees for himself that they exist. Carlyle, shortly before his death, gave his sanction to the proposed publication of his letters to Emerson. The Mantuan commemoration of the nineteenth century of Virgil's death—for which occasion Mr. Tennyson wrote his recently published poem—was not strictly ideal in character. Besides a literary competition, there were horse-racing, pigeon-shooting, and a cattle-show.

Announcements: George MacDonald has in press a volume of essays, mostly on literary subjects, which he will print under the curious title of "Orts." In the new edition of Dana's "Household Book of Poetry," there will be one hundred and sixty poems not found in the old. Among the added poets are George Eliot, Walt Whitman, and Oscar Wilde. A biography of Maria Edgeworth has been written by Mrs. Oliver, the learned wife of a Boston physician. The volume, which will have various illustrations from original sources, is in the press of A. Williams & Co. Chapman & Hall are preparing for publication Ernest Renan's "Recollections of Youth," and a translation of the history of ancient Egyptian art, by Perrot and Chipiez. Mr. W. D. Howells has written a long poem which is coming out in the November number of Harper's Magazine. Its subject is "Pordenone," an obscure painter, who had a quarrel with Titian. Miss Alcott has prepared two new books for the holiday season—"Proverb Stories" and "An Old-fashioned Thanksgiving." Cupid, M. D., is the suggestive title of the short story which the Scribners have in press. "The Nation of the Willows," of whom Mr. Cushing is writing in the Atlantic, are not the Zunis, but the Ha-va-su-pai. The Century is to publish his Zuni articles. Fords, Howard & Hurlbut are about to publish "The Cleverdale Mystery," by W. A. Wilkins; "The Problem of the Poor," by Helen Campbell; "Miss Leighton's Perplexities," a love story; "The House that Jill Built," after Jack's had proved a failure, a book on home architecture, with profuse illustrations by the author, E. C. Gardner; "Dust," a novel, by Julian Hawthorne, and a new edition of Bryant's "Library of Poetry and Song," including a new index of poetical quotations, with above three thousand references, a classified cyclopaedia of poetry and dictionary of poetical quotations. Lieutenant-Commander John G. Thompson is writing a book on "Thirty Years in the United States Navy."

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

You know how the effect of champagne seems to grow on a man for about two days when he fills up with it. A gilded youth was explaining to his friends that he had drunk a lot the night before, and felt it in his head a good deal. "Wait," said one, "until tomorrow. It'll grow on you, and you'll be drunker than a boiled owl." "Do you think to scare me by telling me that?" cried the youth. "Scare you!" replied the old rounder; "by George, I thought I was cheering you up."

Among the season's gossip at Newport was a story about Captain Collins, U. S. N., who took the rebel cruiser Florida in Bahia Bay, during the late war. The vessel was sunk, it will be remembered, by one of those mysterious "accidents" that will happen at such times, just when the demands of international law required her return. A few hours before she sank the officer in charge was much to his chagrin, relieved by a comrade. "Why is this?" he asked. "Oh," said the new commander, "I can swim, and they say you can't."

"There are some women," remarks a writer in Progress, "who are true to the instincts of mother Eve. I know of a lady who, during the hot season, complains bitterly of the fashion that demands such a superabundance of clothing, and declares, when rebuked about this idiosyncrasy, that there is no law, human or divine, compelling more than one garment as a covering." "Yes," was the reply, on one of these occasions, "the Bible tells that Eve recognized the need of clothing." "True," was the response; "but that was after the fall; and I also am perfectly satisfied to wear a goodly suit after the fall. It is the summer clothing I complain of."

A timid young man, says the New York World, is traversing a lonely wood, when suddenly a gloomy and sullen-looking man accosts him, and, toying with the trigger of his gun, remarks: "Ha, my young friend! I am delighted to meet you. I know you would like to buy this pheasant—a beautiful bird—and you shall have it for twenty francs. You would have to pay that for it at the restaurant, any way. Come, will you have it? Here, Boxer, don't bite the gentleman's legs, unless I tell you. Is it a bargain?" His young friend said faintly that a pheasant was precisely what he came out to look for, and pays the money. He hastens to the nearest police station to complain of the highway robbery of which he has been the victim. There he is promptly fined fifty francs for having a pheasant in his possession without a game-licence, and the bird is confiscated.

A hotel guest, says the Detroit Free Press, was standing having his clothes brushed. On finishing he handed a five-dollar bill to the hall-boy. He grinned from ear to ear, and nearly broke his back bowing and thanking so generous a being. But his face fell so quickly that he had some trouble in catching it before it reached the floor, when the generous being said, in tones not to be trifled with: "Get it changed." He went away and brought back the change—five one-dollar bills. Deliberately pocketing four, the generous being handed the one remaining to the duster. Again a sweeping bow from the dust-broom, a "Thank you," and a sudden convulsion as the guest remarked in solemn tones: "Get it changed." Once more he departed and brought back two fifty-cent pieces. One went into the traveler's pocket, the other into the hall-boy's palm. He smiled, said "Thank you," and was slipping it into his pocket, when "Get it changed," again rang into his ears. Two quarters came back with him this time, which he handed to the guest, who, putting one in his purse, turned over the other to the hall-boy. This time he was allowed to walk off nearly across the hall, when, as if by an electric shock, he was brought to a standstill, with those terrible words, "Get it changed!" This time two dimes and a nickel were deposited in the hand of the guest, who put the two dimes in his pocket, handed the brush-boy a nickel, and walked in to dinner.

"There was one Russian fellow," says a writer on the Crimean war, in All the Year Round, "that had a sand-pit all of his own, right in front of our trenches. I never saw anybody so persevering as that man was. Early in the morning he'd be popping away, and there he'd stay until nightfall. Many a good fellow he sent to glory. It got to be such a nuisance that we dropped shells at him now and again, but he minded them no more than if they had been so many oranges. One day I was down in the trenches, when Colonel Manoor, of the Forty-eighth—a splendid shot and a great man for sport—came along. A party with a sergeant were at work, and just as the colonel came up one of them dropped with a ball through his head. "Deuced good shot! Who fired that?" says the colonel, putting up his eye-glass. "Man in the rifle-pit to the left, sir," answers the sergeant. "Never saw a neater shot," says the colonel. "Now, major," says the colonel, turning to another officer, who was with him, "what's the odds against my picking him off?" "In how long?" "Within ten minutes." "Two to one, in ponies, I'll give you," says the major. "Say three, and it's a bargain." "Three to one in ponies," answered the major, and the bet was made. He was a great man for measuring his powder, was the colonel, and always emptied out a cartridge and then filled it up again according to his taste. He took about half his time getting the sergeant's gun loaded to please him. At last he got it right, and the glass screwed well into his eye. "Now, my lads," says he, "just push poor Smith here up over the trench. He's dead enough, and another wound will make little difference to him." The men began to hoist the body up, and the colonel stood, may be twenty yards off, peering over the edge with eyes like a lynx. As soon as the top of Smith's shako appeared, we saw the barrel of the gun come slowly out of the sand-pit, and when his poor dead face looks over the edge, whizz comes a bullet right through his forehead. The Russian, he peeps out of the pit to see the effect of his shot. The colonel fired with a sort of chuckle, and the rifleman sprang up in the air, and ran a matter of ten or twelve paces toward us, and then down on his face as dead as a door-nail. "Double or quits on the man in the pit to the right," says the colonel, loading up his gun again; but I think the major had dropped money enough for one day over his shooting, for he wouldn't hear of another try. By the way, it was handed over to Smith's widow, for he was a free-handed gentleman, was the colonel."

TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

If you wish to use goods of full weight and absolute purity, see your grocer supplies you with

KINGSFORD'S OSWEGO STARCH.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

WALTER BAKER & CO'S CHOCOLATE.

SMITH BROTHERS' PACKAGE BORAX.

WM. T. COLEMAN & CO.
AGENTS.
121 and 123 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRIVATE ASYLUM, For the Care and Treatment of Men- tal and Nervous Diseases.

THE PROPRIETARY INSTITUTION

called THE PACIFIC ASYLUM, where the insane of the State of Nevada have been kept for several years, will be opened as a PRIVATE ASYLUM for the care and treatment of Mental and Nervous Diseases, on the 10th of August, 1882, the Nevada patients having been removed to the new State Asylum at Reno. The buildings are capacious and comfortable, having been constructed for the accommodation of two hundred patients, and they are pleasantly situated in the suburbs of Stockton, and are surrounded by attractive grounds of forty acres in extent, with cultivated gardens and pleasant walks. Its advantages over public institutions in facility of admission and in procuring extra accommodations if required, are obvious. For terms and other particulars apply to the Proprietor and Superintendent, DR. ASA CLARK, Pacific Asylum, Stockton, Cal.

References—Dr. L. C. Lane, San Francisco,
Dr. G. A. Shurtliff, Stockton,
Sup't State Insane Asylum.

GEORGE MORROW & CO. (Established 1854.)

HAY, GRAIN, AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS

SHIPPING ORDERS A SPECIALTY.
39 Clay Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Telephone No. 35.

C. ADOLPHE LOW & CO. Commission Merchants, SAN FRANCISCO.

OFFICE IN NEW YORK, 42 CEDAR
Street
Liberal advances made on consignments.

S. & G. GUMP, 581 and 583 Market Street, S. F., Manufacturers Mirrors, Cornices, Hardwood Mantles, Picture Frames, and Bric-a-Brac.

IMPORTERS OF GOUPIL'S ENGRAVINGS, CHRO-
MOS, PHOTOGRAPHS, ETC.

CALIFORNIA SUGAR REFINERY. OFFICE, 325 Market St. WORKS, Eighth and Brannan Sts. C. SPRECKELS, President, J. D. SPRECKELS, Vice-President, A. B. SPRECKELS, Secretary.

PACIFIC ROLLING MILL CO. San Francisco, Cal., Manufacturers of RAILROAD AND MERCHANT IRON Car and Locomotive Axles and Frames, and Hammered Iron of every description. Rolled Beams, Angle, Channel, and T Iron, Bridge, and Machine Bolts, Lag Screws, Nuts, Washers, etc. Steamboat Shafts, Cranks, Pistons, Connect- ing Rods, etc. Highest price paid for Scrap Iron. OFFICE, 202 MARKET STREET.

THE AMERICAN SUGAR REFINERY SAN FRANCISCO, MANUFACTURERS OF ALL Classes of Refined Sugars, including Loaf Sugar for export. C. ADOLPHE LOW, President. Office—208 California Street.

IRA P. RANKIN. A. P. BRAYTON PACIFIC IRON WORKS RANKIN, BRAYTON & CO., 127 to 132 First Street, San Francisco. Mining Machinery of all kinds, Sugar Mills, Engines— both Marine and Stationary, Boilers, etc., etc.

CHARLES R. ALLEN Wholesale and Retail Dealer in COAL or Office by Telephone 308. Agent Pittsburg Coal Mining Company. 118 and 120 Beale Street, S. F.

J. C. MERRILL & CO., Shipping and Commission Merchants 204 and 206 California Street, SAN FRANCISCO. The Regular Dispatch line of Packets to Honolulu, H.

PAYOT, UPHAM & CO STATIONERS, BOOKSELLERS, Commercial Printers, and Blank Book Manufacturers 204 Sansome Street, near Pine. TABER, HARKER & Co., IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE GROCERS, 108 and 110 California St., San Francisco.

UNIVERSALLY PRESCRIBED BY THE FACULTY

A Laxative and Refreshing
Fruit Lozenge for CONSTIPATION,
Hemorrhoids, Bile, Headache,
Cerebral Congestion, etc.
Prepared by
GRILLON,
SOLE PROPRIETOR,
Pharmacie de première classe
de la Faculté de Paris,
27 rue Rambuteau,
PARIS.

Tamar—unlike pills and the usual purgatives—is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

C. P. SHEFFIELD, N. W. SPAULDING, J. PATTERSON

17 and 19 FREMONT ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

ALASKA

COMMERCIAL CO.

No. 310 SANSOME STREET,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN FURS.

ALLEN, MCGARY & CO., IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE Liquor Dealers, 322-324 FRONT STREET SAN FRANCISCO.

THUNDER POWDER COMPANY.—

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco,
California; location of works, Alameda County, California.
Notice.—There are delinquent upon the following described stock, on account of assessment (No. 1) levied on the fifteenth day of August, 1882, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

Name.	Cert. No.	No. Shares.	Amount.
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	3	5	$2 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	37	10,000	4,000 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	73	200	80 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	74	300	120 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	79	14,995	5,998 00
Charles DeLacy, Trustee.....	87	6,000	2,400 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee.....	4	5	not issued 2 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee.....	5	995	398 00
W. W. Dodge, Trustee.....	6	5	do 2 00
W. W. Dodge, Trustee.....	7	995	do 398 00
E. G. Waite, Trustee.....	8	5	do 2 00
E. G. Waite, Trustee.....	9	2,495	do 998 00
Geo. W. Prescott, Trustee.....	10	5	do 2 00
Geo. W. Prescott, Trustee.....	11	995	do 398 00
Wm. Sherman, Trustee.....	12	5	do 2 00
Wm. Sherman, Trustee.....	13	2,495	do 998 00
R. M. Anthony, Trustee.....	14	1,000	do 400 00
John A. Benson, Trustee.....	15	2,000	do 800 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee.....	16	1,000	do 400 00
M. Baldrige, Trustee.....	17	1,500	not issued 600 00
Fred'k Lux, Trustee.....	18	1,000	do 400 00
Charles Camden, Trustee.....	19	2,000	do 800 00
Jackson Hart, Trustee.....	20	1,000	do 400 00
R. D. Lennox, Trustee.....	22	500	do 200 00
Daniel Gorham, Trustee.....	23	500	do 200 00
Theodore Greene, Trustee.....	24	1,000	do 400 00
Eugene L. Sullivan, Trust.....	25	2,000	do 800 00
Walter Mead, Trustee.....	26	500	not issued 200 00
J. H. Fish, Trustee.....	27	500	do 200 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee.....	28	1,000	do 400 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee.....	29	1,000	do 400 00
T. E. Frasier, Trustee.....	30	1,000	do 400 00
L. C. Kelly, Trustee.....	31	1,000	do 400 00
Chas. S. Neal, Trustee.....	32	5	do 2 00
Wm. F. Flick, Trustee.....	33	5	do 2 00
Chas. H. Hopkins, Trustee.....	34	5	do 2 00
Wm. Wilson, Trustee.....	35	5	do 2 00
Benj. Teal, Trustee.....	36	5	do 2 00
F. C. Kiel, Trustee.....	52	1,000	do 400 00
F. C. Kiel, Trustee.....	53	1,000	do 400 00
Wm. Heick, Trustee.....	54	1,000	do 400 00
Wm. Heick, Trustee.....	55	1,000	do 400 00
F. M. Pixley, Trustee.....	56	1,000	not issued 400 00
John F. Baxter, Trustee.....	57	3,000	do 1,200 00
David S. Sherman, Trust.....	58	3,000	do 1,200 00
W. H. Campbell, Trustee.....	59	1,000	do 400 00
R. W. Bourke, Trustee.....	61	500	do 200 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee.....	60	500	do 200 00
Geo. E. Barnes, Trustee.....	62	200	do 80 00
Wm. Wilson, Trustee.....	63	100	do 40 00
L. E. Crane, Trustee.....	64	50	do 20 00
S. B. Herriman, Trustee.....	65	50	do 20 00
A. P. Banton, Trustee.....	66	50	do 20 00
W. W. Glazier, Trustee.....	67	50	not issued 20 00
H. W. Newbauer, Trustee.....	80	250	do 100 00
L. Hafen, Trustee.....	81	250	do 100 00
Theodore Wagner, Trustee.....	85	1,000	do 400 00
Matthew Clark, Trustee.....	103	500	do 200 00
Jas. S. Porteous, Trustee.....	110	500	do 200 00
Thos. Legg, Trustee.....	104	100	do 40 00

And in accordance with law, and an order of the Board of Directors made on the fifteenth day of August, 1882, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary will be sold at public auction at the company's office,
No. 666 Montgomery Street, Room 5, San Francisco, California, on Monday, the ninth day of October, 1882, at the hour of one o'clock p. m. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of sale, and the expenses of the sale.
C. M. OAKLEY,
Office—Room 5, Sherman Building, No.
Street, San Francisco, California.

RAMBLING WORDS.

A little maid of ten summers or so, who is a dear little friend of mine, and who does me the honor to confide in me occasionally on that formidable subject—her education—told me the other day that she had been advised to look up the definitions of two words each day, and that for three days she had pursued the plan, and intended to continue it unendingly. We gravely counted the number of words that she will have mastered at the end of a year, and when I said, "So much of itself will be quite a vocabulary," I foresaw by the responding gleam in her eye a new raid upon the dictionary. What a dear old book it is, that thick, cumbersome, unhandy dictionary, that facile quick interpreter, that key to a word-locked thought. How a word or a sentence will pursue and haunt one at times, especially if it be out of the beaten track. Ever since I read the powerful closing chapters of "A Modern Instance," one day last week, that curiously worded picture of old Squire Gaylord, waiting to fasten his grip upon his defaulting son-in-law's throat, seems to stand out before me with vivid distinctness:

"He looked down mechanically at his withered hands, lean and yellow, like the talons of a bird, and lifted his accipitral profile with a predatory alertness."

Does not his hawk-like beak seem to stand out of the very page itself as one reads? By the way, how curious it is that when the human mind does resemble a bird, it is always a bird of prey. Who knows a yellow-plumaged canary, or a Japanese love-bird, or even the melancholy brooding snipe, among his acquaintance? Any one will find you a hawk, or a parrot, or half a hundred blackbirds—for the black-bird, I believe, is edible only in Mother Goose land, and his salient features, if one may speak gravely of a bird's features, are reproduced perhaps more often than any other of the feathered tribe in the human face.

Never get into the habit of tracing these animal resemblances in your friends' faces. It will follow you as iterantly and persistently as Mark Twain's "Punch in the presence of the passenger," and give you serious discomfort. I know a little woman—a pretty one, too—who always reminds me irresistibly of a pink-eyed white rabbit, and another who always seems as if she ought to be a gold fish, floating in a pond. She might be any other kind of a fish, for the piscatorial features are not various, but for a certain predilection she has for yellow and jewels, and for long-trained dresses, even in these days of trottoirs, which always suggest the finny sweep of a mermaid's tail. Then, too, I know a camel. She has not only the swinging amble of the ship of the desert, but the quaint placidity of expression and the mammoth pout of the lower lip. I know a little Jersey cow—slender-hoofed, dainty and sleek, with the soft, pathetic eye of the little island mammal. I meet occasionally a little, snarling, Japanese pug. And I have a little private theory of my own, that women who look like dogs look always like small dogs, and that while some mean, little men may look like mean, little dogs, the resemblance to the nobler class of these noble brutes is generally found in the male countenance. Every one knows some one who looks like a weasel, and I have in my mind's eye at this moment a man who, I am sure, in a previous state of existence was a coyote. I have never looked a coyote full in the face, and I know him best from Bret Harte's description of him, as

"Lop-eared and large-jointed, but ever alway a thoroughly vagabond outcast in gray."

But my friend has a curious clasp to his creaking jaw, which always seems to mean coyote.

"Where'er I take my walks abroad," I meet a grave and dignified gentleman of fifty years or so, with a face as truly that of an eagle as if it had been transfixed upon a beautiful American coin. He has the "accipitral profile," but not the "predatory alertness" of Squire Gaylord; for there he birds of prey and birds of prey. "I do not like this volley of unfamiliar words," cries one whom, in the ardor of enthusiasm, I have set to reading this chapter; but being put to it he can not suggest a better, for the American novelist, like George Eliot, has the rare gift of exact diction. I remember making my first acquaintance with the word "jeune" in one of George Eliot's books. I resented it as something strange and pedantic, after the barbarous fashion we all have of resenting strange things, and cast about for the simpler word that a lesser writer might have used, and found nothing that would fit so well. There is a species of fascination in wading through synonyms, and discovering the delicate, exact points of difference which a finely attuned understanding recognizes so easily, and a rich pleasure in listening to the ring of a well-rounded sentence. "I am eighty years old," says the octogenarian, in commonplace converse; "the century was but two years old when I was born," says Victor Hugo, in the lordly pride of having Time keep step with him. Language is stretched to its uttermost in the inflated style of the day, whether in the paragraphs of the modern humorist or the conversation of the modern belle, until at last, like a rubber cord whose tension is spent, there is no rebound. "Was he astonished?" I heard one young woman ask another the day, apropos of something. "Astonished?" cries my lady respondent. "Astonished? Why, every hair of his head stood straight up in the air, and his eyes simply popped out of his head and rolled down on his cheeks." The news of this remarkable physical metamorphosis was received without a movement of surprise on the part of the questioner, and whether the man's eyes thus forcibly ejected by simple amaze were ever put back again, or whether he goes about with them dangling in this painful but utterly absurd manner, the deponent said not.

In the midst of this rash of superlatives which has broken out all over the land, one comes across a moving essay now and then upon the subject of simplicity; and it does indeed seem that it might be a very beautiful thing in the abstract. But there are some curious departures made, even in this line. Take the play-bills, which are what catch the eye most frequently, perhaps, owing to the impromptu genius of the lithographer. Within the fortnight they have been constantly announcing the coming of "Our Shipmates." A good title this—two words with a long array of ideas. It suggests the close companionship of ship-life, where, walking one narrow deck, sleeping under the same timbers, and eating from the same swinging board, strangers grow into close communion—sometimes into friendship and love—and the common life of the ship is ever after a bond between them. It calls up the sailor's saying: "A messmate before a shipmate, a shipmate before a sailor, and a sailor before a dog"—a curious and unexplained conclusion which the hriest old tar will tell you he does not understand. It suggests subtly one of those strong, invisible bonds which make life beautiful, romantic, and livable. But, alas! many a man's inspiration has stopped at the title of his hook or his play, and just here seems to have stopped the inspiration of "Old Shipmates."

Beneath this striking title has appeared this:

"FRANK MORDAUNT,
(An Actor.)"

One can almost follow the train of thought which led the player to announce himself thus simply. It is intended to be in contradistinction to the hazing which makes of a man "a world-renowned versatile comedian," or "the distinguished character actor," or "the famous specialty artist, So-and-so." But the word, out of its very simplicity, has an aggressive and arrogant look, if you choose to translate it so. It seems to say, "All who have gone before were mere pretenders, huffoons, harlequins, what you will; but I am an actor." Unfortunately for the pith and the point of it, this modest actor seems to hug his opinion in lordly solitude.

Rather a good name, that of his in the play, Captain Marline Weatherage. It has not only a flavor of the salt sea, but a touch of the custom in old English comedy, of putting an appropriate spice of meaning in a character's name. Would Mrs. Malaprop have ever become traditional, and stood sponsor to all the malapropisms ever since, had her name been Mrs. Smith, or Mrs. Brown? Or would Lydia Languish, or Sir Lucius O'Trigger, or Sir Anthony Absolute, have ever left more than a faint water-mark on the pages of the annals of the drama had not judicious sponsors stood over their christening font?

"What do you read?" asks Polonius, and Hamlet makes answer, "Words, words, words!" A simple enough but a pregnant reply. What thousands there are of them, and yet if an unfamiliar one starts up among them how quickly we recognize it, how promptly we challenge it till the dictionary establishes its right, how long it takes it to nestle with the ease of habit among the old but unworn ones which have served us long and well. And yet when a new word or expression does get afloat, it is amusing to follow its wanderings. It is like one properly accredited in the haut ton. It needs but the initial step of recognition by one of the leaders, and it is in the swim. When a distinguished electrician found it necessary to make a new word, and cast "telegram" upon an aggressive world, it had a hard time to clamber into its place among the nouns, but perches there now as contentedly as if it were not a new-born thing of yesterday.

Not long ago a successful novelist, Miss Braddon, perhaps, took occasion to permit her heroine's voice to "trail off into a sigh." Immediately every female novelist in England set her heroines' voices to trailing off into sobs, or sighs, or silence, or whatever voices can trail off into, till heroines' voices became ridiculously queue-like, and some one started them to breaking off abruptly once more.

To return to the beginning, as one does when wandering through a maze, I hope that I may meet my little maid when she is a woman grown. She has a directness of purpose and an eager thirst for knowledge which make me think that she will keep to those two words a day for a long time to come, and when she shall be able to choose her words as deftly as an artist in mosaics his stones, what rich, strong, sonorous English will hers be.

On last Saturday evening "Our Orchestra," a musical association of amateurs, gave the first of a series of entertainments which take place this season. The orchestra is under the direction of Professor Van der Mehden. The programme was short, but well selected, and won much applause.

At Haverly's California Theatre, Frank Mordaunt in "Our Shipmates" has been holding the boards this week. The minstrels at the Standard Theatre have drawn crowded houses, and Emerson and Reed in their new roles excite prolonged mirth.

Obscure Intimations.

"E. R."—Zulano will take pleasure in complying with your very modest request.
"Cavalier's Sword," F. L. W.—Subject good, but poorly wrought out. MS. awaits your disposal.
"Carson."—Sketches of prominent citizens of Nevada would not prove of interest to our readers.
"Bachelor Tom's Fate," P. V. G.—Declined. MS. awaits your disposal.
"Type-writer."—You think we could be "induced to modify our statements regarding the best machine in use"? Well, we'll sing the praises of yours for the same rate the other man paid—twenty-five cents a line. Write to the business manager.

CCXLIX.—Bill of Fare for Six Persons—Sunday
October 8.
Celery Soup.
Cantaloupe.
Fried Clams.
Ducks. Mashed Potatoes.
Egg-plant. Carrots stewed. French style.
Roast Pork, Apple Sauce.
Lettuce.
Strawberries and Whipped Cream. Orange Cake.
Peaches, Figs, Grapes, Pears, Plums, and Apples.
CELERY SOUP.—Boil a small cup of rice till tender in three pints of milk, (or two pints of milk and one of cream,) rub through a sieve, add one quart of veal stock, salt, cayenne, and three heads of celery, grated fine.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

A professional interviewer called on Colonel Haverly recently, and said: "Tell me one thing; is it true that you have engaged Queen Victoria to star in America as Rosalind in 'As You Like It,' against Mrs. Langtry." The colonel never flinched. "Good heavens!" he cried; "has Gladstone given me away?"

Olive Logan relates that Connie Gilchrist, a handsome and very young hurlesque actress, at a fashionable London theatre—the Gaiety—is hissed nearly every evening, not because her acting is not pleasing, but in consequence of a scandal in which she is involved.

"It is said," observes the Hour, "that Mrs. Langtry, for her success in this country, will depend upon Rosalind in 'As You Like It,' quite as much as upon any other rôle. While it would be extremely improper to speak of this comedy so irreverently as to denominate it merely a 'leg piece,' framed especially to display the locomotive apparatus of the principal actress, we doubt much whether it would retain its popularity if the impersonator of Rosalind did not make the utmost use of the hybrid opportunities provided. No actress whom we ever saw so succeeded in representing this phenomenal stage-boy as to cause the slightest illusion in an audience, and we therefore deem it quite impossible that the tender Orlando, his eyes sharpened by love, could have been deceived."

Fanny Davenport's acting seems to please the London critics in varying degrees, but her gorgeous dresses, in a character not calling for such a display, give offense. "American ladies must have a poor opinion of English taste," says Truth, "if they imagine that the jewel case and the milliner's trunk are the necessary passports to popularity in this country and to success upon the stage." Mrs. W. J. Florence gets a rebuke from the same writer. "We heard of nothing but the dresses of Mrs. Florence. She moved about with the trunks of an empress, and in each part she played she had a change of dress for every act. The result was not encouraging; for Mrs. Florence was ridiculously overdressed. I fear that this overdressing is a constitutional defect in America; it is glaringly vulgar when imported to England. When Sarah Bernhardt visited that country, we heard far more about her wardrobe than her talent."

Clara Belle says concerning Théo's New York engagement: "In the opera—Offenbach's 'Madame l'Archiduc'—the effeminate Captain of the Guards, to whom the saucy heroine sings a song of mocking ridicule on account of his lack of a moustache and other manly attributes, was delightful. It was played by a pretty, delicate girl, a daughter of Théo. The charming Mademoiselle Boisson, who was making her first appearance on any stage, was truly the daughter of the lively prima donna. The exigencies of the stage often bring together persons as lovers whose private relations are the same, or curiously the reverse, or in some other way such as to give the posted spectator a special interest; but I never before saw a daughter making love to her mother. And what was more incongruous in this odd case, the young one's intentions were not strictly honorable. Thought I to myself: 'Have a care, audacious chap, or mamma will take off her slipper, and remind you of other days.' I studied Théo's clothes closely, by the way, because I had been told that they were designed and fitted by her husband, who is a tailor in Paris. I wonder what are a man's reflections while making clothes intended to show his own wife's form alluringly to the public. One of her dresses was shortened to her calves; another had only a single thickness of satin in the narrow skirt, so that the gestures which she made with her legs were brought into prominence; and a third left her arms and bosom bare. Yet they were no worse than the average of the stage or ball-room. They were handsome in fit and material, though not astonishingly so. The other women of the company, though direct from the Mecca of the fashion world, and personating characters who might be supposed to wear the very best, could not compare in costuming with the American women in the audience before them. A traveling dress worn by a duchess hadn't a bit of style about it, being a hideous, ill-fitting thing of drah mohair and green velvet."

The Exhibition of Keith's Pictures.

EDITORS ARGONAUT: The collection of Keith's pictures and sketches, now on free exhibition at the rooms of the Art Association, is remarkable in many ways. It reflects, in the first place, the wide range of the artist's interest in every aspect of California scenery. Keith has explored the Sierra from Mount Whitney to Mount Shasta, clambering over the living glacier of Mount Lyell, descending, for long sojourns, into Yosemite, and mounting again to the calm heights where Donner Lake and Tahoe are set like sapphires in the crown of the Sierra. The Coast Range, also, has been fully traversed by him, from Clear Lake on the north to Monterey on the south; and his works give evidence of many a week spent busily among the solemn redwoods, in the volcanic country around Clear Lake, in cool retreats on Russian River, close to the sunny valleys of Napa, within sight of Tamalpais and the bay, looking down from the mountains around Santa Cruz upon the deep blue of the ocean, or near some picturesque old mission of the Spanish fathers. It is noticeable, too, that in each of these perfectly distinct spheres of natural facts—the Alpine sublimity of the Sierra, the lesser grandeur of the Coast Range, the charm and beauty of the lower valleys—Keith is master of as many moods as Nature chooses to assume. Many an artist has made himself famous by sounding sweetly and oftentimes some single note of Nature's melody. It was thus with Corot—that lover of gray tone. But Keith seems to take as much delight in interpreting the sand-hills and the foggy, gray days of a San Francisco summer as he does in depicting the rich mosaic tone of autumnal tints for which New England is famous. Nowhere is Keith's keen native sense of color more splendidly manifest than in these sketches of New England. They are the revelation of the very life and spirit of New England scenery, and no one born in that part of the country can look at them without feeling himself restored to the scenes of his youth. Every one of them bears the unmistakable stamp of having been done face to face with nature. Very few of them have yet been used as subjects for pictures, and nothing but Keith's determination to devote himself hereafter almost wholly to California has made him willing to part with them. One of the most interesting parts of the collection, and full of novelty for the Californian public, are the sketches and pictures of the Columbia River and Puget Sound. The writer speaks from personal knowledge when he says the characteristics of the country are here depicted with great truth and feeling. Altogether, the exhibition is a high tribute to Keith's mature powers as an artist. There are but few artists in America who could show equal range of sympathy with nature, combined with equal technical skill of interpretation. Having personally attended several of the recent annual exhibitions of the Royal Academy in London, the writer has no hesitation in saying that had Keith chosen to be the interpreter of English, rather than of Californian, landscape, his rank among the most promising of British artists would have been very high. The pictures will remain on exhibition until next Thursday afternoon, when the sale begins.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 4, 1882.

In spite of the critics, who are severe upon the degeneration of Parisian taste, the wretches at the Folies-Bergères continue to draw nightly crowds of people who are of fair social status. One of the papers, in its severity, says these exercises are violent and gross, suited only to the tastes of the English, and unlike the classic wrestling of olden times, which displayed the grace and refinement of movement of demi-gods—by a pardonable slip, our confrere, however, writes beaute de demi-monde, instead of beaute de demi-dieu.

A LADY, FORMERLY PUPIL OF PROFESSOR DE FILIPPE, desires a few more pupils in Spanish and French; teaches by the same method. Address M. L., box 87, Oakland, Cal.

READ "THE PHYSICIAN OF THE FUTURE," IN "Popular Science Monthly" for September. It describes Drs. D. C. and Ellen D. Moore, the Sanitarian and Progressive Physicians of the Trall Sanitarium, 1029 Market Street, San Francisco.

—FLIES, ROACHES, BEDBUGS, RATS, MICE, CROWS, chipmunks, cleared out by "Rough on Rats." 15c.

USE SIBERIAN BALSAM IT CURES CATARRH AND ASTHMA.

.....ALSO,.....
CROUP, COUGHS, AND COLDS, AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF
THE BRONCHIAL TUBES AND PULMONARY ORGANS,
As well as the
DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS AND URINARY ORGANS.

The SIBERIAN BALSAM is a purely vegetable compound, and pronounced by all who have tried it to be the most effective remedy for the diseases above enumerated ever used by them. It has never failed when taken according to directions to give immediate relief and effect a permanent cure. It reaches the disease through the blood and removes the cause. Coughs and Colds, Sore Throats, and Hoarseness relieved at once and cured in from one to two days.

CLERGYMEN, PUBLIC SPEAKERS, ACTORS, AND VOCALISTS,

Affected with HOARSENESS, or LOSS OF VOICE, will find almost instantaneous relief from a single dose of SIBERIAN BALSAM.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

DEPOT, 415 MONTGOMERY STREET, . . . SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A FASHIONABLE MODISTE.

HER EXQUISITE TASTE IN MAKING COSTUMES.

Miss M. James, of No. 115 Kearny Street, over Keane Brothers', is one of the most painstaking and conscientious dressmakers in the city. She never tires of trying to please a customer, and she boasts of never disappointing a lady, or causing her to lose her time, which may be valuable, by waiting to be fitted. Miss James's long experience, as well as deep study, have marked her as the modiste par excellence, whom every lady should call upon and judge for herself before going elsewhere. The lady who wishes to be correctly costumed with as little trouble to herself as possible has only to go to Miss James, place herself entirely in her hands, indicating of course how much she wishes to invest upon a toilette and something near the style, and Miss James will quickly catch the idea, work upon it, and the customer receives her suit, which is a marvel of taste and beauty. When Miss James once secures a customer she never loses her again. This modiste also teaches the art of cutting and fitting, and has prepared many of her sister workers to set up dressmaking establishments of their own, both for this city and for the interior. Miss James is constantly receiving orders from the country, and as far north as Oregon. She has lately finished a bridal trousseau for a young lady, whose bridal dress will be described at no distant day.

— HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC BELTS, and appliances for the cure of nervous, painful, and debilitating diseases. Pamphlets, with full particulars, free. Address PULVERMACHER GALVANIC COMPANY, 513 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

— "SWEET CURING SEEDS" WAS THE translation of the name given to Ayer's Pills by a high mandarin of China, in his letter of acknowledgment and thanks to Dr. Ayer for having introduced them into the Celestial Empire—a very appropriate name! They are sweet, they cure, and are, therefore, the most profitable "seeds" a sick man can invest in.

— MUSICAL BOXES, PAILLARD & Co., 23 Dupont Street. Repairing done. Prices low.

— LADY READERS OF THE ARGONAUT WILL remember that the place to buy colognes, perfumery, toilet soaps, brushes, sponges, cosmetics, etc., is at the elegant and well-stocked store of James G. Steele & Co., Chemists and Apothecaries, 635 Market Street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

— Go to Bradley & Rulofson's, 429 Montgomery.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION EDITION WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY, JUST ISSUED.

Sold exclusively by subscription on installments.

EDWARD E. EITEL & CO.
Office, 147 Phelan Building, San Francisco.
GENERAL AGENTS.

FILIPPE'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES

SOUTHWEST CORNER OF BUSH.
PROF. DR. FILIPPE continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by his easy, practical method, saving months of study. Classes and private lessons. Apply from 3 to 5 or 7 to 8 p. m.

THE KEITH ART SALE.

On the afternoon and evening of THURSDAY, October 12th, at the Gallery of the San Francisco Art Association, 430 Pine Street, we will sell, by auction, a collection of Oil Paintings and Sketebes by WM. KEITH, comprising views in Maine, the White Mountains, and every phase of scenery of the mountains and valleys of California and Oregon. The pictures are now on view at the Gallery, 430 Pine Street, day and evening.

Catalogues at the Gallery, or will be sent to out-of-town purchasers by addressing the Auctioneers, or Snow & Co., 12 Post Street.

First Sale, Thursday, Oct 12, at 12 o'clock noon. Second and Closing Sale, same date, at 7:30 P. M.

EASTON & ELDRIDGE,
AUCTIONEERS.

JNO. LEVY & CO.

We have just received the finest line of French Mantel and Traveling Clocks in Bronze, Gilt Bronze and Enamel, ever exhibited in the city; also a choice selection of Fans and Opera-glasses, together with our already new and elegant stock of Diamonds and other Precious Gems, Fine Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware. We invite an inspection of our goods, it being no trouble to show them. Our prices are reasonable, and everything is marked in plain figures.

Visitors are welcome.

118 SUTTER STREET.

JUST OPENED

At 31 DUPONT STREET, opposite City of Paris, a NEW BOOK and STATIONERY STORE, with a complete stock of FINE BOOKS and an elegant assortment of FANCY STATIONERY and FANCY GOODS of latest styles.

F. BOEGLE.

(Also, 48 C Street, Virginia City.)

THE CALIFORNIA FURNITURE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Invite the public to visit their

WAREROOMS, 220 TO 226 BUSH STREET.

And inspect their

NEW GOODS

Which constitute

THE FINEST DISPLAY OF FURNITURE

Ever shown on this Coast, and which cannot be excelled for Variety and Beauty upon this Continent.

Bring your Friends along. The Rich can gratify their Tastes; the Poor can supply their Wants.

THE CALA. FURNITURE MFG CO., 220 TO 226 BUSH ST.

C. HERRMANN & CO.

HAVE INTRODUCED THE LARGEST STOCK OF

FALL-STYLE HATS

EVER SHOWN ON THIS COAST.

Call and examine them at

336 KEARNY STREET, NEAR PINE.

HOUSEKEEPERS!

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR GOODS AT AUCTION, but STORE THEM with H. WINDEL & CO., NO. 310 STOCKTON STREET. Furniture, Pianos, Household Goods, Paintings, Trunks, etc., well taken care of. We have three large, airy, brick buildings, and no rent to pay, and can store goods very moderate. Money advanced on goods at one-half per cent. per month. We guarantee against damage and moths, and can give references dating back 20 years.

— SKINNY MEN, "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia. $1, at druggists.

— REDDING'S RUSSIA SALVE IS AN INVALUABLE dressing for inflamed and sore joints. Price, 25c.

— MORSE HAS THE FINEST GALLERY IN THE world, 826 Market Street, (Phelan Block).

— Dr. E. O. COCHRANE, DENTIST, 850 MARKET cor. Stockton (over drug store.) Office hours, 9 to 5.

J. W. EVANS,
29 Post Street, San Francisco

"Dress Reform" CORSET,

Specially for Stout Figures, (worn with or without Straps,) by mail, $3.00. Send waist, hip, and bust measure. Also, Shoulder Braces, Union Under Flannels, Ladies' and Children's Comfort Waists, Bustles, Hose Supporters, etc. Send for Circular. Theonly Depot for these goods.

MRS. M. D. OBER & CO.
Boston Dress Reform,
326 Sutter Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Elegant Corset to Order for $4.

JENNIE E. MacGOWAN,
Dress and Cloak Maker,
428 Sutter Street.

Original designs, perfect work, and reasonable prices.

WEST'S NEW ELECTRIC BELT.—C. N. West's Electro-Medical Belts always have excelled all other electrical appliances. They have taken the premiums at all State Fairs. This new Belt excels every other that he has invented. Cures all diseases without medicine. Price, from $5.00 to $20.00. Warranted ten years. Patronized by the representative men and leading ladies of this and other States. Address or call on C. N. WEST, 652 Market Street, San Francisco.

J. R. COWEN. J. W. PORTER.
COWEN & PORTER,
FUNERAL DIRECTORS,
118 Geary Street, San Francisco,
OPPOSITE STARR-KING CHURCH.

BUTTERICK'S

Patterns—Fall and Winter Styles.

SEND STAMP FOR CATALOGUE.
AGENCY, 124 Post Street, San Francisco.

DO NOT SACRIFICE YOUR FURNITURE, PIANO, and HOUSEHOLD GOODS, at auction sales, while you are boarding or out of the city, but

STORE THEM,

As well as your Trunks and Paintings, with
J. H. MOTT & CO.,
647 Market St.,

Nucleus Block, Second Floor.
Large, airy brick building, with elevator. MONEY LOANED on valuable goods. Terms moderate.

J. M. LITCHFIELD & CO.
MERCHANT TAILORS,
And Dealers in Gents' Furnishing Goods,
415 MONTGOMERY STREET,
bet. California and Sacramento, San Francisco

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO. FINE JEWELRY,

Offer better inducements to purchasers of DIAMONDS, WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., than any other house in San Francisco. They have the Largest Stock, the Finest Assortment, and sell at Closer Prices. DIAMOND WORK and any other kind of Jewelry made to order at very low rates. All Goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

In the Sweet,
One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er:
In heaven above, where all is love,
The sleepers never snore.
—Oil City Blizzard.

Do You Abbeve?

Come to the balc., O maw, this minute!
Here's the process., and paw in it.
Oh, but it's mag.,
Taking the rag
Of every process. There's no way to thin it.
There they go, maw! And there is dear Gus.
Isn't he sweet? Oh, my, what a fuss!
And there are some men,
Looking perfectly splen.
On horses. Why didn't they go in a hus?
Oh, I'm so glad! I wish I could hol.
That would be wrong—in fact I would be fol.
I'll wait and I'll read
(Intellectual feed!)
All about the process. In the s'ciety col.
—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Apple Blossoms.

Our little Tom in the orchard strayed
Where bloomed the blossoms upon each limb;
One little Blossom bent down where he played
And breathed a fragrant kiss on him.
Our little Tom smiled a cunning smile
And merrily shook his curly head:
"I'll tackle you, Blossom, after a while,
When you grow to be an apple," he said.
The Blossom remarked: "'Tis a cold, cold day
When boys like you get away with me"
But the boy went carelessly on his way
While the Blossom chuckled with fiendish glee.
The days passed on, and the weeks passed on,
And the Blossom into an apple grew,
When along came Tom, and gobbled it down—
Skin, stem, and core, and the green seeds, too.
Our little Tommy has angel-wings,
And he flops around in the golden sky;
It's he presumed he sweetly sings
Of apple blossoms in the By-and-by.

In Summer Time.

Fair June, what joy the maiden takes;
In wandering through thy leafy brakes;
At tiny grass green snakes she quakes
And slightly screams.
The hold dry-goods clerk's stalwart arm
Slips round her, faint with dread alarm;
He stands a proof 'gainst threatening harm,
And of life in a tenement house, no servant, and your wife do the washing so as to manage to support a family on six dollars a week
Delighted dreams.
When apple blossoms scent the air
The small boy seeks the hullof's lair,
Returning thence with moistened hair
And telltale clothes.
The sad, fond mother lovingly
Receives her offspring o'er her knee;
The slipper falls full merrily.
With broad-gauge, double-riveted, no need to hit twice in the same place, eat your dinner off the mantel for a month
Resounding blows.

The Finding of Moses.

On Egypt's banks, contiguous to the Nile,
Great Pharaoh's daughter went to bathe in style;
And as she ran about to dry her skin,
She kicked the hulrush that hid Moses in.
At that event surprised, a while she stud
In silence gazing at the hoiling fluid;
Then, turning to her maids, she said, in accents mild,
"Blood an' agers, girls, which av yez owns the child?"
—From the Recollections of a Dublin Man.

[EDITORS ARGONAUT: The above, from the Argonaut
"Tuneful Liar" of August 20th, is not quite correct, as you will see from the appended original, published in Dublin in 1849. Yours, faithfully, H. D.
8 PALMERSTON VILLAS, DUBLIN, Sept. 10, 1882.]

"In Egypt's kingdom, upon the banks of Nile,
King Pharaoh's daughter went to bathe in style;
She tuk her dip, then walked upon the land;
To dry her royal pelt she ran about the strand;
A hulrush tripped her, whereupon she saw
A smilin' hahly in a wad of straw.
She tuk it up, and said, in accents mild,
"Tare an' agers, girls, which av yez owns the child?"

To a Defunct Goat.

Thou'rt lying cold and pale, O William Goat,
I see thee as thou art—as Walt Whitman would say—
Prone in mute death, stiff in thy shagginess;
And, since thou now so helpless and low list,
And canst not leap to sudden, harsh revenge,
I take the liberty of hring off
These faint few lines at thee, O Billy!
Thou hast been a Great Goat in thy time;
Bombarded hast thou the reckless small boy
With a most amazing homardment; thou
Likewise, hast ofttimes launched forth full tilt
Thy cheerful cranum at the old man, and made
Him realize that not by any means is life
An empty dream; assaulted, too, hast thou
The wild-eyed servant girl, high hoisting her
Into the pellucid air 'mid piercing shrieks
Of more than mortal agony—all, all
Have of thee had a taste: thou hast, Great Goat,
Not been partial.
Thou reignest a king
Among us, William, and thou hadst of room
E'en more than the afflicted lepers of old days;
Proud men saw thee and vanished like the wind;
Women beheld thee and split all the land
With screams dresome, what time themselves they made
Ex-ceeding-ly remote. They did not much admire
The appearance of thy frontispiece, O William Goat.
Sometimes, in truth, the small boy haved thine ire,
And sought to monkey round thy festive form,
But 'tis a fact that he was generally relected sky high for his pains.
But thou, O W. G. I ouldst not avail of all thy puissant self to butt Fell Death. Death is the Boss Butter—om Butville—don't you forget it, Billy,
—laid thee low,
—Times-Democrat.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,

For all the Purposes of a Family Physic,

CURING

Costiveness, Indigestion,
Jaundice, Dysentery, Dyspepsia, Foul Stomach and Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Piles, Rheumatism,
Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt
Rheum, Nervous Gout, Neuritis, as a Dinner Pill, and Purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organs into action, and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skillful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens, send certificates of cures performed, and of great benefits derived from these Pills.
They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take, and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PRACTICAL AND ANALYTICAL CHEMISTS.

Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicines.

ONE MILLION COPIES SOLD!

Everybody Wants It!

Everybody Needs It!

KNOW THYSELF.

he untold miseries that result from indiscretions in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, or Vitality impaired by too close attention to business, may be restored, and manhood regained.

Two hundred and fifty-eighth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings, 300 pages, more than 125 valuable prescriptions for all forms of diseases, acute and chronic, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, any one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in beautiful French cloth, embossed, full gilt. Price, only $1.25, by mail, already sealed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated sample, 6 cents. Send now.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published. There is nothing whatever that the married or single can either quire or wish to know but what is fully explained.—London Lancet.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION.

Is a marvel of art and beauty, warranted to be a better medical book in every sense than can be obtained elsewhere for double the price, or the money will be refunded in every instance.—Author.

N. E.—YOUNG AND MIDDLE-AGED MEN can save much time, suffering, and expense by reading the Science of Life, or conferring with the author, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Address
PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE,
OR W. H. PARKER, M. D.,
4 Bullfinch Street, Boston, Mass.

S. P. COLLINS & CO.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
dealers in Old London Brand Brandy, Port Wine,
Sherry, and all the choicest brands Champagne, Apple
Jack, Fiero, Arrack, Cordials, Liqueurs, etc. 320 MONT-GOMERY, and 511 CALIFORNIA STREETS, S. F.

PACIFIC BUREAU OF EDUCATION

Supplies (1) Teachers with desirable positions; (2) Colleges with Professors and T. tors; (3) Academies, Seminaries and Public Schools of every grade, and families, with competent Principals and Teachers; (4) Colleges, Seminaries,
Teachers' Institutes, and Lyceums with Lecturers. Circulars
and forms of application sent free by Myron H. Say-ago, Manager, in New Montgomery Street, S. F.

Hunyadi THE BEST AND CHEAPEST LAXATIVE. János

"THE RICHEST OF NATURAL APERIENT WATERS."

Baron Liebig.

"SPEEDY, SURE, & GENTLE."
Dr. Roberts, Univ. Coll. Hosp.,
London, England.

Ordinary Dose, a Wineglassful before breakfast.
Of all Druggists and Mineral Water Dealers.
NONE GENUINE BUT WITH A BLUE LABEL.

FOR SALE BY

RUHL BROTHERS

522 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

ASSESSMENTS AND DIVIDENDS.

OFFICE OF THE EUREKA CONsolidated Mining Company, Nevada Block, Room 37,
San Francisco, September 23, 1882.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the above named company will be held at the office of the company, Room 37, Nevada Block, San Francisco, on MONDAY, the sixteenth day of October, 1882, at one o'clock P. M., of said day, for the election of five Trustees to serve for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of such other business as may be presented.
W. W. TRAYLOR, Secretary.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 20th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 10) of Fifty Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309
Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the twenty-sixth day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery
Street, San Francisco, Cal.

POTOSI MINING COMPANY

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco,
California. Location of Works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of September, 1882, an assessment, (No. 9), of twenty-five cents per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid
on the eighteenth day of October, 1882, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Wednesday, the 8th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

W. E. DEAN, Secretary.
Office—Room 79, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery
Street, San Francisco, Cal.

CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of Works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 5th day of September, 1882, an assessment (No. 5) of Twenty-five (25) Cents per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, Room No. 23, Nevada Block, No.
309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid
on the 13th day of October, 1882, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Friday, the 10th day of November, 1882, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

C. P. GORDON, Secretary.
Office—Room 23, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery St.,
San Francisco, Cal.

DIVIDEND NOTICE—OFFICE OF

The Standard Consolidated Mining Company, San Francisco, Oct. 2, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above named Company, held this day, dividend No. 46, of Twenty-five cents per share was declared, payable on Thursday, October 12, 1882, at the office in this city, or at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in New York. WM. WILLIS, Secretary.
Office—Room No. 29, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

FINE

Suits, TAILORING Suits.

Immense Reductions at J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny St.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.

Cheapest House, J. S. HAND'S, 314 Kearny Street.

Suits, TAILORING Suits.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

Merchant Tailor and Clothier.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

J. S. HAND, 314 KEARNY ST.

LEGAL NOTICES.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

TIMOTHY NUNAN, Plaintiff,
vs.
SAM SING et al., Defendants.
Superior Court.
Department No. 3.
No. 6027.
Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 3, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1882, in the above-entitled action, wherein Timothy Nunan, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against Sam Sing, Sam Sing, and War Foo, defendants, on the 18th day of September, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book 2, of said Court, at page 178, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at the northwesterly corner of Clay Street and Waverly Place; running thence westerly along the northerly line of Clay Street thirty-nine (39) feet and one and a quarter (1 1/4) inches, more or less, to the east line of Cob-rains building; thence at right angles northerly thirty-six (36) feet four and a quarter (4 1/4) inches; thence at right angles easterly thirty-nine (39) feet one and a quarter (1 1/4) inches, more or less, to the west line of Waverly Place; and thence southerly, along said line of Waverly Place, thirty-six (36) feet four and a quarter (4 1/4) inches to place of beginning. Being part of lot No. 57 of the 50-varlot survey.
Together with all and singular the tenements, baredities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Public notice is hereby given that on Monday, the 23d day of October, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described premises, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interest and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder for gold coin of the United States.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
SAWYER & BALL, Attorneys for Plaintiff.
September 30, October 7, 14, 21.

SHERIFF'S SALE—EXECUTION.

J. BOAS, Plaintiff,
vs.
CONRAD HEROLD, et al.
Justice's Court.
No. 13,091.
Execution.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Execution issued out of the Justice's Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, duly attested on the 7th day of September, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled action, wherein J. Boas, the above named plaintiff, obtained a judgment against Conrad Herold, defendant, for the sum of $299.50, lawful money of the United States, with interest thereon and costs, etc., I have levied upon all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Conrad Herold, had on the 7th day of September, 1882, the day on which the heretofore described property was duly levied upon in the above entitled cause, or which he may have subsequently acquired in and to the heretofore described property situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, standing of record in the office of the County Recorder of said City and County in the name of Conrad Herold, and bounded and described as follows:
And thence at right angles southeasterly line of Welch Street, at a point distant 40 feet southeasterly from the southerly corner of Welch and Zoe streets; thence at right angles southeasterly 40 feet; thence at right angles southeasterly 20 feet; thence at right angles southeasterly 40 feet; thence at right angles southeasterly 20 feet; thence at right angles northwesterly 80 feet, to the southeasterly line of Welch Street;
and thence at right angles northeasterly along said southeasterly line of Welch Street 40 feet to the place of beginning. Being part of 100-vara lot No. 163.

Public notice is hereby given that on MONDAY, the 16th day of OCTOBER, 1882, at 12 o'clock noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, I will sell all the right, title, and interest which the said defendant, Conrad Herold, had on the 7th day of September, 1882, the day on which the above property was duly levied upon as aforesaid, or which he may be have subsequently acquired in and to the above described property, to the highest and best bidder, for gold coin of the United States.

JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.
JOS. ROSENTHAL, Att'y for Plff.
SAN FRANCISCO, September 23, 1882.
21-207-14

SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, AUCTIONEER.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

Stock, Real Estate, and General

AUCTIONEERS.

116 Montgomery Street,

Occidental Hotel Block.

SAN FRANCISCO

ONLY $8.

OUR NEW AMERICAN LEVER WATCH!

After months of labor and experiment, we have at last brought to perfection
A NEW Watch. It is a Key Winding Watch with the celebrated Anchor Lever Movement. Extension Balance. Fully jeweled.
They are made of the best material, and in the very best manner, so as to insure the highest quality. These Cases are made of our celebrated Composition metal known as Aluminum Gold. This metal has a sufficient amount of gold in the composition to give the watch a genuine gold appearance. Indeed it cannot be told from a genuine gold watch except by the best judges as the metal stands the acid test as well as pure gold. The cases are finely engraved or engine turned and are massive and strong and very handsome making it just the watch for Railroad men, Mechanics and all laboring men who require a good strong watch and an accurate timekeeper. For trade and special prices. It is superior to any watch ever before offered. The case can be sold readily for $15 and $20 each, and traded so as to realize double those amounts. Farmers as well as Agents, can handle these watches to advantage, as they can be readily exchanged for stock or goods. We send the watch free by registered mail on receipt of $2.00. Or we will send it C. O. D. on receipt of $1.00 on account; the balance can be paid at the express office. We also have very fine Aluminum Gold Chains at $1.00 each. Result! Satisfaction. 50 cents. We have hundreds of testimonials, but have room for only two.

Hot Springs, Ark., June 3d, 1882.
WORLD MANUFACTURING CO. Gents.—The New American Aluminum
Gold Watch I ordered of you some time ago. I received it yesterday, and I am so well pleased with it that I enclose receipt, and I am so well pleased with it that I enclose red bars. P. O. order, on account, for which please forward by express C. O. D. for balance, has more of the same style with chains to match. Respectfully, Charles Taylor.

Leavenworth, Kan., Aug. 7th, 1882.
WORLD MANUFACTURING CO. Gents.—The Aluminum Gold American Lever Watch purchased from your firm has proved a good time-keeper, and gives perfect satisfaction. Enclosed find order for two more, same style. Yours, G. F. ECKERT.

Send all orders to WORLD MANUFACTURING CO. C.
122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is seldom that we meet with an article that so fully corresponds with its advertised good qualities as does the New American Lever Watch. It has the advantage of being made of that precious metal Aluminum Gold; its works are of the best make, and the general style of the case rank it with the best Watches made anywhere. We recommend it to our readers as a Watch that will give entire satisfaction.

R. H. McDonald,
President,
San Francisco,
Cal.

PACIFIC BANK
Established
1863.
Capital Stock
$1,000,000.00
Surplus 460,800.70

San Francisco, Cal., July 1, 1882.
We take pleasure in presenting for your consideration the following Thirty-eighth Semi-Annual Statement of the condition of this Bank:

RESOURCES.
Bank Premises.....	$150,000 00
Other Real Estate.....	12,825 35
United States Bonds.....	629,507 60
Land Association Stock.....	15,121 55
Loans and Discounts.....	1,785,000 20
Due from Banks.....	527,279 09
Money on hand.....	632,365 30
LIABILITIES.	$3,752,099 09
Capital paid up.....	$1,000,000 00
Surplus.....	460,800 70
Due Depositors.....	1,953,672 80
Due Banks.....	337,491 09
Dividends unpaid.....	134 50
	$3,752,099 09

This Bank has special facilities for doing all kinds of banking business.

NEW ENGLAND BAKING POWDER

NO Alum
Flour
Starch
Ammonia
Phosphates
Tartaric Acid

Cream Tartar and Bi-Carb. Soda

NOTHING ELSE

Newton Bros. & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO

Bound Volumes of the "Argonaut,"

From Vol. 1 to Vol. 10, inclusive.

ANY ONE CAN BE ACCOMMODATED with the Bound Volumes from the commencement by applying at the Business Office, 522 California Street.

JOHN MIDDLETON,
COAL DEALER,

10 POST STREET,

.....AND.....

718 SANSOME STREET.

Coal at Lowest Market Rates.

LOUIS BRAVERMAN & CO.

(Successors to BRAVERMAN & LEVY.)

Manufacturers of FINE JEWELRY, and Importers of WATCHES, DIAMONDS, and other PRECIOUS STONES, STERLING SILVERWARE, and FRENCH CLOCKS.

Keep the best assortment and sell at LOWER PRICES than any house in this city.

119 MONTGOMERY STREET.

PIANOS

HENRY F. MILLER, OF BOSTON,
HEMME & LONG, OF SAN FRANCISCO,
GROVESTEEN & FULLER, OF NEW YORK,
TAYLOR & FARLEY ORGANS.
WOODWORTH, SCHELL & CO.,
Sole Agents, 105 Stockton Street, San Francisco.
PIANOS TO RENT.

FIREMAN'S FUND

INSURANCE COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL, $750,000
ASSETS, DECEMBER 31, 1881, $1,240,000

D. J. STAPLES, President.

WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Secretary.

ALPHEUS BULL, Vice-President.

E. W. CARPENTER, Asst. Secretary.

AGENTS IN ALL PRINCIPAL LOCALITIES.

TOWER'S CELEBRATED
OIL CLOTHING
WATER-PROOF AND NON-COMBUSTIBLE.

MOUNT VERNON CO.'S DUCK,
ALL WIDTHS AND WEIGHTS,
RUSSEL MANUFACTURING CO.'S SOLID COTTON BELTING
BLACK AND WHITE.

E. DETRICK & CO., SOLE AGENTS,
Bags, Tents, Hose, Twines—108-112 Market and 5-9 California Streets.

A NOVELTY IN SAUCE!
MONTSERRAT
LIME FRUIT JUICE SAUCE.

FINEST TABLE SAUCE IN THE MARKET FOR ROAST MEATS, STEAKS, FISH, CURRIES, GAME, ETC., ETC.

We take great pleasure in recommending the above Sauce to the public for not only its wholesomeness, being made from pure MONTSERRAT (W.I. Island) Lime Fruit Juice, but for its delicacy of flavor, which makes it superior to any Sauce ever offered in this market.

LOWENTHAL, LIVINGSTON & CO., Importers and Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.
FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—OFFICE OF
the Silver King Mining Company, San Francisco, Oct. 3, 1882.—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the above-named Company held this day, a Dividend (No. 34) of Twenty-five Cents (25c.) per share was declared, payable on Monday, October 16, 1882, at the office of the Company, Room 19, 325 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California. Transfer books will close Oct. 10, 1882, at 3 P. M. JOSEPH NASH, Sec.

REGULAR REPUBLICAN NOMINEE

FOR CONGRESS,

From the First District,

HON. PAUL NEUMANN.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me

RUPTURE Cured. Greatest Invention of the age. PIERCE & SON 704 Sac St., San Fran. Cal.

OREGON IMPROVEMENT CO.

CUMBERLAND COAL,

LEHIGH LUMP and EGG COAL,

AT WHOLESALE.

SEATTLE COAL,

At Reduced Rates for Domestic and Steam Use.

MAIN OFFICE:

210 BATTERY STREET,
San Francisco.

DEPOTS:

Beale Street Wharf, San Francisco.
Foster's Wharf Oakland.

ICHI BAN,
22 AND 24 GEARY STREET

We are anxious to impress on the minds of the public the fact that ICHI BAN is a FREE EXHIBITION, and that all are welcome to visit it every day or evening of the week, without making a purchase. There is always something new. Sole agents for the AUTOPHONE.

The Argonaut is printed with Shattuck & Fletcher's ink.

NATURAL CHAMPAGNE
DRY AND EXTRA DRY

Arpad Haraszthy & Co.
530 WASHINGTON ST. S.F. CAL.

N. B.—Examine the cork.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

E. R. THOMASON, Plaintiff, vs. PATRICK WARD, Defendant.

Superior Court, Department No. 10, No. 622.

Order of Sale and Decree of Lien and Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN

Order of Sale and Decree of Lien and Sale issued out of the Superior Court, Department No. 10, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on the 23d day of September, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled action, wherein E. R. THOMASON, the above named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree of lien and sale against PATRICK WARD, defendant, on the 5th day of September, A. D. 1882, which said judgment and decree was, on the 13th day of September, A. D. 1882, recorded in Judgment Book 1, of said court, at page 376, I am commanded to sell all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Henry Street, distant one hundred feet easterly from the northeasterly corner of Henry and Castro streets; thence easterly along said line of Henry Street, twenty-six feet; thence at a right angle northerly one hundred and fifteen feet; thence at a right angle westerly twenty-six feet; and thence at a right angle southerly one hundred and fifteen feet to the point of commencement. Being designated on said Assessment and Diagram as Lot No. 2.

Public notice is hereby given that on MONDAY, THE THIRTIETH DAY OF OCTOBER, A. D. 1882, at twelve o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Old City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of lien and sale, sell the above described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise sufficient to satisfy said judgment, with interests and costs, etc., to the highest and best bidder for gold coin of the United States.

San Francisco, October 7, 1882. JOHN SEDGWICK, Sheriff.

J. C. BATES, Attorney for Plaintiff.

October 7, 14, 21, 28.

ART-PAINTED, PLAIN and GLAZED

TILES

For Decorations.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.
110 to 118 Battery Street.

DRINK FALK'S MILWAUKEE BEER.

The Argonaut.

VOL. XI. NO. 16.

SAN FRANCISCO, OCTOBER 14, 1882.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

A HELPMET FOR HIM.

By Philip Shirley.

"Hugh, who's this?"
"What in the world have you got hold of?"
"Photograph of a young woman with a parasol, holding her head down, and looking at the audience through her bangs."
"I haven't any picture of a parasol holding its head down, and so forth."
"Fiddlestrings! Don't be hypercritical. Who is the damsel?"
"Look on the back. I generally label them."
"You've labeled this extensively: 'Gypsy,' 'Gypsy,' 'Gypsy,' and a lot of French:

*Toi, lumière et couleur,
Explosion de chaleur
Dans ma noire Sibirie! "*

"Oh, damn! Did I keep that? Well, stare at it now that you've found it, and then poke it back where you got it from, for heaven's sake."

"I say, she's rather youthful to cause such an 'explosion de chaleur'—I retain the expression—in a man of your years and dignity. Who is she?"

"You wouldn't believe me if I told you."

"Tax my credulity so far?"

"That is a picture of my wife."

"Bosh! You never were married."

"Didn't I tell you you wouldn't believe me?"

"No; but really, you know— Oh, come, no fooling! Do you mean sincerely and earnestly that—pshaw! It couldn't be, and nobody know it. Does mother know it?"

"Scarcely."

"Well, does anybody know it?"

"You know it."

"Any one else?"

"Near a whole city full."

"How do you mean? Where's the girl—young lady?"

"In her grave."

"Was she pretty?"

"Just as you see her there. Not a regular temptation of St. Anthony."

"Tell me all about it."

"You're too young, you villain! Give me that pillow. It's too hot to fight. You give it to me."

"Oh, you would call me young! I'll crack your meerscham. I'll disfigure your Bouguereau. I'll throw your novel out the window!"

"Thereby proving yourself a venerable, sedate— See here, if you'll give me that pillow, I'll tell you all about my—that photograph."

"All right! Go ahead."

"I didn't hargain to get it full in the face; however, I pardon an outburst of hoyish buoyancy. Now, what do you wish to know?"

"Your career as Monsieur le Mari."

"Career! I was married just two months. But I shall not require you to pump for the story; I shall a plain, unvarnished tale deliver. From my earliest childhood I have been the slave of a misgiving tendency—the unconquerable desire, which attacks me periodically, to escape from the people with whom I am living, and to go off and bury myself in unearthly, out-of-the-way places; to sever all connection with the world I belong to, and refresh myself with a draught of novelty, as it were. Nervous figure! It does me good, and anon I turn up where I am due, brisk and shining, in trim to do battle with the commonplace again. The need, however, is none the less to be deplored; it shows something radically wrong in a man when he lacks steadfastness to continue—I see you are not attending, which pains me, as I was speaking for your good. When I was your age—that is, two years older—I came into my property. Heavens and earth, what a little ass I made of myself! Wild? The regulation hawk is an antique feather-duster compared; for know, thou noble youth, that I had no elder brother, like some ungrateful urchins, to see that I took my fling by mild degrees, so that the giddy world should not burst upon my astonished gaze in a too dazzling ensemble, but I was, as it were, an only son left with an only mother—for you were a papoose in those days—and I received the bringing up of the Maiden. Not the American, Henry James maiden, but the French maiden, the Chinese maiden, such was my immaculate seclusion—seclusion being my mamma's safeguard against the temptations of life for her boy. I dreamed dreams and saw visions as I sat reading Walter Scott to my adored parent, in the sweet domestic calm of my 'evenings at home,' and when I was legally free and in funds, I made — use of my liberty and my means. I was about to make use of a slang expression, also, but did not. Admire my moderation. Now this riot was wrong. But, marry, how was it wrong? Because it undermined brother's constitution, and made him a pale wreck, to whom French cooking became a terror, and late hours suicide; and still there was found no glorious strength of will in brother to check his mad career, and pull up in time, and be a good boy, at least until the machine had had rest and was ready to begin over again. This lasted a year, when, suddenly, out of the clouds came the longing to cut the whole thing, and plunge into the wilds. Not because I was sick and exhausted, not because I was in debt, not because I was in a bad scrape with—well, with a woman, as usual, though all these things were thus; but because I positively loathed the familiarity of the things around me, and 'e'en for change of scene'—but Byron is out of fashion. It was keen joy to me to imagine my old cronies saying: 'What's become of him?' 'Who's seen him?' etc. I had a vague idea of where I was going, and I went there. I shall not tell you where it is, but it is the countryest country you ever tried to imagine, and in the loneliest, saddest, wildest place in it was the cottage I occupied. A man and his wife lived there; queer specimens, who reciprocated this my estimate of them, and whose simultaneous 'Well, I'll be gull-durned!' when I first appeared in knickerhockers, and a 'three-seamer,' was the richest thing I ever heard off the stage. When I began to get stronger, and offered to help the old man float his logs down the flume, he began to think my lunacy might be turned to account.

"There are two things which I adore—a bridge of any description, and a woman looking out of a window. The more rustic the bridge and the wider the stream it spans, the prettier the woman and the more he-creepered the window, of course the intenser my flame; but I adore these things even at a low degree of loveliness. I must add one thing more—the whirr of wings; but that is neither here nor there, while the bridge and the window belong to my tale. There was a rushing, gushing, hoiling, gurgling little stream about half a mile from the cottage, and there was a stiff, squarely built, practical bridge over it, part of a road to the distant town, and there I used to stand for an hour at a time, watching the stream and the scarfs of haze in the redwoods.

"One morning the old man did not breakfast with us, and when I asked his wife where he was, her laconic response was: 'Gone for the gal.' Supposing it was either his daughter or a female servant, I inquired no further, and spent the day wandering over the hills. In the evening I went to stand on my favorite bridge. Presently plod, plod, came horses' feet, puffing up the fine, white dust, and creak, creak, the wagon. The old man was driving, and by his side sat a little girl with a dark, little face, and a civilized traveling dress.

"She looked full into my eyes with singular frankness, as she drove by, and blushed so vividly that I knew she was not a little girl after all, but a young lady; and what in the name of prudence was she doing out here in the mountains? I slowly followed the wagon to the house.

"The young lady supped with us, but was very silent. Once, quite unconsciously it seemed, she pressed her hand hard upon her breast and sighed to the depths of her lungs. Our landlord and lady said no word to render our situation less embarrassing; so, although we caught each other's eyes sometimes, we continued strangers. I went off for another stroll after supper, and, coming back about nine o'clock, stopped in front of the door to finish a cigar. Some one above me said:

"'Look up.'"

"I obeyed, and there was 'the gal' leaning out of the window.

"'Come down,' said I.

"She didn't dare, because the old people had just gone to bed, and would hear her; she advised me to climb up to her. We had some brilliant conversation about elopements, and said good-night. The next morning at breakfast we conversed as if we had known each other for years, and went off to walk like brother and sister.

"Our talk was aggressively personal. I asked her bluntly what brought her to the cottage, and she told me that her father had married a new wife, who hated her and who had managed to send her away.

"'But not to this place,' I insisted.

"'No, to the town,' she said; but it was hateful and lonely there, and she knew a servant of her father's had married and was living somewhere in that country, and she had succeeded in getting a letter to the woman, who had consented to take charge of her.

"'But this is lonelier than the town,' said I.

"'Yes—but—' Another vivid blush.

"I teased her to tell me what ailed the town, and it appeared that an objectionable man was there, who was in love with her, and of whom she was becoming afraid. I asked her if in time she would become afraid of me, and run still farther into the woods. She said no, because she knew I was in love with some one else.

"'That's true,' said I. 'And you—aren't you in love with some one else?'"

"'Some one!' she cried, with her deep laugh. 'I'm so in love with three boys at home that I am nearly distracted. That's the reason my father was willing I should go away. I went everywhere with them. I'm not good, you know; I'm bad, just as bad as I can be.' Then she pouted, and looked at me as she looks in that picture.

"'What makes you so bad?' I asked.

"'Because my skin is so dark,' said she, promptly. 'If I was fair, like you, I'd be a Christian girl; but as it is, I don't care for anything.'

"She had been, to say the least of it, gay. The adventures she had been through with those youths, her admirers, made my hair rise, while the naive way in which she told it all, always taking the blame herself, and saying, like Topsy,

'I's so wicked,' half redeemed the tales; but the pity of it, Iago, the pity of it! Before I knew it, I was deeply, uncontrollably in love with her. She was so easy to love, as it were; it all came about so naturally, small fire-brand that she was! She seemed to love her little life out, always saying that she didn't care if she never saw me again, and drawing remarkable pictures of how she would lacerate my heart by her love affairs with other men if the occasion ever presented itself; but as long as we were in the backwoods I thought I could afford to laugh. Sometimes when I was tired, and quiet, and cross, I used to say: 'Gypsy, Gypsy, you are a very rapid maiden;' and then she would be sad and still all day. She was an intrepid rider, and when she tore up hill and down dale at a hand-gallop, without drawing rein, woman fashion, she really brought my heart into my mouth.

"'You'll kill yourself, some day,' said I, angrily.

"'Indeed, I shan't,' she returned, with almost passionate earnestness; 'nothing can hurt me; I shall live till I'm ninety.' She was seventeen then, and the smallest girl of her age that I ever saw, and yet her hold on life and avaricious delight in it were like some hattered old beauty of fifty. The strength and recklessness of her nature were appalling, at least they would be to me now.

"About this time there began to grow over me a horrible consciousness. I was getting bored. To you, who have been bored only at a dull play or a tiresome conversation—in short, bored pour cause—this statement does not begin to convey its full tragic force. To be bored comes to me like a stifling, rising marsh-tide. It is to be weary when I have made no exertion, irritable when my nerves and health are perfectly balanced, morose with plenty of money, silent and absent-minded though Sidney Smith and Lady Blessington should unite their efforts to engage me in conversation. I asked the Gypsy if she was ever thus. 'No!' she cried out, indignantly, with a clenching of her small fists and a stiffening of her whole sinewy little frame. It made me languid to see her. 'You live too hard,' said I.

"'I became worse instead of better, and it was borne in upon me that nothing could console me but the sight and sound of the sea.

"'Gypsy,' said I, 'did you ever see the sea?' She shook her head. She had always lived in an inland Western city.

"'There's not only music in its roar,' said I, 'but the bitter laugh of the conquered; did you know that?'"

"'Now, you're talking nonsense,' quoth the Gypsy, with conviction.

"'Nonsense or not, I am bored here, and I am going to the sea. These mountains crush me,' said I, thinking aloud. She caught at the words like a little fury.

"'You're going away?' she panted.

"'I must,' said I. This was beginning to look promising; the child was not just what you'd call reserved, and I was bored enough not to care to soothe her.

"'I'm going with you,' she announced.

"'Without a chaperon?' Gypsy, you shock me,' said I, laughing.

"'How dare you sit there and tell me I love you!' she raved.

"'I don't tell you so; you're the one oasis in the desert of my ennui, the one bright cloud floating over the chasm I have dropped into,' said I.

"She paused a moment, and then threw herself into my arms.

"'Look here, you young electric shock, don't do that again without some appreciable preparation,' said I.

"'Iceberg, stern, cruel, hateful!'—these were her complimentary names for me—'you won't go away, will you?'"

"'Why, child, I must.' I clung to my plan for sheer obstinacy. I was trembling from head to foot, and ready to promise her anything if she had but known it. 'I won't be gone long, but indeed I don't want you to see me in this melancholy fit; we might quarrel, and you wouldn't like that. I'll come back, I swear it, by—Gypsy, do you believe in anything?'"

"'Not in you,' she said, wearily.

"'The night before I was to start she was so diabolically gay that I was vaguely alarmed.

"'Gypsy,' said I, 'do you mean to run away before I come back?'"

"'You know better,' said she, bitterly.

"'What do you mean to do?' I persisted. 'You have got some scheme in your wicked little head; what is it? Don't run away, for, by heavens, I'll come after you! I shall find you no matter where you are, and I shall have you for mine no matter who you are with; so look out what you do.' She laughed and flashed her eyes. In the evening she used to wear a smoking-cap of mine, which suited her Moorish face exactly. She had a teaspoonful of dark blood in her, I know she had.

"It was fiendishly early in the morning when I started; but I couldn't help glancing up at her window. There she was, holding her little black-and-red Rob Roy shawl close up about her throat, while her dark hair hung around her face. I lifted my hat to her and then held out my arms. She laughed, and said, in a hard, common little tone that always grated on my nerves:

"'Won't you be sorry for this, my boy?—that's all!'"

"Those were our adieux, and when the old man and I been driving in silence for about an hour, he vouchsafed

"I think you're right down sensible to get out of this here. The gal's taken a likin' to you."

"She's hardly more than a child," said I.

"Child, is she?" said he. "Well, she's a knowin' one. At which I could not control a smile."

"The sea consoled me. I shook off my boredom, and made some pleasant friends without exactly knowing how. One family—a widow lady and her son and daughter—I saw very often during my stay in the city. I missed the Gypsy at every turn. She had struck herself into my life like the little blade she was, and I could not forget her. I used to wonder if I could get her to marry me, and come and live with me in this brown city, loved of the salt sea-wind. She was a wild, romantic little thing. I thought I could."

"Far out among the sand-dunes, some brilliant being, conceiving that the city would 'grow that way'—that is, right out into the bay—had reclaimed a garden and built a house. It was all on one floor, dark with wood-work, and luxuriously furnished. Its owner was too poor to live in it, and nobody else wanted it. I leased it, and rushed back into the red-woods. I walked in from the little town, and by this means overtook the Gypsy scuffling along with her dusty little shoes. A man was strolling by her side with his hands in his pockets. I could not hear what they were saying, but he left her at the meeting of two roads, and she pursued her way to the cottage alone. I came softly up behind her, and said, as quietly as if I had never been away:

"Who was that, Gypsy?"

"She gave a little shriek, and started violently. Then she sat down on a log by the side of the road, and began to cry. These feminine demonstrations over, I repeated my question, and got it answered. The man was the terrible person before whom she had fled from the town where her step-mother had domiciled her."

"You have grown less afraid of him in the time I have been away," said I. She chuckled.

"Are you jealous? Yes, you are! Oh, you are frightfully jealous! Don't you wish you knew how he found out where I was? Don't you wish you knew what I've been about since you went away? But you'll never know?"

"See here, you elf," said I, catching hold of her, as she fluttered along the road, "the only thing I really want to know is, whether you'll marry me, and go and live in a little house by the sea that I took possession of while I was gone?"

"What do you think she said? She clapped her hands and said: 'What fun!' with another gurgle of a laugh."

"And tell our people afterward," she added, in a minute.

"And never tell our people unless we are obliged to," said I. "Give them something to think about; it will do them good."

"But they send me letters and checks, you know, to the town; the old man brings them out to me," she persisted.

"Well, you practical young woman, can't I order them addressed to our new home?" said I.

"She consented to all my plans; the boldness of the move pleased and excited her, but our amazing independence and loneliness frightened her. She was an amusing study in those days."

"How I do trust you," she used to say to me; 'I wonder what makes me.'

"We galloped into town one day on horseback, and were married—she swore she was of age—and went on to our little house by the sea without returning to the cottage. The whole escapade suited the Gypsy, and we spent three days of idiotically unclouded happiness. At the end of that time I went to look up the friends I had made on my previous visit. I did not tell any of them that I was married, except the widow lady and her son and daughter, who congratulated me, and said they were anxious to see my wife. I invited them to call, and one day the mother and daughter made their appearance. The Gypsy seemed to take one of her fervid fancies to the daughter, and when she was not hanging upon her accents and flattering her unmercifully, she appeared to be studying her critically. One evening, when I came home a little later than usual, my wife was not at the door to meet me, nor could I find her in the house, till, pausing at one of the windows, I saw her little figure down on the beach, and her old friend of the redwoods was by her side. Now I had the right to interfere. I rushed down to the shore, and joined them. My wife introduced her companion to me. It was a bad flaw in her nature that the admiration of a cad was not loathsome to her—for that the fellow was a cad was written all over him, and that he admired her was equally apparent. He walked up to the house with us, and departed with a silly smile meant to convey that he felt himself the interesting cause of displeasure on my part toward the Gypsy. When that giddy young person and I were within doors, I took her gently in my arms, and told her, in easy words of one syllable, what caste, and good taste, and a delicate sense of honor are; while she kept protesting, with wide eyes: 'I don't like him; I hate him; I think he's just as horrid as you do. I told him I loved you.'

"I winced. God! I writhed."

"You spoke of our feelings for each other to that 'ting'?" said I.

"Why, of course, when he asked me."

"I pushed her away, and lay flat on my face on the lounge, groaning in spirit. I was in for it. What had I done! What an ass I had made of myself! Should I take the girl to my mother to be taken care of? Should I shoot myself? The piano struck up. The Gypsy was playing gallops in a manner that indicated that she was perfectly furious. The next day I petted her, and made it up with her, and gave her my solemn commands never to see the man again, if she valued my peace of mind or her own; and coming home in the middle of the day, I found him lunching with her. This time I attacked the hound myself, explained the situation in a few forcible words, and kicked him out of doors. The Gypsy didn't care. She was as placid as possible, rather pleased; and we went out riding, and dawdled our time away as formerly. I tried to amuse her, heaven knows. We rushed about the city, going to great public balls, and the sort of thing she liked, and filling our pretty house with noisy people, with whom she was always flirting, betting, and smoking. I was getting heartily tired and bored of my infatuation. The only pleasant hours I had were with the widow and her daughter. One afternoon when I was sitting with them, my wife burst into the parlor, perfectly gorgeous in a velvet costume, and rattled away to these quiet people in a most astounding manner, dragging me off with her when her call was at an end. At home she seemed to be in a kind of paroxysm. She flung her little Paris hat on the floor, and, stripping off her gloves and bracelets, sent them flying after it. She tore at the lace-filled throat of her dress as if she were strangling.

"I'm going mad," she panted—as indeed I observed—"I can't please you; I don't know what you want. Do you think I can sit with my hands folded and look out of the window all day? What do you wish me to do?—what shall I do? You're killing me. You go to see those people because they're different from me. If you get tired of me you have ruined me, Hugh. Love me, love me!" and the wild little thing threw herself on the ground at my feet in a convulsion of grief. I see a kind of "Oh, rare for Antony!" expression in your face. Well, so it was, for once, but she wore herself and my patience to tatters, to very rags, by the repetition of such spasms. It was all too violent; human nature can't stand it. I was dictatorial and indifferent again, and she more reckless than ever. She started another friendship for a big, blonde fellow, with a disgraceful record. We quarreled frightfully, and at last she went to ride with this man by moonlight, against my express command, and was thrown over her horse's head and killed, and that was the end of my Gypsy wife. And you may think if I shun that city like the pestilence, and if the roar of the sea is hateful to me, and if the sudden sight of that photograph is not rather a shock, even though all this happened inside of three months, and was more than ten years ago. You think, in the pride of your nineteen green springs, that you could have ruled the Gypsy, but you could not, nor any other man."

'Behold it lies there overthrown, that house;
In its fair halls no comely shall carouse.
Its broad rooms with strange silences are filled;
No fire upon its crumbling hearth shall glow,
Seeing its desolation.'

"Tears, as I am a man! O Gypsy, Gypsy!"

Rummaging through our library the other day, we came upon a copy of the San Francisco Chronicle of date January 18, 1870—a little more than twelve years old; not very long ago, but long enough to indicate the progress that journal has made in size, circulation, and business. We reprint a part of its editorial for the purpose of illustrating the comical side of newspaper prophecies upon European political events—a thing the Argonaut seldom indulges in:

There will be no revolution in France at the present crisis. Those who predict a violent change of government as the result of the present excitement, simply proclaim their ignorance of French history and French character. We note with curious interest that the majority of our contemporaries really seem to imagine that there is to be a new French revolution after the style of '98, and that the days of Robespierre's domination are to be reinaugurated. There is not at present the slightest danger of any such revolution. Louis Napoleon is master of the situation. He knows his own power and that of the people. Moreover, we do not imagine that the recent outburst of popular feeling took him entirely by surprise. We suspect that he was prepared for it. In fact, we give Napoleon the Third credit for possessing no ordinary share of ability. And we do not for a moment imagine that he is at all disturbed by the comments of the foreign press upon his course and policy. Like his uncle, he has studied in the school of Machiavelli. Regarding him in this light, let us scrutinize this "revolutionary movement." The movement does not seem to be very formidable, and it is rather the commencement or inauguration of something novel than a novelty itself. Of course, Louis Napoleon is at the bottom of the whole affair. The popular demonstrations have been sufficient for Napoleon's purposes. They furnish him with an excuse for taking back his concessions. This was what he wanted. He can now argue that when he attempted to abandon the system of personal government the people proved themselves unfit for liberty.

It was not a wise editorial Daniel who thus sat in judgment upon Napoleon and his affairs, for it was but a few months when the continual agitation at the French capital burst forth into a national flame that involved all Europe in the blaze of war. There was a revolution that changed France from an empire to a republic, and sent the imperial family into exile. The Emperor of the French died a refugee in England. The Prince Imperial was killed in the English service. The Empress is a wanderer. The succession to the dynastic claims is a speculation and a dream. The change was sudden and violent. It was a revolution, and not bloodless. Louis Napoleon was not master of the situation. He was like thistle-down upon the wings of the storm. He had no power, and he under-estimated that of the French people. He was not prepared for it. The Chronicle was not a prophet. Its editor was an ass. Just now, within these past few weeks, the American press has been all astray on Egyptian affairs. The demagogue part of the press, and that is nearly all of it, taking its cue from the Irish, and anxious to please the English-hating Irish, prophesied that the English would be whipped in Egypt, or that it would be a long, expensive, and bloody war. The Irish politicians, the Home Rulers, Land Leaguers, and Fenians, were full of direful auguries over the English affair at the delta of the Nile. And now, that it has turned out but a picnic affair for the English army, the mob dispersed, Arabi Bey captive of war, Alexandria, Cairo, and the Suez Canal in the hands of the English, they are disposed to depreciate English valor by underrating the gallantry of the achievement. As for ourselves, we are proud of the English and the English race, and proud of the brave ancestry from which we spring. Their achievements are our achievements, their history our history, their glory our glory. We expect great things are in reserve for them and us; great achievements to be accomplished by England and America, as allies in the future conflicts of Christian civilization.

"Great fleas have little fleas, and these have lesser fleas to bite 'em, and so on, ad infinitum." The quarrel of two lesser fleas over the privilege of sucking the Tivoli flea, as typified by the struggle of two fellows to supply that concern with programmes, is most amusing. Robinson gives his Tivoli Advertiser at the door. Jones gives his Footlight on the sidewalk. Then the Advertiser man, finding all the visitors provided with programmes, takes them politely away, and gives them his own. Then the Footlight man has him arrested. Then he has the Footlight man arrested. Charges, counter-charges, malicious mischief, civil suits, damages, costs—and all for the supplying of a programme to the Tivoli! What little fleas there are in this world. Probably even these minute fleas have yet other and minuter fleas deriving their sustenance from them.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Beryl's Bluff.

"Will he bite?"

The humming of the bees as they sped from flower to flower and sipped the honeyed treasures of petal and calyx, and the low murmur of the summer breezes, sighing among the locust trees, were the only sounds that broke the St. Louis silence of a beautiful afternoon in September. The amber haze of Indian summer had fallen upon the land. Away to the westward stretched a vista of grain-fields that were laughing in the golden glory of an abundant harvest, while the eastern landscape was flecked here and there by a sad-eyed but brindle cow. "Let us think only of the future, Rupert," said Beryl Gilhooly to the strong-limbed, all-on-account-of-Eliza young man who stood by her side, looking down into the hazel depths of her beautiful eyes in a wistful, will-the-old-man-ever-go-to-bed expression that sat so strangely upon the Chicago outlines of his pure young face. And even while speaking these words she turned her left foot slightly so as to shield him from the ardent rays of the sun, and smiled a joyous, happy, you-are-first-choice-in-every-pool smile that told of the deathless passion that enslaved her soul. "Let us think of the future," she continued; "of the bright and happy future, full of matinee tickets and ice-cream." "No, no, not that; some other future," cried Rupert McIntosh, a look of haunting horror coming into his face. "I can not free my mind from this dread suspicion." At that moment a book-agent was seen ascending the brow of a hill. He entered the portals of Coast-cliff Castle, and went to the front steps. In a little while he came back hurriedly, and soon a dog was seen at play with some gent's furnishing goods. Rupert kissed Beryl, and started over to town. "When are you coming back, sweetheart?" the girl asks. "Next August," are the words that the zephyrs bear back to her. "Why do you wait so long, darling?" "Because," he answers, in tear-stained tones, "dogs are muzzled in August."—From "Over the Garden Wall," by Joseph Medill, the Chicago Tribune Novelist.

Why We Shed the Scalding.

In justice to ourself we desire to state that we have been placed in a false position before the public. It has been stated that while at Rock Creek station, in the early part of the week, we were taken for a peanut, and otherwise ill treated at the railroad eating corral and omelette emporium, and that in consequence of such treatment we shed great scalding tears as large as watermelons. This is not true. We did shed the tears as above set forth, but not because of ill treatment on the part of the eating-house proprietor. It was the presence of death that broke our heart and opened the fountains of our great deep, so to speak. When we poured the glucose syrup on our pancakes, the stiff and cold remains of a large beetle and two cunning little twin cockroaches fell out into our plate, and lay there hushed in an eternal repose. Death to us is all-powerful. The King of Terrors is to us the mighty sovereign before whom we must all bow; from the mighty emperor down to the meanest slave, all alike must some day curl up and die. This saddens us at all times, but more particularly so when Death with his relentless lawn-mower has gathered in the young and innocent. This was the case when two little twin cockroaches, whose lives had been unspotted, and whose years had been unclouded by wrong and selfishness, were called upon to meet death together. In the stillness of the night, these little, affectionate twins crept into the glucose syrup and died. We hope no one will misrepresent this matter. We did weep, and we are not ashamed to own it. We sat there and sobbed until the tablecloth was wet for four feet and the venerable ham was floating around in tears. It was not for ourself, however, that we wept. No unkindness on the part of an eating-house ever provoked such a tornado of woe. We just weep when we see death and are brought in contact with it. And we were not the only ones that shed tears. The waiters wept, strong men as they were. Even the butter wept. Strong as it was, it could not control its emotions. —Bill Nye's Boomerang.

Hoffenstein on Marriage.

"Misder Hoffenstein, vat you dink," exclaimed Herman, in a flutter of surprise; "I shust get an invitation to de vedding of my frient, Moses Powski, vot lifts by de Sorapuru market. He vas going to marry Miss Sallie Liechtenfelder, whose fader keeps de shoe-store." "Does she haf any money?" inquired Hoffenstein. "No, sir." "Does he haf money?" "No, sir." "Vell, den dey vas tam fools, you know; and dey vill find it oud. De more a man vas poor in dis vorld, Herman, de more he vants to get married; if he don't vant to do dot, he vants to express his opinion efery chance he gets, ven it ain't vort von cent on de dollar, and he don't represent anything but an old valise. Ven people get married or go around dalking, dey ought to haf somedey to back it up. You see in de books, Herman, dot love laughs at locksmiths. Vell, it may be so, you know, but love nefer goes around laughing at grocery bills, and de landlord vot don't get his rent. Love vas very brave, but it gets veak in de knees ven anything like dot happens, and you can bet on it. I dink a poor voman shoud haf a velty husband, and a poor man a velty vife. If I had my vay mit dis vorld, and I heard of a poor young man vat vanted to marry a girl no better off as himself, I vould chain him to a post, Herman, shust to keep de tam fool oud of trouble. De easiest vay, and de most pleasant, dot a man makes money, is ven he marries a voman vat haf it. It vas the safest piseness dransaction in de vorld; you risk no capital, and you make big profit. Dink of it, Herman, and vatch your chance. Dousands of velty and good young vomen haf married no-count fellows vot vere so poor dot de fleas vouldn't stay mit dem, and you must feel encouraged, you know. No von can dell vot a voman vos going to do." "But, Misder Hoffenstein," expostulated Herman, "if a man marries a voman vot he don't love, he von't haf any respect for himself, no matter if she vas velty." "Neffer mind, my poy, neffer mind; oder beople vill respect you. I know a man vot dinks de same vay as you ven he married, and now he goes around de streets veering blue pants mit yellow patches. Dake my advice, Herman, and don't let a poor voman rope you in." —Joe C. Aby, in N. O. Times-Democrat.

THE PRINCE AND THE BEAUTIES.

How His Royal Highness of Wales Beams on Pretty American Girls.

That portion of fashionable society which, when the London season is over, seeks recuperation in the nauseous waters of the German spas, among the picturesque scenery of the Swiss Engadine, or amid the Parisian surroundings of the French watering-places, is beginning to vend its way homeward again. Grouse still offers its attractions to those who are the happy possessors of Welsh or Scottish moors, and the banging away that has gone on among the stubble and turnips for the past fortnight has not been sufficiently destructive of the partridges to preclude the possibility of there being "a few more left of the same sort" to gladden the hearts of the tardy arrivals. Now that the war is over, too, the Grenadiers, the Life Guards, and the Blues will soon be trooping back to receive the thanks of a grateful country, and their officers to fill the blanks which their temporary absence on active service had made in the family circle of many a country house; so that in a few weeks, at most, except in the cases of the invalids who yearly make Italy and the South of France their home during the rough English months, society, scattered though it may be from Cornwall to Caithness, or from Anglesey to Yarmouth, will be once more under the shelter of its own flag.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were among the first to return from Homburg last week, the prince's bi-diurnal pinetinctured baths and early hours having apparently set him upon his feet again. They stayed but a day or two in town, and then went direct to Abergeldie, the prince's shooting-quarters in Scotland, and already, if the reports that come back can be credited, the grouse are catching it hot from his royal highness, assisted by several of his set who are with him. It is quite probable, however, that the guns of those members of his set whom he has chosen to call to his assistance are more answerable for the large bags that are made each day than is the gun of the prince himself, for it is a pretty well known fact that he is a very poor shot. Of course, it is the proper thing to yield him the palm in everything; but, all the same, men who have shot with him could tell you how there is always a friend who is a crack shot stationed near the prince, ready to shoot a couple of seconds after he does, and at the same bird, just as when he was in India an unerring bullet from a simultaneous rifle generally laid low the tigers and man-eaters, whose skins now adorn the walls of Marlborough House and Sandringham as trophies of the prince's marksmanship.

Everybody is now talking of his attentions to Miss Chamberlaine, who, thanks to his notice more than anything else, is daily growing to be looked upon as a beauty. Strictly speaking, she can not be called one. She has a pretty face, a clear complexion, fluffy, silky, blonde hair, and that's all. Figure she has positively none, her shoulders being high, her chest narrow, and her carriage awkward. According to English taste, a woman simply can't be a beauty unless she has a good figure. Her voice, too, is deep and masculine in its tones, and her foot is by no means up to the American standard of smallness, as exhibited to European eyes by the hundreds of American girls who throng the Continent every summer. But she is said to possess another attribute of womanly perfection of far more importance than face or figure in the estimation of the swells in whose society she is now sunning herself. Her papa is supposed to have money. How much, no one exactly knows; and many are the surmises as to "what he'd be likely to settle on her, you know." She and her mamma went to Homburg from Cowes about the same time the Prince of Wales did, and there they have had their republican sensibilities flattered by a continuation of various little attentions from his royal highness, the prince; among other things, inviting Miss Chamberlaine to join his lawn-tennis party every afternoon, much to the disgust of many less favored courtiers of both hemispheres. There are people in England who do not think it benefits a girl in the long run—or in the short, for the matter of that—to have the Prince of Wales single her out. It gives her a sort of gossipy éclat for a time, perhaps, but not with the best people. It attracts to her side a certain class of men (noblemen in name) who follow the prince about, and take their cue from him in all that he does. But the attraction lasts only as long as the prince's smiles continue, and dies when he wearies or grows cold, and transfers his royal attentions to another who can furnish him with the charm of his existence—novelty. Albert Edward is a capricious fellow in his admirations; and any girl who depends upon his notice for notoriety will go out of fashion as quickly as she came in, and with about the same lack of warning. They say that since her stay at Homburg Miss Chamberlaine will not talk to any one under an earl, and positively refuses to be introduced to any man who is not a nobleman. Baronets she will have nothing to do with. To a girl who associates with royalty, I dare say, a baronet must seem a small fish indeed, and "Sir" a most insignificant title; for there are over nine hundred baronets in the kingdom, exclusive of the sixty odd Irish ones, and since Brassey (who used to break stones on the road not so long ago) was made one the other day, it doesn't seem as though there was much left of the title to brag about. However, it may turn out that Miss Chamberlaine may be glad enough to get even a baronet before her very apparent tilt for a title is over.

For example, take the case of Minnie Stevens. It was the Prince of Wales who, by his notice, gave her her first start among English swelldom. She, too, went in for titles. "A duke or nothing for us," Mamma Stevens used to say; "ain't we got the money to pay for one? Je gage que oui." So the Duke on Montrose was settled upon as the likeliest parti. He was poor for a duke, being a plain lieutenant in a lancer regiment. But the consequent lack of lustre in the gilding of his strawberry-leaved coronet made it all the more probable that a regilding thereof would be accepted kindly by him, even though the gold-leaf came from the profits of several American hotels. Just, however, as the big fish was about to be landed, he wriggled from the hook and flopped back into the water again. The old proverb about there being "as good fish in the sea" may have been quoted to assuage the fair angler's chagrin; but it didn't hold good, the next move being a decided descent of the scale, when Lord Walter Campbell was picked out. He wasn't a duke, but he was the son of one, and his brother was the Marquis of Lorne. Everything seemed to go on swimmingly for a time, when suddenly it was announced that Lord Lorne was to marry the Princess Louise. Forthwith, the marriage of his brother, Lord Walter, became a matter of royal concern. The Prince of Wales did his best, but the Queen couldn't go the hotels. So that little affair came to an end. How often the same game was reenacted I can't begin to say. At all events, Miss Minnie wasn't getting younger every day, and men with titles who would have married her like a shot if she'd had them when her éclat was fresh, had too much amour propre to let themselves be dropped and picked up again at will. So the end of the long chase after a title arrived when one fine day she married a retired army officer, whose highest claim to a titular designation came from his having been a captain in the Scots Fusilier Guards, though his grandfather had once upon a time been the Marquis of Anglesey. That Captain Paget is a good fellow, every one who knows him will admit. He has long been a prominent member of the Prince of Wales's set, and is of excellent family connections. But he isn't even an "honorable," and is miles away from a coronet, for both of which deficiencies the Stevenses, when they first got into the swim in London, would about as soon have thought of a marriage with him as with "Mr. John Smith, of Cheapside." I do not suppose that there has ever been an American woman in these days who has had such a long "inning" of royal favor as Mrs. Paget. The secret of it, I believe, lies in the fact that she has had the sense to make herself, and keep herself, a favorite with the Princess as well as the Prince of Wales—a stroke of wisdom which Miss Chamberlaine seems to have neglected, for I hear she is as much disliked by the Princess of Wales as she is admired by the Prince, the former's aversion being generally, as might be expected, in the inverse ratio of her husband's predilections where the subject is of the female sex.

I was told the other day, by a friend who happened to be at Windsor when General Grant and his son Jesse dined there with the Queen, and stayed all night at the castle, the following, which may be of interest to those who know young Grant and his ways. There were a good many stories told at the time at the young man's expense, I remember, most of which got into the papers, but I don't think this was ever made public:

Mr. Jesse, it seems, was sitting in the smoking-room of the castle with half a dozen others (the general not having yet joined the party), smoking away and holding forth at the same time with a tumbler of brandy and soda on the arm of his chair. "There is one thing about this country of yours, gentlemen," he said, when the first lull in the general conversation gave him a good opening, "which strikes me as peculiar. It is this: Take your Prince of Wales here. Let him go out shooting to-morrow morning, and not come home at night. Why, the whole country would be up in arms out looking for him. Aint that so?" There was a general acquiescence. "Well, suppose now I should go out for a hunt at home, and be gone six months, do you think any one in the whole of America, except my own folks, would care a cent? Not much." COCKAIGNE.

LONDON, September 21, 1882.

Among the various paintings of Theodore Wores which have attracted attention since his arrival here, there is one which has not had its proper share of that attention. It is called by the artist, "Interior of a Shop in Chinatown." We here in San Francisco are affected—some of us perhaps unconsciously—by the prejudice existing against the Chinese. Seeing nothing good in them, we can see nothing picturesque. It was reserved for Mr. Wores to bring out that striking Orientalism, that barbaric picturesqueness, and set it upon his canvas. This is the second of his Chinese studies. The first—a fish-vender's stall—was sold to a wealthy New Yorker. The present painting has also been purchased by a stranger—Sir Thomas Hesketh. The scene chosen is the interior of a Chinese shop. At the counter stand a Chinese woman and her child, the little one with its face turned toward the spectator, and its beady black eyes staring at you with that old-young look which Chinese children have. Behind the counter stands the shop-keeper, weighing out a portion of li-chee nuts. His face is a strong study. It is the best delineation of the Mongolian face the writer ever saw. Over his head are suspended the many strange articles which go to make up the stock in trade of a Chinese shop—dried ducks, dried prawns, curious withered sausages, dried oysters, those little yellow cheeses made of fermented beans, and—let us be exact—gizzards. The lintels of the store bear those strange hieroglyphics with which the Celestials are wont to ward off evil spirits. It is curious to remark that a Chinaman who came to see the picture was much delighted to find that they were real and not dummy hieroglyphics, and that he could read them. The picture will be on exhibition at Morris's gallery for a few days until it is sent to England. Sir Thomas Hesketh paid for the picture fifteen hundred dollars, and it is worth it. It is to be hoped that this sale may encourage Mr. Wores to remain among us, for we learn that he had contemplated removing to the East. He is an artist whom we can not afford to lose.

"I asked a man who knows Oscar Wilde," says "Brunswick" in the Boston Gazette, "what sort of fellow he is on a long acquaintance." "Well," said he, "I'll tell you. Wilde is a sort of man who smokes cigarettes incessantly, but never has any of his own, and he is very fond of a good dinner—at your table." Poor Oscar! he is no longer amusing because he is no longer a novelty, and some of the people who took him up most violently at first are doing their best to drop him down. With all his assurance, he is afraid to go out alone—I mean to walk Broadway or Fifth Avenue. He has not the moral courage to meet the sneer of the mob unsupported; so when you see him it is leaning on the arm of an unfortunate acquaintance.

The Court—What, prisoner! Do you mean to say that the witness has testified falsely? The Prisoner—What can he know about me? I don't know him—never saw him in my life. The Court—Never saw him? Why, he was one of your associates! The Prisoner—He wasn't! I don't even know his name. Ask me it, and see if I do.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The Philharmonic Concert and Miss Coursen's Singing Recital.

The second season of the Philharmonic Society was auspiciously opened last week by the first of a series of six promised concerts, to be given during the coming winter. Many good players were among the musicians, and Mr. Hinrichs's control, in his place as conductor, was admirable as ever.

Reinecke's Fest-Ouverture, the opening number of the evening, was given with confidence and interesting effect, the strings making, as usual, the most of their part, and the other instruments betraying none of the weaknesses afterward apparent. It will be remembered that the melodious theme of this overture is presented at the outset in a short moderato, which breaks into a briefer animato, and is finally followed by the allegro movement, completing the work. The passage in triplets, forming the accompaniments of the animato and taken by the violins, was beautifully played, as were also the measures somewhat similar in feature, and for the same instruments, at the close of the allegro.

The composition awakening deepest interest was, of course, Beethoven's Second Symphony, Op. 36, in D major. The adagio, which constitutes the eloquent prelude to this profound and characteristic symphony, was poor and unsatisfactory in many respects. In the passage formed by the five opening bars the instruments were out of tune, the attack was irresolute, and a prevailing unsteadiness spoke doubtfully for the success of succeeding measures. The bit of chromatic part-repetition, and the shakes which follow, were not reassuring, and only with the allegro did an actual improvement set in. This fine movement, with its surprising modulations and strains of heroic utterance, was better managed and better imagined by both leader and players; and with the larghetto real worthiness of interpretation and feeling asserted itself in a marked degree. The scherzo, which has been described as "heavily frolicsome," is not a particularly sympathetic part of this symphony, and, with the exception of its little trio, seemed devoid of that fine something so inspiring in the larghetto. The finale was spirited and correct, but a trifle tedious.

Schumann's entre-act music to "Manfred," mysterious, poetical, and reserved, received a careful and thoughtful rendering. The Strauss waltz, "Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald," as the lightest number of the evening, gained that approval which is always ready to fall to the lot of attractive frivolity. And yet these gay melodies have a pathos of their own which sometimes surprises strangely. Mr. Hinrichs certainly made the most of the waltz in question, bestowing upon it the full benefit of careful shading, and a wise use of the tempo rubato. Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" has fame on its side, and uproar as well. For the sake of the former, the world accepts it; but considered in the light of the latter, it is without recommendation.

Madame Zeiss-Dennis, who contributed two vocal numbers to the programme, appeared first in a recitative and aria from Mozart's "Tito." This lady's voice is of immense power, wide compass, and dramatic quality; but it lacks in sweetness and sympathy, and in the extremes of the high and low registers is piercingly shrill, and raspingly gruff. On these accounts, and by reason of a somewhat exaggerated style, added to a lively rolling of her French "r's," Madame Dennis detracts from her own excellence, which, in an artistic and mechanical sense, is really great. Few singers are able to cope as successfully as she with the demands of such compositions as the aria from "Tito," or the scena and aria from Meyerbeer's "Prophet," which she gave later. Her phrasing, comprehension, and instinctive recognition of the composer's intention and meaning, are all in good taste, and though her singing was not always in tune, and made no appeal to the heart, it was intensely dramatic and forceful, and added largely to the success of the concert.

Of Miss Coursen's recital it may be said that a large and demonstrative audience greeted this vocalist at Dashaway Hall on Tuesday evening, that a programme containing many interesting numbers was presented, and that the details of the entertainment were all well appointed.

Miss Coursen's vocal delivery is so unfortunate in almost every respect that her approaches to musical success are, like angel's visits, few and far between. In all elaborately embellished compositions, such as her second selection—"La bruna gondoletta," by Paganini—her execution is so blurred and faulty as to preclude any possibility of happy results. In ballads, her sustained tones are injudiciously formed, and apt to be untrue, especially in the upper register, while her mannerisms are such as to greatly distract and annoy. Only in a quiet lied by Bendel, "Wie berührt mich wundersam," and in the romance from Mignon, "Connais-tu le pays?" could real approval be accorded. These, indeed, were given with a regard to purity, composure, and musical taste, well worthy of commendation. The lady is undoubtedly sincere in her every endeavor; and the fruitlessness of her distorted efforts is really more to be deplored than condemned.

Mr. Albert Friedenthal, pianist, played as his first selection a Chopin "Impromptu," with Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song," in response to a persistent encore. The performance of this gentleman, in these two compositions, is best characterized by the following words from "Macbeth": "A tale . . . full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." To a fair technique, Mr. Friedenthal unites comparative correctness of playing, an apparently good memory (so far as its resources were drawn upon at this time), and a use of the pedal, which was, at least, in refreshing contrast to Mr. Roeckel's lavish employment of the same. But so far as his attainments as an artist pretend to go, Mr. Friedenthal can lay claim to little glory. His touch and tone are weak and amateurish, his interpretation is essentially crude, and his style without individuality. In the simple "Gondolier," of Mendelssohn, he was at his best. "Traumerei," "The Mill," and "Lützow's Wild Chase" were valueless, from an artistic point of view; and as for the "improvised" preludes with which Mr. Friedenthal favored his audience, the less said of them the better.

With three Rubinstein songs from Miss Coursen's recital came to an end.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 11, 1882.

SOCIETY.

The McDowell Reception.

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL, Thursday, October 12, 1882.—Nothing more amply testifies the great respect and affection entertained for General Irwin McDowell, so long the commander of the Military Division of the Pacific, than the honors which are being bestowed upon him right now, on the eve of his retirement from the active list of the army, by the people of San Francisco and vicinity. And it was very appropriate that the first of what may prove to be a series of brilliant affairs should have been initiated by his brother officers—the officers of the First Artillery, First Cavalry, Eighth Infantry, and staff—for it was through their energy and arrangement that society was indebted, on Wednesday evening last, for a most thoroughly delightful and enjoyable event, and one which will be remembered for a long time by the five hundred ladies and gentlemen present. It has been many a day since the old Occidental has had such a scene within its doors—those precincts made precious by so many magnificent receptions in the days gone by. And I doubt if there was ever a pleasanter company assembled anywhere than that gathered on this occasion to honor the officer, who, aside from his multifarious military duties, had contributed so much at so many times for the social enjoyment of others, and especially during the presence of distinguished strangers within our gates. A glance at the decorations of all of the apartments placed at the disposal of the Committee of Arrangements, betrayed the fact that Generals Kautz and Kelton, Colonels Andrews and Sutherland, Major Wilhelm and Lieutenant Bert, who had had charge of this part of preparation, had artistically and beautifully performed the work entrusted to them—for the floral ornamentation was perfect. The mirrors and mantels were surrounded with beds of the choicest and most aromatic of cut flowers, and ringlets of smilax and other runners were made to enliven all dependent objects. Bunting, of course, was an important auxiliary, and a tasteful display of handsome new flags of each respective arm of our service and veteran banners that had been carried through tempestuous scenes of strife intermingled their folds with each other. The main parlor was used as a reception-room; the dining-room was set apart for the dance; and the halls, tropically lined with palms and other plants, made a grand promenade. The supper was splendid, and well served. The music was excellent, of course, and all the accessories, indeed, harmonized. General McDowell and his party arrived promptly at eight o'clock, and took up a position at the southern end of the reception-room, and soon afterward guests began to arrive in throngs. General and Mrs. McDowell were accompanied by Mrs. General Kautz, Mrs. General Kelton, Colonel Andrews, and Mrs. Colonel Sutherland, who assisted in receiving. All of the officers of the army, nearly, were present, in full uniform, and quite a number of navy and foreign officers and consuls. Dancing commenced at about nine, and was kept up until after midnight. Besides the officers of the army and navy present, there were a great many of our young society people—more than have been together for many a day; and some of the young ladies, as well as many of the married ones, wore lovely costumes.

Among those who were present I saw Mrs. George Atherton, in a remarkably handsome costume of black, with a black lace cap, and Miss Florence Atherton, in a white satin trimmed with Spanish lace; Miss Dora Miller, in a white brocaded silk, embroidered front, corsage cut décolletée, elbow sleeves; Mrs. James V. Coleman, in a conspicuously elegant costume of pink silk, corsage cut low, elbow sleeves trimmed with lace, train a la princesse; Miss Belle Eyre, in blue satin, elbow sleeves, trimmed with lace; Miss Minnie Mizner, of Benicia, in pink silk, corsage décolletée and elbow sleeves; Mrs. General Kautz, in an imported dress cut décolletée, a very handsome and conspicuous costume; Mrs. General Kelton, in pearl satin, trimmed with point lace; Miss Bessie Kittle, in blue and brocaded silk; Miss Maggie Gwin, in white; Mrs. Colonel Sutherland, in white brocaded satin; Mrs. Schmiedell, in a marvelously handsome costume of mauve satin, trimmed with Duchesse lace and ribbons; Mrs. Colonel Andrews, in a black satin, trimmed with Chantilly lace; Mrs. McDowell wore a brocaded satin, trimmed with old gold fringe and an overskirt of maroon velvet, court train; Miss George Hammond, in black silk with lace fichu; Mrs. General Stoneman, in a magnificent costume; the Misses Parrott, in short dresses of white satin, trimmed with lace; Madame de Guigné, in black velvet and Chantilly lace.

Of our well-known young ladies and gentlemen present there were:

Miss Matie Peters, the Misses Durbrow, Miss Annie Bradley, Miss Lillie Hasting, Miss Kittle Woods, the Misses Chipman, Miss Mamie Donohue, Miss May Smith, Miss Florence Godley, Miss Sedgwick, Miss Sheda Torhet, Miss Marten, Miss Flora Low, Miss Babcock, the Misses Blanding, Miss Hubbard, the Misses Adams, Miss Genevieve Wright, Joseph Grant, George Crocker, Harry Tevis, George Page, Eugene Sullivan, Judge Hoffman, Mountford Wilson, Ned Greenway, William V. Alvord, and Harry McDowell; also Mr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schmiedell, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fixley, Governor and Mrs. Low, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sontag, Colonel and Mrs. Smedburg, Doctor and Mrs. McNulty, Mr. and Mrs. David Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Irving M. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Towne, Mr. and Mrs. Hooker, and, as I have stated above, all of the army officers and their ladies, and Pay-Director and Mrs. Schenck, Commander and Mrs. Coffin, Commodore and Mrs. Phelps, Captain and Mrs. Boyd, and others.

To-morrow (Friday) evening, Governor Stanford will entertain the retiring general at dinner, at which a number of gentlemen have been invited to be present. I understand, also, that Commodore and Mrs. Phelps, and other officers of the navy and their ladies, are talking of an entertainment. And there are quite a number of other preparations on the tapis.

T. M.

Notes and Gossip.

General George Stoneman, who has been in the city for the past three or four weeks, returned home a few days ago, but will again visit San Francisco before November. Mrs. Horace Davis and son have been visiting Monterey during the week. Quite a party of young ladies went to Monterey on Saturday last, among whom were Miss M. B. West, Miss M. Bowen, the Misses Kittle, the Misses O'Connor, and Miss Maggie Eyre; also Miss C. C. Jackson, of Oakland. General G. R. Brooke, U. S. A., arrived here from the East on Thursday last. Hon. Angus Cameron, United States Senator from Wisconsin, arrived here on Friday last. Miss Grace Eldridge will depart on her European and European tour in about three weeks. E. D. U. S. A., has been at the Baldwin most of the week.

Mrs. Thomas H. Selby leaves again for the East on Wednesday, the first proximo, and will take up a temporary residence in Massachusetts, probably in Boston or Cambridge. Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Van Nuys and Mr. and Mrs. Colonel R. S. Baker, of Los Angeles, are at the Palace. General Phineas Banning, of Los Angeles, has returned home. Charles Miller Jr. has gone to Monterey on a short visit. Hugh Tevis has returned from Monterey. Miss Katie Baker, of Oakland, is visiting at St. Helena. General and Mrs. John F. Miller and their daughter, Miss Dora Miller, came down from their country place on Monday last, and are at the Palace. Mr. and Mrs. James Edgar Mills, who were married in Sacramento on the fourth instant, and who afterward visited San Francisco and Monterey on their bridal tour, have returned. Mrs. James C. Flood and Miss Jennie Flood departed for the East on Sunday last. Mrs. William M. Stewart, who left here for Washington last week, is at present in Denver. Mrs. Commodore Phelps, of the Navy Yard, who has been visiting her friend, Mrs. Harrington, at the Palace, left for home during the week. Lieutenant Lefavor, U. S. N., and wife, are expected to return from their Eastern trip on or about Monday next. Mrs. Mark Sibley Severance departed for the East on or about the first instant, but will return shortly; probably with her sister, Miss May Crittenden, and her aunt, Mrs. Mark Hopkins, who has already left her summer home at Great Barrington for California. Mrs. Dr. C. G. Toland has returned to the Palace for the winter. Mrs. Solomon has lately been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Oates, at Santa Rosa. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore B. Wilcox, who were married in this city last week, and who afterward went to Monterey for a few days, left here on Tuesday last for Portland, Oregon, which city they will make their permanent home. Mrs. John McMullin has arrived in Baltimore, where her youngest daughter, Miss Susie, has been seriously ill. Sir Thomas Hesketh and wife have arrived in New York. Charles F. Powell, U. S. A., is at the Baldwin. Mrs. C. A. Longstreet, of Los Angeles, who has been visiting this city with her sister, has returned home. Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Bancroft are spending a short time in Southern California; they are accompanied by Messrs. E. H. and A. D. Barnes, of New Haven, Conn. Mrs. J. B. Shreve is staying a few days in New York. Mrs. H. L. Dodge is also in New York, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel; Mr. Dodge left for New York a few days ago. Judge and Mrs. Field have arrived in Washington. Mrs. E. B. Crocker, of Sacramento, and her daughter, Miss Amy Crocker, have come to San Francisco, with the intention of spending the winter. Evan J. Coleman left here for Louisville on Saturday last, to remain until December. Mrs. J. F. Houghton and her daughter, Miss Fannie Houghton, of Oakland, are at present in Switzerland. Rev. Dr. Platt will return from the East and preach his farewell sermon at Grace Church in a few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Langhorne have returned from their bridal tour, and will receive at their residence, on Buchanan Street, on Tuesdays, the 17th and 24th instants. Captain and Mrs. F. A. Whitney, who were so handsomely entertained by the ladies of Angel Island, and by Mrs. Godley in this city, upon their return from their bridal trip some two or three weeks ago, were made the recipients of a splendid reception at the Horton House, San Diego, upon their arrival at that place. Mrs. Irving Scott gave a dancing party to a number of her young friends on Saturday evening last. Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Goad, accompanied by their three children and Miss E. Goad, who have been sojourning for some time at Monterey, have returned. General John M. Schofield, accompanied by his family, will arrive in this city from the East to-day, and relieve General McDowell from his command on Monday next. Paymaster Colby, U. S. A., who has been a long time at Mare Island, has been ordered from active service; also Naval Constructor Feaster. Lieutenant W. C. Strong, U. S. A., arrived here from the East on Wednesday last. Mrs. N. H. Turner, of Berkeley, returns from the East to-day. Rev. John Hemphill has received and accepted a call from the West Arch Street Presbyterian Church, in Philadelphia. The Rev. Mr. Barrows and family, who have been visiting in the East for the past two months, will soon return. Senator Jones, of Nevada, arrived here a few days ago. Senator Logan, of Illinois, is in Sonora. Miss Alice Gates, who returned home from Sacramento on Tuesday last, was given a party at the residence of Grove Johnson, in that city, on the evening following, at which there were present between twenty and thirty couples of young people. Mrs. George R. Hamilton, of New York, a daughter of James J. Felt, of Sacramento, who came to her old home a few weeks ago to attend a wedding, returned to New York on Monday last. Commodore Schufeldt is at the Hot Sulphur Springs, near Santa Barbara. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Chapman, who have been in the East most of the time since their youngest daughter married a son of General Grant, nearly two years ago, have returned to this coast and taken up their residence at their old quarters, the Palace. Mrs. W. H. Hill and her daughter, Miss Jennie Hill, formerly of Sacramento, but now of Marin County, are visiting in Los Angeles, where they have a winter residence. On Wednesday evening last Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Crowell gave a party at their residence on Sutter Street in honor of Miss Louise Bee, of San José, which is said to have been a very enjoyable affair. Mrs. George Atherton has returned to Menlo Park. Mr. Edgar Mills and family remain at Menlo all winter. The Eyres and the Adamsons return to the city on the first of November.

Weddings.

A large number of people assembled at the Congregational Church in this city, on Saturday evening last, to witness the marriage of Mr. W. R. Norton, of Los Angeles, and Miss M. E. Hawkins, of Chicago, Illinois, which was solemnized by the Reverend Mr. Noyes, at eight o'clock. The bride wore a costume of pearl satin, princess train, and the customary white veil; her dress was cut low in the neck, and had elbow-sleeves trimmed with Spanish lace; the skirt was draped with sprays of flowers, au naturel, and the bride carried a hand-bouquet. After the ceremony a reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. Howell, parents of the bride, at their residence, at which there were present quite a number of Los Angeles people, and many of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Howell. On Monday morning Mr. and Mrs. Norton departed for Los Angeles, where they will take up their permanent residence.

On Monday evening last, the 9th instant, at the residence of the bride's father, in Oakland, Mr. Howard P. Langdon, of Astoria, Oregon, and Miss Carrie Hanscom, of Oakland, were married by the Rev. Mr. S. H. Willey. After the marriage and congratulations the bridal couple departed for this city, and have since sailed for Astoria, where Mr. Langdon is engaged in business. The bride is a granddaughter of the late Commodore Isaiah Hanscom, and was very popular with her friends.

The most fashionable wedding of the week was the one which took place at the Church of the Advent, at half past twelve o'clock on Wednesday last, and which made Mr. James Linforth and Miss May A. White husband and wife. Rev. Mr. Githens performed the ceremony. The church had been appropriately decorated with flowers, and presented a very inviting appearance. The ushers were Messrs. B. F. Langland, D. Spearman, and W. Willis. The bride had on a white satin dress and white veil. Her bridesmaids were Miss Hattie White and Miss Carrie Linforth; and the groomsmen were Messrs. Robert White and Walter Linforth. After the ceremony the party were driven to the residence of the bride, on Rincon Hill, where Mr. and Mrs. Linforth received the congratulations of a number of their friends, and where a breakfast followed. The happy couple soon afterward departed on a bridal tour, which will take in many of the delightful places in Southern California. Upon the completion of their tour, Mr. and Mrs. Linforth will go to Arizona, where Mr. L. has some mining interests at present of importance.

The Authors' Carnival.

The preparations for the coming third Carnival are progressing very rapidly, and promise to be completed on the 19th instant, on the evening of which date this festival will be opened with all the pageantry of previous years. The lady managers have received considerable assistance from the outside. The Gas Company has given them reduced rates; the Southern Pacific Railroad Company will run special trains with excursion rates for the benefit of the country towns; A. B. Eckstein has donated tableau fires; and many private citizens have contributed large sums of money. The grand stage will have a width of one hundred feet and a depth of nearly fifty feet. On the main floor the booths will be built underneath and flush with the galleries. The south side of the pavilion will be devoted to floral, bonbon, and refreshment booths, which will be opened behind as well as in front, so that the spectator may look through into the garden. On the north side will be the Louis Seize, Pre-Raphaelite, and Italian booths, which will be the only tableau booths down-stairs. In the galleries are the Homer, Silk Culture, Doré, Longfellow, Children's, Jules Verne, Chaucer, Japanese, Southern Plantation, Music, and French booths. Mrs. Buffandeau will have charge of the Louis Seize booth, and those who remember her success in the former two Carnivals anticipate an artistic triumph. The Italian booth, which was under the direction of Mrs. Sanchez last year, will this year be managed by Mrs. Burnham. The Homer booth was directed last year by Mrs. Dr. Oher. That lady is now an invalid, and the sceptre has passed into the hands of Mrs. J. B. Felton and Mrs. Donald McLennan. It is hoped that the exquisite tableau, "Venus Rising from the Sea," which was so notable a feature last year, will be repeated; but if the same lady will not consent, it will be a difficult matter to find another match for Aphrodite in the city. In the Doré booth the various celebrated pictures of this modern master of light and shade will be given. Especial attention will be given to the Biblical scenes. This booth is managed by Mesdames Booth, Greenbaum, and Pew. In the Longfellow booth, under the supervision of Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Detrick, will be presented tableaux from "Miles Standish," "Evangeline," "Hyperion," the "Spanish Student," and others. As in the first carnival, Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues" will be given. The Chaucer booth is under the control of Mrs. Mitchell, and a Shakespearean club of young ladies and gentlemen has volunteered to illustrate "Patient Grisildis" and how "Custance was ymaad a Queene." Mrs. Gilmore has charge of the Japanese garden, in which curios from the Ichi Ban will be sold for the benefit of the societies. This is owing to the generosity of Mr. Fletcher, who also contributes all the tea. An "Old Southern Home" will be presided over by some of the managers of the Old Ladies' Home. The music booth is under the direction of Madame Lyons and Professor Röckel, who have secured the assistance of many prominent artists, including Madame Zeiss-Dennis, the Misses Landesmann, Cousens, Ferrar, Gleeson, and McKenzie, and Messrs. Heyman, Goffie, Parolini, Espinosa, and others. The French booth promises to overtop the others in elaborateness and spectacular effect. The managers are Mesdames Weill, Godart, Gros, Petin, and Lyons, but added to the ability of these ladies are the exquisite taste of Raphael Weill, the artistic eye of Jules Godart, and the experience and executive faculty of the Russian Consul-General Olarovsky. From Victor Hugo's "Notre Dame de Paris" will be given four tableaux; from "Lucretia Borgia," the banquet scene; also a picture from "Marie Tudor." From Dumas's "Joseph Balsamo" will be given four tableaux, among which is the celebrated arbor scene, where Cagliostro, by means of a goblet of water, showed the unfortunate Marie Antoinette the representation of her terrible end. Other scenes from the king of romance will be "La Vallière and Louis XIV.," "Marion de Lorme," "Haydée," and "La Reine Margot." From Casimir Delavigne will be given the tableaux of Louis XI. and his court. The Pre-Raphaelite booth is not a surrender to the æsthetic billow which dashed Oscar Wilde upon our shores, but a tribute to the genius of Rossetti, Morris, Millais, and others of the famous brotherhood. Miss Lake has consented to arrange the tableaux, which ensures their accuracy and æsthetic success. The glorious visions from "The Blessed Damozel" of Rossetti, and the spirited picture of Morris's Atalanta stooping to pick up the golden apple, while her swift suitor flies onward to the goal, are among the promised treats. Several of Millais's popular pictures will be represented. Swinburne was a delicate subject, but a select committee of matrons, from a society whose orthodoxy is unquestioned, held a star-chamber inquisition over the fleshly Algernon's complete works. The scene which ensued resembled that which took place in a French convent several years ago, when the mother superior through mistake introduced among the pious sisterhood a collection of Ludovic Halévy's stories. But notwithstanding a majority condemnation, and a unanimous vote that Villon was a shameless creature, the minority secured for the prophet of unassuaged desires and tangled sentences a hearing, and so a few of the more moral poems will receive attention—such as "The Repentance of Thalassius," which at least has a religiously sounding title. A morning paper and one or two other journals stated that John N. Pomeroy and Mrs. de la Montanya would have charge of the "Milkmaids" and the Washington Irving booths. This was a mistake; Professor Pomeroy will not at present forsake the intricacies of legal lore. Mrs. Pomeroy was the manager which the blundering reporter had in mind. The work is being rapidly pushed forward, and scene-painters and costumers are working under high pressure.

B.

The last royal visit to Vancouver's Island, prior to the present one of the Princess Louise, was made by the Duke of Edinburgh when a middy. The governor, who is the greatest man there, gave a ball in his honor. His daughter, who was the belle of the settlement, having been to school in Portland, Oregon, and wearing flowers in her hair, was directed to give herself airs, which she did effectually, although her mother was a full-blooded Indian squaw and she but once removed. The young middy, dazzled by her pretty looks, went straight up and asked her for the first dance, but the girl, regarding his uniform with contempt, refused the invitation, whispering within his hearing to her companion that her father had told her never to dance with a middy. A little while after the governor's daughter was formally introduced to dance with the prince, when the latter turned to the officer who accompanied him, and said, coolly: "Make an excuse; my mother would never allow me to dance with a squaw." This lady is now the great lady of the island, and is noted for her large-hearted charity and conciliation of the Indian tribes.

Our quondam townsman and former gas-inspector, Henry George, is endeavoring to pose in Ireland in two attitudes—"martyr to Saxon tyranny" and "land reformer." As the iron heel of Saxon power was upon him only some twelve hours, he is not looked upon as a fair specimen of crushed and down-trodden Ireland, and is not exciting nearly as much sympathy as though he had been murdered from behind a hedge. His land-confiscation scheme is making slow progress. No land-owner is yet converted to it; and all the communistic and agrarian knaves who have nothing, and are willing to steal the property of others, were converted to the thieving proposition before Henry George gave them plausible reasons therefor.

Those who have read Trevelyan's "Early Life of Charles James Fox," and other memoirs of that period, will remember numerous references to the profligate Earl of Sandwich, but many persons may have forgotten under what circumstances he invented the combination of bread and meat which bears his name the world over. Sandwich was a member of the Hellfire Club, and played very high. On one occasion, when for twenty-four hours he was too engrossed to leave his seat at the gaming-table, he ordered a waiter, by a happy inspiration, to bring him, from time to time, slices of meat placed between slices of bread. The idea took in the club, and immortalized the Earl of Sandwich.

The Irish Land-League has finally collapsed. The Irish World has sent to this fund nearly eight hundred thousand dollars. How much money has been gathered from Irish Americans will probably never be known. It is to be hoped that in San Francisco we shall hear of no more land-league meetings; and that from our laboring poor, Irish political adventurers and Roman Catholic priests will be able to beg no further assistance. The next thing in order will, doubtless, be some scheme of begging in aid of the starving Irish. It is a curious fact that the Irish World, the leading Catholic and Irish paper of America, is owned by a Jew.

The Republican party is virtuous in spots. New York Republicans are indignant at Judge Folger because he accepted a nomination from a convention in which some six seats were held by forged proxies. From San Francisco there were sent to the Republican State Convention more than sixty delegates elected by fraud and violence—elected by the direct manipulation of Estee for Estee; and had it not been for this fraud, Judge Blake would have been the nominee of the Republican party for Governor.

"One of the most distressing social events of the present season," says the Newport correspondent of the New York World, "is the town-talk of the hour. A young lady of rare accomplishments received an invitation to dine some time ago. Her hostess noticed that her spirits were excessively buoyant; but did not dream of the true state of affairs until later, when it was found advisable to send her home. She was then almost senseless from the effects of wine."

At the last meeting of the Board of Supervisors, Mr. Geo. H. Rice was appointed Fire Commissioner. The appointment is an eminently good one, as Mr. Rice is well known in business circles for sterling integrity, and will discharge the duties of the office quite unbiased by political or other outside considerations.

During the manœuvres of the German ironclad squadron in the Baltic last June, a torpedo got mislaid. As soon as the captain of the ironclad Kronprinz, to which it belonged, missed it, he offered a reward for its discovery. It is fifteen feet long, weighty in proportion, and at present a terror to navigators.

A hook agent had the misfortune to break his leg at a camp-meeting, in Butler, Ga., the other day, and while the sympathizers were gathered around, as two surgeons set the limb, he sold three copies of his book.

AN OLD FAVORITE.

The White Squall in the Mediterranean.

On deck, beneath the awning,
I dozing lay and yawning;
It was the gray of dawning,
Ere yet the sun arose;
And above the funnel's roaring,
And the fitful wind's deplo'ring,
I heard the cabin snoring,
With universal nose.
I could hear the passengers snoring—
I envied their snoring—
Vainly I was courting
The pleasure of a doze.
So I lay, and wondered why light
Came not, and watched the twilight,
And the glimmer of the skylight
That shot across the deck;
And theinnacle, pale and steady,
And the dull glimpse of the dead-eye,
And the sparks in fiery eddy
That whirled from the chimney-neck.
Strange company we harbored;
We'd a hundred Jews to larboard,
Unwashed, uncombed, unbarbered—
Jews black, and brown, and gray.
With terror it would seize ye,
And make your souls uneasy,
To see those Rabbis greasy.
Who did naught but scratch and pray.
Their dirty children puking—
Their dirty saucers cooking—
Their dirty fingers booking
Their swarming fleas away.
To starboard Turks and Greeks were—
Whiskered and brown their cheeks were,
Enormous wide their beaks were,
Their pipes did puff away;
Each on his mat allotted
In silence smoked, and squatted,
Whilst round their children trotted
In pretty, pleasant play.
He can't but smile who traces
The smiles on those brown faces,
And the pretty, prattling graces
Of those small heathens gay.
And so the hours kept tolling;
And through the ocean rolling
Went the brave Iberia bowling,
Before the break of day.
When a squall, upon a sudden,
Came o'er the waters scudding;
And the clouds began to gather,
And the sea was lashed to lather,
And the lowering thunder grumbled,
And the lightning jumped and tumbled,
And the ship, and all the ocean,
Woke up in wild commotion.
Then the wind set up a howling,
And the poodle-dog a yowling,
And the cocks began a crowing,
And the old cow raised a howling
As she heard the tempest blowing;
And fowls and geese did cackle,
And the cordage and the tackle
Began to shriek and crackle;
And the rushing water soaked all,
From the seamen in the fo'ksal
To the stokers, whose black faces
Peered out of their head-places;
And the captain he was bawling,
And the sailors pulling, hauling,
And the quarter-deck tarpauling
Was shivered in the squalling;
And the passengers awaken,
Most pitifully shaken;
And the steward jumps up, and hastens
For the necessary basins.
Then the Greeks they groaned and quivered,
And they knelt, and moaned, and shivered,
As the plunging waters met them,
And splashed and overset them;
And they called in their emergence
Upon countless saints and virgins;
And their marrowbones are bended,
And they think the world is ended.
And the Turkish women for'ard
Were frightened and behorrored;
And, shrieking and bewildering,
The mothers clutched their children.
The men sang: "Allah! Illah!
Mashallah Bismillah!"
As the warring waters doused them,
And splashed them, and soused them;
And they called upon the Prophet,
Who thought but little of it.
Then all the fleas in Jewry
Jumped up and bit like fury;
And the progeny of Jacob
Did on the main-deck wake up,
(I wot those greasy Rabbins
Would never pay for cabins);
And each man moaned and jabbared in
His filthy Jewish gabardine,
In woe and lamentation,
And howling consternation.
And the splashing water drenches
Their dirty brats and wenches;
And they crawl from bales and benches,
In a hundred thousand stench.
Then a Prussian captain of Lancers
(Those tight-laced, whiskered prancers)
Came on the deck astonished,
By that wild squall admonished,
And wondering, cried: "Potz tausend,
Wie ist der Sturm jetzt brausend?"
And looked at Captain Lewis,
Who calmly stood and blew his
Cigar in all the bustle,
And scorned the tempest's tussle.
And oft we've thought hereafter
How he beat the storm to laughter;
For well he knew his vessel
With that vain wind could wrestle;
And when a wreck we thought her,
And doomed ourselves to slaughter,
How gayly he fought her,
And through the bubbl' brought her,
And as the tempest caught her,
Cried: "George, some brandy and water!"
And when, its force expended,
The harmless storm was ended,
And as the sunrise splended
Came blushing o'er the sea—
I thought, as day was breaking,
My little girls were waking,
And smiling and making
A prayer at home for me.

—William Makepeace Thackeray.

SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS.

Among all the new fashions that I saw this week, the trimmings for both cloaks and dresses mostly claimed attention. The trimmings now used are admirably adapted for all kinds of combinations. One kind of trimming is called chenille gimp. It can be employed in the wider widths for cloaks, and for dresses in the narrower. It comes in three widths, from two to four and a half inches, and ranges in price from one dollar and seventy-five cents up to three dollars and seventy-five cents. It may be obtained in all colors, although there are different designs in black. This open-work gimp shows a variety of figures, cut out and finished with an edge something like the soutache embroidery. Accompanying these gimps are ornaments to match, composed of chenille. They come in large and small designs, to suit the taste of the purchaser. Then there are the ornamented gimps in satin cords of all colors. They run from half an inch to four inches, and are marked all the way from twenty-five cents up to seven dollars and fifty cents. The favorite pattern displays wheels as large as fifty-cent pieces. Others have leaves, among which the grape leaf receives the most favor. There is another new gimp, that very much resembles the last mentioned. It is in crochet work, and is even more expensive. There are also some pretty novelties in fringe, especially the chenille fringe, which makes an exceedingly pretty and appropriate finish for the chenille gimp, and differs very materially from the same-named fringe of last year. This comes at from one to five dollars per yard, mostly in black. The widest is sold principally for cloaks made of expensive material. Another new and handsome heading for this fringe, where the gimp is not used, is one known as the marabout trimming, which looks as though quantities of the marabout feathers had been collected and placed on a satin foundation. This is selling at all the way from sixty cents to four dollars. Among the mourning fringes there are two which particularly caught my eye. One is completely of tape, a quarter of an inch wide and about three and a half inches in length; but the neater and prettier of the two, made also of tape, has each strip covered with little drop-balls of crape. This, I imagine, would look well upon a garment. It is understood that fringe will play a very conspicuous part in the toilettes of the coming winter. As to buttons, large ones seem to give most promise. The small ones are beginning to drop out of favor. I saw many pretty designs, especially in oxidized and carved pearl. The buttons come in two sizes, to correspond—the larger ones intended for the skirt, and those a size smaller for the waist. New trimming are also shown for the adornment of such things as ties, lambequins, table-covers, etc. They are peculiar tassels, pompons, acorns, and little buoches of drops that look like currants. This work is of chenille, and it comes in the loveliest of tints, such as shell pink, olive, olive bronze, terra-cotta, and charming shades of blue. There are cords to go with them that are rich and beautiful. The style in veiling seems to be at a stand-still, unless it be, perhaps, the "Ernani," or, as it is more apt to be called, the sewing-silk veiling. It is of a thick and close texture, and yet easy to look through. At one store I saw some pretty little affairs which were only produced in the middle of the week. They are handkerchiefs for the neck; and, although of linen, or some such fabric, they have the appearance of something between cashmere and crape. The corner for the back of the neck contains embroidery of tambour work; the edges of some are scalloped and finished with the same kind of embroidery, while others are hemmed in every delicate tint. The price is one dollar and a quarter a piece. The fichu has grown so in size that it now resembles a shawl, and is generally worn in the Spanish fashion. The latest importation of these are in Spanish and guipure laces, which make a handsome combination, the foundation appearing to be of the guipure and the figures of the Spanish part. The three I saw were marked respectively ten, twenty, and thirty-two dollars. A new necktie has been introduced, of surah satin. The latest fashions in pocket handkerchiefs are those in linen lawn, colored, and ornamented with embroidery, either of a darker shade to correspond, or in contrasting colors. For instance, the lightest shade of blue has an embroidery of a darker shade; a shrimp pink is embroidered in blue or blue or black; a dark blue is embroidered in lighter blue, rose, and lemon colors; red embroidery appears on a terra-cotta; and a pale sea-green has two shades of blue to show it off. In hosiery, the most noticeable variations are the new domino patterns; and the prettiest of these are the light crushed strawberry shade or the terra-cotta squares on a blue ground. The "Sarah Bernhardt" gloves are growing longer every fresh importation, both in dressed and undressed kid. They now reach to the shoulders, being in length equal to twenty or twenty-two buttons. Many of them appear stitched on the back, and are as much sought for as the plain ones. The undressed kid are very much used for evening wear, and come in all shades and tints. They sell for four dollars and a half, and the dressed of the same length sell for four dollars. There are also all the dark shades for street or carriage wear, that are selling at from two dollars up to five dollars a pair. There are silk mits, equal in length to the Bernhardt brand, and of the most delicate shades of silk. In a warm climate they are worn in the street, but here in San Francisco they are left alone, except for evening use. A decided innovation in lace is the "Helvetia," which comes in both black and white, but in no other colors, as most lace does. In pattern it resembles a combination of Spanish and guipure, the mesh being of the guipure and the other part of Spanish lace design. It is intended principally for dress trimmings. This lace comes in four widths, and ranges in price from one dollar up to six dollars. It is something quite new and promises to be much in vogue. It is certainly very showy and very pronounced in appearance. Being so rich in appearance, it can easily be put on plain, and, when placed upon a colored fabric, especially satin, it has the advantage of showing the gloss of the under material very decidedly. In the variety the mesh differs, as in some it is filled in blocks and in others it is in squares. In fact, all heavy meshed lace is much in fashion. The same patterns are beginning to appear in cashmere, which is destined to be much used in the decoration of wools.

October 13, 1882.

THE GRANGER CONVENTION.

How Agricultural Wiseacres Lent Themselves to Political Schemers.

The object of the Grangers' Convention was for two specific purposes; viz., to nominate Railroad Commissioners and Judges of the Supreme Court. This is an assumption of one of two things—either the farmers, as a class, have larger interests in railroad management and judicial decisions than any other, or they are possessed of that superior knowledge concerning questions of transportation and law that makes it proper for them to advise in reference to the election of commissioners and judges. These assumptions are both false. Farmers have not so large an interest in transportation as the commercial classes, and they know less about the intricate minutiae of the carrying trade than does the merchant. The farmers, as a class, have less interest in the judiciary than any other, unless it be the manual laborers; and we risk their indignation in remarking that, as a class, they are not comparable in intelligence with several others who of late years have been more distinguished for modesty than they. The fact is, this granger business has been somewhat overdone of late, and we take the liberty to remark that the failure of granger banks, granger insurance companies, cooperative granger warehouses, granger exchanges, stores, and restaurants, is suggestive of the fact that the granger intelligence is not of the highest or most practical order. The failure of the producer to get along without the middleman, ought to suggest to farmers that perhaps it would be well if they would go beyond the farmer class to get some of the material necessary to compose legislative assemblies, constitutional conventions, and political parties. We have great respect for intelligent agriculturists; we have respect for agriculturists who are not intelligent, if they are industrious and honest; but when they undertake to run the world on their own account; to make laws, make constitutions, establish insurance companies and banks, do the business of merchants, control transportation, and choose the judges of the courts, they are simply undertaking what they have not the brains to accomplish.

The first honest granger who rolled up his trousers and waded to the front of the Stockton convention was a liquor-dealer in San Francisco—one Harrison, whose honorable vocation it is to import beer from Milwaukee, and who has quarreled with the railroad company over the cost per carload of his imported swipes. If the farmer must drink whisky, beer, and wine, it ought to suggest itself to these growers of hops, barley, corn, and wheat, and to the growers of vines, that it would be better to encourage their own home productions, than to encourage the brewers of Wisconsin, the distillers of Kentucky, and the importers of French wines, whose productions come in competition with their own industries. Is there any farmer so dull as not to know that he is directly interested in the growth of his own fields? Is there a wheat farmer so obtuse as not to know that high freight charges upon costly articles of imported merchandise enable railroads to export his produce at less rates? Is there any farmer so hairless as not to comprehend the fact that the railroads are the natural and only competitors with ships in the transportation of all produce grown for foreign markets? And does he not understand that the railroad can not monopolize the grain carriage, except by handling it at less rates than by ocean navigation? When Mr. Harrison disclosed his other grievances—viz., that he was not cheerful in paying his hills, and protested against them, and had to be reminded that one-third of his railroad charges were advanced to Eastern roads—even the dullest-minded granger should have dropped upon his motives. "Every little helps," as the old lady said when she emptied her tea-pot into the sea. The farmers' convention was congratulated by this one liquor-dealer, that, by his accession to the convention of grangers, "the merchants and farmers had united;" and "now," says the grandiloquent vender of bottled beer, "now that we have united, it will be a dark, cold, and gloomy day for the railroad." When the three tailors of Tooley Street met and declared that "we, the people of England, do hereby resolve," they doubtless regarded themselves as the embodied wisdom and patriotism of the United Kingdom, and we have no doubt this worthy Mr. Harrison regards himself as did the chivalrous Knight of the Sorrowful Countenance, when he set out with squire and Rosinante to redress the wrongs of all the oppressed of Spain.

Perhaps the merchants of San Francisco will not thank this self-appointed champion for the admission that they have been "so ground down by the iron heel of monopoly that they have lost their manhood;" that the merchants are "so cowardly, and have so enslaved themselves, that they dare not come out openly and express their opinions." We do not believe the statement of Mr. Harrison, and we declare that in our opinion it is not true that any considerable number, or any number, of respectable merchants authorized him to say to the farmers in convention that the merchants were in sympathy with a movement which they had not the courage to openly join. Such allies would deserve the contempt of the farmer, as Mr. Harrison deserves the contempt of every merchant, if in his personal contest with the railroad he has misrepresented the merchants. If Mr. Harrison has told the truth, the San Francisco merchants are a set of contemptible cowards. If Mr. Harrison has not told the truth—then Mr. Harrison has not told the truth. The fact is, gentlemen grangers, the merchants have as little to complain of as you have, and they have more sense than you have, because demagogues have not as yet been able to get them into convention to be led by the nose by a set of politicians who lose no opportunity to sneer at "old hay-seed" when they have no longer any use for him. The history of the merchants of San Francisco is in proof that, when occasion demanded, they have assumed responsibilities that make the vindication of their character for courage altogether unnecessary. This whisky granger was applauded for his utterances; but the anti-débris delegates—men fighting for their homes against gravel-sluicers—were denied admission. The complaints of a bottled-beer vender, and of one Patterson, a Mussel Slough prisoner, were allowed to be ventilated; but men fighting against the ruin and desolation that menace their farms and imperil their fortunes, and threaten to drive them penniless from their homes, must be content with a resolution.

The outcome of all this mountain-labor was six blind mice for Railroad Commissioners and Board of Equalization—candidates chosen alternately from the Democratic and Republican tickets, with the exception of John Doyle, Esq. The farmers have not, perhaps, as yet been informed that the Board of Equalization has been knocked into a cocked hat by the decisions of the courts, and all that these "equalizers" are compelled to do is to draw the salaries which the farmers are taxed to pay. For Railroad Commissioners they have chosen W. W. Foote, Democrat, Charles Reed, Republican, and John Doyle, independent. The following absurd, and altogether improper, resolution was passed with few, if any, dissenting voices:

Resolved, That each candidate nominated for the office of Railroad Commissioner be requested to sign the following pledge: I, —, candidate for the office of Railroad Commissioner, pledge my sacred word and honor that I will, if elected to said office, within thirty days after my election, vote for a resolution reducing fares and freights within the limits of the State of California, upon the Southern and Central railroads, at least twenty per cent. upon the rates now charged; I will favor an immediate investigation into the actual cost of said roads, and into the rates of fares and freights, and will vote for such additional reduction as will be fair and just between the railroad corporations and the people.

Resolved, That in the event of any candidate so nominated failing to sign such written pledge and send the same to the chairman of this Convention within ten days, his name shall be taken from the ticket, and another name substituted on the ticket.

When it is reflected that of the Railroad Commissioners two are entirely ignorant of the subject-matter they are to consider; when, by all intelligent persons, it is conceded that the regulation of fares and freights is one of the most complex and intricate of business propositions, demanding years of study and years of experience; when it is considered that the office of Railroad Commissioner is a judicial one, and that the "fixing" of the rates of fares and freights "fixes" the value of railroad property, and involves a question in which more than a hundred millions of dollars are at stake, and is liable to interfere with all the important business interests of the Pacific Coast—the intelligent and honest man will appreciate how monstrous is the proposition involved, how base, mean, and dishonorable must have been the demagogues who moved it, and how dense and despicable the ignorance that allowed itself to be used by the designing political knaves who engineered the whole business in the name of a Granger Convention. Such an act as this makes the word "granger" a synonym for both knave and fool.

We can understand the sentiment that resents the oppressions which of seeming necessity attend the administration of great wealth; we can readily believe that great corporations are not innocent of usurpations of power; we are not unmindful of the greed of wealth, and we know something of the insolence of moneyed power; we know that wealth and power are oftentimes abused; but there is no intelligent man, friend or enemy of transportation companies, who does not see that this resolution is the result of vindictive ignorance. Only two railroads are designated for this blind effort at confiscation—the Central and Southern Pacific. Mr. Donohoe's road through Sonoma Valley, the English road up the coast, the narrow-gauge to Santa Cruz, the coast line of steamers, the interior steam lines, are all overlooked, while the commissioners are to pledge in writing their "sacred word and honor" that within "thirty days" they will reduce the fares and freights upon the specified roads twenty per cent. John Doyle and Mr. Reed will not take this pledge, and we do not believe Mr. Foote will. We regard these gentlemen as honorable, and we feel assured that no intelligent man who is honorable will, in order to acquire a judicial office, pledge himself to a specific decision of a question which, at the time of his election and within thirty days thereafter, he will not have had time to consider.

It is probable that there was no owner of land in the Stockton gathering, the value of whose property has not been largely enhanced by railroad building; not one who does not move his produce cheaper now than before the construction of railroads; not one who does not have cheaper fares than when he depended upon other accommodations; not one who does not know that under the operation of business rules, competition, and increasing trade, rates of transportation are constantly decreasing, the tendency at all times being downward. As an illustration: the ruling rates on wheat to San Francisco from Jacinto and points on the upper Sacramento River, before the Oregon Division was completed, were from six to eight dollars per ton. In 1875 the ruling rate from Jacinto was five dollars and fifty cents per ton; in 1876, four dollars and seventy-five cents to three dollars; in 1877, three dollars and twenty-five cents to two dollars and fifty cents. Before the Western Division of the Central Pacific Railroad was completed, the ruling rates of freight between San Francisco and Sacramento were four dollars per ton, weight measurement, and piece freight equivalent to eight to ten dollars per ton dead weight. Just before this portion of the road was completed, freight rates were reduced to two dollars and fifty cents per ton by the Navigation Company, to meet the prospective competition by rail; but as freight was taken at weight and measurement, the rates on general merchandise were at least four times greater than at the present time—the rates now ranging from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents. The original charter maximum of freight per ton per mile was fifteen cents; it was reduced by the company to an average of 2.166 cents per ton per mile in 1881, and will, in time, be further reduced as the traffic increases. The farmer is informed that the railroad pays no taxes, and thus his own rate of taxation is increased. The fact is, the Central and Southern corporations paid two hundred and eighty-one thousand dollars of taxes in the year 1880, the same amount in the year 1881, and this is independent of the State Board assessment, upon which two hundred and forty-six thousand dollars have been paid. From the year 1863 to 1881 the railroads paid five million nine hundred and seventy thousand and one dollar and fifty-eight cents. These figures are from official sources. The building of railroads has not appreciably increased the cost of government, and to the extent of nearly six millions of dollars have the farmer and property-owner been aided in supporting the machinery of government within the last eighteen years. The farmers of Sacramento and Placer have been informed that these counties gave their hands in aid of the C. P. R. R. They also know, if they are honest enough to remember the fact, that this money has been refunded by the purchase of stock, and the counties found a profit in the transaction.

There is an occasional granger who is ignorant enough to think that railroad freights appreciably increase the price of such merchandise as enters into his daily use, and that he has to pay an increased price for goods at the country store, because of exorbitant freights. Let us consider this for a moment. Let us take Summer, on the southern road, three hundred and fourteen miles from San Francisco; the tariff being an average of one dollar and twenty cents for one hundred pounds. The granger who chews plug or navy twist tobacco, at forty cents per pound, pays for its freight one cent and two-tenths of a cent; for an axe, weighing six pounds, and costing two dollars, he pays seven cents; for a pound of tea, soap, soda, saleratus, he pays one cent and a fraction additional; for a dozen linen shirts he pays nine mills; for twelve pairs of cowhide boots five cents and a half; for twenty-two yards of calico, enough to make two dresses for his wife, four mills; for five yards of black silk, broad measure, worth three dollars per yard, he pays at the rate of one mill per yard; for a barrel of whisky, weighing four hundred pounds and retailed at five dollars per gallon, he pays one and two-tenths cents per gallon freight; for kerosene and coal oil he pays one and two-tenths cents a gallon; for coffee, worth forty cents per pound, the freight is one cent and two-tenths additional. We simply suggest these things to the indignant granger, and as a remedy would hint at the propriety of chewing less tobacco and drinking less whisky as a less expensive remedy for existing evils, than to unite with Mr. Harrison, of the firm of Richards & Harrison, whisky dealers, San Francisco, in the getting up of granger conventions in aid of politicians who desire to confiscate property that does not belong to them.

A reduction of freights on this class of goods would be of no benefit to the consumer. The merchant has fixed his prices on the cost of the articles, plus insurance, interest, rents, freights, and the general expense of conducting his business. Any one of these items, if thrown off, would make no difference in the price he must in most cases sell for. In fact, the amount of the reduction would be in fractions, and too small and troublesome to calculate. We would also suggest to the land-owner who is desirous of an increase of population that the railroad is now nearly completed to the Gulf of Mexico; that it opens up a new avenue for European and Southern immigration; and that it is in contemplation by Messrs. Stanford and Crocker to put on a line of ships that shall bear outward cargoes of wheat, and return with men, women, and children to purchase and cultivate the unoccupied lands of our State, to give new energy to our industries, and to give increased values to our property. Let the farmer contemplate these things, and then coax his wife to comb his hair with a three-legged stool for being stupid enough to combine with a set of selfish politicians, and for endeavoring to embarrass an enterprise so important, valuable, and indispensable to himself as is the railroad system of California. We hope our farmer friends will take this scold of ours as kindly as we mean it. We look to the country for honest men in politics; there we look for patriotism and all the virtues. But when we looked to the Granger Convention at Stockton for sense on the railroad question we were woefully disappointed.

The amenities of journalism are not strictly observed in the rural districts of Missouri. The Marble Hill Reflector refers to a rival as follows: "The ignorant, contemptible, mean, sneaking, cowardly, self-important, low-flung, dirty, outlandish, back-biting, self-styled 'politician,' dead beat, whisky bloated, backwoods bummer, log-cabin child of misfortune, heer-inflated, big-headed, soft-skulled, overrated swamp angel, who claims to edit the Swamp paper, thinks the editor of the Reflector terribly ignorant. Let him look at the twenty-seven mistakes in his last issue; let him remember the 'blatant' in the issue before; and let him not forget that he used 'ardorous' for arduous in a leading local in his issue of August 24. Oh, you dirty whelp; you poor, crawling, creeping viper; you dirty scum of the dirty, stinking, stagnated swamp; you mean, big-jawed, slab-sided, knock-kneed, how-legged, handered-shanked pup; lost, as you are, to honesty, to principle, to justice, to common decency, do you imagine you can rule God's country—the hills? Go back into the cesspool from which you have crawled, and there remain. Don't come out of your den to abuse respectable people. Go to school, Kelly, and you may learn something yet." Kelly's reply is awaited with interest.

An advertisement in a Philadelphia paper recently called for a partner in a literary enterprise, and among various extraordinary responses was one which, in construction and spelling, is hardly likely to find a counterpart. The writer describes his acquirements in full; among other things, his passion for Goethe, and, above all, for "Faust." Of that he says: "I believe that made me sick; it took such an effect on me that it laid me low, to the crisis of my death, with the yellow jaundies and rheumatism. Which was all owing to me setting nigh eight hours a day, which made my blood lethargic and liver topid, and from below my body I was like ice, and above like a phoenix-fire. But the thought, when I layed low, of not being able to finish the rest of Goethe was like sinking into dark Eternity with only half a soul. Just think if you ever read 'Faust' to stop forever in the midst of that super-human piece that fiend Mefistophiles. And that only one thought I believe is what saved my life."

A young man in an Illinois town stepped into a church-door a moment one Sunday while the services were going on, and the smart minister saw him, and shouted: "Go out, young man, she is not here." The young man was embarrassed for a moment, and then remembering the several ministerial scandals that were in the courts, he said, loud enough for all to hear him: "Yes, she is, you old duffer; you have got her hid behind the organ, and you want to go home with her yourself." The minister blushed, and said the services would close by singing the doxology.—Peck's Sun.

A church in a country village recently circulated a paper among the congregation asking for contributions "for the purpose of paying the organist and a boy to blow the same."

SPEEDING A COMING GUEST.

M. de la Baste's Account of the Chateau and Its Effect on Count X.

SCENE I.—The platform of a railroad station in the country. From first-class carriage enter COUNT X, who is met by young M. DE LA BASTE.

M. de la Baste—[taking the traveler's coat and satchel with enthusiasm!—Glad to see you, old fellow, and they'll be glad to see you up at the chateau. They were getting quite anxious for fear you mightn't come.

Count X—Anxious? Why, I wrote that I would accept their invitation with pleasure.

M. de la Baste—I know, but they were afraid that you had done it out of politeness; perhaps because they were aware that you are so much in demand in swell society—

Count X—[modestly!—Oh, nonsense!

M. de la Baste—That their little place could have but few attractions. It isn't very swell, you know; poor fare, I must say, and the wine is abominable. Stick to cider—the cider is good.

Count X—You surprise me. De Candy always seemed to me a decided gourmand.

M. de la Baste—So he is, when he dines out. Still, as you have come prepared to rough it, we'll have a jolly time. Only you'd better sleep on the floor; the beds are—if they were only hard and too short I wouldn't mind, but—

Count X—You amaze me! Madame de Candy seemed to me the model of neatness.

M. de la Baste—Oh, she is, she is! One of the best managers in the country, but she is in love with the gardener, and the housekeeper is jealous, and so things have been neglected this summer. Besides, the poor woman has probably got discouraged trying to do anything with such a tumble-down old barrack.

Count X—Tumble-down? Why, I thought the chateau of Candy was a show-place!

M. de la Baste—It is imposing and picturesque; still there is so much malaria from the moat that they would like to sell it if they could. Part of the wing our rooms are in blew down last night, but I guess we won't have another such storm this summer.

Count X—But, hang it all, they should have let a fellow know when—

M. de la Baste—You see, they want to keep up their social position as long as possible, and every guest they can ring in— How long are you going to stay?

Count X—I had thought of staying a fortnight, but I'll find some excuse for cutting my visit short.

M. de la Baste—But come along. Let me see to your baggage. Candy is at loggerheads with the railroad people—passed a bad bill on them and vowed he hadn't, or something of the kind—and if they knew you were going to the chateau the beggars'd smash one of your trunks, or lose a bat-box, or something.

Count X—Oh, thanks! But will there be room for all the luggage in the trap?

M. de la Baste—I guess so. The old shandyman isn't elegant, but it's roomy and solid. I'll shake you up a bit, but that'll give you an appetite for dinner. The horse stumbles a good deal, but the road is all down-hill, so we'll be there in a couple of hours.

Count X—But, I say, they don't put on much style at the chateau.

M. de la Baste—How can they? But they give us the best they have. Is this your dressing-case? Solid silver tops to the bottles, and so on? Well, don't leave it on your table; put it in your trunk. There have been a good many things lost lately.

Count X—Bless me! And are Madame de Persil and Nadje Sangolf there?

M. de la Baste—Catch them! They've been there once. They want something more lively than a coterie of snuffy old dowagers that do nothing but play whist. I wouldn't mind it so much if they didn't cheat.

Count X—Cheat? In Candy's house? He, the one man the club looked up to? The one man that disputed points at cards could be left to?

M. de la Baste—They say he stands in with that old harpy, Madame d'Archoutan, but I don't believe it myself.

Count X—You are right not to believe it, for Candy is above any such suspicion.

M. de la Baste—I am sure I hope so; but he ought not to give any countenance to such reports by his concealment—his mysterious conduct.

Count X—Concealment? Mystery? I don't understand.

M. de la Baste—Neither do I; but stories have got out, and there are rumors that the chateau is to be raided by the police. It can't be that he is a counterfeiter. None of the guests can have squealed about money lost at cards. Probably, though, it is only ill feeling against him as a Reactionary; all the peasants round here are Republicans.

Count X—That must be it! Political malevolence.

M. de la Baste—Precisely; and some of his victims are stirring up the mob to avenge their private injuries. Candy was shot at the other day, and we expect an attack on the chateau some night.

Count X—But, good heavens, why?

M. de la Baste—Oh, I don't exactly know, but Candy has ruined no end of the peasants by borrowing money of them, and as for women—

Count X—Women? Candy? Women?

M. de la Baste—Maybe they weren't injured fathers, but only creditors; still, a man doesn't go to dun a fellow with a gun, does he?

Count X—Bless my soul, this is almost incredible, and I'm no end obliged to you for letting me know—it's friendly! But Candy is innocent—he must be innocent—he ought to have his traducers before the courts—

M. de la Baste—How can he? The minute he did, it would all come out.

Count X—All come out? What? Candy is a respectable man—not a genius, but a gentleman; his wife is reserved, but clever; their married daughter is dressy, but there is no harm in her, and little Louise—

M. de la Baste—Well, of course you'll find out for yourself; but since you ask me as a friend, it is only right that I should tell you in advance what suspicious facts there are.

They say that that game-keeper Candy shot by accident—the one with the pretty wife—well, never mind; of course it can't be proved that it was murder. I leave it to you, now, if it isn't pushing things to the verge of public scandal for the gardener to tackle the butler with a spade during dinner time because he thinks the lady of the house is paying too much attention to the butler? As for Madame de Portefranc, you'll find out all about her when the divorce case comes up next winter—that is, if her husband doesn't commit suicide or kill her and the other fellow before then. And as for Louise—by Jove, sir, I should never have believed it of her—a mere child, just come from the convent, but she is a confirmed dipsomaniac, though the police magistrate—but he is an enemy of the family—wouldn't accept that plea when he sent her up for shoplifting. But, come along—I've kept you waiting with my gossip. Now that you're posted, you'll enjoy the chateau; it's funnier than Zola.

[Count X murmurs an inaudible lie about going back to Paris for his umbrella, buys a return ticket, and flies from the accursed spot.]

SCENE II.—The grand terrace at the chateau. Present—MONSIEUR DE CANDY, his wife, their daughters; MADAME DE PERSIL, the reigning beauty of the season; the PRINCESS SANGOLF, etc., etc. To them enter MONSIEUR DE LA BASTE.

Omnès—And where is the count?

M. de la Baste—Gone back to Paris!! I scared him! [Loud applause and cries of "Well done, de la Baste!" "Our preserver!" "Saved! Saved!" "Let's have breakfast!" "The ass!" "The idiot!" "I breathe again!" "Hurrah for de la Baste!" Quick Curtain.—New York World translation from the French.

The Same Old Lie.

Four or five of us were enjoying our last pipe for the night in the smoking-room at Craigfalloch. We had had a long day's tramp over the moors, and the conversation lay chiefly between Jack Winstanley and Charley Vane. These two had been at Oxbridge about the same time, and discovered that, though they had never met there, they had a lot of friends in common. Of course, they began telling each other who had gone into the church, who into the civil service, who was dragging out life at an up-country station in India, who had got shot in South Africa, and who had made a fortune in colored yarns.

"Did you know Merton?" asked Winstanley.

"I think I've met him. Wasn't he a St. Bridget's man?"

"Yes; a tall, pale fellow, if you remember, with a straw-colored hat, and a delicate gossamer beard that he never would shave off."

"Rather good family, eh?"

"Dare say. He was a very decent fellow, if he was a little strait-laced. A parson now, of course. Did you ever bear of a visit he once got from 'a fine old English gentleman, all of the olden time?'"

"No. Tell us the story."

"Well, Merton was really a good fellow, but he had been brought up at home—coached at the family rectory, you understand? He never got into scrapes like the rest of us, and in fact was the most irreproachable soul you ever saw. One term, Millbank's eldest sister, a mature lady of some thirty summers, came down to stay with some friends near Oxbridge, and the day after her arrival, wishing to give dear William a surprise, she ran over to see him early in the afternoon. Of course, he got a cup of coffee for her, and they were having a pleasant chat in the sitting-room, when the scout comes in with a card, 'Mr. Edward Mandelay.' 'The gen'man sends his compliments, sir, and hopes it would be convenient for you to see his rooms. He had these rooms, he says, sir, when he was up here fifty years ago, and he has a great fancy to see them again.'"

"Very natural, very natural, I'm sure. I shall be delighted, Thomas. But, wait a moment. Agatha!"

"Will it look odd for me to be here, dear?"

"Oh, no; but, you see, if the old gentleman sees you here he'll be tempted to sit down and talk, and we shall lose all the morning. Here's the scout's closet. Run in, and I'll bring you a chair. I'll get rid of him as soon as I can."

"The fact is, that Merton was so awfully afraid of being chaffed that he wouldn't have had it come to our ears on any account that a stranger had found him entertaining a lady in his rooms. Agatha was rather shy, and very glad to take refuge in the scout's closet."

"Presently in comes Squire Mandelay. A fine, bluff old fellow, something over seventy, a little shaky on his pins, red face, white mutton-chop whiskers, white hat, check tie—you know the style?"

"Happy to make your acquaintance, sir. Hope I'm not in your way. The scout told you, perhaps, that I used to have these rooms—ab! a good fifty-three years ago—before your father was born, I dare say? Dear me! How time flies! It all looks like yesterday—like yesterday! The same old view into the master's garden. Yes, the same old view. The same old pictures, too; and the old boy got up and tapped the frames; 'and, I declare, the same old sofa! Dear me!'"

"Next, he walked round the room, stopping at the fireplace. 'Same old mantel-piece!' Then he got to the door of the scout's room, and turned the handle."

"Same old— He had just opened the door, when he caught the flutter of a petticoat, and suddenly closed it."

"Ah! says he, shaking his head, 'same old games! same old games!'"

"Sir," gasps Merton, in an awful funk, 'sir, that's my sister! She—that is—'

"Well, I declare! Same old lie! Same old lie!" —Whitehall Review.

On the banks of the Kennebec River, a few miles below Bath, Maine, lives an old lady. Years ago she cried so violently when about to be married that it was with difficulty she could be pacified. On being interrogated as to the cause of her great grief, she replied that it made her sad to think she was to live so near the steep bank of the river, where her children would daily be in danger of falling over and being drowned. The lady has now lived there about fifty years and has never had a child.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

When Mr. Evarts was Secretary of State, he was one of a party who visited the Natural Bridge in Virginia. Of course, the story was told that Washington had once stood there and thrown a silver dollar completely over the bridge. Some of the party pooh-poohed this assertion, but Mr. Evarts gravely rebuked them, saying, "You forget how much farther a dollar went in those days."

"Garçon, the bill." "Here it is, sir." "Ha! what's this! Here's a mistake!" "A mistake, sir! Impossible, sir! Never are allowed to have mistakes, sir. Only one thing there isn't in the house, sir!" "What do you call this but a mistake—you've spelled 'côtelette' 'côtelete.'" "Oh, I beg your pardon, sir. I'll rectify that." Takes the bill and quickly writes: "To 1 tea, 15 cents."

"What a methodical fellow you are, Brown," said Filkins, who had stepped into Brown's office during the latter's absence. "Why, what do you mean?" asked Brown, who had just entered. "Mean?" echoed Filkins; "to think that you should lock all your drawers up when you are only going out for five minutes! 'Tisn't likely that anybody would meddle with your papers." "Of course not," replied Brown; "but how did you find out the drawers were locked?" —Boston Transcript.

The company happened to be discussing the subject of nocturnal assaults upon unoffending passers-by. "For my part," says Doctor X—, "I was attacked only once in my life. I had been practicing about a year in a town of some importance, and one night I was set upon by four masked men, beaten to a jelly, sir, and left for dead." "Did you never discover the authors of the outrage, doctor?" "Yes, sir; starving undertakers, sir—starving undertakers." —New York World.

A grave and dignified D. D., after listening to the recitation of the catechism by a class of children, was asked to make a few remarks to them, whereupon he arose and said: "I desire, my young friends, to express an unqualified approbation of this exercise. I regard the catechism as the most admirable epitome of religious belief extant." The superintendent pulled his sleeve and asked him to explain the word epitome, which he elucidated as follows: "By epitome, children, I mean—that is—it is synonymous with synopsis."

"Never despise small things," soliloquized Robert, as he stooped to pick up a pin; "if I take care of the small things the great things will take care of themselves." Richard, who had passed that way a moment before, saw the pin, but disregarded it. He had not gone far ere his eyes fell on a bright half-dollar. Said he to himself: "I think I will gather this in." So he picked it up, and after having bought a whole paper of pins he had quite a sum of money remaining. When Robert arrived where the half-dollar had been, the half-dollar, with the assistance of Richard, had taken care of itself.

Many years ago one of the Parisian theatres came under the management—or at least the proprietorship—of a rich native of the Ottoman Empire, who nevertheless kept a keen eye on the accounts. Among the items of expenditure was one of three francs a week for meat for eight or ten cats kept to protect the canvas scenes, etc., from the ravages of the rats. This item was promptly disavowed by the Turkish proprietor, who wrote upon the margin of the bill the following dilemma: "If the cats eat the rats, wherefore the meat? If they don't, wherefore the cats?" —Paris Gaulois.

A rural magistrate is sitting in judgment upon the petty offenders of his bailiwick. "What is this case? The old woman is charged with stealing carrots, eh? I fine you one franc. Next case!" The next case is called. "Ha! Well, old woman, you are charged with stealing carrots. Guilty, eh? I fine you one franc." And so on, down a monotonous list, until presently the magistrate loses his temper and yells: "Now, then, you old woman, you! Up for stealing carrots, eh? Oh, I know you! I'll put a stop to this! I fine you one thousand francs, and send you to jail for three years. This thing has got to be stopped!" —French Joke.

"I tell you," said Colonel Holcomb, "that smoking is the worst habit that a man can contract. You know I lean very affectionately toward literature, and that I write sketches occasionally. Several days ago I received an order from a literary paper for a story. I was flattered by the compliment, and immediately began work. For years I have been an inveterate smoker, and knew that the effect of tobacco was injurious to my brain, and when I began the story I resolved to quit. I have a strong will, let me remark, but I was surprised at the ease with which I crushed the habit. I wrote with a vigor which I had never felt before, and when night came I went to bed feeling like a hero. I thought of men who struggle with the habit, and smiled when I contemplated my superior strength. The next day I began work again. I wanted to smoke, but I frowned at the desire, and bent my mental energies to the story. I soon conquered the desire, and worked with almost nervous rapidity. Looking up suddenly I saw my meerschaum pipe lying on the mantelpiece. My victory was not complete. 'Ah,' I thought, 'I'll show myself that I am master of the situation,' and, arising, I filled the pipe and placed it on the desk beside me. 'Now I am master,' I mused. 'The enemy is under my very nose and still I resist him. The victory will soon grow commonplace.' I took up the pipe. I would go further. I would light a match and hold it over the tobacco. I took the stem between my teeth and smiled again. Talk about conquering a desire. I struck a match and held it over the pipe." "Well," remarked one of the company, when the Colonel stopped. "I smoked," he continued. "Who's got a pipe?" —Arkansas Traveler.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.

The Argonaut is published every Saturday, at No. 522 California street, by the Argonaut Publishing Company.

Subscription, $4 per year; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.50—payable in advance—postage prepaid. City subscribers served by carriers at $4.50 per year, or 10 cents per week. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents.

News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, No. 417 Washington Street, to whom all orders from the trade should be addressed.

The American News Company, New York, and branches, are Agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut can be ordered from any News Dealer in the United States or Europe.

Persons mailing single copies of the Argonaut must affix a two-cent stamp.

No traveling canvassers employed. Order by mail, or through your local News Dealer.

Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses.

Address all communications to "The Argonaut, 522 California Street, San Francisco."

A. P. STANTON, Business Manager.

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

THE ARGONAUT.

FRANK M. PIXLEY Editor.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1882.

CONTENTS:

Page	Page
EDITORIALS:	MUSICAL NOTES..... 3
The Republican Rout in Ohio	SOCIETY NOTES AND GOSSIP..... 4
—Should a Newspaper Work for	THE AUTHORS' CARNIVAL..... 4
Pay?—A Review of Judge Allen's	AN OLD FAVORITE..... 5
Decision—Some Startling	SAN FRANCISCO FASHIONS..... 5
Figures in the Temperance	THE GRANGER CONVENTION..... 6
Question—The Irish Brigade to the	SPREADING A COMING GUEST..... 7
Front Once More—How Henry	STORYETTES..... 7
George Posed as a Martyr to	THE SAME OLD LIE..... 7
Saxon Tyranny—The Infant	THE VANITY FAIR..... 10
Phenomenon in the Eleventh Ward—	LITERARY NOTES..... 12
The Republicans and their Spot-	INAGLIOS..... 12
ted Virtue..... 2-3	BETSY B.'S LETTER..... 12
A HELMSET FOR HIM..... 2	THE DEATH OF AN ACTRESS..... 12
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS..... 2	THE TUNEFUL LIAR..... 14
THE PRINCE AND THE BEAUTIES..... 3

The Republican party has met with a Waterloo in Ohio. The same causes are at work in California that produced the Ohio result, and it will be a miracle if the entire Democratic ticket, with Stoneman for governor, is not successful in this State. The Republican party has not outlived its usefulness, and the discipline of defeat which it has received in Ohio, and which it is likely to receive in New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and California, are not improbable blessings. This year of chastisement may save the presidential election. It may teach Mr. Arthur at Washington, Mr. Conkling of New York, Mr. Don Cameron of Pennsylvania, and the stalwarts everywhere, that the Republican party is not composed exclusively of office-holders and office-seekers, and that bosses are not deemed indispensable to its management, or the machine to its existence. It is now being run by place-hunters and place-holders, from the White House at Washington to the lighthouse at the Farallones. There are no national issues. There are no distinctive party issues. In Africa it is said that venomous snakes pile themselves in monuments so interlaced and entangled that their hodies form an impervious truncated cone, with their heads sticking out on all sides. From whatever direction the enemy approaches, it is met with forked and hissing tongues, spitting venom, and is struck with fangs that poison. The Republican party may be likened to this monument of monsters, its official heads reaching out to destroy with the venom of abuse, detraction, vilification, and insult every honest Republican who has not his tail within the pile. In this State, and in every town and village within it, are old and honored Republicans who have done gallant service in the cause, some in humble rank and some in leadership, against whom every viperous tongue of office-holder is now wagging an aggressive, vindictive, and devilish war. It is worth a man's reputation to approach the snakes in convention. Under this kind of selfish leadership the party has lost its courage. Its leaders in this State lack either courage, intelligence, or integrity, and some of the most prominent ones lack all these virtues. Enthusiasm has died out of the rank and file. There has been no Republican meeting held in San Francisco, since Mr. Estee's fraudulent nomination, that has had as many persons attending it as there are Federal, State, and municipal office-holders resident in it. The Republican party, in its cowardice and irresolution of purpose, has come just far enough in the direction of temperance and the Sunday law to antagonize all the liquor interests, without securing the temperance vote. It has gone just far enough in the direction of Americanism to alarm and alienate all the foreign vote, without securing the American. It has succeeded in placing itself upon such a questionable anti-monopoly platform, and has nominated such candidates, that no man can tell whether they are the friends or enemies of the railroads. There is nothing honest, sincere, or intelligible in platform or campaign. This election is a scramble for office, both in city and State, which appeals to no honorable sentiment, involves no principle, and the result of which, in fact, concerns nobody but the men who are running for office. We shall not be surprised if the entire Democratic ticket in the State and in the city of San Francisco shall be elected. The defeat of Blake for mayor, Brickwedel for Auditor, and the Board of Education, are all within the possibilities of the 7th of November. It will be a melancholy day when the Pope's Democratic Irish shall have secured the political control of this State and city. There are enough Republicans to prevent this, if they will work together in harmony. It is not easy for General Miller, Governor Perkins, or ex-Governor Low to coax us into the corral, when Estee and Bill Higgins stand ready to lasso us and throw us over the fence. They may get all the office expectants to work together, but, fortunately for the Democracy, there are a great many Republicans who won't submit to the machine, who don't care for the hosses, and who do not think a Democratic victory is any greater calamity than the continuance of a system that subjects decent people to a machine primary, and a party to the control of Irish bosses. Perhaps it may occur to the stalwarts who surround the throne at Washington, that it is not well to attempt to drive half-breeds from the camp. Perhaps the idea may penetrate them that James G. Blaine can not be exorcised, and that, if he has not the power to become the candidate for the Presidency, he is still Warwick and king-maker, and it may penetrate even the dull intellects of our machine party-rulers in California that an army is not sufficient which contains nothing but officers and musicians.

The Chronicle is nothing if not sensational. It would not be the Chronicle if it were not malignant, vindictive, and dishonest. We recall the time when in defense of the Central Pacific Railroad it was an earnest champion. When the Goat Island contest was pending, that journal was foremost in advocating Goat Island as the proper place to receive and distribute merchandise and passengers. Mr. Charles de Young used then to inform the writer of this that he was not paid for his advocacy, and that his zeal for the railroad was because he sincerely believed that the interests of the city of San Francisco and the State of California were identical with the interests of the railroad corporations. At that time the Bulletin and Call were both as earnest in opposition to Goat Island being the railroad terminus, and as bitter and vindictive against Stanford & Co., as they are now in opposition to the Spring Valley Water Company, Webb Howard, Mr. Newlands, and everybody else connected with the company. Their methods of warfare are not dissimilar now against the water company to what they were once against the railroad. We know that the Call and Bulletin were then entirely disinterested in the matter of the ten millions of dollars of bonds which San Francisco was to issue for the St. Louis road, and we know these journals were paid nothing by the railroad companies for the sudden and altogether miraculous conversion and friendship to the railroads, because they have said so, and because they have libeled the Chronicle for asserting to the contrary. We are equally at a loss to account for the present enmity of the Chronicle toward the railroads as for the Bulletin's and Call's friendly attitude. We remember when the Chronicle denounced daily the water company. We can not now explain why it is so friendly. We remember the Alta California's frenzied denunciation of the Dutch Flat wagon-road. The purpose of this writing is not, however, to explain newspaper motives, nor account for newspaper tergiversations, but to suggest to each individual reader that he must take with some grains of salt the statements and opinions of all journals—weekly or daily, friendly or hostile—when they comment on any of the great corporations. Unseen agencies are at work. Unseen interests are exerting influence on every side. And it is only asserting that newspaper men are human when we declare that one and all are working for their own interests. The same motives that control Messrs. Fitch, Pickering, De Young, and MacCrellish, are at work with Charles Webb Howard, Mr. Sharon, and Peter Donahue. Governor Stanford and his associates are no more selfish, mercenary, or tyrannical than the same amount of wealth and power would make the most liberal writer of the most liberal journal in America. There is not a pawnbroker in all the land more anxious for coin than Michael de Young. Even Colonel Jackson, of the Post, is not above the love of lucre. The Record-Union supports the railroad. The Bulletin and Call oppose the water company. The Chronicle abuses the railroads. The Alta advertises the auction houses. The Exchange quotes stocks. The political journals advocate their respective parties. The Examiner is Democratic; the Post Republican. The religious journals advocate the creeds of their churches, and all of them to advance the pecuniary interest of the proprietor. A journal is printed from no higher standpoint than that of personal interest. The journalistic writer is governed by no other or higher motive than impels the lawyer, the physician, the preacher, the scientist, or the literary man. The world works for pay. There are exceptions—most rare—where the Gospel is preached without compensation. There are cases—most rare—where lawyers and doctors work without hire. There are cases—not so rare—where scientific and literary men work for the love of it, or for the after fame. There are unselfish journals, supported for an idea; but they are as rare as water-works erected for the distribution of free water, or railroads for the transportation of freight or passengers without cost.

These thoughts are suggested by the sudden expression of aroused and indignant virtue over Judge Allen's decision in reference to the press. We have often, while in the theatre, observed that the loudest and most clamorous approval of a patriotic or virtuous expression comes from the gallery gods; the most eloquent advocates of labor are those who do not work; an unsuspected harlot is loudest in her denunciation of the crime of concupiscence in a detected erring sister; and we are uncharitable enough to believe, and sufficiently daring to assert, that the loudest blasts of indignant hypocrisy will come from that portion of the press which is the paid advocate of some business interests. We do not know that the Bulletin ever sold itself for coin, but we do know that it has made sudden turns around short corners upon questions in which there was money. We do not know that the Call had any mercenary views when it encouraged the Sand-lot to hum the city, that it might get the small advertisements of the class that was engaged in the riot. We do not know that anybody ever paid the Chronicle for anything, but it wears the good clothes and smiling face of one who has not resisted temptation and been paid for it. We do not know that the Alta ever borrowed money it did not pay, or begged money it did not earn. We do not know that the Sacramento Record-Union ever received an honorarium that it did not confess by a printed admission. We do not know that the Post or Exchange ever received a dollar for promoting any special interest, or that the Examiner was ever subsidized, or that any of the lesser journals have ever received any money for printing or refusing to print. We do not know that the gravel-miner, the League of Freedom, the temperance organizations, Claus Spreckels, or the churches have ever contributed a dollar to any newspaper, and of our own personal knowledge we know of but eight dollars ever paid by any political party, national, State, or city central committee, to any journal, and that was for an advertisement. Nor do we regard all this as of much importance, nor do we regard it as anybody's business to know these things. We judge of a clergyman, and we estimate the sincerity of his motives, by the earnestness of his teachings and the purity of his private life. We form our opinion of lawyer, doctor, or actor by his work, without inquiring as to his fee, retainer, or salary. The journal should be estimated for what it contains, and for the strength and logic of its arguments. Is it right or wrong on public questions? Is it courageous or cowardly? Is it just or otherwise? May it be read with safety by the young? Does it address itself to the reason and intelligence of the old? Is it honest, sincere, clean, and honorable? Is it to be relied upon in its statements of facts? Is it patriotic? Does it favor good government? Does it uphold the law? Does it endeavor to guard property and protect individual rights? If it is doing good in the country; if it is oftener right than wrong; if, in striking the balance, it is accomplishing more of good than evil—then it may be endured. If it is a fawning sycophant; if it is cowardly, mercenary, and insincere; if it is vindictive, passionate, and resentful, unmindful of personal interests or feelings; if it is sensational, nasty, and immoral, pandering to morbid and criminal appetites; if it stands in awe of power, whether that be the power of corporate wealth or the power of the brutal mob; if it is an institution accomplishing more of evil than good—then it is thus estimated, and thus rated, independently of the men who own it or write for it, or the motive that controls it.

Whenever the temperance question shall be emancipated from the control of preachers and teetotalers, fanatics and fools, and turned over to statesmen and publicists, and practical, sensible men, who will consider it as the great question of political economy, the sooner it will make progress in a healthful and practical direction. We were more than pleased when the Prohibition Convention turned out its forty half-temperance parsons, and determined to let itself no longer be managed by people who pray one way and vote another, who think temperance a question to be considered at Wednesday evening prayer-meetings and not at the polls, and who prate of it as a moral and not a political question. It is no more a moral question—this one of regulating the alcohol traffic by law—than it is to prohibit crime by law. The man, woman, or parson who says that temperance ought not to be carried into politics, is no friend of the temperance cause.

If we can carry police and sanitary regulations into politics, why not the regulation of the alcohol traffic? We fear these hair-splitting and praying moralists, and question either their sincerity or their sense. The liquor traffic is the most important and the most serious question that to-day challenges the attention of government. It is the great evil of civilization, and it can be no longer ignored by the great political parties or monopolized by those who profess religion. The wicked outside world that takes a little "for the stomach's sake" offers itself as an ally in this temperance crusade, and if its services are not accepted, it will step to the front, and let the non-combatant moral suasionists retire behind their batteries of Quaker guns. The New York Tribune, which is neither pious nor teetotal, says: "Directly and indirectly, this country spends in the liquor traffic every year a sum exceeding half the national debt. The cost of that traffic to the country, direct and indirect, is greater than the profit of all its capital not invested in real estate. It costs every year more than our whole civil service, our army, our navy, our Congress, including the river and harbor and pension bills, our wasteful local governments, and all national, State, county, and local debts, besides all the schools in the country. In fact, this nation pays more for liquor than for every function of every kind of government. How is a question of this size to be put aside with a sneer?" The Sacramento Record-Union says: "The consumption of ale and beer last year was about 15,000,000 barrels, the cost of which to the consumers was not less than $480,000,000. The consumption of whisky last year was about 70,000,000 gallons, the cost of which to the consumers was not less than $303,000,000. Add a moderate estimate for wines, and it will be seen that the American people must have spent for drinks in that one year to exceed $800,000,000; and the entire sum raised by taxes of all kinds—national, State, county, city, town, and school district—is stated on the authority of the census bureau to be not more than $700,000,000. Thus it appears that at a very moderate estimate the country spends upon drink at least $100,000,000 more than the whole system of government costs, including education, police, and everything else." The question of regulating the liquor traffic is a question for taxpayers. Every person who owns property in this State is interested in subjecting this business to the control of just and reasonable laws. The prohibition party is a step in the right direction. It is ultra and radical; all reformers who are in earnest are radical and ultra. All reformers are apt to be fanatical. Peter the Hermit, who preached the redemption of the holy sepulchre from the infidel Saracen, was a fanatic. Savonarola, who would have reformed the church of the middle ages, was mad as a March hare. John Brown, who struck the first blow at American slavery, was crazy as a bed-bug. There are serious questions to be considered after temperance gets into politics. The important, and indeed the only, consideration is to first get it there. Upon this ground all can unite. Then will come up a hundred matters of detail about saloons, and whom to license, if anybody. When the prohibition question shall confront the vine-growing industry of this State, then the prohibitionists and total-abstainers will be compelled to demonstrate that it is for the best interest of all the people that grapes shall not be made into wine by fermentation, nor into brandy by distillation. In the meantime statistics are in order to demonstrate the magnitude of this dreadful curse. A very thorough inquiry has been made in Massachusetts by the bureau of statistics, under authority from the Legislature, and the conclusion reached is that eighty-four per cent. of all the crime and criminal expenditure in that State is attributable directly to the use of liquor. The Record-Union estimates that "five per cent. of all the able-bodied men in the country are incapacitated for continuous work, or made paupers, by the same evil, and that by this means a sum of $200,000,000 is lost annually to production. Here, then, we have a definite loss of $1,000,000,000 annually caused by the liquor traffic, and yet we have only so far dealt with considerations which are capable of being represented by statistics. Above and beyond all such mere money losses must be reckoned the appalling aggregate of misery which the abuse of intoxicants produces. This can not be measured by dollars and cents, but it represents a most insidious, far-reaching, and dreadful evil." Chief Justice Coleridge, of England, says that four-fifths of the crime that comes into court results from drink, for which the Queen's subjects pay over five hundred million dollars a year. Labor unions, trade leagues, loan societies, savings banks, and all the other devices in aid of workingmen and women known to organized society, are insignificant when we consider this question of alcoholic drink. The time has come when the politician standing at the bar to drink his morning dram, the gentleman over his after-dinner wine, the property-owner who pays the taxes, and the farmer who grows grain to malt, corn to distill, and grapes to press, must consider all these things as politico-economical ones that well-ordered governments can no longer ignore. Another reason why "temperance" must be carried into politics is the fact that "whisky" is already in politics. The whisky-dealer, the saloon-keeper, the lager-vender, and the distiller and brewer, have combined together under the inapt name of "League of Freedom" to rule the politics of this State. They run primaries, control conventions, dictate platforms, elect law-makers, choose judges and executive officers, and keep the industrious tax-paying and property-owning portion of the community at work to support them in idleness, and to maintain in prisons, asylums, poor-houses, and hospitals the criminals, paupers, and unfortunates whom by their infamous and criminal business they create. This is a good year to lay the foundations of a temperance party in California. It is an off-year in politics. Votes are not lost that are this year thrown away. It is a good year to vote for Doctor McDonald for Governor. It is a good year for a show of hands. When Governor Stanford first ran as a Republican candidate, he received less than twelve thousand votes. Two years thereafter he was elected Governor by a majority over all over candidates. This is the year of roll-call, and if Doctor McDonald shall not be elected Governor of California, or Jackson Temple and Anson Bronson be made Judges of the Supreme Court, or James McM. Shafter be chosen as member of Congress from the San Francisco District, and other most respectable gentlemen who are on the Prohibition ticket be not rewarded with office, no honest man will have cause to regret that he stood on an honest, manly platform, and by his vote protested against fraudulent and criminal practices at primary elections and in convention, and asserted himself as the champion of temperance reform.

The Pope's Democratic Irish in Municipal Convention assembled is composed of one hundred and fifty-four statesmen. One hundred and sixteen are Romanists, ninety-three are Irish born, thirteen are Irish-American, thirty-two are saloon-keepers, bar-tenders, or corner-grocers, thirty-eight are deputies in public offices. All want offices for selves or friends. Not one in five pays any tax. Not one in ten pays any considerable tax, and there is not a representative real-estate owner, leading merchant, manufacturer, or professional man in the lot. Chris Buckley, Irish, and Johnny Murphy, Irish-American, run the machine. The leading statesmen of the convention bear the following names—to be read aloud with proper emphasis: J. J. Boyle, J. T. Burns, Edward Caserly, T. P. Corrigan, J. J. Casey, James Duffy, J. T. Donovan, Frank E. Doran, Con Keefe, James McLarkey, James J. Murphy, Thomas L. Murray, R. McDonald, E. A. O'Connor, Dan Somerville, M. J. Aherne, Michael Cannavan, E. F. Coyle, John Cronin, W. E. Dunan, T. Farrell, R. H. Fitzgerald, Thomas J. Glynn, John Heaney, J. Hanrahan, Thomas Martin, — McCormick, Frank McDonald, P. Murphy, Robert O'Neill, A. Shehan, Morris Sullivan, J. Cobine, C. Deleharty, Thomas Dowling, James Devaney, William Foran, Michael Foley, Daniel Lenahan, Joseph Linehan, James McDermott, Charles McCourtney, Jeremiah Moriarty, James Reavey, J. J. Ryan, John Shehan, Thomas Brady, Thomas Cristal, Patrick Creighton, T. B. Cunningham, John Devlin, John Devauney, L. Dunn, John Dower, P. Enright, John Eagan, John Fagan, J. M. Farrell, Edward Holihan, John Krehling, William Kilday, James Mooney, J. T. Murphy, John Noonan, T. H. McCann, C. O. O'Connor, Edward Riley, M. Scanlon, L. J. Welsh, Robert Bragg, Henry Casey, Hugh Crummeby, B. Carlin, T. Callan, William E. Connelly, E. B. Deady, J. M. Donlon, Michael Harrington, O. Kilcullin, Patrick Kelly, Patrick Kelly (2), T. F. Lowney, Henry McGuire, M. McCaffery, John Maholy, J. H. McGinney, J. McCarthy, E. H. McAuliff, Dan Moriarty, C. McFadden, Philip Maguire, Patrick Maxwell, James C. Nealon, Timothy Nunan, William Ryan, John Reddan, M. I. Sullivan, John Whelen, S. C. Walsh. The first act of these nominating statesmen is to provide from the ranks of the party a County Committee, chosen with reference to their ability and political standing, to which is entrusted the management of party offices in the city and county of San Francisco. This position demands men of the best character and highest intelligence and judgment. The following are their names—to be read aloud with proper emphasis: Charles Calahan, M. McCarthy, David Levy, T. B. Corrigan, William Burke, Patrick Sullivan, John J. Kenny, Christopher H. Buckley, Samuel Newman, Max H. Fay, James J. Flaherty, Michael Leman, Michael J. Kelly, John Welch, J. Rafferty, James Buchanan, John Flynn, S. J. Burke, James O'Neil, Thomas F. Egan, Samuel Shear, Jeremiah McCarthy, M. J. McDonald, Samuel McKee, Dennis Sheehan, Phil F. Krause, T. O'Brien, John J. Cunningham, Con O'Connor, James R. Corrigan, E. F. McKittrick, J. J. Flynn, John Conless, John O'Neil, Joseph Quinne, John Farrell, Phil Reilly, Thomas Sewell, Hugh Crummeby, A. J. Donovan, Charles A. Hughes, John Whalen, Jno. T. Fogarty. The nominations for State Senators and members of Assembly from San Francisco, are as follows—to be read aloud with proper emphasis: Timothy McCarthy, Jeremiah J. Harrigan, John Dougherty, Martin Kelley, William Cronan, Frank J. Sullivan, Timothy H. Murphy, Thomas Barry, James Callahan, James J. Flinn, Patrick Plover, and T. McDonald. At the time of going to press the nominations for the Senate and Assembly are not complete, but will be chosen from among the following prominent candidates—whose names are to be read aloud with proper emphasis:

Michael O'Connor, Timothy Sullivan, Hugh J. Mohun, James Callaghan, Thomas Barry, Edward Mahony, E. J. O'Connor, M. J. O'Brian, C. H. McGrevey, T. P. O'Brian, J. J. Sullivan, M. McPike, Robert Cochran, Michael O'Connor, J. J. O'Flinn, Patrick Gilhooley, Patrick O'Rafferty, Patrick McMulligan, John Brown, William Jones, and Thomas Smith. Brown, Jones, and Smith will probably withdraw, as their names are suspicious of an objectionable nationality and unsound religious opinions. Further comments upon the ticket must be reserved till our next issue. We expressly disavow any intention to question the right of the Pope's Democratic Irish to run the Democratic ticket and to nominate themselves to office. Without these statesmen there would be no Democratic party in America.

The Democratic nominations may seem a surprise to those who do not know the inner workings of the party machines in San Francisco. The Superintendent of Schools and the Board of Education are a seeming concession to the anti-Catholic sentiment of the community. The whole is a cunning device of Jesuitry. Nearly all of the thirteen gentlemen nominated are either Romanists or of intimate Roman Catholic connection, by birth, marriage, or association. It is curious if accidental. The Board of Supervisors are fairly comparable, and in some respects superior, to the Republican nominees. From the two tickets an excellent twelve could be chosen. Washington Bartlett for mayor is a concession by the machine to the Bulletin. It would not be generous to withhold the admission that all offices held by Mr. Bartlett have been intelligently and honestly administered, and that his life in San Francisco for thirty years justifies entire confidence in him as a municipal servant in event of his election. The hoofs and tail of the machine serpent is, and will be, exhibited in the nominations for Senators and members of Assembly, and in the offices of County Clerk, Assessor, Sheriff, and Superintendent of Streets. This is where the patronage comes in. It will be less embarrassing to discuss these nominations when the ticket is completed and may be considered as a whole. The defeat of Wise is a slap in the face for the Chivalry. It is a rap on his political nob by the Irish sbillalah, and we are glad of it.

The Hon. James McM. Shafter is nominated by the temperance party for Congress in the San Francisco district. This is the best nomination made by any party anywhere in the State for Congress. There is no Congressional district in the United States demanding a higher order of talent to fitly represent it. There is no Congressional district demanding such peculiar legislation as this city. There is no district that has ever been worse represented. While millions of money have been appropriated from the treasury of the general government for harbors, rivers, and aids to commerce, not a dollar has ever yet been secured for the harbor of San Francisco. Oakland harbor has had hundreds of thousands of dollars. Every sluggish stream is straightened. Snags are taken from navigable creeks. The coast, the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, Petaluma Creek, and Wilmington harbor all have had, and can have, money for their improvement and protection. San Francisco gets nothing, and can get nothing, because her member of Congress has been a nobody. Mr. Shafter would take his rank in the House of Representatives among its foremost and leading members. He would honor our city and honor our State by his learning, his eloquence, and his ability as a statesman and law-maker. It would be creditable if our citizens could rise above party, and secure for their representative in Congress so able a man as Mr. James McM. Shafter is acknowledged to be.

Some very young Republicans in the Eleventh Ward have organized themselves into a party club. Little Master Zion seems to be the prize infant of this political baby show. He introduced a series of anti-monopoly resolutions upon railroads and sugar. The resolutions are inelegant in language, impudent in tone, and inexact in statement. Zion ought to be spanked. There is no objection to the little boys having their playmates come up from San José in their little capes and caps, and having a procession with music, torches, and bonfires, but they should ask their parents to write their resolutions.

Mr. Estee met with another disappointment at the meeting of the State Grange, at Stockton. His friends were confident of his endorsement by that body. Not only did he not get it, but a resolution of sympathy with the prohibition movement was passed—i. e., prohibition of the sale of alcoholic drinks on legal holidays. This includes Sundays, election days, Fourth of July, Christmas, New Year's, Washington's birthday, and such special holidays as the Governor may direct.

The Ohio defeat seems to us at this distance to be attributable to two causes: An administration war against the Blaine-Garfield wing of the party, and the temperance question. Stalwartism and beer.

VANITY FAIR.

A grand ball was given the other day at a fashionable watering-place on the French coast, to finish the bathing season and also to serve as a sort of farewell before the dispersion of the peculiar society for which the place is celebrated. Much curiosity has been excited by the wording of the invitations to this ball. They have been distributed also with great mystery. The card bore the simple words, "Bal non costume," with the address and date fixed for the festival. Many of the representatives of golden youth, who had received invitations, sped leagues innumerable by rail in order to be present at the fête, the designation of which seemed so mysterious and incomprehensible. The secret was well kept by the initiated, and when the villa, all brilliantly illuminated, appeared in sight, no outward solution of the mystery was visible. The visitor was ushered through the little garden to the hall, where, on entering, he was rather taken aback by the mode of his reception. At the hall door stood, on one side, the bathing man, and on the other the bathing woman of baigneur and baigneuse, in the weather-worn costume peculiar to their calling; and as the invités entered, attired in full dress evening attire, he was seized by the baigneur, and compelled to exchange his dress for the bathing costume worn by the habitués. There was nothing improper nor objectionable in the transformation—the white flannel drawers and knitted jersey, the former loose and wide, confined at the waist by a broad, red woolen sash—but the ease and sans gêne it inspired became conspicuous the moment the ball-room was entered. Here the ladies, who had been let into the secret of the ball, were rivaling each other in the luxe and elegance of their bathing attire, and the effect of the short tunic and loose drawers, in every variety of bright-colored stuffs, with the feet and legs encased in pink fleshing, to imitate the bared limbs of real bathers, was picturesque to the highest degree. The arms were bare to the shoulders, and the variety of styles adopted for the bead-dress excited the greatest interest. There was the bathing cap adorned with tufts of feathers, and the scarlet handkerchiefs à la Bordelaise, and the lace fancheon, and the resille in tinted shells—all placed jauntily on the hair, which fell, in its golden or ebon richness, over the shoulders. The effect of this assemblage was peculiar, as the costume in no way affected an attempt at disguise. The ladies who had come unprovided with a bathing dress were furnished, by the bathman at the door, with the white or blue flannel costume made upon the model of those hired out by the bathing-women belonging to the place. Needless to say that the ball went off with the greatest entrain and hilarity, and this marine fête will be long remembered by the habitués of the most fashionable of all the French seaside resorts.

It is said, says an Eastern journal, that theatre parties are to be the very exact thing this season, but that no party will be of the "too-too" shade without a supper after the performance. This supper must be given at a restaurant and not at a private residence. The supper must be ordered in advance, and served in a private room directly upon the arrival of the company, all of whom will be seated at one table. A supper of a large party, scattered about in the public room of a restaurant at the small tables, is voted bad form. These parties must never occur on Saturday night, principally to escape the risk of touching upon Sunday while eating and drinking. The supper is to be near the theatre, the ladies and gentlemen walking to the restaurant if the weather is pleasant, the carriages awaiting them at the door. This provision, it is supposed, will prevent a useless delay. Another idea is to have the party photographed by the electric light, but this will not be permissible on theatre nights, as it would keep them too late.

One of the latest novelties in ladies' shoes, remarks the Hour, combines two different colors in kid or morocco. When the tip of the shoe is of fawn-colored leather, the heel is of black, and vice versa. The shoe is cut very low on the instep, displaying the stocking to the best advantage. A strap of fawn-colored leather encircles the ankle, attached by a silver buckle with glittering points. Out-door costumes for autumnal wear in the country are made of Scotch tartan, with gaiters to match, which protect the feet from dust and morning dew. Steel crescents of various shades of brown and blue are worn on hats. A green felt, trimmed at one side with a huge bow of black velvet, attached by a steel crescent, is very effective. To make the base of the present moment conform to the occupation of its wearer seems to have been the study of the past summer. A lady who proposes to pass the day in fishing believes that she can angle with far greater success should her hose be impressed with the device of a sportive gudgeon or a pliant eel. When the amusement, on the contrary, is hunting, foxes' tails or boars' heads are the proper emblems, worked in colored silk. The idle members of society who spend their days in luxurious frivolity provide themselves with hose covered with myriads of butterflies hovering over a golden ladder which reposes on the instep. One lady incurred the severe criticism of her more logical companions by making a defiant display of a pair of pearl-gray stockings adorned with scenes from the life of an acrobat. When not dangling from a scarlet trapeze in green and yellow tights, the athlete in question was bounding over six-barred gates in a costume composed of every color in the rainbow. The true meaning of these wonderful stockings could never be divined, although the most brilliant wits of the day were occupied in unraveling the mystery. A new invention, which has been recently found useful in France for the hunting season, will scarcely be adopted in this country. Each huntsman is provided with a little memorandum-book in which he enters the amount of game slain by his own dexterous hand. Every species of game—bears, wolves, and birds—are represented in the book by a little sketch at the head of each leaf.

"It is now the fashion in France," says Labouchère, "for a great many young women to go out shooting with their husbands. For the benefit of my lady readers, I give the following description of the costumes worn by some of them: The Duchesse de Chartres and Comtesse de Paris wear blue serge sailor dresses with glazed sailor hats. The Comtesse de Montebello wears a cloth jacket of some light color, trimmed with gold braid, and short skirt of darker hue. The Duchesse de Talleyrand, née Castellane, wears a very simple short dress, a waterproof over it, and a billycock hat. Queen Pia of Portugal, wears a jacket and short skirt of moss-colored cloth, white waistcoat, and boots reaching to the knees."

In Louisville, says Progress, the fashionable envelopes for ladies' letters are very large. The style is said to have been invented by a Louisville belle. It will not be imitated elsewhere—first, because the average woman has a natural liking for a small sheet of note-paper, and accompanying envelope, and, secondly, because fashions do not start in Louisville.

